After attaining Me, the great souls, who are yogis in devotion, never return to this temporary world, which is full of miseries, because they have attained the highest perfection.

PURPORT

Since this temporary material world is full of the miseries of birth, old age, disease and death, naturally he who achieves the highest perfection and attains the supreme planet, Krsnaloka, Goloka Vrndavana, does not wish to return. The supreme planet is described in Vedic literature as beyond our material vision, and it is considered the highest goal. The mahatmas (great souls) receive transcendental messages from the realized devotees and thus gradually develop devotional service in Krsna consciousness and become so absorbed in transcendental service that they no longer desire elevation to any of the material planets, nor do they even want to be transferred to any spiritual planet. They only want Krsna's association and nothing else. Such great souls in Krsna consciousness attain the highest perfection of life. In other words, they are the supreme souls.

punar janma na vidyate

abrahma—up to the Brahmaloka planet; bhuvanat—from the planetary systems; lokah—planets; punah—again; avartinah—returning; arjuna—O Arjuna; mam—unto Me; upetya—arriving; tu—but; kaunteya—O son of Kunti; punah janma—rebirth; na—never; vidyate—takes to.

TRANSLATION

From the highest planet in the material world down to the lowest, all are places of misery wherein repeated birth and death take place. But one who attains to My abode, O son of Kunti, never takes birth again.

PURPORT

All kinds of yogis—karma, jnana, hatha, etc.—eventually have to attain devotional perfection in bhakti-yoga, or Krsna consciousness, before they can go to Krsna's transcendental abode and never return. Those who attain the highest material planets or the planets of the demigods are again subjected to repeated birth and death. As persons on earth are elevated to higher planets, people in higher planets such as Brahmaloka, Candraloka and Indraloka fall down to earth. The practice of sacrifice called pancagni-vidya, recommended in the Katha Upanisad, enables one to achieve Brahmaloka, but if, in Brahmaloka, one does not cultivate Krsna consciousness, then he must return to earth. Those who progress in Krsna consciousness in the higher planets are gradually elevated to higher and higher planets and at the time of universal devastation are transferred to the eternal spiritual kingdom. When there is devastation of this material universe, Brahma and his devotees, who are constantly engaged in Kṛṣṇa consciousness, are all transferred to the spiritual universe and to specific spiritual planets according to their desires.

SYNONYMS

sahasra—thousand; yuga—millenniums; paryantam—including; ahah—day; yat—that; brahmanah—of Brahma; viduh—they know; ratrim—night; yuga—millenniums; sahasra-antam—similarly, at the end of one thousand; te—that; ahah-ratra—day and night; vidah—understand; janah—people.

TRANSLATION

By human calculation, a thousand ages taken together is the duration of Brahma's one day. And such also is the duration of his night.

PURPORT

The duration of the material universe is limited. It is manifested in cycles of kalpas. A kalpa is a day of Brahma, and one day of Brahma consists of a thousand cycles of four yugas or ages: Satya, Treta, Dvapara and Kali. The cycle of Satya is characterized by virtue, wisdom and religion, there being practically no ignorance and vice, and the yuga lasts 1,728,000 years. In the Treta–yuga vice is introduced, and this yuga lasts 1,296,000 years. In the Dvapara–yuga there is an even greater decline in virtue and religion, vice increasing, and this yuga lasts 864,000 years. And finally in Kali–yuga (the yuga that we have now been experiencing over the past 5,000 years) there is an abundance of strife, ignorance, irreligion and vice, true virtue being practically nonexistent, and this yuga lasts 432,000 years. In Kali–yuga vice increases to such a point that at the termination of the yuga the Supreme Lord Himself appears as the Kalki avatara, vanquishes the demons, saves His devotees, and commences another Satya–yuga. Then the process is set rolling again. These four yugas, rotating a thousand times, comprise one day of Brahma, the creator god, and the same number comprise one night. Brahma lives one hundred of such "years" and then dies. These "hundred years" by earth calculations total to 311 trillion and 40 billion earth years. By these calculations the life of Brahma seems fantastic and interminable, but from the viewpoint of eternity it is as brief as a lightning flash. In the Causal Ocean there are innumerable Brahmas rising and disappearing like bubbles in the Atlantic. Brahma and his creation are all part of the material universe, and therefore they are in constant flux.

In the material universe not even Brahma is free from the process of birth, old age, disease and death. Brahma, however, is directly engaged in the service of the Supreme Lord in the management of the universe—therefore he at once attains liberation. Elevated sannyasis are promoted to Brahma's particular planet, Brahmaloka, which is the highest planet in the material universe and which survives all the heavenly planets in the upper strata of the planetary system, but in due course Brahma and all the inhabitants of Brahmaloka are subject to death, according to the law of material nature.

TRANSLATION

Again and again the day comes, and this host of beings is active; and again the night falls, O Partha, and they are helplessly dissolved.

PURPORT

The less intelligent jivas, who try to remain within this material world, are accordingly elevated and degraded in the various planetary systems. During the daytime of Brahma they exhibit their activities, and at the coming of Brahma's night they are annihilated. In the day they receive various bodies for material activities, and at night these bodies perish. The jivas (individual souls) remain compact in the body of Visnu and again and again are manifest at the arrival of Brahma's day. When Brahma's life is finally finished, they are all annihilated and remain unmanifest for millions and millions of years. When Brahma is born again in another millennium they are again manifest. In this way the jivas are captivated by the material world. However, those intelligent beings who take to Krsna consciousness and chant Hare Krsna, Hare Rama in devotional service transfer themselves, even in this life, to the spiritual planet of Krsna and become eternally blissful there, not being subject to such rebirths.

TRANSLATION

Yet there is another nature, which is eternal and is transcendental to this manifested and unmanifested matter. It is supreme and is never annihilated. When all in this world is annihilated, that part remains as it is.

PURPORT

Kṛṣṇa's superior spiritual energy is transcendental and eternal. It is beyond all the changes of material nature, which is manifest and annihilated during the days and nights of Brahma. Kṛṣṇa's superior energy is completely opposite in quality to material nature. Superior and inferior nature are explained in the Seventh Chapter.

TRANSLATION

That supreme abode is called unmanifested and infallible, and it is the supreme destination. When one goes there, he never comes back. That is My supreme abode.

PURPORT

The supreme abode of the Personality of Godhead, Kṛṣṇa, is described in the Brahma-saṁhita as cintamani-dhama, a place where all desires are fulfilled. The supreme abode of Lord Kṛṣṇa known as Goloka Vṛndavana is full of palaces made of touchstone. There are also trees which are called "desire trees," that supply any type of eatable upon demand, and there are cows known as surabhi cows which supply a limitless supply of milk. In this abode, the Lord is served by hundreds of thousands of goddesses of fortune (Lakṣmīs), and He is called Govinda, the primal Lord and the cause of all causes. The Lord is accustomed to blow His flute (venuṁ kvaṇantam). His transcendental form is the most attractive in all the worlds—His eyes are like the lotus petals and the color of His body is like clouds. He is so attractive that His beauty excels that of thousands of Cupids. He wears saffron cloth, a garland around His neck and a peacock feather in His hair. In the Gita Lord Kṛṣṇa gives only a small hint of His personal abode (Goloka Vṛndavana) which is the supermost planet in the spiritual kingdom. A vivid description is given in the Brahma-saṁhita. Vedic literature (Katha Upanisad 1.3.11) states that there is nothing superior to the abode of the Supreme Godhead, and that that abode is the ultimate destination (purusaṁ na paraṁ kincit sa katha parama gatiḥ). When one attains to it, he never returns to the material world. Kṛṣṇa's supreme abode and Kṛṣṇa Himself are nondifferent, being of the same quality. On this earth, Vṛndavana, ninety miles southeast of Delhi, is a replica of that supreme Goloka Vṛndavana located in the spiritual sky. When Kṛṣṇa descended on this earth He sported on that particular tract of land known as Vṛndavana in the district of Mathura, India.

SYNONYMS

purusaḥ—the Supreme Personality; saḥ—He; paraḥ—the Supreme, than whom no one is greater; partha—O son of Prtha; bhaktiā—by devotional service; labhyaḥ—can be achieved; tu—but; anyathā—unalloyed, undeviating devotion; yaśā—whom; antaḥ-sthāni—within; bhūtāni—all of this material manifestation; yeṇa—by whom; sarvaṁ—all; idaṁ—whatever we can see; tatam—distributed.

TRANSLATION

The Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is greater than all, is attainable by unalloyed devotion. Although He is present in His abode, He is all-pervading, and everything is situated within Him.

PURPORT

It is here clearly stated that the supreme destination from which there is no return is the abode of Kṛṣṇa, the Supreme Person. The Brahma-saṁhita describes this supreme abode as ananda-cinmaya-rasa, a place where everything is full of spiritual bliss. Whatever variegatedness is manifest there is all of the quality of spiritual bliss—there is nothing material. All variegatedness is expanded as the spiritual expansion of the Supreme Godhead Himself, for the manifestation there is totally of the spiritual energy, as explained in Chapter Seven. As far as this material world is concerned, although the Lord is always in His supreme abode, He is nonetheless all-pervading by His material energy. So by His spiritual and material energies He is present everywhere—both in the material and in the spiritual universes. Yasyantah-sthani means that everything is sustained by Him, whether it be spiritual or material energy.

It is clearly stated here that only by bhakti, or devotional service, can one enter into the Vaikuntha (spiritual) planetary system. In all the Vaikunthas there is only one Supreme Godhead, Kṛṣṇa, who has expanded Himself into millions and millions of plenary expansions. These plenary expansions are four-armed, and They preside over the innumerable spiritual planets. They are known by a variety of names—Purusottama, Trivikrama, Kesava, Madhava, Aniruddha, Hṛṣīkeśa, Sankarsana, Pradyumna, Sridhara, Vasudeva, Damodara, Janardana, Narayana, Vamana, Padmanabha, etc. These plenary expansions are likened unto the leaves of a tree, and the main tree is likened to Kṛṣṇa. Kṛṣṇa, dwelling in Goloka Vṛndavana, His supreme abode, systematically conducts all affairs of both universes (material and spiritual) without a flaw by power of His all-pervasiveness.

TRANSLATION

O best of the Bharatas, I shall now explain to you the different times at which, passing away from this world, one does or does not come back.

PURPORT

The unalloyed devotees of the Supreme Lord who are totally surrendered souls do not care when they leave their bodies or by what method. They leave everything in Kṛṣṇa's hands and so easily and happily return to Godhead. But those who are not unalloyed devotees and who depend instead on such methods of spiritual realization as karma-yoga, jñāna-yoga, hatha-yoga, etc., must leave the body at a suitable time and thereby be assured whether or not they will return to the world of birth and death.

If the yogi is perfect, he can select the time and place for leaving this material world, but if he is not so perfect, then he has to leave at nature's will. The most suitable time to leave the body and not return is being explained by the Lord in these verses. According to Acārya Baladeva Vidyābhūṣaṇa, the Sanskrit word kala used herein refers to the presiding deity of time.

SYNONYMS

TRANSLATION

Those who know the Supreme Brahman pass away from the world during the influence of the fiery god, in the light, at an auspicious moment, during the fortnight of the moon and the six months when the sun travels in the north.

PURPORT

When fire, light, day and moon are as mentioned, it is to be understood that over all of them there are various presiding deities who make arrangements for the passage of the soul. At the time of death, the jiva sets forth on the path to a new life. If one leaves the body at the time designated above, either accidentally or by arrangement, it is possible for him to attain the impersonal brahmajyoti. Mystics who are advanced in yoga practice can arrange the time and place to leave the body. Others have no control—if by accident they leave at an auspicious moment, then they will not return to the cycle of birth and death, but if not, then there is every possibility that they will have to return. However, for the pure devotee in Kṛṣṇa consciousness, there is no fear of returning, whether he leaves the body at an auspicious or inauspicious moment, by accident or arrangement.

TRANSLATION

The mystic who passes away from this world during the smoke, the night, the moonless fortnight, or the six months when the sun passes to the south, or who reaches the moon planet, again comes back.

PURPORT

In the Third Canto of Srimad-Bhagavatam we are informed that those who are expert in fruitive activities and sacrificial methods on earth attain to the moon at death. These elevated souls live on the moon for about 10,000 years (by demigod calculations) and enjoy life by drinking soma-rasa. They eventually return to earth. This means that on the moon there are higher classes of living beings, though they may not be perceived by the gross senses.

SYNONYMS

sukla—light; krsne—darkness; gati—passing away; hi—certainly; ete—all these; jagatah—of the material world; sasvate—of the Vedas; mate—in the opinion; ekaya—by one; yati—goes; anavrttim—no return; anyaya—by the other; avartate—comes back; punah—again.

TRANSLATION

According to the Vedas, there are two ways of passing from this world—one in the light and one in darkness. When one passes in light, he does not come back; but when one passes in darkness, he returns.

PURPORT

The same description of departure and return is quoted by Acarya Baladeva Vidyabhusana from the Chandogya Upanisad (5.10.3–5). In such a way, those who are fruitive laborers and philosophical speculators from time immemorial are constantly going and coming. Actually they do not attain ultimate salvation, for they do not surrender to Kṛṣṇa.

TRANSLATION

The devotees who know these two paths, O Arjuna, are never bewildered. Therefore be always fixed in devotion.

PURPORT

Kṛṣṇa is here advising Arjuna that he should not be disturbed by the different paths the soul can take when leaving the material world. A devotee of the Supreme Lord should not worry whether he will depart either by arrangement or by accident. The devotee should be firmly established in Kṛṣṇa consciousness and chant Hare Kṛṣṇa. He should know that concern over either of these two paths is troublesome. The best way to be absorbed in Kṛṣṇa consciousness is to be always dovetailed in His service, and that will make one's path to the spiritual kingdom safe, certain, and direct. The word yoga-yukta is especially significant in this verse. One who is firm in yoga is constantly engaged in Kṛṣṇa consciousness in all his activities. Śrī Rupa Gosvāmī advises that one should be unattached in the material world and that all affairs should be steeped in Kṛṣṇa consciousness. In this way one attains perfection. Therefore the devotee is not disturbed by these descriptions because he knows that his passage to the supreme abode is guaranteed by devotional service.

TRANSLATION

A person who accepts the path of devotional service is not bereft of the results derived from studying the Vedas, performing austere sacrifices, giving charity or pursuing philosophical and fruitive activities. At the end he reaches the supreme abode.

PURPORT

This verse is the summation of the Seventh and Eighth chapters, particularly as the chapters deal with Kṛṣṇa consciousness and devotional service. One has to study the Vedas under the guidance of the spiritual master and undergo many austerities and penances while living under his care. A brahmacari has to live in the home of the spiritual master just like a servant, and he must beg alms from door to door and bring them to the spiritual master. He takes food only under the master's order, and if the master neglects to call the student for food that day, the student fasts. These are some of the Vedic principles for observing brahmacarya.

After the student studies the Vedas under the master for a period from five to twenty years, he may become a man of perfect character. Study of the Vedas is not meant for the recreation of armchair speculators, but for the formation of character. After this training, the brahmacari is allowed to enter into household life and marry. When he is a householder, he also has to perform many sacrifices and strive for further enlightenment. Then after retiring from household life, upon accepting the order of vanaprastha, he undergoes severe penances, such as living in forests, dressing with tree bark, not shaving, etc. By carrying out the orders of brahmacarya, householder, vanaprastha and finally sannyasa, one becomes elevated to the perfectional stage of life. Some are then elevated to the heavenly kingdoms, and when they become even more advanced they are liberated in the spiritual sky, either in the impersonal brahmajyoti or in the Vaikuntha planets or Krsnaloka. This is the path outlined by Vedic literatures.

The beauty of Krsna consciousness, however, is that by one stroke, by engaging in devotional service, one can surpass all rituals of the different orders of life.

One should try to understand the Seventh and Eighth Chapters of the Gita not by scholarship or mental speculation, but by hearing them in association with pure devotees. Chapters Seven through Twelve are the essence of Gita, if one is fortunate to understand the Gita—especially these middle six chapters—in the association of devotees, then his life at once becomes glorified beyond all penances, sacrifices, charities, speculations, etc. One should hear the Gita from the devotee because at the beginning of the Fourth Chapter it is stated that the Gita can only be perfectly understood by devotees. Hearing the Gita from devotees, not from mental speculators, is called faith. Through association of devotees, one is placed in devotional service, and by this service Krsna's activities, form, pastimes, name, etc., become clear, and all misgivings are dispelled. Then once doubts are removed, the study of the Gita becomes extremely pleasurable, and one develops a taste and feeling for Krsna consciousness. In the advanced stage, one falls completely in love with Krsna, and that is the beginning of the highest perfectional stage of life which prepares the devotee's transferral to Krsna's abode in the spiritual sky, Goloka Vrndavana, where the devotee enters into eternal happiness.

Thus end the Bhaktivedanta Purports to the Eighth Chapter of the Srimad Bhagavad-gita in the matter of Attaining the Supreme.

Chapter 9

The Most Confidential Knowledge

TEXT 1

SYNONYMS

sri-bhagavan uvaca—the Supreme Personality of Godhead said; idam—this; tu—but; te—unto you; guhya-tamam—the most confidential; pravaksyami—I am speaking; anasuyave—to the nonenvious; jnanam—knowledge; vijnana—realized knowledge; sahitam—with; yat—which; jnatva—knowing; moksyase—be released; asubhat—from this miserable material existence.

TRANSLATION

The Supreme Lord said: My dear Arjuna, because you are never envious of Me, I shall impart to you this most secret wisdom, knowing which you shall be relieved of the miseries of material existence.

PURPORT

As a devotee hears more and more about the Supreme Lord, he becomes enlightened. This hearing process is recommended in the Srimad-Bhagavatam: "The messages of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are full of potencies, and these potencies can be realized if topics regarding the Supreme Godhead are discussed amongst devotees. This cannot be achieved by the association of mental speculators or academic scholars, for it is realized knowledge."

The devotees are constantly engaged in the Supreme Lord's service. The Lord understands the mentality and sincerity of a particular living entity who is engaged in Kṛṣṇa consciousness and gives him the intelligence to understand the science of Kṛṣṇa in the association of the devotees. Discussion of Kṛṣṇa is very potent, and if a fortunate person has such association and tries to assimilate the knowledge, then he will surely make advancement toward spiritual realization. Lord Kṛṣṇa, in order to encourage Arjuna to higher and higher elevation in His potent service, describes in this Ninth Chapter matters more confidential than any He has already disclosed.

The very beginning of Bhagavad-gita, the First Chapter, is more or less an introduction to the rest of the book; and in the Second and Third chapters, the spiritual knowledge described is called confidential. Topics discussed in the Seventh and Eighth chapters are specifically related to devotional service, and because they bring enlightenment in Kṛṣṇa consciousness, they are called more confidential. But the matters which are described in the Ninth Chapter deal with unalloyed, pure devotion. Therefore this is called the most confidential. One who is situated in the most confidential knowledge of Kṛṣṇa is naturally transcendental; he therefore has no material pangs, although he is in the material world. In the Bhakti-rasamṛta-sindhu it is said that although one who has a sincere desire to render loving service to the Supreme Lord is situated in the conditional state of material existence, he is to be considered liberated. Similarly, we shall find in the Bhagavad-gita, Tenth Chapter, that anyone who is engaged in that way is a liberated person.

Now this first verse has specific significance. Knowledge (idam jñanam) refers to pure devotional service, which consists of nine different activities: hearing, chanting, remembering, serving, worshiping, praying, obeying, maintaining friendship and surrendering everything. By the practice of these nine elements of devotional service one is elevated to spiritual consciousness, Krsna consciousness. At the time when one's heart is cleared of the material contamination, one can understand this science of Krsna. Simply to understand that a living entity is not material is not sufficient. That may be the beginning of spiritual realization but one should recognize the difference between activities of the body and spiritual activities by which one understands that he is not the body.

In the Seventh Chapter we have already discussed the opulent potency of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, His different energies, the inferior and superior natures, and all this material manifestation. Now in Chapters Nine and Ten the glories of the Lord will be delineated.

The Sanskrit word anasuyave in this verse is also very significant. Generally the commentators, even if they are highly scholarly, are all envious of Krsna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Even the most erudite scholars write on Bhagavad-gita very inaccurately. Because they are envious of Krsna, their commentaries are useless. The commentaries given by devotees of the Lord are bona fide. No one can explain Bhagavad-gita, or give perfect knowledge of Krsna if he is envious. One who criticizes the character of Krsna without knowing Him is a fool. So such commentaries should be very carefully avoided. For one who understands that Krsna is the Supreme Personality of Godhead, the pure and transcendental Personality, these chapters will be very beneficial.

raja-vidya raja-guhyam

pavitram idam uttamam

pratyaksavagamam dharmyam

su-sukham kartum avyayam

SYNONYMS

raja—vidya—the king of education; raja—guhyam—the king of confidential knowledge; pavitram—the purest; idam—this; uttamam—transcendental; pratyaksa—directly experienced; avagamam—understood; dharmyam—the principle of religion; su—sukham—very happy; kartum—to execute; avyayam—everlasting.

TRANSLATION

This knowledge is the king of education, the most secret of all secrets. It is the purest knowledge, and because it gives direct perception of the self by realization, it is the perfection of religion. It is everlasting, and it is joyfully performed.

PURPORT

This chapter of Bhagavad-gita is called the king of education because it is the essence of all doctrines and philosophies explained before. There are seven principal philosophers in India, Gautama, Kanada, Kapila, Yajnavalkya, Sandilya, Vaisvanara, and, finally, Vyasadeva, the author of the Vedanta-sutra. So there is no dearth of knowledge in the field of philosophy or transcendental knowledge. Now the Lord says that this Ninth Chapter is the king of all such knowledge, the essence of all knowledge that can be derived from the study of the Vedas and different kinds of philosophy. It is the most confidential because confidential or transcendental knowledge involves understanding the difference between the soul and the body. And the king of all confidential knowledge culminates in devotional service.

Generally, people are not educated in this confidential knowledge; they are educated in external knowledge. As far as ordinary education is concerned, people are involved with so many departments: politics, sociology, physics, chemistry, mathematics, astronomy, engineering, etc. There are so many departments of knowledge all over the world and many huge universities, but there is, unfortunately, no university or educational institution where the science of the spirit soul is instructed. Yet the soul is the most important part of this body; without the presence of the soul, the body has no value. Still people are placing great stress on the bodily necessities of life, not caring for the vital soul.

The Bhagavad-gita, especially from the Second Chapter on, stresses the importance of the soul. In the very beginning, the Lord says that this body is perishable and that the soul is not perishable. That is a confidential part of knowledge: simply knowing that the spirit soul is different from this body and that its nature is immutable, indestructible and eternal. But that gives no positive information about the soul. Sometimes people are under the impression that the soul is different from the body and that when the body is finished, or one is liberated from the body, the soul remains in a void and becomes impersonal. But actually that is not the fact. How can the soul, which is so active within this body, be inactive after being liberated from the body? It is always active. If it is eternal, then it is eternally active, and its activities in the spiritual kingdom are the most confidential part of spiritual knowledge. These activities of the spirit soul are therefore indicated here as constituting the king of all knowledge, the most confidential part of all knowledge.

This knowledge is the purest form of all activities, as is explained in Vedic literature. In the Padma Purana, man's sinful activities have been analyzed and are shown to be the results of sin after sin. Those who are engaged in fruitive activities are entangled in different stages and forms of sinful reactions. For instance, when the seed of a particular tree is sown, the tree does not appear immediately to grow; it takes some time. It is first a small, sprouting plant, then it assumes the form of a tree, then it flowers, bears fruit, and, when it is complete, the flowers and fruits are enjoyed by persons who have sown the seed of the tree. Similarly, a man performs a sinful act, and like a seed it takes time to fructify. There are different stages. The sinful action may have already stopped within the individual, but the results or the fruit of that sinful action are still enjoyed. There are sins which are still in the form of a seed, and there are others which are already fructified and are giving us fruit, which we are enjoying as distress and pain

As explained in the twenty-eighth verse of the Seventh Chapter, a person who has completely ended the reactions of all sinful activities and who is fully engaged in pious activities, being freed from the duality of this material world, becomes engaged in devotional service to the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Kṛṣṇa. In other words, those who are actually engaged in the devotional service of the Supreme Lord are already freed from all reactions. For those who are engaged in the devotional service of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, all sinful reactions, whether fructified, in the stock, or in the form of a seed, gradually vanish. Therefore the purifying potency of devotional service is very strong, and it is called pavitram uttamam, the purest. Uttama means transcendental. Tamas means this material world or darkness, and uttama means that which is transcendental to material activities. Devotional activities are never to be considered material, although sometimes it appears that devotees are engaged just like ordinary men. One who can see and is familiar with devotional service, however, will know that they are not material activities. They are all spiritual and devotional, uncontaminated by the material modes of nature.

It is said that the execution of devotional service is so perfect that one can perceive the results directly. This direct result is actually perceived, and we have practical experience that any person who is chanting the holy names of Kṛṣṇa (Hare Kṛṣṇa, Hare Kṛṣṇa, Kṛṣṇa Kṛṣṇa, Hare Hare/ Hare Rāma, Hare Rāma, Rāma Rāma, Hare Hare) in course of time feels some transcendental pleasure and very quickly becomes purified of all material contamination. This is actually seen. Furthermore, if one engages not only in hearing but in trying to broadcast the message of devotional activities as well, or if he engages himself in helping the missionary activities of Kṛṣṇa consciousness, he gradually feels spiritual progress. This advancement in spiritual life does not depend on any kind of previous education or qualification. The method itself is so pure that by simply engaging in it one becomes pure.

In the Vedānta-sūtra (3.2.26) this is also described in the following words: prakāśa ca karmāṇy abhyasat. "Devotional service is so potent that simply by engaging in the activities of devotional service one becomes enlightened without a doubt." Nārada, who happened to be the son of a maidservant, had no education, nor was he born into a high family. But when his mother was engaged in serving great devotees, Nārada also became engaged, and sometimes, in the absence of his mother, he would serve the great devotees himself. Nārada personally says, "Once only, by their permission, I took the remnants of their food, and by so doing all my sins were at once eradicated. Thus being engaged, I became purified in heart, and at that time the very nature of the transcendentalist became attractive to me." (Bhag 1.5.25) Nārada tells his disciple Vyāsadeva that in a previous life he was engaged as a boy servant of purified devotees during the four months of their stay and that he was intimately associating with them. Sometimes those sages left remnants of food on their dishes, and the boy, who would wash their dishes, wanted to taste the remnants. So he asked the great devotees whether he could eat them, and they gave their permission. Nārada then ate those remnants and consequently became freed from all sinful reactions. As he went on eating, he gradually became as pure-hearted as the sages, and he gradually developed the same taste. The great devotees relished the taste of unceasing devotional service of the Lord, hearing, chanting, etc., and by developing the same taste, Nārada wanted also to hear and chant the glories of the Lord. Thus by associating with the sages, he developed a great desire for devotional service. Therefore, he quotes from the Vedānta-sūtra (prakāśa ca karmāṇy abhyasat): if one is engaged simply in the acts of devotional service, everything is revealed to him automatically, and he can understand. This is called pratyakṣa, directly perceived.

Nārada was actually a son of a maidservant. He had no opportunity to go to school. He was simply assisting his mother, and fortunately his mother rendered some service to the devotees. The child Nārada also got the opportunity and simply by association achieved the highest goal of all religions, devotional service. In the Śrīmad-Bhāgavatam it is said that religious people generally do not know that the highest perfection of religion is the attainment of the stage of devotional service. Generally Vedic knowledge is required for understanding the path of self-realization. But here, although he was not educated in the Vedic principles, Narada acquired the highest results of Vedic study. This process is so potent that even without performing the religious process regularly, one can be raised to the highest perfection. How is this possible? This is also confirmed in Vedic literature: acaryavan puruso veda. One who is in association with great acaryas, even if he is not educated or has not studied the Vedas, can become familiar with all the knowledge necessary for realization.

The process of devotional service is a very happy one. Why? Devotional service consists of sravanam kirtanam visnoh, so one can simply hear the chanting of the glories of the Lord or can attend philosophical lectures on transcendental knowledge given by authorized acaryas. Simply by sitting, one can learn; then one can eat the remnants of the food offered to God, nice palatable dishes. In every state devotional service is joyful. One can execute devotional service even in the most poverty-stricken condition. The Lord says, patram puspam phalam: He is ready to accept from the devotee any kind of offering, never mind what. Even a leaf, a flower, a bit of fruit, or a little water, which are available in every part of the world, can be offered by any person, regardless of social position, and will be accepted if offered with love. There are many instances in history. Simply by tasting the tulasi leaves offered to the lotus feet of the Lord, great sages like Sanat-kumara became great devotees. Therefore the devotional process is very nice, and it can be executed in a happy mood. God accepts only the love with which things are offered to Him.

It is said here that this devotional service is eternally existing. It is not as the Mayavadi philosophers claim. They sometimes take to so-called devotional service, and as long as they are not liberated they continue their devotional service, but at the end, when they become liberated, they "become one with God." Such temporary time-serving devotional service is not accepted as pure devotional service. Actual devotional service continues even after liberation. When the devotee goes to the spiritual planet in the kingdom of God, he is also engaged there in serving the Supreme Lord. He does not try to become one with the Supreme Lord.

As it will be seen, actual devotional service begins after liberation. So in Bhagavad-gita it is said, brahma-bhuta, After being liberated, or being situated in the Brahman position, one's devotional service begins. By executing devotional service, one can understand the Supreme Lord. No one can understand the Supreme Personality of Godhead by executing karma-yoga, jnana or astanga-yoga or any other yoga independently. Without coming to the stage of devotional service, one cannot understand what is the Personality of Godhead. In the Srimad-Bhagavatam it is also confirmed that when one becomes purified by executing the process of devotional service, especially by hearing Srimad-Bhagavatam or Bhagavad-gita from realized souls, then he can understand the science of Krsna, or the science of God. Evam prasanna-manaso bhagavad-bhakti yogatah. When one's heart is cleared of all nonsense, then one can understand what God is. Thus the process of devotional service, of Krsna consciousness, is the king of all education and the king of all confidential knowledge. It is the purest form of religion, and it can be executed joyfully without difficulty. Therefore one should adopt it.

aprapya mam nivartante

mrtyu—samsara—vartmani

SYNONYMS

asraddadhanah—those who are faithless; purusah—such persons; dharmasya—of this process of religion; asya—of it; parantapa—O killer of the enemies; aprapya—without obtaining; mam—Me; nivartante—come back; mrtyu—death; samsara—material existence; vartmani—on the path of.

TRANSLATION

Those who are not faithful on the path of devotional service cannot attain Me, O conqueror of foes, but return to birth and death in this material world.

PURPORT

The faithless cannot accomplish this process of devotional service; that is the purport of this verse. Faith is created by association with devotees. Unfortunate people, even after hearing all the evidence of Vedic literature from great personalities, still have no faith in God. They are hesitant and cannot stay fixed in the devotional service of the Lord. Thus faith is a most important factor for progress in Kṛṣṇa consciousness. In the Caitanya-caritamṛta it is said that one should have complete conviction that simply by serving the Supreme Lord Śrī Kṛṣṇa he can achieve all perfection. That is called real faith. In the Srimad-Bhagavatam (4.31.14) it is stated that by giving water to the root of a tree, its branches, twigs and leaves become satisfied, and by supplying food to the stomach all the senses of the body become satisfied, and, similarly, by engaging in the transcendental service of the Supreme Lord, all the demigods and all the living entities automatically become satisfied.

There are three divisions of Kṛṣṇa conscious men. In the third class are those who have no faith. If they are engaged in devotional service officially, for some ulterior purpose, they cannot achieve the highest perfectional stage. Most probably they will slip, after some time. They may become engaged, but because they haven't complete conviction and faith, it is very difficult for them to continue in Kṛṣṇa consciousness. We have practical experience in discharging our missionary activity that some people come and apply themselves to Kṛṣṇa consciousness with some hidden motive, and as soon as they are economically a little well situated they give up this process and take to their old ways again. It is only by faith that one can advance in Kṛṣṇa consciousness. As far as the development of faith is concerned, one who is well versed in the literatures of devotional service and has attained the stage of firm faith is called a first-class person in Kṛṣṇa consciousness. And in the second-class are those who are not very advanced in understanding the devotional scriptures but who automatically have firm faith that kṛṣṇa-bhakti or service to Kṛṣṇa is the best course and so in good faith have taken it up. Thus they are superior to the third-class who have neither perfect knowledge of the scriptures nor good faith but by association and simplicity are trying to follow. The third-class person in Kṛṣṇa consciousness may fall down, but when one is in the second-class or first-class he does not fall down. One in the first-class will surely make progress and achieve the result at the end. As far as the third-class person in Kṛṣṇa consciousness is concerned, although he has faith in the conviction that devotional service to Kṛṣṇa is very good, he has no knowledge of Kṛṣṇa through the scriptures like Srimad-Bhagavatam and Bhagavad-gītā. Sometimes these third-class persons in Kṛṣṇa consciousness have some tendency toward karma-yoga and jñāna-yoga, and sometimes they are disturbed, but as soon as the infection of karma-yoga or jñāna-yoga is vanquished, they become second-class or first-class persons in Kṛṣṇa consciousness. Faith in Kṛṣṇa is also divided into three stages and described in Srimad-Bhagavatam. First-class attachment, second-class attachment, and third-class attachment are also explained in Srimad-Bhagavatam in the Eleventh Canto. Those who have no faith even after hearing about Kṛṣṇa and the excellence of devotional service, who think that it is simply eulogy, find the path very difficult, even if they are supposedly engaged in devotional service. For them there is very little hope in gaining perfection. Thus faith is very important in the discharge of devotional service.

SYNONYMS

maya—by Me; tatam—spread; idam—all these manifestations; sarvam—all; jagat—cosmic manifestation; avyakta-murtina—unmanifested form; mat-sthani—unto Me; sarva-bhutani—all living entities; na—not; ca—also; aham—I; tesu—in them;
avasthitah—situated.

TRANSLATION

By Me, in My unmanifested form, this entire universe is pervaded. All beings are in Me, but I am not in them.

PURPORT

The Supreme Personality of Godhead is not perceivable through the gross material senses. It is said that Lord Sri Kṛṣṇa's name, fame, pastimes, etc., cannot be understood by material senses. Only to one who is engaged in pure devotional service under proper guidance is He revealed. In the Brahma-saṁhita (5.38) it is stated, premanjana-cchurita-bhakti-vilocanena santah sadaiva hrdayesu vilokayanti: one can see the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Govinda, always within himself and outside himself if he has developed the transcendental loving attitude towards Him. Thus for people in general He is not visible. Here it is said that although He is all-pervading, everywhere present, He is yet not conceivable by the material senses. But actually, although we cannot see Him, everything is resting in Him. As we have discussed in the Seventh Chapter, the entire material cosmic manifestation is only a combination of His two different energies, the superior spiritual energy and the inferior material energy. Just as the sunshine is spread all over the universe, the energy of the Lord is spread all over the creation, and everything is resting in that energy.

Yet one should not conclude that because He is spread all over He has lost His personal existence. To refute such an argument the Lord says, "I am everywhere, and everything is in Me, but still I am aloof." For example, a king heads a government which is but the manifestation of the king's energy; the different governmental departments are nothing but the energies of the king, and each department is resting on the king's power. But still one cannot expect the king to be present in every department personally. That is a crude example. Similarly, all the manifestations that we see, and everything that exists both in this material world and in the spiritual world, are resting on the energy of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. The creation takes place by the diffusion of His different energies, and, as it is stated in the Bhagavad-gītā, He is everywhere present by His personal representation, the diffusion of His different energies.

SYNONYMS

na—never; ca—also; mat—sthani—situated in Me; bhutani—all creation; pasya—just see; me—My; yogam aisvaram—inconceivable mystic power; bhuta-bhrt—maintainer of all living entities; na—never; ca—also; bhuta-sthah—in the cosmic manifestation; mama—My; atma—Self; bhuta-bhavanah—is the source of all manifestations.

TRANSLATION

And yet everything that is created does not rest in Me. Behold My mystic opulence! Although I am the maintainer of all living entities, and although I am everywhere, still My Self is the very source of creation.

PURPORT

The Lord says that everything is resting on Him. This should not be misunderstood. The Lord is not directly concerned with the maintenance and sustenance of this material manifestation. Sometimes we see a picture of Atlas holding the globe on his shoulders; he seems to be very tired, holding this great earthly planet. Such an image should not be entertained in connection with Kṛṣṇa's upholding this created universe. He says that although everything is resting on Him, still He is aloof. The planetary systems are floating in space, and this space is the energy of the Supreme Lord. But He is different from space. He is differently situated. Therefore the Lord says, "Although they are situated on My inconceivable energy, still, as the Supreme Personality of Godhead, I am aloof from them." This is the inconceivable opulence of the Lord.

In the Vedic dictionary it is said, "The Supreme Lord is performing inconceivably wonderful pastimes, displaying His energy. His person is full of different potent energies, and His determination is itself actual fact. In this way the Personality of Godhead is to be understood." We may think to doing something, but there are so many impediments, and sometimes it is not possible to do as we like. But when Kṛṣṇa wants to do something, simply by His willing, everything is performed so perfectly that one cannot imagine how it is being done. The Lord explains this fact: although He is the maintainer and sustainer of the entire material manifestation, He does not touch this material manifestation. Simply by His supreme will everything is created, everything is sustained, everything is maintained, and everything is annihilated. There is no difference between His mind and Himself (as there is a difference between ourselves and our present material mind) because He is absolute spirit. Simultaneously the Lord is present in everything; yet the common man cannot understand how He is also present personally. He is different from this material manifestation, yet everything is resting on Him. This is explained here as yogam aisvaram, the mystic power of the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

TRANSLATION

As the mighty wind, blowing everywhere, always rests in ethereal space, know that in the same manner all beings rest in Me.

PURPORT

For the ordinary person it is almost inconceivable how the huge material creation is resting in Him. But the Lord is giving an example which may help us to understand. Space is the biggest manifestation we can conceive. The cosmic manifestation rests in space. Space permits the movement of even the atoms and on up to the greatest planets, the Sun and the Moon. Although the sky (or wind or air) is great, still it is situated within space. Space is not beyond the sky.

In the Upanisads, it is stated, "It is out of the fear of the Supreme Lord that the wind is blowing." (Taittiriya Upanisad 2.8.1) In the Brhad–aranyaka Upanisad (3.8.9) it is stated, "By the supreme order, under the superintendence of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, the moon, the sun, and other great planets are moving." In the Brahma–samhita (5.52) this is also stated. There is also a description of the movement of the sun, and it is said that the sun is considered to be one of the eyes of the Supreme Lord and that it has immense potency to diffuse heat and light. Still it is moving in its prescribed orbit by the order and the supreme will of Govinda. So, from the Vedic literature we can find evidence that this material manifestation, which appears to us to be very wonderful and great, is under the complete control of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. This will be further explained in the later verses of this chapter.

SYNONYMS

sarva—bhutani—all created entities; kaunteya—O son of Kunti; prakrtim—nature; yanti—enter; mamikam—unto Me; kalpa—ksaye—at the end of the millennium; punah—again; tani—all those; kalpa—adau—in the beginning of the millennium; visrjami—I create; aham—I.

TRANSLATION

O son of Kunti at the end of the millennium every material manifestation enters into My nature, and at the beginning of another millennium, by My potency, I again create.

PURPORT

The creation, maintenance and annihilation of this material cosmic manifestation is completely dependent on the supreme will of the Personality of Godhead. "At the end of the millennium" means at the death of Brahma. Brahma lives for one hundred years, and his one day is calculated at 4,300,000,000 of our earthly years. His night is of the same duration. His month consists of thirty such days and nights, and his year of twelve months. After one hundred such years, when Brahma dies, the devastation or annihilation takes place; this means that the energy manifested by the Supreme Lord is again wound up in Himself. Then again, when there is need to manifest the cosmic world, it is done by His will: "Although I am one, I shall become many." This is the Vedic aphorism (Chandogya Upanisad 6.2.3). He expands Himself in this material energy, and the whole cosmic manifestation again takes place.

TEXT 8

prakrtim svam avastabhya

SYNONYMS

prakrtim—material nature; svam—of My personal Self; avastabhya—enter in; visrjami—create; punah punah—again, again; bhuta—gramam—all these cosmic manifestations; imam—this; krtsnam—total; avasam—automatically; prakrteh—by the force of nature; vasat—under obligation.

TRANSLATION

The whole cosmic order is under Me. By My will it is manifested again and again, and by My will it is annihilated at the end.

PURPORT

This matter is the manifestation of the inferior energy of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. This has already been explained several times. At the creation, the material energy is let loose as the mahat-tattva, into which the Lord as His first Purusa incarnation, Maha-Visnu, enters. He lies within the Causal Ocean and breathes out innumerable universes, and into each universe the Lord again enters as Garbhodakasayi Visnu. Each universe is in that way created. He still further manifests Himself as Ksirodakasayi Visnu, and that Visnu enters into everything—even into the minute atom. This fact is explained here. He enters into everything.

Now, as far as the living entities are concerned, they are impregnated into this material nature, and as a result of their past deeds they take different positions. Thus the activities of this material world begin. The activities of the different species of living beings are begun from the very moment of the creation. It is not that all is evolved. The different species of life are created immediately along with the universe. Men, animals, beasts, birds—everything is simultaneously created, because whatever desires the living entities had at the last annihilation are again manifested. It is clearly stated here that the living entities have nothing to do with this process. The state of being in their past life in the past creation is simply manifested again, and all this is done simply by His will. This is the inconceivable potency of the Supreme Personality of God. And after creating different species of life, He has no connection with them. The creation takes place to accommodate the inclinations of the various living entities, and so the Lord does not become involved with it.

asaktam tesu karmasu

SYNONYMS

na—never; ca—also; mam—Me; tani—all those; karmani—activities; nibadhnanti—bind; dhananjaya—O conqueror of riches; udasina—vat—as neutral;
asinam—situated; asaktam—without attraction; tesu—in them; karmasu—in activities.

TRANSLATION

O Dhananjaya, all this work cannot bind Me. I am ever detached, seated as though neutral.

PURPORT

One should not think, in this connection, that the Supreme Personality of Godhead has no engagement. In His spiritual world He is always engaged. In the Brahma-samhita (5.6) it is stated, "He is always involved in His eternal, blissful, spiritual activities, but He has nothing to do with these material activities." Material activities are being carried on by His different potencies. The Lord is always neutral in the material activities of the created world. This neutrality is explained here. Although He has control over every minute detail of matter, He is sitting as if neutral. The example can be given of a high court judge sitting on his bench. By his order so many things are happening: someone is being hanged, someone is being put into jail, someone is awarded a huge amount of wealth—but still he is neutral. He has nothing to do with all that gain and loss. Similarly, the Lord is always neutral, although He has His hand in every sphere of activity. In the Vedanta-sutra (2.1.34) it is stated that He is not situated in the dualities of this material world. He is transcendental to these dualities. Nor is He attached to the creation and annihilation of this material world. The living entities take their different forms in the various species of life according to their past deeds, and the Lord doesn't interfere with them.

mayadhyaksena prakṛtiḥ

suyate sa-caracaram

jagad viparivartate

SYNONYMS

maya—by Me; adhyaksena—by superintendence; prakrtih—material nature; suyate—manifests; sa—with; cara-acaram—the moving and the nonmoving; hetuna—for this reason; anena—this; kaunteya—O son of Kunti; jagat—the cosmic manifestation; viparivartate—is working.

TRANSLATION

This material nature is working under My direction, O son of Kunti, and it is producing all moving and unmoving beings. By its rule this manifestation is created and annihilated again and again.

PURPORT

It is clearly stated here that the Supreme Lord, although aloof from all the activities of the material world, remains the supreme director. The Supreme Lord is the supreme will and the background of this material manifestation, but the management is being conducted by material nature. Kṛṣṇa also states in Bhagavad-gītā that of all of the living entities in different forms and species, "I am the father." The father gives seeds to the womb of the mother for the child, and similarly the Supreme Lord by His mere glance injects all the living entities into the womb of material nature, and they come out in their different forms and species, according to their last desires and activities. All these living entities, although born under the glance of the Supreme Lord, still take their different bodies according to their past deeds and desires. So the Lord is not directly attached to this material creation. He simply glances over material nature; material nature is thus activated, and everything is created immediately. Because He glances over material nature, there is undoubtedly activity on the part of the Supreme Lord, but He has nothing to do with the manifestation of the material world directly. This example is given in the smṛti: when there is a fragrant flower before someone, the fragrance is touched by the smelling power of the person, yet the smelling and the flower are detached from one another. There is a similar connection between the material world and the Supreme Personality of Godhead; actually He has nothing to do with this material world, but He creates by His glance and ordains. In summary, material nature, without the superintendence of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, cannot do anything. Yet the Supreme Personality is detached from all material activities.

SYNONYMS

avajananti—deride; mam—Me; mudhah—foolish men; manusim—in human form; tanum—body; asritam—assuming; param—transcendental; bhavam—nature; ajanantah—not knowing; mama—Mine; bhuta—everything that be; maha-isvaram—the supreme proprietor.

TRANSLATION

Fools deride Me when I descend in the human form. They do not know My transcendental nature and My supreme dominion over all that be.

PURPORT

From the other explanations of the previous verses in this chapter, it is clear that the Supreme Personality of Godhead, although appearing like a human being, is not a common man. The Personality of Godhead, who conducts the creation, maintenance and annihilation of the complete cosmic manifestation, cannot be a human being. Yet there are many foolish men who consider Kṛṣṇa to be merely a powerful man and nothing more. Actually, He is the original Supreme Personality, as is confirmed in the Brahma-saṁhita (isvaraḥ paramaḥ kṛṣṇaḥ); He is the Supreme Lord.

There are many isvaras, controllers, and one appears greater than another. In the ordinary management of affairs in the material world, we find some official or director, and above him there is a secretary, and above him a minister, and above him a president. Each of them is a controller, but one is controlled by another. In the Brahma-saṁhita it is said that Kṛṣṇa is the supreme controller; there are many controllers undoubtedly, both in the material and spiritual world, but Kṛṣṇa is the supreme controller (isvaraḥ paramaḥ kṛṣṇaḥ) and His body is sac-cid-ananda, nonmaterial.

Material bodies cannot perform the wonderful acts described in previous verses. His body is eternal, blissful and full of knowledge. Although He is not a common man, the foolish deride Him and consider Him to be a man. His body is called here manuṣim because He is acting just like a man, a friend of Arjuna's, a politician involved in the Battle of Kurukṣetra. In so many ways He is acting just like an ordinary man, but actually His body is sac-cid-ananda-vigraha—eternal bliss and knowledge absolute. This is confirmed in the Vedic language also. Sac-cid-ananda-rūpaḥ kṛṣṇaḥ: "I offer my obeisances unto the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Kṛṣṇa, who is the eternal blissful form of knowledge." (Gopāla-tāpani Upaniṣad 1.1) There are other descriptions in the Vedic language also. Tam ekaṁ govindam: "You are Govinda, the pleasure of the senses and the cows." Sac-cid-ananda-vigrahaḥ: "And Your form is transcendental, full of knowledge, bliss and eternity." (Gopāla-tāpani Upaniṣad 1.35)

Despite the transcendental qualities of Lord Kṛṣṇa's body, its full bliss and knowledge, there are many so-called scholars and commentators of Bhagavad-gītā who deride Kṛṣṇa as an ordinary man. The scholar may be born an extraordinary man due to his previous good work, but this conception of Srī Kṛṣṇa is due to a poor fund of knowledge. Therefore he is called mudha, for only foolish persons consider Kṛṣṇa to be an ordinary human being because they do not know the confidential activities of the Supreme Lord and His different energies. They do not know that Kṛṣṇa's body is a symbol of complete knowledge and bliss, that He is the proprietor of everything that be and that He can award liberation to anyone. Because they do not know that Kṛṣṇa has so many transcendental qualifications, they deride Him.

Nor do they know that the appearance of the Supreme Personality of Godhead in this material world is a manifestation of His internal energy. He is the master of the material energy. As has been explained in several places (mama māyā duratyayā), He claims that the material energy, although very powerful, is under His control, and whoever surrenders unto Him can get out of the control of this material energy. If a soul surrendered to Kṛṣṇa can get out of the influence of material energy, then how can the Supreme Lord, who conducts the creation, maintenance and annihilation of the whole cosmic nature, have a material body like us? So this conception of Krsna is complete foolishness. Foolish persons, however, cannot conceive that the Personality of Godhead, Krsna, appearing just like an ordinary man, can be the controller of all the atoms and of the gigantic manifestation of the universal form. The biggest and the minutest are beyond their conception, so they cannot imagine that a form like that of a human being can simultaneously control the infinite and the minute. Actually although He is controlling the infinite and the finite, He is apart from all this manifestation. It is clearly stated concerning His yogam aisvaram, His inconceivable transcendental energy, that He can control the infinite and the finite simultaneously and that He can remain aloof from them. Although the foolish cannot imagine how Krsna, who appears just like a human being, can control the infinite and the finite, those who are pure devotees accept this, for they know that Krsna is the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Therefore they completely surrender unto Him and engage in Krsna consciousness, devotional service of the Lord.

There are many controversies amongst the impersonalists and the personalists about the Lord's appearance as a human being. But if we consult Bhagavad-gita and Srimad-Bhagavatam, the authoritative texts for understanding the science of Krsna, then we can understand that Krsna is the Supreme Personality of Godhead. He is not an ordinary man, although He appeared on this earth as an ordinary human. In the Srimad-Bhagavatam, First Canto, First Chapter, when the sages inquire about the activities of Krsna, it is stated that His appearance as a man bewilders the foolish. No human being could perform the wonderful acts that Krsna performed while He was present on this earth. When Krsna appeared before His father and mother, Vasudeva and Devaki, He appeared with four hands, but after the prayers of the parents, He transformed Himself into an ordinary child. His appearance as an ordinary human being is one of the features of His transcendental body. In the Eleventh Chapter of Bhagavad-gita also it is stated that Arjuna prayed to see Krsna's form of four hands (tenaiva rupena catur-bhujena). Arjuna prayed to see again that form of four hands, and when Krsna was thus petitioned by Arjuna, He again assumed His original form. All these different features of the Supreme Lord are certainly not those of an ordinary human being.

Some of those who deride Krsna, who are infected with the Mayavadi, philosophy quote the following verse from the Srimad-Bhagavatam (3.29.21) to prove that Krsna is just an ordinary man. Aham sarvesu bhutesu bhutatmavasthitah sada: "The Supreme is present in every living entity." We should better take note of this particular verse from the Vaisnava acaryas like Jiva Gosvami instead of following the interpretation of unauthorized persons who deride Krsna. Jiva Gosvami, commenting on this verse, says that Krsna, in His plenary expansion as Paramatma, is situated in the moving and the nonmoving entities as the Supersoul, so any neophyte devotee who simply gives his attention to the arca-murti, the form of the Supreme Lord in the temple, and does not respect other living entities is uselessly worshipping the form of the Lord in the temple. There are three kinds of devotees of the Lord, and the neophyte is in the lowest stage. The neophyte devotee gives more attention to the Deity in the temple than to other devotees, so Jiva Gosvami warns that this sort of mentality should be corrected. A devotee should see that Kṛṣṇa is present in everyone's heart as Paramatma; therefore every body is the embodiment of or the temple of the Supreme Lord, and as such, as one offers respect to the temple of the Lord, he should similarly properly respect each and every body in whom the Paramatma dwells. Everyone should therefore be given proper respect and should not be neglected.

There are also many impersonalists who deride temple worship. They say that since God is everywhere, why should one restrict himself to temple worship? But if God is everywhere, is He not in the temple or in the Deity? Although the personalist and the impersonalist will fight with one another perpetually, a perfect devotee in Kṛṣṇa consciousness knows that although Kṛṣṇa is the Supreme Personality, He is all-pervading, as is confirmed in the Brahma-saṁhita. Although His personal abode is Goloka Vṛndavana and He is always staying there, still, by His different manifestations of energy and by His plenary expansion, He is present everywhere in all parts of the material and spiritual creations.

SYNONYMS

mogha-asah—baffled hope; mogha-karmanah—baffled in fruitive activities; mogha-jnanah—baffled in knowledge; vicetasah—bewildered; raksasim—demonic; asurim—atheistic; ca—and; eva—certainly; prakrtim—nature; mohinim—bewildering; sritah—taking shelter of.

TRANSLATION

Those who are thus bewildered are attracted by demonic and atheistic views. In that deluded condition, their hopes for liberation, their fruitive activities, and their culture of knowledge are all defeated.

PURPORT

There are many devotees who assume themselves to be in Kṛṣṇa consciousness and devotional service but at heart do not accept the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Kṛṣṇa, as the Absolute Truth. For them, the fruit of devotional service—going back to Godhead—will never be tasted. Similarly, those who are engaged in fruitive, pious activities and who are ultimately hoping to be liberated from this material entanglement will never be successful either because they deride the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Kṛṣṇa. In other words, persons who mock Kṛṣṇa are to be understood to be demonic or atheistic. As described in the Seventh Chapter of Bhagavad-gītā, such demonic miscreants never surrender to Kṛṣṇa. Therefore their mental speculations to arrive at the Absolute Truth bring them to the false conclusion that the ordinary living entity and Kṛṣṇa are one and the same. With such a false conviction, they think that the body of any human being is now simply covered by material nature and that as soon as one is liberated from this material body there is no difference between God and himself. This attempt to become one with Kṛṣṇa will be baffled because of delusion. Such atheistic and demoniac cultivation of spiritual knowledge is always futile. That is the indication of this verse. For such persons, cultivation of the knowledge in the Vedic literature, like the Vedānta-sūtra and the Upaniṣads, is always baffled.

It is a great offense, therefore, to consider Kṛṣṇa, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, to be an ordinary man. Those who do so are certainly deluded because they cannot understand the eternal form of Kṛṣṇa. In the Brhad-viśvānava mantra it is clearly stated that one who considers the body of Kṛṣṇa to be material should be driven out from all rituals and activities of the śruti. And if one by chance sees his face, he should at once take bath in the Ganges to rid himself of infection. People jeer at Kṛṣṇa because they are envious of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Their destiny is certainly to take birth after birth in the species of atheistic and demoniac life. Perpetually, their real knowledge will remain under delusion, and gradually they will regress to the darkest region of creation.

mahatmanas tu mam partha

daivim prakrtim asritah

bhajanty ananya—manaso

jnatva bhutadim avyayam

SYNONYMS

maha—atmanah—the great souls; tu—but; mam—unto Me; partha—O son of Prtha; daivim—divine; prakrtim—nature; asritah—taken shelter of; bhajanti—render service; ananya—manasah—without deviation of the mind; jnatva—knowing; bhuta—creation; adim—original; avyayam—inexhaustible.

TRANSLATION

O son of Prtha, those who are not deluded, the great souls, are under the protection of the divine nature. They are fully engaged in devotional service because they know Me as the Supreme Personality of Godhead, original and inexhaustible.

PURPORT

In this verse the description of mahatma is clearly given. The first sign of the mahatma is that he is already situated in the divine nature. He is not under the control of material nature. And how is this effected? That is explained in the Seventh Chapter: one who surrenders unto the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Sri Kṛṣṇa, at once becomes freed from the control of material nature. That is the qualification. One can become free from the control of material nature as soon as he surrenders his soul to the Supreme Personality of Godhead. That is the preliminary formula. Being marginal potency, as soon as the living entity is freed from the control of material nature, he is put under the guidance of the spiritual nature. The guidance of the spiritual nature is called daivi prakṛti, divine nature. So when one is promoted in that way—by surrendering to the Supreme Personality of Godhead—one attains to the stage of great soul, mahatma.

The mahatma does not divert his attention to anything outside Kṛṣṇa because he knows perfectly well that Kṛṣṇa is the original Supreme Person, the cause of all causes. There is no doubt about it. Such a mahatma, or great soul, develops through association with other mahatmas, pure devotees. Pure devotees are not even attracted by Kṛṣṇa's other features, such as the four-armed Maha-Visṇu. They are simply attracted by the two-armed form of Kṛṣṇa. Since they are not attracted to other features of Kṛṣṇa (what to speak of the demigods), they are not concerned with any form of a demigod or of a human being. They only meditate upon Kṛṣṇa in Kṛṣṇa consciousness. They are always engaging in the unswerving service of the Lord in Kṛṣṇa consciousness.

SYNONYMS

satatam—always; kirtayantah—chanting; mam—Me; yatantah ca—fully endeavoring also; drdha-vratah—with determination; namasyantah ca—offering obeisances; mam—unto Me; bhaktya—in devotion; nitya-yuktah—perpetually engaged;

upasate—worship.

TRANSLATION

Always chanting My glories, endeavoring with great determination, bowing down before Me, these great souls perpetually worship Me with devotion.

PURPORT

The mahatma cannot be manufactured by rubber-stamping an ordinary man. His symptoms are described here: a mahatma is always engaged in chanting the glories of the Supreme Lord Kṛṣṇa, the Personality of Godhead. He has no other business. He is always engaged in the glorification of the Lord. In other words, he is not an impersonalist. When the question of glorification is there, one has to glorify the Supreme Lord, praising His holy name, His eternal form, His transcendental qualities and His uncommon pastimes. One has to glorify all these things; therefore a mahatma is attached to the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

One who is attached to the impersonal feature of the Supreme Lord, the brahmajyoti, is not described as mahatma in the Bhagavad-gītā. He is described in a different way in the next verse. The mahatma is always engaged in different activities of devotional service, as described in the Srimad-Bhagavatam, hearing and chanting about Viṣṇu, not a demigod or human being. That is devotion: śravanam kīrtanam viṣṇoḥ and smaranam, remembering Him. Such a mahatma has firm determination to achieve at the ultimate end the association of the Supreme Lord in any one of the five transcendental rasas. To achieve that success, he engages all activities—mental, bodily and vocal, everything—in the service of the Supreme Lord, Śrī Kṛṣṇa. That is called full Kṛṣṇa consciousness.

In devotional service there are certain activities which are called determined, such as fasting on certain days, like the eleventh day of the moon, Ekadāśī, and on the appearance day of the Lord, etc. All these rules and regulations are offered by the great ācāryas for those who are actually interested in getting admission into the association of the Supreme Personality of Godhead in the transcendental world. The mahatmas, great souls, strictly observe all these rules and regulations, and therefore they are sure to achieve the desired result.

As described in the second verse of this chapter, this devotional service is not only easy, but it can be performed in a happy mood. One does not need to undergo any severe penance and austerity. He can live this life in devotional service, guided by an expert spiritual master, and in any position, either as a householder or a sannyasi or a brahmacari; in any position and anywhere in the world, he can perform this devotional service to the Supreme Personality of Godhead and thus become actually mahatma, a great soul.

TRANSLATION

Others, who are engaged in the cultivation of knowledge, worship the Supreme Lord as the one without a second, diverse in many, and in the universal form.

PURPORT

This verse is the summary of the previous verses. The Lord tells Arjuna that those who are purely in Kṛṣṇa consciousness and do not know anything other than Kṛṣṇa are called mahatma; yet there are other persons who are not exactly in the position of mahatma but who worship Kṛṣṇa also, in different ways. Some of them are already described as the distressed, the financially destitute, the inquisitive, and those who are engaged in the cultivation of knowledge. But there are others who are still lower, and these are divided into three: 1) he who worships himself as one with the Supreme Lord, 2) he who concocts some form of the Supreme Lord and worships that, and 3) he who accepts the universal form, the visvarupa of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, and worships that. Out of the above three, the lowest, those who worship themselves as the Supreme Lord, thinking themselves to be monists, are most predominant. Such people think themselves to be the Supreme Lord, and in this mentality they worship themselves. This is also a type of God worship, for they can understand that they are not the material body but are actually spiritual soul; at least, such a sense is prominent. Generally the impersonalists worship the Supreme Lord in this way. The second class includes the worshipers of the demigods, those who by imagination consider any form to be the form of the Supreme Lord. And the third class includes those who cannot conceive of anything beyond the manifestation of this material universe. They consider the universe to be the supreme organism or entity and worship that. The universe is also a form of the Lord.

hutam—offering.

TRANSLATION

But it is I who am the ritual, I the sacrifice, the offering to the ancestors, the healing herb, the transcendental chant. I am the butter and the fire and the offering.

PURPORT

The sacrifice known as jyotistoma is also Kṛṣṇa, and He is also the maha-yajna. The oblations offered to the Pitṛloka or the sacrifice performed to please the Pitṛloka, considered as a kind of drug in the form of clarified butter, is also Kṛṣṇa. The mantras chanted in this connection are also Kṛṣṇa. And many other commodities made with milk products for offering in the sacrifices are also Kṛṣṇa. The fire is also Kṛṣṇa because fire is one of the five material elements and is therefore claimed as the separated energy of Kṛṣṇa. In other words, the Vedic sacrifices recommended in the karma-kāṇḍa division of the Vedas are in total also Kṛṣṇa. Or, in other words, those who are engaged in rendering devotional service unto Kṛṣṇa are to be understood to have performed all the sacrifices recommended in the Vedas.

SYNONYMS

pita—father; aham—I; asya—of this; jagatah—of the universe; mata—mother; dhata—supporter; pitamahah—grandfather; vedyam—what is to be known; pavitram—that which purifies; om-kara—the syllable om; rk—the Rg Veda; sama—the Sama Veda; yajuh—the Yajur Veda; eva—certainly; ca—and.

TRANSLATION

I am the father of this universe, the mother, the support, and the grandsire. I am the object of knowledge, the purifier and the syllable om. I am also the Rg, the Sama, and the Yajur [Vedas].

PURPORT

The entire cosmic manifestations, moving and nonmoving, are manifested by different activities of Krsna's energy. In the material existence we create different relationships with different living entities who are nothing but Krsna's marginal energy, but under the creation of prakṛti some of them appear as our father, mother, grandfather, creator, etc., but actually they are parts and parcels of Krsna. As such, these living entities who appear to be our father, mother, etc., are nothing but Krsna. In this verse the word dhata means "creator." Not only are our father and mother parts and parcels of Krsna, but their creator, grandmother and grandfather, etc., are also Krsna. Actually any living entity, being part and parcel of Krsna, is Krsna. All the Vedas, therefore, aim only toward Krsna. Whatever we want to know through the Vedas is but a progressive step to understanding Krsna. That subject matter which helps us purify our constitutional position is especially Krsna. Similarly, the living entity who is inquisitive to understand all Vedic principles is also part and parcel of Krsna and as such is also Krsna. In all the Vedic mantras the word om, called pranava, is a transcendental sound vibration and is also Krsna. And because in all the hymns of the four Vedas, Sama, Yajur, Rg and Atharva, the pranava or omkara, is very prominent, it is understood to be Krsna.

SYNONYMS

gatih—goal; bharta—sustainer; prabhuh—Lord; saksi—witness; nivasah—abode; saranam—refuge; su-hrt—most intimate friend; prabhavah—creation; pralayah—dissolution; sthanam—ground; nidhanam—resting place; bijam—seed; avyayam—imperishable.

TRANSLATION

I am the goal, the sustainer, the master, the witness, the abode, the refuge and the most dear friend. I am the creation and the annihilation, the basis of everything, the resting place and the eternal seed.

PURPORT

Gati means the destination where we want to go. But the ultimate goal is Krsna, although people do not know it. One who does not know Krsna is misled, and his so-called progressive march is either partial or hallucinatory. There are many who make as their destination different demigods, and by rigid performance of the strict respective methods they reach different planets known as Candraloka, Suryaloka, Indraloka, Maharloka, etc. But all such lokas, or planets, being creations of Krsna, are simultaneously Krsna and not Krsna. Actually such planets, being manifestations of Krsna's energy, are also Krsna, but actually they serve only as a step forward for realization of Krsna. To approach the different energies of Krsna is to approach Krsna indirectly. One should directly approach Krsna, for that will save time and energy. For example, if there is a possibility of going to the top of a building by the help of an elevator, why should one go by the staircase, step by step? Everything is resting on Krsna's energy; therefore without Krsna's shelter nothing can exist. Krsna is the supreme ruler because everything belongs to Him and everything exists on His energy. Krsna, being situated in everyone's heart, is the supreme witness. The residences, countries or planets on which we live are also Krsna. Krsna is the ultimate goal of shelter, and as such one should take shelter of Krsna either for protection or for annihilation of his distressed condition. And whenever we have to take protection, we should know that our protection must be a living force. Thus Krsna is the supreme living entity. Since Krsna is the source of our generation, or the supreme father, no one can be a better friend than Krsna, nor can anyone be a better well-wisher. Krsna is the original source of creation and the ultimate rest after annihilation. Krsna is therefore the eternal cause of all causes.

Arjuna.

TRANSLATION

O Arjuna, I control heat, the rain and the drought. I am immortality, and I am also death personified. Both being and nonbeing are in Me.

PURPORT

Kṛṣṇa, by His different energies, diffuses heat and light through the agency of electricity and the sun. During summer season it is Kṛṣṇa who checks rain from falling from the sky, and then during the rainy season He gives unceasing torrents of rain. The energy which sustains us by prolonging the duration of our life is Kṛṣṇa, and Kṛṣṇa meets us at the end as death. By analyzing all these different energies of Kṛṣṇa, one can ascertain that for Kṛṣṇa there is no distinction between matter and spirit, or, in other words, He is both matter and spirit. In the advanced stage of Kṛṣṇa consciousness, one does not therefore make such distinctions. He sees Kṛṣṇa only in everything.

Since Kṛṣṇa is both matter and spirit, the gigantic universal form comprising all material manifestations is also Kṛṣṇa, and His pastimes in Vṛndāvana as two-handed Syāmasundara, playing on a flute, are those of the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

SYNONYMS

traī-vidyāh—the knowers of the three Vedas; mam—unto Me; soma-pah—drinkers of soma juice; putā—purified; papah—sins; yajñaiḥ—with sacrifices; istva—after worshiping; svah-gatim—passage to heaven; prarthayante—pray; te—they; punyam—virtue; asadya—enjoying; sura-indra—of Indra; lokam—the world; asnanti—enjoy; divyan—celestial; divi—in heaven; deva-bhogan—pleasures of the gods.

TRANSLATION

Those who study the Vedas and drink the soma juice, seeking the heavenly planets, worship Me indirectly. They take birth on the planet of Indra, where they enjoy godly delights.

PURPORT

The word traī-vidyāh refers to the three Vedas, Sama, Yajur and Rg. A brahmana who has studied these three Vedas is called a tri-vedi. Anyone who is very much attached to knowledge derived from these three Vedas is respected in society. Unfortunately, there are many great scholars of the Vedas who do not know the ultimate purport of studying them. Therefore Kṛṣṇa herein declares Himself to be the ultimate goal for the tri-vedis. Actual tri-vedis take shelter under the lotus feet of Kṛṣṇa and engage in pure devotional service to satisfy the Lord. Devotional service begins with the chanting of the Hare Kṛṣṇa mantra and side by side trying to understand Kṛṣṇa in truth. Unfortunately those who are simply official students of the Vedas become more interested in offering sacrifices to the different demigods like Indra, Candra, etc. By such endeavor, the worshipers of different demigods are certainly purified of the contamination of the lower qualities of nature and are thereby elevated to the higher planetary systems or heavenly planets known as Maharloka, Janoloka, Tapoloka, etc. Once situated on those higher planetary systems, one can satisfy his senses hundreds of thousands of times better than on this planet.

SYNONYMS

te—they; tam—that; bhuktva—enjoying; svarga-lokam—heaven; visalam—vast; ksine—being exhausted; punye—merits; martya-lokam—mortal earth; visanti—fall down; evam—thus; trayi—three Vedas; dharmam—doctrines; anuprapannah—following; gata-agatam—death and birth; kama-kamah—desiring sense enjoyments; labhante—attain.

TRANSLATION

When they have thus enjoyed heavenly sense pleasure, they return to this mortal planet again. Thus, through the Vedic principles, they achieve only flickering happiness.

PURPORT

One who is promoted to those higher planetary systems enjoys a longer duration of life and better facilities for sense enjoyment, yet one is not allowed to stay there forever. One is again sent back to this earthly planet upon finishing the resultant fruits of pious activities. He who has not attained perfection of knowledge, as indicated in the Vedānta-sūtra (janmady asya yatah), or, in other words, he who fails to understand Kṛṣṇa, the cause of all causes, becomes baffled in achieving the ultimate goal of life and is thus subjected to the routine of being promoted to the higher planets and then again coming down, as if situated on a ferris wheel which sometimes goes up and sometimes comes down. The purport is that instead of being elevated to the spiritual world where there is no longer any possibility of coming down, one simply revolves in the cycle of birth and death on higher and lower planetary systems. One should better take to the spiritual world to enjoy eternal life of full bliss and knowledge and never return to this miserable material existence.

TRANSLATION

But those who worship Me with devotion, meditating on My transcendental form—to them I carry what they lack and preserve what they have.

PURPORT

One who is unable to live for a moment without Kṛṣṇa consciousness cannot but think of Kṛṣṇa twenty-four hours, being engaged in devotional service by hearing, chanting, remembering, offering prayers, worshiping, serving the lotus feet of the Lord, rendering other services, cultivating friendship and surrendering fully to the Lord. Such activities are all auspicious and full of spiritual potencies; indeed, they make the devotee perfect in self-realization. Then his only desire is to achieve the association of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. This is called yoga. By the mercy of the Lord, such a devotee never comes back to this material condition of life. Kṣema refers to the merciful protection of the Lord. The Lord helps the devotee to achieve Kṛṣṇa consciousness by yoga, and when he becomes fully Kṛṣṇa conscious the Lord protects him from falling down to a miserable conditioned life.

TRANSLATION

Whatever a man may sacrifice to other gods, O son of Kunti, is really meant for Me alone, but it is offered without true understanding.

PURPORT

"Persons who are engaged in the worship of demigods are not very intelligent, although such worship is done to Me indirectly," Krsna says. For example, when a man pours water on the leaves and branches of a tree without pouring water on the root, he does so without sufficient knowledge or without observing regulative principles. Similarly, the process of rendering service to the different parts of the body is to supply food to the stomach. The demigods are, so to speak, different officers and directors in the government of the Supreme Lord. One has to follow the laws made by the government, not by the officers or directors. Similarly, everyone is to offer his worship to the Supreme Lord only. That will automatically satisfy the different officers and directors of the Lord. The officers and directors are engaged as representatives of the government, and to offer some bribe to the officers and directors is illegal. This is stated here as avidhi-purvakam. In other words, Krsna does not approve the unnecessary worship of the demigods.

TRANSLATION

I am the only enjoyer and the only object of sacrifice. Those who do not recognize My true transcendental nature fall down.

PURPORT

Here it is clearly stated that there are many types of yajna performances recommended in the Vedic literatures, but actually all of them are meant for satisfying the Supreme Lord. Yajna means Visnu. In the Second Chapter of Bhagavad-gita it is clearly stated that one should only work for satisfying Yajna or Visnu. The perfectional form of human civilization, known as varnasrama-dharma, is specifically meant for satisfying Visnu. Therefore, Krsna says in this verse, "I am the enjoyer of all sacrifices because I am the supreme master." However, less intelligent persons, without knowing this fact, worship demigods for temporary benefit. Therefore they fall down to material existence and do not achieve the desired goal of life. If, however, anyone has any material desire to be fulfilled, he had better pray for it to the Supreme Lord (although that is not pure devotion), and he will thus achieve the desired result.

SYNONYMS

TRANSLATION

Those who worship the demigods will take birth among the demigods; those who worship ghosts and spirits will take birth among such beings; those who worship ancestors go to the ancestors; and those who worship Me will live with Me.

PURPORT

If one has any desire to go to the moon, the sun, or any other planet, one can attain the desired destination by following specific Vedic principles recommended for that purpose.

These are vividly described in the fruitive activities portion of the Vedas, technically known as darsa–paurṇamasi, which recommends a specific worship of demigods situated on different heavenly planets. Similarly, one can attain the Pita planets by performing a specific yajna. Similarly, one can go to many ghostly planets and become a Yakṣa, Rakṣa or Pisaca. Pisaca worship is called "black arts" or "black magic." There are many men who practice this black art, and they think that it is spiritualism, but such activities are completely materialistic. Similarly, a pure devotee, who worships the Supreme Personality of Godhead only, achieves the planets of Vaikuntha and Kṛṣṇaloka without a doubt. It is very easy to understand through this important verse that if by simply worshiping the demigods one can achieve the heavenly planets, or by worshiping the Pitās achieve the Pita planets, or by practicing the black arts achieve the ghostly planets, why can the pure devotee not achieve the planet of Kṛṣṇa or Viṣṇu? Unfortunately many people have no information of these sublime planets where Kṛṣṇa and Viṣṇu live, and because they do not know of them they fall down. Even the impersonalists fall down from the brahmajyoti. This Kṛṣṇa consciousness movement is therefore distributing sublime information to the entire human society to the effect that simply by chanting the Hare Kṛṣṇa mantra one can become perfect in this life and go back home, back to Godhead.

patram— a leaf; puspam— a flower; phalam— a fruit; toyam— water; yah— whoever; me— unto Me; bhaktya— with devotion; prayacchati— offers; tat— that; aham— I; bhakti–upahrtam— offered in devotion; asnamī— accept; prayata–atmanah— of one in pure consciousness.

TRANSLATION

If one offers Me with love and devotion a leaf, a flower, fruit or water, I will accept it.

PURPORT

Here Lord Kṛṣṇa, having established that He is the only enjoyer, the primeval Lord, and the real object of all sacrificial offerings, reveals what types of sacrifices He desires to be offered. If one wishes to engage in devotional service to the Supreme in order to be purified and reach the goal of life—the transcendental loving service of God—then he should find out what the Lord desires of him. One who loves Kṛṣṇa will give Him whatever He wants, and he avoids offering anything which is undesirable or unasked for. Thus meat, fish and eggs should not be offered to Kṛṣṇa. If He desired such things as offerings, He would have said so. Instead He clearly requests that a leaf, a fruit, flowers and water be given to Him, and He says of this offering, "I will accept it." Therefore, we should understand that He will not accept meat, fish and eggs. Vegetables, grains, fruits, milk and water are the proper foods for human beings and are prescribed by Lord Kṛṣṇa Himself. Whatever else we eat cannot be offered to Him, since He will not accept it. Thus we cannot be acting on the level of loving devotion if we offer such foods.

In the Third Chapter, verse thirteen, Sri Kṛṣṇa explains that only the remains of sacrifice are purified and fit for consumption by those who are seeking advancement in life and release from the clutches of the material entanglement. Those who do not make an offering of their food, He says in the same verse, are said to be eating only sin. In other words, their every mouthful is simply deepening their involvement in the complexities of material nature. But preparing nice, simple vegetable dishes, offering them before the picture or Deity of Lord Kṛṣṇa and bowing down and praying for Him to accept such a humble offering, enables one to advance steadily in life, to purify the body, and to create fine brain tissues which will lead to clear thinking. Above all, the offering should be made with an attitude of love. Kṛṣṇa has no need of food, since He already possesses everything that be, yet He will accept the offering of one who desires to please Him in that way. The important element, in preparation, in serving and in offering, is to act with love for Kṛṣṇa.

The impersonalist philosophers, who wish to maintain that the Absolute Truth is without senses, cannot comprehend this verse of Bhagavad-gita. To them, it is either a metaphor or proof of the mundane character of Kṛṣṇa, the speaker of the Gita. But, in actuality, Kṛṣṇa, the Supreme Godhead, has senses, and it is stated that His senses are interchangeable; in other words, one sense can perform the function of any other. This is what it means to say that Kṛṣṇa is absolute. Lacking senses, He could hardly be considered full in all opulences. In the Seventh Chapter, Kṛṣṇa has explained that He impregnates the living entities into material nature. This is done by His looking upon material nature. And so in this instance, Kṛṣṇa's hearing the devotee's words of love in offering foodstuffs is wholly identical with His eating and actually tasting. This point should be emphasized: because of His absolute position, His hearing is wholly identical with His eating and tasting. Only the devotee, who accepts Kṛṣṇa as He describes Himself, without interpretation, can understand that the Supreme Absolute Truth can eat food and enjoy it.

TRANSLATION

O son of Kunti, all that you do, all that you eat, all that you offer and give away, as well as all austerities that you may perform, should be done as an offering unto Me.

PURPORT

Thus, it is the duty of everyone to mold his life in such a way that he will not forget Krsna in any circumstance. Everyone has to work for maintenance of his body and soul together, and Krsna recommends herein that one should work for Him. Everyone has to eat something to live; therefore he should accept the remnants of foodstuffs offered to Krsna. Any civilized man has to perform some religious ritualistic ceremonies; therefore Krsna recommends, "Do it for Me," and this is called arcana. Everyone has a tendency to give something in charity; Krsna says, "Give it to Me," and this means that all surplus money accumulated should be utilized in furthering the Krsna consciousness movement. Nowadays people are very much inclined to the meditational process, which is not practical in this age, but if anyone practices meditating on Krsna twenty-four hours by chanting the Hare Krsna mantra round his beads, he is surely the greatest yogi. as substantiated by the Sixth Chapter of Bhagavad-gita.

sannyasa-yoga-yuktatma

vimukto mam upaisyasi

SYNONYMS

subha—good; asubha—evil; phalaih—results; evam—thus; moksyase—free;
karma—action; bandhanaih—bondage; sannyasa—of renunciation; yoga—the yoga;
yukta—atma—having the mind firmly set on; vimuktah—liberated; mam—to Me;
upaisyasi—you will attain.

TRANSLATION

In this way you will be freed from all reactions to good and evil deeds, and by this principle of renunciation you will be liberated and come to Me.

PURPORT

One who acts in Kṛṣṇa consciousness under superior direction is called yukta. The technical term is yukta-vairagya. This is further explained by Rupa Gosvami as follows:

anasaktasya visayan

(Bhakti-rasamṛta-sindhu 2.255)

Rupa Gosvami says that as long as we are in this material world we have to act; we cannot cease acting. Therefore if actions are performed and the fruits are given to Kṛṣṇa, then that is called yukta-vairagya. Actually situated in renunciation, such activities clear the mirror of the mind, and as the actor gradually makes progress in spiritual realization he becomes completely surrendered to the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Therefore at the end he becomes liberated, and this liberation is also specified. By this liberation he does not become one with the brahmajyoti, but rather enters into the planet of the Supreme Lord. It is clearly mentioned here: mam upaisyasi, "he comes to Me," back home, back to Godhead. There are five different stages of liberation, and here it is specified that the devotee who has always lived his lifetime here under the direction of the Supreme Lord, as stated, has evolved to the point where he can after quitting this body, go back to Godhead and engage directly in the association of the Supreme Lord.

Anyone who has no other interest but to dedicate his life to the service of the Lord is actually a sannyasi. Such a person always thinks of himself as an eternal servant, dependent on the supreme will of the Lord. As such, whatever he does, he does it for the benefit of the Lord. Whatever action he performs, he performs it as service to the Lord. He does not give serious attention to the fruitive activities or prescribed duties mentioned in the Vedas. For ordinary persons it is obligatory to execute the prescribed duties mentioned in the Vedas, but although a pure devotee who is completely engaged in the service of the Lord may sometimes appear to go against the prescribed Vedic duties, actually it is not so.

It is said, therefore, by Vaisnava authorities that even the most intelligent person cannot understand the plans and activities of a pure devotee. The exact words are tanra vakya, kriya, mudra vijneha na bujhaya (Caitanya—caritamṛta, Madhya 23.39). A person who is thus always engaged in the service of the Lord or is always thinking and planning how to serve the Lord is to be considered completely liberated at present and in the future. His going back home, back to Godhead, is guaranteed. He is above all materialistic criticism, just as Kṛṣṇa is above all criticism.

SYNONYMS

samah—equally disposed; aham—I; sarva—bhutesu—to all living entities; na—no one; me—Mine; dvesyah—hateful; asti—is; na—nor; priyah—dear; ye—those; bhajanti—render transcendental service; tu—yet; mam—unto Me; bhaktya—in devotion; mayi—unto Me; te—such persons; tesu—in them; ca—also; api—certainly; aham—I.

TRANSLATION

I envy no one, nor am I partial to anyone. I am equal to all. But whoever renders service unto Me in devotion is a friend, is in Me, and I am also a friend to him.

PURPORT

One may question here that if Kṛṣṇa is equal to everyone and no one is His special friend, then why does He take a special interest in the devotees who are always engaged in His transcendental service? But this is not discrimination; it is natural. Any man in this material world may be very charitably disposed, yet he has a special interest in his own children. The Lord claims that every living entity—in whatever form is His son, and as such He provides everyone with a generous supply of the necessities of life. He is just like a cloud which pours rain all over, regardless of whether it falls on rock or land or water. But for His devotees, He gives specific attention. Such devotees are mentioned here: they are always in Kṛṣṇa consciousness, and therefore they are always transcendently situated in Kṛṣṇa. The very phrase "Kṛṣṇa consciousness" suggests that those who are in such consciousness are living transcendentalists, situated in Him. The Lord says here distinctly, mayi te, "in Me." Naturally, as a result, the Lord is also in them. This is reciprocal. This also explains the words ye yatha mam prapadyante tams tathaiva bhajamy aham: "Whoever surrenders unto Me, proportionately I take care of him." This transcendental reciprocation exists because both the Lord and the devotee are conscious. When a diamond is set in a golden ring, it looks very nice. The gold is glorified, and at the same time the diamond is glorified. The Lord and the living entity eternally glitter, and when a living entity becomes inclined to the service of the Supreme Lord he looks like gold. The Lord is a diamond, and so this combination is very nice. Living entities in a pure state are called devotees. The Supreme Lord becomes the devotee of His devotees. If a reciprocal relationship is not present between the devotee and the Lord, then there is no personalist philosophy. In the impersonal philosophy there is no reciprocation between the Supreme and the living entity, but in the personalist philosophy there is.

The example is often given that the Lord is like a desire tree, and whatever one wants from this desire tree, the Lord supplies. But here the explanation is more complete. The Lord is here stated to be partial to the devotees. This is the manifestation of the Lord's special mercy to the devotees. The Lord's reciprocation should not be considered to be under the law of karma. It belongs to the transcendental situation in which the Lord and His devotees function. Devotional service of the Lord is not an activity of this material world; it is part of the spiritual world, where eternity, bliss and knowledge predominate.

SYNONYMS

api—in spite of; cet—although; su–duracarah—one committing the most abominable actions; bhajate—engaged in devotional service; mam—unto Me; ananya–bhak—without deviation; sadhuh—saint; eva—certainly; sah—he; mantavyah—to be considered; samyak—completely; vyavasitah—situated; hi—certainly; sah—he.

TRANSLATION

Even if one commits the most abominable actions, if he is engaged in devotional service, he is to be considered saintly because he is properly situated.

PURPORT

The word su-duracarah used in this verse is very significant, and we should understand it properly. When a living entity is conditioned, he has two kinds of activities: one is conditional, and the other is constitutional. As for protecting the body or abiding by the rules of society and state, certainly there are different activities, even for the devotees, in connection with the conditional life, and such activities are called conditional. Besides these, the living entity who is fully conscious of his spiritual nature and is engaged in Kṛṣṇa consciousness, or the devotional service of the Lord, has activities which are called transcendental. Such activities are performed in his constitutional position, and they are technically called devotional service. Now, in the conditioned state, sometimes devotional service and the conditional service in relation to the body will parallel one another. But then again, sometimes these activities become opposed to one another. As far as possible, a devotee is very cautious so that he does not do anything that could disrupt his wholesome condition. He knows that perfection in his activities depends on his progressive realization of Kṛṣṇa consciousness. Sometimes, however, it may be seen that a person in Kṛṣṇa consciousness commits some act which may be taken as most abominable socially or politically. But such a temporary falldown does not disqualify him. In the Srimad-Bhagavatam it is stated that if a person falls down but is wholeheartedly engaged in the transcendental service of the Supreme Lord, the Lord, being situated within his heart, beautifies him and excuses him from that abomination. The material contamination is so strong that even a yogi fully engaged in the service of the Lord sometimes becomes ensnared; but Kṛṣṇa consciousness is so strong that such an occasional falldown is at once rectified. Therefore the process of devotional service is always a success. No one should deride a devotee for some accidental falldown from the ideal path, for, as is explained in the next verse, such occasional falldowns will be stopped in due course, as soon as a devotee is completely situated in Kṛṣṇa consciousness.

Therefore a person who is situated in Kṛṣṇa consciousness and is engaged with determination in the process of chanting Hare Kṛṣṇa, Hare Kṛṣṇa, Kṛṣṇa Kṛṣṇa, Hare Hare/ Hare Rama, Hare Rama, Rama Rama, Hare Hare should be considered to be in the transcendental position, even if by chance or accident he is found to have fallen. The words sadhur eva, "he is saintly," are very emphatic. They are a warning to the nondevotees that because of an accidental falldown a devotee should not be derided; he should still be considered saintly even if he has fallen down accidentally. And the word mantavyah is still more emphatic. If one does not follow this rule, and derides a devotee for his accidental falldown, then he is disobeying the order of the Supreme Lord. The only qualification of a devotee is to be unflinchingly and exclusively engaged in devotional service.

The mark of a spot which may be seen on the moon does not become an impediment to the moonlight. Similarly, the accidental falldown of a devotee from the path of a saintly character does not make him abominable. On the other hand, one should not misunderstand that a devotee in transcendental devotional service can act in all kinds of abominable ways; this verse only refers to an accident due to the strong power of material connections. Devotional service is more or less a declaration of war against the illusory energy. As long as one is not strong enough to fight the illusory energy, there may be accidental falldowns. But when one is strong enough, he is no longer subjected to such falldowns, as previously explained. No one should take advantage of this verse and commit nonsense and think that he is still a devotee. If he does not improve in his character by devotional service, then it is to be understood that he is not a high devotee.

ksipram—very soon; bhavati—becomes; dharma-atma—righteous;
sasvat—santim—lasting peace; nigacchati—attains; kaunteya—O son of Kunti;
pratijanihi—justly declare; na—never; me—Mine; bhaktah—devotees;
pranasyati—perishes.

TRANSLATION

He quickly becomes righteous and attains lasting peace. O son of Kunti, declare it boldly that My devotee never perishes.

PURPORT

This should not be misunderstood. In the Seventh Chapter the Lord says that one who is engaged in mischievous activities cannot become a devotee of the Lord. One who is not a devotee of the Lord has no good qualifications whatsoever. The question remains, then, How can a person engaged in abominable activities—either by accident or intention—be a pure devotee? This question may justly be raised. The miscreants, as stated in the Seventh Chapter, who never come to the devotional service of the Lord, have no good qualifications, as is stated in the Srimad-Bhagavatam. Generally, a devotee who is engaged in the nine kinds of devotional activities is engaged in the process of cleansing all material contamination from the heart. He puts the Supreme Personality of Godhead within his heart, and all sinful contaminations are naturally washed away. Continuous thinking of the Supreme Lord makes him pure by nature. According to the Vedas, there is a certain regulation that if one falls down from his exalted position, he has to undergo certain ritualistic processes to purify himself. But here there is no such condition because the purifying process is already there in the heart of the devotee, due to his remembering the Supreme Personality of Godhead constantly. Therefore, the chanting of Hare Kṛṣṇa, Hare Kṛṣṇa, Kṛṣṇa Kṛṣṇa, Hare Hare/ Hare Rāma, Hare Rāma, Rāma Rāma, Hare Hare should be continued without stoppage. This will protect a devotee from all accidental falldowns. He will thus remain perpetually free from all material contaminations.

SYNONYMS

mam—unto Me; hi—certainly; partha—O son of Prtha; vyapasritya—particularly taking shelter; ye—anyone; api—also; syuh—becomes; papa-yonayah—born of a lower family; striyah—women; vaisyah—mercantile people; tatha—also; sudrah—lower-class men; te api—even they; yanti—go; param—supreme; gatim—destination.

TRANSLATION

O son of Prtha, those who take shelter in Me, though they be of lower birth—women, vaisyas [merchants], as well as sudras [workers]—can approach the supreme destination.

PURPORT

It is clearly declared here by the Supreme Lord that in devotional service there is no distinction between the lower or higher classes of people. In the material conception of life, there are such divisions, but for a person engaged in transcendental devotional service to the Lord, there are not. Everyone is eligible for the supreme destination. In the Srimad-Bhagavatam (2.4.18) it is stated that even the lowest, who are called candalas (dog-eaters), can be elevated by association with a pure devotee. Therefore devotional service and guidance of a pure devotee are so strong that there is no discrimination between the lower and higher classes of men; anyone can take to it. The most simple man taking shelter of the pure devotee can be purified by proper guidance. According to the different modes of material nature, men are classified in the mode of goodness (brahmanas), the mode of passion (ksatriyas, or administrators), the mixed modes of passion and ignorance (vaisyas, or merchants), and the mode of ignorance (sudras, or workers). Those lower than them are called candalas, and they are born in sinful families. Generally, those who are born in sinful families are not accepted by the higher classes.

But the process of devotional service and the pure devotee of the Supreme God are so strong that all the lower classes can attain the highest perfection of life. This is possible only when one takes shelter of Kṛṣṇa. One has to take shelter completely of Kṛṣṇa. Then one can become much greater than great jñānis and yogis.

TRANSLATION

How much greater then are the brahmanas, the righteous, the devotees and saintly kings who in this temporary miserable world engage in loving service unto Me.

PURPORT

In this material world there are classifications of people, but, after all, this world is not a happy place for anyone. It is clearly stated here, anityam asukham lokam: this world is temporary and full of miseries, not habitable for any sane gentleman. This world is declared by the Supreme Personality of Godhead to be temporary and full of miseries. Some of the philosophers, especially the minor philosophers, say that this world is false, but we can understand from Bhagavad-gita that the world is not false; it is temporary. There is a difference between temporary and false. This world is temporary, but there is another world, which is eternal. This world is miserable, but the other world is eternal and blissful.

Arjuna was born in a saintly royal family. To him also the Lord says, "Take to My devotional service and come quickly back to Godhead, back home." No one should remain in this temporary world, full as it is with miseries. Everyone should attach himself to the bosom of the Supreme Personality of Godhead so that he can be eternally happy. The devotional service of the Supreme Lord is the only process by which all problems of all classes of men can be solved. Everyone should therefore take to Kṛṣṇa consciousness and make his life perfect.

TRANSLATION

Engage your mind always in thinking of Me, offer obeisances and worship Me. Being completely absorbed in Me, surely you will come to Me.

PURPORT

In this verse it is clearly indicated that Kṛṣṇa consciousness is the only means of being delivered from the clutches of this contaminated material world. Sometimes unscrupulous commentators distort the meaning of what is clearly stated here: that all devotional service should be offered to the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Kṛṣṇa. Unfortunately, unscrupulous commentators divert the mind of the reader to that which is not at all feasible. Such commentators do not know that there is no difference between Kṛṣṇa's mind and Kṛṣṇa. Kṛṣṇa is not an ordinary human being; He is Absolute Truth. His body, mind and He Himself are one and absolute. It is stated in the Kurma Purana, as it is quoted by Bhaktisiddhanta Sarasvatī Gosvāmī in his Anubhasya comments on the Caitanya-caritamṛta (Fifth Chapter, Adi-līla, verses 41–48), deha-dehī-vibhedo 'yam nesvare vidyate kvacit. This means that there is no difference in Kṛṣṇa, the Supreme Lord, between Himself and His body. But, because they do not know this science of Kṛṣṇa, the commentators hide Kṛṣṇa and divide His personality from His mind or from His body. Although this is sheer ignorance of the science of Kṛṣṇa, some men make profit out of misleading the people.

There are some who are demonic; they also think of Kṛṣṇa, but enviously, just like King Kamsa, Kṛṣṇa's uncle. He was also thinking of Kṛṣṇa always, but he thought of Kṛṣṇa as his enemy. He was always in anxiety, wondering when Kṛṣṇa would come to kill him. That kind of thinking will not help us. One should be thinking of Kṛṣṇa in devotional love. That is bhakti. One should cultivate the knowledge of Kṛṣṇa continually. What is that favorable cultivation? It is to learn from a bona fide teacher. Kṛṣṇa is the Supreme Personality of Godhead, and we have several times explained that His body is not material, but is eternal, blissful knowledge. This kind of talk about Kṛṣṇa will help one become a devotee. Otherwise, understanding Kṛṣṇa from the wrong source will prove fruitless.

One should therefore engage his mind in the eternal form, the primal form of Kṛṣṇa; with conviction in his heart that Kṛṣṇa is the Supreme, he should engage himself in worship. There are hundreds of thousands of temples in India for the worship of Kṛṣṇa, and devotional service is practiced there. When such practice is made, one has to offer obeisances to Kṛṣṇa. One should lower his head before the Deity and engage his mind, his body, his activities—everything. That will make one fully absorbed in Kṛṣṇa without deviation. This will help one transfer into the Kṛṣṇaloka. One should not be deviated by unscrupulous commentators. One must engage in the nine different processes of devotional service, beginning with hearing and chanting about Kṛṣṇa. Pure devotional service is the highest achievement of human society.

In the Seventh and Eighth chapters of Bhagavad-gītā, pure devotional service to the Lord has been explained, apart from the yoga of knowledge and mystic yoga or fruitive activities. Those who are not purely sanctified may be attracted by different features of the Lord, like the impersonal brahmajyoti and localized Paramatma, but a pure devotee directly takes to the service of the Supreme Lord.

There is a beautiful poem about Kṛṣṇa in which it is clearly stated that any person who is engaged in the worship of demigods is most unintelligent and cannot achieve at any time the supreme award of Kṛṣṇa. The devotee, in the beginning, may sometimes fall from the standard, but still he should be considered superior to all other philosophers and yogis. One who always engages in Kṛṣṇa consciousness should be understood to be the perfect saintly person. His accidental nondevotional activities will diminish, and he will soon be situated without any doubt in complete perfection. The pure devotee has no actual chance to fall down because the Supreme Godhead personally takes care of His pure devotees. Therefore, the intelligent person should take directly to this process of Kṛṣṇa consciousness and happily live in this material world. He will eventually receive the supreme award of Kṛṣṇa.

Thus end the Bhaktivedānta Purports to the Ninth Chapter of the Srimad Bhagavad-gītā in the matter of the Most Confidential Knowledge.

Chapter 10

The Opulence of the Absolute

sri-bhagavan uvaca

bhuya eva maha-baho

SYNONYMS

sri-bhagavan uvaca—the Supreme Personality of Godhead said; bhuyah—again; eva—certainly; maha-baho—O mighty-armed; srnu—just hear; me—My; paramam—supreme; vacah—information; yat—that which; te—to you; aham—I; priyamanaya—thinking you dear to Me; vaksyami—say; hita-kamyaya—for your benefit.

TRANSLATION

The Supreme Lord said: My dear friend, mighty–armed Arjuna, listen again to My supreme word, which I shall impart to you for your benefit and which will give you great joy.

PURPORT

The word bhagavan is explained thus by Parasara Muni: one who is full in six opulences, who has full strength, full fame, wealth, knowledge, beauty and renunciation, is Bhagavan, or the Supreme Personality of Godhead. While Krsna was present on this earth, He displayed all six opulences. Therefore great sages like Parasara Muni have all accepted Krsna as the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Now Krsna is instructing Arjuna in more confidential knowledge of His opulences and His work. Previously, beginning with the Seventh Chapter, the Lord already explained His different energies and how they are acting. Now in this chapter He explains His specific opulences to Arjuna. In the previous chapter He has clearly explained His different energies to establish devotion in firm conviction. Again in this chapter He tells Arjuna about His manifestations and various opulences.

The more one hears about the Supreme God, the more one becomes fixed in devotional service. One should always hear about the Lord in the association of devotees; that will enhance one's devotional service. Discourses in the society of devotees can take place only among those who are really anxious to be in Krsna consciousness. Others cannot take part in such discourses. The Lord clearly tells Arjuna that because he is very dear to Him, for his benefit such discourses are taking place.

SYNONYMS

na—never; me—My; viduh—knows; sura-ganah—demigods; prabhavam—opulences; na—never; maha-rsayah—great sages; aham—I am; adih—the origin; hi—certainly; devanam—of the demigods; maha-rsinam—of the great sages; ca—also; sarvasah—in all respects.

TRANSLATION

Neither the hosts of demigods nor the great sages know My origin, for, in every respect, I am the source of the demigods and the sages.

PURPORT

As stated in the Brahma-samhita, Lord Krsna is the Supreme Lord. No one is greater than Him; He is the cause of all causes. Here it is also stated by the Lord personally that He is the cause of all the demigods and sages. Even the demigods and great sages cannot understand Krsna; they can understand neither His name nor His personality, so what is the position of the so-called scholars of this tiny planet? No one can understand why this Supreme God comes to earth as an ordinary human being and executes such commonplace and yet wonderful activities. One should know, then, that scholarship is not the qualification necessary to understand Krsna. Even the demigods and the great sages have tried to understand Krsna by their mental speculation, and they have failed to do so. In the Srimad-Bhagavatam also it is clearly said that even the great demigods are not able to understand the Supreme Personality of Godhead. They can speculate to the limits of their imperfect senses and can reach the opposite conclusion of impersonalism, of something not manifested by the three qualities of material nature, or they can imagine something by mental speculation, but it is not possible to understand Krsna by such foolish speculation.

Here the Lord indirectly says that if anyone wants to know the Absolute Truth, "Here I am present as the Supreme Personality of Godhead. I am the Supreme." One should know this. Although one cannot understand the inconceivable Lord who is personally present, He nonetheless exists. We can actually understand Kṛṣṇa, who is eternal, full of bliss and knowledge, simply by studying His words in Bhagavad-gīta and Śrīmad-Bhagavatam. The impersonal Brahman can be conceived by persons who are already in the inferior energy of the Lord, but the Personality of Godhead cannot be conceived unless one is in the transcendental position.

Because most men cannot understand Kṛṣṇa in His actual situation, out of His causeless mercy He descends to show favor to such speculators. Yet despite the Supreme Lord's uncommon activities, these speculators, due to contamination in the material energy, still think that the impersonal Brahman is the Supreme. Only the devotees who are fully surrendered unto the Supreme Lord can understand, by the grace of the Supreme Personality, that He is Kṛṣṇa. The devotees of the Lord do not bother about the impersonal Brahman conception of God; their faith and devotion bring them to surrender immediately unto the Supreme Lord, and out of the causeless mercy of Kṛṣṇa, they can understand Kṛṣṇa. No one else can understand Him. So even great sages agree: What is atma, what is the Supreme? It is He whom we have to worship.

yah—anyone who; mam—unto Me; ajam—unborn; anadim—without beginning; ca—also; vetti—knows; loka—the planets; maha—isvaram—the supreme master; asammudhah—without doubt; sah—he; martyesu—among those subject to death;

sarva—papaih—from all sinful reactions; pramucyate—is delivered.

TRANSLATION

He who knows Me as the unborn, as the beginningless, as the Supreme Lord of all the worlds—he, undeluded among men, is freed from all sins.

PURPORT

As stated in the Seventh Chapter (7.3), those who are trying to elevate themselves to the platform of spiritual realization are not ordinary men. They are superior to millions and millions of ordinary men who have no knowledge of spiritual realization, but out of those actually trying to understand their spiritual situation, one who can come to the understanding that Kṛṣṇa is the Supreme Personality of Godhead, the proprietor of everything, the unborn, is the most successful spiritually realized person. In that stage only, when one has fully understood Kṛṣṇa's supreme position, can one be free completely from all sinful reactions.

Here the word aja, meaning unborn, should not be confused with the living entities, who are described in the Second Chapter as aja. The Lord is different from the living entities who are taking birth and dying due to material attachment. The conditioned souls are changing their bodies, but His body is not changeable. Even when He comes to this material world, He comes as the same unborn; therefore in the Fourth Chapter it is said that the Lord, by His internal potency, is not under the inferior material energy, but is always in the superior energy.

He was existing before the creation, and He is different from His creation. All the demigods were created within this material world, but as far as Kṛṣṇa is concerned, it is said that He is not created; therefore Kṛṣṇa is different even from the great demigods like Brahma and Siva. And because He is the creator of Brahma, Siva and all the other demigods, He is the Supreme Person of all planets.

Sri Kṛṣṇa is therefore different from everything that is created, and anyone who knows Him as such immediately becomes liberated from all sinful reaction. One must be liberated from all sinful activities to be in the knowledge of the Supreme Lord. Only by devotional service can He be known and not by any other means, as stated in Bhagavad-gita.

One should not try to understand Kṛṣṇa as a human being. As stated previously, only a foolish person thinks Him to be a human being. This is again expressed here in a different way. A man who is not foolish, who is intelligent enough to understand the constitutional position of the Godhead, is always free from all sinful reactions.

If Kṛṣṇa is known as the son of Devakī, then how can He be unborn? That is also explained in the Srimad-Bhagavatam: When He appeared before Devakī and Vasudeva, He was not born as an ordinary child; He appeared in His original form, and then He transformed Himself into an ordinary child.

Anything done under the direction of Kṛṣṇa is transcendental. It cannot be contaminated by the material reactions, which may be auspicious or inauspicious. The conception that there are things auspicious and inauspicious in the material world is more or less a mental concoction because there is nothing auspicious in the material world. Everything is inauspicious because the very material mask is inauspicious. We simply imagine it to be auspicious. Real auspiciousness depends on activities in Kṛṣṇa consciousness in full devotion and service. Therefore if we at all want our activities to be auspicious, then we should work under the directions of the Supreme Lord. Such directions are given in authoritative scriptures such as Srimad-Bhagavatam and Bhagavad-gita, or from a bona fide spiritual master. Because the spiritual master is the representative of the Supreme Lord, his direction is directly the direction of the Supreme Lord. The spiritual master, saintly persons and scriptures direct in the same way. There is no contradiction in these three sources. All actions done under such direction are free from the reactions of pious or impious activities of this material world. The transcendental attitude of the devotee in the performance of activities is actually that of renunciation, and this is called sannyasa. Anyone acting under the direction of the Supreme Lord is actually a sannyasi and a yogi, and not the man who has simply taken the dress of the sannyasi, or a pseudo yogi.

TRANSLATION

Intelligence, knowledge, freedom from doubt and delusion, forgiveness, truthfulness, self-control and calmness, pleasure and pain, birth, death, fear, fearlessness, nonviolence, equanimity, satisfaction, austerity, charity, fame and infamy are created by Me alone.

PURPORT

The different qualities of living entities, be they good or bad, are all created by Kṛṣṇa, and they are described here.

Intelligence refers to the power of analyzing things in proper perspective, and knowledge refers to understanding what is spirit and what is matter. Ordinary knowledge obtained by a university education pertains only to matter, and it is not accepted here as knowledge. Knowledge means knowing the distinction between spirit and matter. In modern education there is no knowledge about the spirit; they are simply taking care of the material elements and bodily needs. Therefore academic knowledge is not complete.

Asammoha, freedom from doubt and delusion, can be achieved when one is not hesitant and when he understands the transcendental philosophy. Slowly but surely he becomes free from bewilderment. Nothing should be accepted blindly; everything should be accepted with care and with caution. Kṣama, forgiveness, should be practiced, and one should excuse the minor offenses of others. Satyam, truthfulness, means that facts should be presented as they are for the benefit of others. Facts should not be misrepresented. According to social conventions, it is said that one can speak the truth only when it is palatable to others. But that is not truthfulness. The truth should be spoken in a straightforward way, so that others will understand actually what the facts are. If a man is a thief and if people are warned that he is a thief, that is truth. Although sometimes the truth is unpalatable, one should not refrain from speaking it. Truthfulness demands that the facts be presented as they are for the benefit of others. That is the definition of truth.

Self-control means that the senses should not be used for unnecessary personal enjoyment. There is no prohibition against meeting the proper needs of the senses but unnecessary sense enjoyment is detrimental for spiritual advancement. Therefore the senses should be restrained from unnecessary use. Similarly, the mind should not indulge in unnecessary thoughts; that is called sama, or calmness. Nor should one spend one's time pondering over earning money. That is a misuse of the thinking power. The mind should be used to understand the prime necessity of human beings, and that should be presented authoritatively. The power of thought should be developed in association with persons who are authorities in the scriptures, saintly persons and spiritual masters and those whose thinking is highly developed. Sukham, pleasure or happiness, should always be in that which is favorable for the cultivation of the spiritual knowledge of Kṛṣṇa consciousness. And similarly, that which is painful or which causes distress is that which is unfavorable for the cultivation of Kṛṣṇa consciousness. Anything favorable for the development of Kṛṣṇa consciousness should be accepted, and anything unfavorable should be rejected.

Bhava, birth, should be understood to refer to the body. As far as the soul is concerned, there is neither birth nor death; that we have discussed in the beginning of Bhagavad-gītā. Birth and death apply to one's embodiment in the material world. Fear is due to worrying about the future. A person in Kṛṣṇa consciousness has no fear because by his activities he is sure to go back to the spiritual sky, back home, back to Godhead. Therefore his future is very bright. Others, however, do not know what their future holds; they have no knowledge of what the next life holds. So they are therefore in constant anxiety. If we want to get free from anxiety, then the best course is to understand Kṛṣṇa and be situated always in Kṛṣṇa consciousness. In that way we will be free from all fear. In the Srimad–Bhagavatam (11.2.37) it is stated that fear is caused by our absorption in the illusory energy, but those who are free from the illusory energy, those who are confident that they are not the material body, that they are spiritual parts of the Supreme Personality of Godhead and are therefore engaged in the transcendental service of the Supreme Godhead, have nothing to fear. Their future is very bright. This fear is a condition of persons who are not in Kṛṣṇa consciousness. Abhayam, fearlessness, is only possible for one in Kṛṣṇa consciousness.

Ahimsa, nonviolence, means that one should not do anything which will put others into misery or confusion. Material activities that are promised by so many politicians, sociologists, philanthropists, etc., do not produce very good results because the politicians and philanthropists have no transcendental vision; they do not know what is actually beneficial for human society. Ahimsa means that people should be trained in such a way that the full utilization of the human body can be achieved. The human body is meant for spiritual realization, so any movement or any commissions which do not further that end commit violence on the human body. That which furthers the future spiritual happiness of the people in general is called nonviolence.

Samata, equanimity, refers to freedom from attachment and aversion. To be very much attached or to be very much detached is not the best. This material world should be accepted without attachment or aversion. Similarly, that which is favorable for prosecuting Kṛṣṇa consciousness should be accepted; that which is unfavorable should be rejected. That is called samata, equanimity. A person in Kṛṣṇa consciousness has nothing to reject and nothing to accept unless it is useful in the prosecution of Kṛṣṇa consciousness.

Tusti, satisfaction, means that one should not be eager to gather more and more material goods by unnecessary activity. One should be satisfied with whatever is obtained by the grace of the Supreme Lord; that is called satisfaction. Tapas means austerity or penance. There are many rules and definitions in the Vedas which apply here, like rising early in the morning and taking a bath. Sometimes it is very troublesome to rise early in the morning, but whatever voluntary trouble one may suffer in this way is called penance. Similarly, there are prescriptions for fasting on certain days of the month. One may not be inclined to practice such fasting, but because of his determination to make advancement in the science of Kṛṣṇa consciousness, he should accept such bodily troubles which are recommended. However, one should not fast unnecessarily or against Vedic injunctions. One should not fast for some political purpose; that is described in Bhagavad–gita as fasting in ignorance, and anything done in ignorance or passion does not lead to spiritual advancement. Everything done in the mode of goodness does advance one, however, and fasting done in terms of the Vedic injunctions enriches one in spiritual knowledge.

As far as charity is concerned, one should give fifty percent of his earnings to some good cause. And what is a good cause? It is that which is conducted in terms of Kṛṣṇa consciousness. That is not only a good cause, but it is the best cause. Because Kṛṣṇa is good, His cause is also good. Thus charity should be given to a person who is engaged in Kṛṣṇa consciousness. According to Vedic literature, it is enjoined that charity should be given to the brahmanas. This practice is still followed, although not very nicely in terms of the Vedic injunction. But still the injunction is that charity should be given to the brahmanas. Why? Because they are engaged in higher cultivation of spiritual knowledge. A brahmana is supposed to devote his whole life to understanding Brahman. A brahma-jana is one who knows Brahman; he is called a brahmana. Thus charity is offered to the brahmanas because since they are always engaged in higher spiritual service they have no time to earn their livelihood. In the Vedic literature, charity is also to be awarded to the renouncer of life, the sannyasi. The sannyasis beg from door to door, not for money but for missionary purposes. The system is that they go from door to door to awaken the householders from the slumber of ignorance. Because the householders are engaged in family affairs and have forgotten their actual purpose in life—awakening their Kṛṣṇa consciousness—it is the business of the sannyasis to go as beggars to the householders and encourage them to be Kṛṣṇa conscious. As it is said in the Vedas, one should awake and achieve what is due him in this human form of life. This knowledge and method is distributed by the sannyasis; hence charity is to be given to the renouncer of life, to the brahmanas, and similar good causes, not to any whimsical cause.

Yasas, fame, should be according to Lord Caitanya, who said that a man is famous when he is known as a great devotee. That is real fame. If one has become a great man in Kṛṣṇa consciousness and it is known, then he is truly famous. One who does not have such fame is infamous.

All these qualities are manifest throughout the universe in human society and in the society of the demigods. There are many forms of humanity on other planets, and these qualities are there. Now, for one who wants to advance in Kṛṣṇa consciousness, Kṛṣṇa creates all these qualities, but the person develops them himself from within. One who engages in the devotional service of the Supreme Lord develops all the good qualities, as arranged by the Supreme Lord.

Of whatever we find, good or bad, the origin is Kṛṣṇa. Nothing can manifest in this material world which is not in Kṛṣṇa. That is knowledge; although we know that things are differently situated, we should realize that everything flows from Kṛṣṇa.

SYNONYMS

maha–rsayah—the great sages; sapta—seven; purve—before; catvarah—four; manavah—Manus; tatha—also; mat–bhavah—born of Me; manasah—from the mind; jatah—born; yesam—of them; loke—the planets; imah—all this; prajah—population.

TRANSLATION

The seven great sages and before them the four other great sages and the Manus [progenitors of mankind] are born out of My mind, and all creatures in these planets descend from them.

PURPORT

The Lord is giving a genealogical synopsis of the universal population. Brahma is the original creature born out of the energy of the Supreme Lord known as Hiranyagarbha. And from Brahma all the seven great sages, and before them four other great sages, namely Sanaka, Sananda, Sanatana and Sanat–kumara, and the Manus, are manifest. All these twenty–five great sages are known as the patriarchs of the living entities all over the universe. There are innumerable universes and innumerable planets within each universe, and each planet is full of population of different varieties. All of them are born of these twenty-five patriarchs. Brahma underwent penance for one thousand years of the demigods before he realized by the grace of Krsna how to create. Then from Brahma Sanaka, Sananda, Sanatana and Sanat-kumara came out, then Rudra, and then the seven sages, and in this way all the brahmanas and ksatriyas are born out of the energy of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Brahma is known as Pitamaha, the grandfather, and Krsna is known as the Prapitamaha, the father of the grandfather. That is stated in the Eleventh Chapter of the Bhagavad-gita (11.39).

etam—all this; vibhutim—opulence; yogam ca—also mystic power; mama—of Mine; yah—anyone; vetti—knows; tattvatah—factual; sah—he; avikalpena—without division; yogena—in devotional service; yujoyate—engaged; na—never; atra—here; samsayah—doubt.

TRANSLATION

He who knows in truth this glory and power of Mine engages in unalloyed devotional service; of this there is no doubt.

PURPORT

The highest summit of spiritual perfection is knowledge of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Unless one is firmly convinced of the different opulences of the Supreme Lord, he cannot engage in devotional service. Generally people know that God is great, but they do not know in detail how God is great. Here are the details. If one knows factually how God is great, then naturally he becomes a surrendered soul and engages himself in the devotional service of the Lord. When one factually knows the opulences of the Supreme, there is no alternative but to surrender to Him. This factual knowledge can be known from the descriptions in Srimad-Bhagavatam and Bhagavad-gita and similar literatures.

In the administration of this universe there are many demigods distributed throughout the planetary system, and the chief of them are Brahma, Lord Siva and the four great Kumaras and other patriarchs. There are many forefathers of the population of the universe, and all of them are born of the Supreme Lord Kṛṣṇa. The Supreme Personality of Godhead Kṛṣṇa, is the original forefather of all forefathers.

These are some of the opulences of the Supreme Lord. When one is firmly convinced of them, he accepts Kṛṣṇa with great faith and without any doubt, and he engages in devotional service. All this particular knowledge is required in order to increase one's interest in the loving devotional service of the Lord. One should not neglect to understand fully how great Kṛṣṇa is, for by knowing the greatness of Kṛṣṇa one will be able to be fixed in sincere devotional service.

TRANSLATION

I am the source of all spiritual and material worlds. Everything emanates from Me. The wise who know this perfectly engage in My devotional service and worship Me with all their hearts.

PURPORT

A learned scholar who has studied the Vedas perfectly and has information from authorities like Lord Caitanya and who knows how to apply these teachings can understand that Kṛṣṇa is the origin of everything in both the material and spiritual worlds, and because he knows this perfectly he becomes firmly fixed in the devotional service of the Supreme Lord. He can never be deviated by any amount of nonsensical commentaries or by fools. All Vedic literature agrees that Kṛṣṇa is the source of Brahma, Siva and all other demigods. In the Atharva Veda (Gopala-tapani Upanisad 1.24) it is said, yo brahmanam vidadhati purvam yo vai vedams ca gapayati sma kṛṣṇah: "It was Kṛṣṇa who in the beginning instructed Brahma in Vedic knowledge and who disseminated Vedic knowledge in the past." Then again the Narayana Upanisad says, (1) atha puruso ha vai narayano 'kamayata prajah srjeyeti: "Then the Supreme Personality Narayana desired to create living entities." Again it is said, narayanad brahma jayate, narayanad prajapatih prajayate, narayanad indro jayate, narayanad astau vasavo jayante, narayanad ekadasa rudra jayante, narayanad dvadasadityah: "From Narayana, Brahma is born, and from Narayana, the patriarchs are also born. From Narayana, Indra is born, from Narayana the eight Vasus are born, from Narayana the eleven Rudras are born, from Narayana the twelve Adityas are born."

It is said in the same Vedas, brahmanyō devakī-putrah: "The son of Devaki, Kṛṣṇa, is the Supreme Personality." (Narayana Upanisad 4) Then it is said:

eko vai narayana asin na brahma na isano napo nagni samau neme

dyāv-aprthivi na naksatrani na suryah sa ekaki na ramate tasya dhyānantah sthasya yatra chandogaih kriyamanastakadi-samjnaka stuti-stomah stomam ucyate.

"In the beginning of the creation there was only the Supreme Personality Narayana. There was no Brahma, no Siva, no fire, no moon, no stars in the sky, no sun. There was only Kṛṣṇa, who creates all and enjoys all" (Maha Upanisad 1)

In the Maha Upanisad it is said that Lord Siva was born from the highest, the Supreme Lord Kṛṣṇa, and the Vedas say that it is the Supreme Lord, the creator of Brahma and Siva, who is to be worshiped. In the Mokṣa-dharma Kṛṣṇa also says, prajāpatim ca rudram capy

aḥam eva sṛjami vai

māma māya-vimohitau

"The patriarchs, Siva and others are created by Me, though they do not know that they are created by Me because they are deluded by My illusory energy." In the Varaha Purana it is also said, narayanah paro devas

tasmañ jatas caturmukhah

tasmañ rudro 'bhavad devah

sa ca sarva-jñatam gatah

"Narayana is the Supreme Personality of Godhead, and from Him Brahma was born, from whom Siva was born."

Lord Kṛṣṇa is the source of all generations, and He is called the most efficient cause of everything. He says that because "everything is born of Me, I am the original source of all. Everything is under Me; no one is above Me." There is no supreme controller other than Kṛṣṇa. One who understands Kṛṣṇa in such a way from a bona fide spiritual master and from Vedic literature, who engages all his energy in Kṛṣṇa consciousness, becomes a truly learned man. In comparison to him, all others, who do not know Kṛṣṇa properly, are but fools. Only a fool would consider Kṛṣṇa to be an ordinary man. A Kṛṣṇa conscious person should not be bewildered by fools; he should avoid all unauthorized commentaries and interpretations on Bhagavad-gītā and proceed in Kṛṣṇa consciousness with determination and firmness.

mat-cittah—minds fully engaged in Me; mat-gata-pranah—lives devoted to the service of Krsna; bodhayantah—preaching; parasparam—among themselves; kathayantah ca—talking also; mam—about Me; nityam—perpetually; tusyanti—are pleased; ca—also; ramanti—enjoy transcendental bliss; ca—also.

TRANSLATION

The thoughts of My pure devotees dwell in Me, their lives are surrendered to Me, and they derive great satisfaction and bliss enlightening one another and conversing about Me.

PURPORT

Pure devotees, whose characteristics are mentioned here, engage themselves fully in the transcendental loving service of the Lord. Their minds cannot be diverted from the lotus feet of Krsna. Their talks are solely on the transcendental subjects. The symptoms of the pure devotees are described in this verse specifically. Devotees of the Supreme Lord are twenty-four hours daily engaged in glorifying the pastimes of the Supreme Lord. Their hearts and souls are constantly submerged in Krsna, and they take pleasure in discussing Him with other devotees.

In the preliminary stage of devotional service they relish the transcendental pleasure from the service itself, and in the mature stage they are actually situated in love of God. Once situated in that transcendental position, they can relish the highest perfection which is exhibited by the Lord in His abode. Lord Caitanya likens transcendental devotional service to the sowing of a seed in the heart of the living entity. There are innumerable living entities traveling throughout the different planets of the universe, and out of them there are a few who are fortunate enough to meet a pure devotee and get the chance to understand devotional service. This devotional service is just like a seed, and if it is sown in the heart of a living entity, and if he goes on hearing and chanting, Hare Krsna, Hare Krsna, Krsna Krsna, Hare Hare/ Hare Rama, Hare Rama, Rama Rama, Hare Hare, that seed fructifies, just as the seed of a tree fructifies with regular watering. The spiritual plant of devotional service gradually grows and grows until it penetrates the covering of the material universe and enters into the brahmajyoti effulgence in the spiritual sky. In the spiritual sky also that plant grows more and more until it reaches the highest planet, which is called Goloka Vrndavana, the supreme planet of Krsna. Ultimately, the plant takes shelter under the lotus feet of Krsna and rests there. Gradually as the plant grows fruits and flowers, that plant of devotional service also produces fruits, and the watering process in the form of chanting and hearing goes on. This plant of devotional service is fully described in the Caitanya-caritamṛta (Madhya-līla, Chapter Nineteen). It is explained there that when the complete plant takes shelter under the lotus feet of the Supreme Lord, one becomes fully absorbed in love of God; then he cannot live even for a moment without being in contact with the Supreme Lord, just as a fish cannot live without water. In such a state, the devotee actually attains the transcendental qualities in contact with the Supreme Lord.

The Srimad-Bhagavatam is also full of such narrations about the relationship between the Supreme Lord and His devotees; therefore the Srimad-Bhagavatam is very dear to the devotees. In this narration there is nothing about material activities, sense gratification or liberation. Srimad-Bhagavatam is the only narration in which the transcendental nature of the Supreme Lord and His devotees is fully described. Thus the realized souls in Krsna consciousness take continual pleasure in hearing such transcendental literatures, just as a young boy and girl take pleasure in association.

tesam—unto them; satata-yuktanam—always engaged; bhajatam—in devotional service; priti-purvakam—in loving ecstasy; dadami—I give; buddhi-yogam—real intelligence; tam—that; yena—by which; mam—unto Me; upayanti—come; te—they.

TRANSLATION

To those who are constantly devoted and worship Me with love, I give the understanding by which they can come to Me.

PURPORT

In this verse the word buddhi-yogam is very significant. We may remember that in the Second Chapter the Lord, instructing Arjuna, said that He had spoken to him of many things and that He would instruct him in the way of buddhi-yoga. Now buddhi-yoga is explained. Buddhi-yoga itself is action in Krsna consciousness; that is the highest intelligence. Buddhi means intelligence, and yoga means mystic activities or mystic elevation. When one tries to go back home, back to Godhead, and takes fully to Krsna consciousness in devotional service, his action is called buddhi yoga. In other words, buddhi-yoga is the process by which one gets out of the entanglement of this material world. The ultimate goal of progress is Krsna. People do not know this; therefore the association of devotees and a bona fide spiritual master are important. One should know that the goal is Krsna, and when the goal is assigned, then the path is slowly but progressively traversed, and the ultimate goal is achieved.

When a person knows the goal of life but is addicted to the fruits of activities, he is acting in karma-yoga. When he knows that the goal is Krsna, but he takes pleasure in mental speculations to understand Krsna, he is acting in jnana-yoga. And when he knows the goal and seeks Krsna completely in Krsna consciousness and devotional service, he is acting in bhakti-yoga, or buddhi-yoga, which is the complete yoga. This complete yoga is the highest perfectional stage of life.

A person may have a bona fide spiritual master and may be attached to a spiritual organization, but still, if he is not intelligent enough to make progress, then Krsna from within gives him instructions so that he may ultimately come to Him without difficulty. The qualification is that a person always engage himself in Krsna consciousness and with love and devotion render all kinds of services. He should perform some sort of work for Krsna, and that work should be with love. If a devotee is intelligent enough he will make progress on the path of self-realization. If one is sincere and devoted to the activities of devotional service, the Lord gives him a chance to make progress and ultimately attain to tesam—for them; eva—certainly; anukampa—artham—to show special mercy; aham—I; ajnana-jam—due to ignorance; tamah—darkness; nasayami—dispel; atma—within; bhavasthah—themselves; jnana—of knowledge; dipena—with the lamp; bhasvata—glowing.

Him.

SYNONYMS

TRANSLATION

Out of compassion for them, I, dwelling in their hearts, destroy with the shining lamp of knowledge the darkness born of ignorance.

PURPORT

When Lord Caitanya was in Benares promulgating the chanting of Hare Kṛṣṇa, Hare Kṛṣṇa, Kṛṣṇa Kṛṣṇa, Hare Hare/ Hare Rama, Hare Rama, Rama Rama, Hare Hare, thousands of people were following Him. Prakasananda, a very influential and learned scholar in Benares at that time, derided Lord Caitanya for being a sentimentalist. Sometimes philosophers criticize the devotees because they think that most of the devotees are in the darkness of ignorance and are philosophically naive sentimentalists. Actually that is not the fact. There are very, very learned scholars who have put forward the philosophy of devotion, but even if a devotee does not take advantage of their literatures or of his spiritual master, if he is sincere in his devotional service he is helped by Kṛṣṇa Himself within his heart. So the sincere devotee engaged in Kṛṣṇa consciousness cannot be without knowledge. The only qualification is that one carry out devotional service in full Kṛṣṇa consciousness.

The modern philosophers think that without discriminating one cannot have pure knowledge. For them this answer is given by the Supreme Lord: those who are engaged in pure devotional service, even though they be without sufficient education and even without sufficient knowledge of the Vedic principles, are still helped by the Supreme God, as stated in this verse.

The Lord tells Arjuna that basically there is no possibility of understanding the Supreme Truth, the Absolute Truth, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, simply by speculating, for the Supreme Truth is so great that it is not possible to understand Him or to achieve Him simply by making a mental effort. Man can go on speculating for several millions of years, and if he is not devoted, if he is not a lover of the Supreme Truth, he will never understand Kṛṣṇa or the Supreme Truth. Only by devotional service is the Supreme Truth, Kṛṣṇa, pleased and by His inconceivable energy He can reveal Himself to the heart of the pure devotee. The pure devotee always has Kṛṣṇa within his heart; therefore he is just like the sun that dissipates the darkness of ignorance. This is the special mercy rendered to the pure devotee by Kṛṣṇa.

Due to the contamination of material association, through many, many millions of births, one's heart is always covered with the dust of materialism, but when one engages in devotional service and constantly chants Hare Kṛṣṇa, the dust quickly clears and one is elevated to the platform of pure knowledge. The ultimate goal of Viṣṇu can be attained only by this chant and devotional service, and not by mental speculation or argument. The pure devotee does not have to worry about the necessities of life; he need not be anxious because when he removes the darkness from his heart, everything is provided automatically by the Supreme Lord, for He is pleased by the loving devotional service of the devotee. This is the essence of the Gita's teachings. By studying Bhagavad-gita, one can become a completely surrendered soul to the Supreme Lord and engage himself in pure devotional service. As the Lord takes charge, one becomes completely free from all kinds of materialistic endeavors.

TRANSLATION

Arjuna said: You are the Supreme Brahman, the ultimate, the supreme abode and purifier, the Absolute Truth and the eternal divine person. You are the primal God, transcendental and original, and You are the unborn and all-pervading beauty. All the great sages such as Narada, Asita, Devala, and Vyasa proclaim this of You, and now You Yourself are declaring it to me.

PURPORT

In these two verses the Supreme Lord gives a chance to the modern philosopher, for here it is clear that the Supreme is different from the individual soul. Arjuna, after hearing the essential four verses of Bhagavad-gita in this chapter, became completely free from all doubts and accepted Krsna as the Supreme Personality of Godhead. He at once boldly declares, "You are param brahma, the Supreme Personality of Godhead." And previously Krsna stated that He is the originator of everything and everyone. Every demigod and every human being is dependent on Him. Men and demigods, out of ignorance, think that they are absolute and independent of the Supreme Lord Krsna. That ignorance is removed perfectly by the discharge of devotional service. This is already explained in the previous verse by the Lord. Now by His grace, Arjuna is accepting Him as the Supreme Truth, in concordance with the Vedic injunction. It is not because Krsna is an intimate friend of Arjuna that he is flattering Him by calling Him the Supreme Personality of Godhead, the Absolute Truth. Whatever Arjuna says in these two verses is confirmed by Vedic truth. Vedic injunctions affirm that only one who takes to devotional service to the Supreme Lord can understand Him, whereas others cannot. Each and every word of this verse spoken by Arjuna is confirmed by Vedic injunction.

In the Kena Upanisad it is stated that the Supreme Brahman is the rest for everything, and Krsna has already explained that everything is resting on Him. The Mundaka Upanisad confirms that the Supreme Lord, in whom everything is resting, can be realized only by those who engage constantly in thinking of Him. This constant thinking of Krsna is smaranam, one of the methods of devotional service. It is only by devotional service to Krsna that one can understand his position and get rid of this material body.

In the Vedas the Supreme Lord is accepted as the purest of the pure. One who understands that Krsna is the purest of the pure can become purified from all sinful activities. One cannot be disinfected from sinful activities unless he surrenders unto the Supreme Lord. Arjuna's acceptance of Krsna as the supreme pure complies with the injunctions of Vedic literature. This is also confirmed by great personalities, of whom Narada is the chief.

Kṛṣṇa is the Supreme Personality of Godhead, and one should always meditate upon Him and enjoy one's transcendental relationship with Him. He is the supreme existence. He is free from bodily needs, birth and death. Not only does Arjuna confirm this, but all the Vedic literatures, the Purāṇas and histories. In all Vedic literatures Kṛṣṇa is thus described, and the Supreme Lord Himself also says in the Fourth Chapter, "Although I am unborn, I appear on this earth to establish religious principles." He is the supreme origin; He has no cause, for He is the cause of all causes, and everything is emanating from Him. This perfect knowledge can be had by the grace of the Supreme Lord.

Here Arjuna expresses himself through the grace of Kṛṣṇa. If we want to understand Bhagavad-gītā, we should accept the statements in these two verses. This is called the parampara system, acceptance of the disciplic succession. Unless one is in the disciplic succession, he cannot understand Bhagavad-gītā. It is not possible by so-called academic education. Unfortunately those proud of their academic education, despite so much evidence in Vedic literatures, stick to their obstinate conviction that Kṛṣṇa is an ordinary person.

sarvam—all; etad—these; rtam—truths; manye—accept; yat—which; mam—unto me; vadasi—You tell; kesava—O Kṛṣṇa; na—never; hi—certainly; te—Your; bhagavan—O Personality of Godhead; vyaktim—revelation; viduh—can know; devah—the demigods; na—nor; danavah—the demons.

TRANSLATION

O Krsna, I totally accept as truth all that You have told me. Neither the gods nor demons, O Lord, know Thy personality.

PURPORT

Arjuna herein confirms that persons of faithless and demonic nature cannot understand Krsna. He is not even known by the demigods, so what to speak of the so-called scholars of this modern world? By the grace of the Supreme Lord, Arjuna has understood that the Supreme Truth is Krsna and that He is the perfect one. One should therefore follow the path of Arjuna. He received the authority of Bhagavad-gita. As described in the Fourth Chapter, the parampara system of disciplic succession for the understanding of Bhagavad-gita was lost, and therefore Krsna reestablished that disciplic succession with Arjuna because He considered Arjuna His intimate friend and a great devotee. Therefore, as stated in our Introduction to Gitopanisad, Bhagavad-gita should be understood in the parampara system. When the parampara system was lost, Arjuna was again selected to rejuvenate it. The acceptance of Arjuna of all that Krsna says should be emulated; then we can understand the essence of Bhagavad-gita, and then only can we understand that Krsna is the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

SYNONYMS

svayam—personality; eva—certainly; atmana—by Yourself; atmanam—Yourself; vettha—know; tvam—You; purusa-uttama—O greatest of all persons; bhuta-bhavana—O origin of everything; bhuta-isa—O Lord of everything; deva-deva—O Lord of all demigods; jagat-pate—O Lord of the entire universe.

TRANSLATION

Indeed, You alone know Yourself by Your own potencies, O origin of all, Lord of all beings, God of gods, O Supreme Person, Lord of the universe!

PURPORT

The Supreme Lord Kṛṣṇa can be known by persons who are in a relationship with Him through the discharge of devotional service, like Arjuna and his followers. Persons of demonic or atheistic mentality cannot know Kṛṣṇa. Mental speculation that leads one away from the Supreme Lord is a serious sin, and one who does not know Kṛṣṇa should not try to comment on Bhagavad-gītā. Bhagavad-gītā is the statement of Kṛṣṇa, and since it is the science of Kṛṣṇa, it should be understood from Kṛṣṇa as Arjuna understood it. It should not be received from atheistic persons.

The Supreme Truth is realized in three aspects: as impersonal Brahman, localized Paramatma and at last as the Supreme Personality of Godhead. So at the last stage of understanding the Absolute Truth, one comes to the Supreme Personality of Godhead. A liberated man and even a common man may realize impersonal Brahman or localized Paramatma, yet they may not understand God's personality from the verses of Bhagavad-gītā, which are being spoken by this person, Kṛṣṇa. Sometimes the impersonalists accept Kṛṣṇa as Bhagavan, or they accept His authority. Yet many liberated persons cannot understand Kṛṣṇa as Purusottama, the Supreme Person, the father of all living entities. Therefore Arjuna addresses Him as Purusottama. And if one comes to know Him as the father of all the living entities, still one may not know Him as the supreme controller; therefore He is addressed here as Bhutesa, the supreme controller of everyone. And even if one knows Krsna as the supreme controller of all living entities, still one may not know that He is the origin of all the demigods; therefore He is addressed herein as Devadeva, the worshipful God of all demigods. And even if one knows Him as the worshipful God of all demigods, one may not know that He is the supreme proprietor of everything; therefore He is addressed as Jagatpati. Thus the truth about Krsna is established in this verse by the realization of Arjuna, and we should follow in the footsteps of Arjuna to understand Krsna as He is.

TRANSLATION

Please tell me in detail of Your divine powers by which You pervade all these worlds and abide in them.

PURPORT

In this verse it appears that Arjuna is already satisfied with his understanding of the Supreme Lord Kṛṣṇa. By Kṛṣṇa's grace, Arjuna has personal experience, intelligence and knowledge and whatever else a person may have through all these agencies, and he has understood Kṛṣṇa as the Supreme Personality of Godhead. For him there is no doubt, yet he is asking Kṛṣṇa to explain His all-pervading nature so that in the future people will understand, especially the impersonalists, how He exists in His all-pervading aspect through His different energies. One should know that this is being asked by Arjuna on behalf of the common people.

TRANSLATION

How shall I meditate on You? In what various forms are You to be remembered, O Blessed Lord?

PURPORT

As it is stated in the previous chapter, the Supreme Personality of Godhead is covered by His yoga-maya. Only surrendered souls and devotees can see Him. Now Arjuna is convinced that His friend, Kṛṣṇa, is the Supreme Godhead, but he wants to know the general process by which the all-pervading Lord can be understood by the common man. No common men, including the demons and atheists, can know Kṛṣṇa because He is guarded by His yoga-maya energy. Again, these questions are asked by Arjuna for their benefit. The superior devotee is not only concerned for his own understanding, but for the understanding of all mankind. Out of his mercy, because he is a Vaiṣṇava, a devotee, Arjuna is opening the understanding for the common man as far as the all-pervasiveness of the Supreme is concerned. He addresses Kṛṣṇa specifically as yogin because Śrī Kṛṣṇa is the master of the yoga-maya energy by which He is covered and uncovered to the common man. The common man who has no love for Kṛṣṇa cannot always think of Kṛṣṇa; therefore he has to think materially. Arjuna is considering the mode of thinking of the materialistic persons of this world. Because materialists cannot understand Kṛṣṇa spiritually, they are advised to concentrate the mind on physical things and try to see how Kṛṣṇa is manifested by physical representations.

SYNONYMS

vistarena— in description; atmanah— of Yourself; yogam— mystic power;

TRANSLATION

Tell me again in detail, O Janardana [Krsna], of Your mighty potencies and glories, for I never tire of hearing Your ambrosial words.

PURPORT

A similar statement was made to Suta Gosvami by the rsis of Naimisaranya, headed by Saunaka. That statement is:

vayam tu na vitrpyama

yac chrnvatam rasa-jnanam

svadu svadu pade pade

"One can never be satiated even though one continuously hears the transcendental pastimes of Krsna, who is glorified by Vedic hymns. Those who have entered into a transcendental relationship with Krsna relish in every step descriptions of the pastimes of the Lord." (Srimad-Bhagavatam 1.1.19) Thus Arjuna is interested to hear about Krsna, specifically how He remains as the all-pervading Supreme Lord.

Now as far as amrtam, nectar, is concerned, any narration or statement concerning Krsna is just like nectar. And this nectar can be perceived by practical experience. Modern stories, fiction and histories are different from the transcendental pastimes of the Lord in that one will tire of hearing mundane stories, but one never tires of hearing about Krsna. It is for this reason only that the history of the whole universe is replete with references to the pastimes of the incarnations of Godhead. For instance, the Puranas are histories of bygone ages that relate the pastimes of the various incarnations of the Lord. In this way the reading matter remains forever fresh, despite repeated readings.

SYNONYMS

sri-bhagavan uvaca—the Supreme Personality of Godhead said; hanta—yes; te—unto you; kathayisyami—I shall speak; divyah—divine; hi—certainly; atma-vibhutayah—personal opulences; pradhanyatah—principally; kuru-srestha—O best of the Kurus; na asti—there is no; antah—limit; vistarasya—to the extent; me—My.

TRANSLATION

The Blessed Lord said: Yes, I will tell you of My splendorous manifestations, but only of those which are prominent, O Arjuna, for My opulence is limitless.

PURPORT

It is not possible to comprehend the greatness of Kṛṣṇa and His opulences. The senses of the individual soul are imperfect and do not permit him to understand the totality of Kṛṣṇa's affairs. Still the devotees try to understand Kṛṣṇa, but not on the principle that they will be able to understand Kṛṣṇa fully at any specific time or in any state of life. Rather, the very topics of Kṛṣṇa are so relishable that they appear to them as nectar. Thus they enjoy them. In discussing Kṛṣṇa's opulences and His diverse energies, the pure devotees take transcendental pleasure. Therefore they want to hear and discuss them. Kṛṣṇa knows that living entities do not understand the extent of His opulences; He therefore agrees to state only the principal manifestations of His different energies. The word pradhanyatah (principal) is very important because we can understand only a few of the principal details of the Supreme Lord, for His features are unlimited. It is not possible to understand them all. And vibhūti, as used in this verse, refers to the opulences by which He controls the whole manifestation. In the Amara-kosa dictionary it is stated that vibhūti indicates an exceptional opulence.

The impersonalist or the pantheist cannot understand the exceptional opulences of the Supreme Lord nor the manifestations of His divine energy. Both in the material world and in the spiritual world His energies are distributed in every variety of manifestation. Now Kṛṣṇa is describing what can be directly perceived by the common man; thus part of His variegated energy is described in this way.

TRANSLATION

I am the Self, O Gudakesa, seated in the hearts of all creatures. I am the beginning, the middle and the end of all beings.

PURPORT

In this verse Arjuna is addressed as Gudakesa, which means one who has conquered the darkness of sleep. For those who are sleeping in the darkness of ignorance it is not possible to understand how the Supreme Personality of Godhead manifests Himself in the material and spiritual worlds. Thus this address by Kṛṣṇa to Arjuna is significant. Because Arjuna is above such darkness, the Personality of Godhead agrees to describe His various opulences.

Kṛṣṇa first informs Arjuna that He is the Self or soul of the entire cosmic manifestation by dint of His primary expansion. Before the material creation, the Supreme Lord, by His plenary expansion, accepts the puruṣa incarnations, and from Him everything begins. Therefore He is atma, the soul of the mahat-tattva, the universal elements. The total material energy is not the cause of the creation but actually the Mahā-Visṇu enters into the mahat-tattva, the total material energy. He is the soul. When Mahā-Visṇu enters into the manifested universes, He again manifests Himself as the Supersoul in each and every entity. We have experience that the personal body of the living entity exists due to the presence of the spiritual spark. Without the existence of the spiritual spark, the body cannot develop. Similarly, the material manifestation cannot develop unless the Supreme Soul of Krsna enters.

The Supreme Personality of Godhead is existing as the Supersoul in all manifested universes. A description of the three purusa—avataras is given in Srimad-Bhagavatam: "The Supreme Personality of Godhead manifests three features, as Karanodakasayi Visnu, Garbhodakasayi Visnu and Ksirodakasayi Visnu, in this material manifestation." The Supreme Lord, Krsna, the cause of all causes, lies down in the cosmic ocean as Maha-Visnu or Karanodakasayi Visnu, and therefore Krsna is the beginning of this universe, the maintainer of the universal manifestation, and the end of all the energy.

TRANSLATION

Of the Adityas I am Visnu, of lights I am the radiant sun, I am Marici of the Maruts, and among the stars I am the moon.

PURPORT

There are twelve Adityas, of which Krsna is the principal. And among all the luminaries twinkling in the sky, the sun is the chief, and in the Brahma-samhita the sun is accepted as the glowing effulgence of the Supreme Lord and is considered to be one of His eyes. Marici is the controlling deity of the heavenly spaces. Among the stars, the moon is the most prominent at night, and thus the moon represents Krsna.

TRANSLATION

Of the Vedas I am the Sama Veda; of the demigods I am Indra; of the senses I am the mind, and in living beings I am the living force [knowledge].

PURPORT

The difference between matter and spirit is that matter has no consciousness like the living entity; therefore this consciousness is supreme and eternal. Consciousness cannot be produced by a combination of matter.

TRANSLATION

Of all the Rudras I am Lord Siva; of the Yaksas and Raksasas I am the Lord of wealth [Kuvera]; of the Vasus I am fire [Agni], and of mountains I am Meru.

PURPORT

There are eleven Rudras, of whom Sankara, Lord Siva, is predominant. He is the incarnation of the Supreme Lord in charge of the mode of ignorance in the universe. Among the demigods Kuvera is the chief treasurer, and he is a representation of the Supreme Lord. Meru is a mountain famed for its rich natural resources.

TRANSLATION

Of priests, O Arjuna, know Me to be the chief, Brhaspati, the lord of devotion. Of generals I am Skanda, the lord of war; and of bodies of water I am the ocean.

PURPORT

Indra is the chief demigod of the heavenly planets and is known as the king of the heavens. The planet in which he reigns is called Indraloka. Brhaspati is Indra's priest, and since Indra is the chief of all kings, Brhaspati is the chief of all priests. And as Indra is the chief of all kings, similarly Skanda the son of Parvati and Lord Siva, is the chief of all military commanders. And of all bodies of water, the ocean is the greatest. These representations of Krsna only give hints of His greatness.

TRANSLATION

Of the great sages I am Bhrgu; of vibrations I am the transcendental om. Of sacrifices I am the chanting of the holy names [japa], and of immovable things I am the Himalayas.

PURPORT

Brahma, the first living creature within the universe, created several sons for the propagation of various kinds of species. The most powerful of his sons is Bhrgu, who is also the greatest sage. Of all the transcendental vibrations, the om (omkara) represents the Supreme. Of all sacrifices, the chanting of Hare Krsna, Hare Krsna, Krsna Krsna, Hare Hare/ Hare Rama, Hare Rama, Rama Rama, Hare Hare is the purest representation of Krsna. Sometimes animal sacrifices are recommended, but in the sacrifice of Hare Krsna, Hare Krsna, there is no question of violence. It is the simplest and the purest. Whatever is sublime in the worlds is a representation of Krsna. Therefore the Himalayas, the greatest mountains in the world, also represent Him. The mountain named Meru was mentioned in a previous verse, but Meru is sometimes movable, whereas the Himalayas are never movable. Thus the Himalayas are greater than Meru.

SYNONYMS

asvatthah—the banyan tree; sarva-vrksanam—of all trees; deva-rsinam—of all the sages amongst the demigods; ca—and; naradah—Narada; gandharvanam—the citizens of the Gandharva planet; citrarathah—Citraratha; siddhanam—of all those who are perfected; kapilah munih—Kapila Muni.

TRANSLATION

Of all trees I am the holy fig tree, and among sages and demigods I am Narada. Of singers of the gods [Gandharvas] I am Citraratha, and among perfected beings I am the sage Kapila.

PURPORT

The fig tree (asvattha) is one of the most beautiful and highest trees, and people in India often worship it as one of their daily morning rituals. Amongst the demigods they also worship Narada, who is considered the greatest devotee in the universe. Thus he is the representation of Kṛṣṇa as a devotee. The Gandharva planet is filled with entities who sing beautifully, and among them the best singer is Citraratha. Amongst the perpetually living entities, Kapila is considered an incarnation of Kṛṣṇa, and His philosophy is mentioned in the Srimad-Bhagavatam. Later on another Kapila became famous, but his philosophy was atheistic. Thus there is a gulf of difference between them.

TRANSLATION

Of horses know Me to be Uccaihsrava, who rose out of the ocean, born of the elixir of immortality; of lordly elephants I am Airavata, and among men I am the monarch.

PURPORT

The devotee demigods and the demons (asuras) once took a sea journey. On this journey, nectar and poison were produced, and Lord Siva drank the poison. From the nectar were produced many entities, of which there was a horse named Uccaihsrava. Another animal produced from the nectar was an elephant named Airavata. Because these two animals were produced from nectar, they have special significance, and they are representatives of Kṛṣṇa.

Amongst the human beings the king is the representative of Kṛṣṇa because Kṛṣṇa is the maintainer of the universe, and the kings, who are appointed on account of their godly qualifications, are maintainers of their kingdoms. Kings like Maharaja Yudhisthira, Maharaja Parikṣit and Lord Rama were all highly righteous kings who always thought of the citizens' welfare. In Vedic literature, the king is considered to be the representative of God. In this age, however, with the corruption of the principles of religion, monarchy decayed and is now finally abolished. It is to be understood that in the past, however, people were more happy under righteous kings.

TRANSLATION

Of weapons I am the thunderbolt; among cows I am the surabhi, givers of abundant milk. Of procreators I am Kandarpa, the god of love, and of serpents I am Vasuki, the chief.

PURPORT

The thunderbolt, indeed a mighty weapon, represents Kṛṣṇa's power. In Kṛṣṇaloka in the spiritual sky there are cows which can be milked at any time, and they give as much milk as one likes. Of course such cows do not exist in this material world, but there is mention of them in Kṛṣṇaloka. The Lord keeps many such cows, which are called surabhi. It is stated that the Lord is engaged in herding the surabhi cows. Kāṇḍarpa is the sex desire for presenting good sons; therefore Kāṇḍarpa is the representative of Kṛṣṇa. Sometimes sex is engaged in only for sense gratification; such sex does not represent Kṛṣṇa. But sex for the generation of good children is called Kāṇḍarpa and represents Kṛṣṇa.

TRANSLATION

Of the celestial Naga snakes I am Ananta; of the aquatic deities I am Varuna. Of departed ancestors I am Aryama, and among the dispensers of law I am Yama, lord of death.

PURPORT

Among the many celestial Naga serpents, Ananta is the greatest, as is Varuna among the aquatics. They both represent Kṛṣṇa. There is also a planet of Pitas, ancestors, presided over by Aryama, who represents Kṛṣṇa. There are many living entities who give punishment to the miscreants, and among them Yama is the chief. Yama is situated in a planet near this earthly planet, and after death those who are very sinful are taken there, and Yama arranges different kinds of punishments for them.

TRANSLATION

Among the Daitya demons I am the devoted Pahlada; among subduers I am time; among beasts I am the lion, and among birds I am Garuda, the feathered carrier of Visnu.

PURPORT

Diti and Aditi are two sisters. The sons of Aditi are called Adityas, and the sons of Diti are called Daityas. All the Adityas are devotees of the Lord, and all the Daityas are atheistic. Although Pahlada was born in the family of the Daityas, he was a great devotee from his childhood. Because of his devotional service and godly nature, he is considered to be a representative of Krsna.

There are many subduing principles, but time wears down all things in the material universe and so represents Krsna. Of the many animals, the lion is the most powerful and ferocious, and of the million varieties of birds, Garuda, the bearer of Lord Visnu, is the greatest.

SYNONYMS

pavanah—the wind; pavatam—of all that purifies; asmi—I am; ramah—Rama; sastra—bhrtam—of the carriers of weapons; aham—I am; jhasanam—of all aquatics; makarah—shark; ca asmi—I am also; srotasam—of flowing rivers; asmi—I am;

jahnavi—the River Ganges.

TRANSLATION

Of purifiers I am the wind; of the wielders of weapons I am Rama; of fishes I am the shark, and of flowing rivers I am the Ganges.

PURPORT

Of all the aquatics the shark is one of the biggest and is certainly the most dangerous to man. Thus the shark represents Krsna. And of rivers, the greatest in India is the Mother Ganges. Lord Ramacandra, of the Ramayana, an incarnation of Krsna, is the mightiest of warriors.

SYNONYMS

sarganam—of all creations; adih—beginning; antah—end; ca—and;
madhyam—middle; ca—also; eva—certainly; aham—I am; arjuna—O Arjuna; adhyatma-vidya—spiritual knowledge; vidyanam—of all education; vadah—natural conclusion; pravadatam—of arguments; aham—I am.

TRANSLATION

Of all creations I am the beginning and the end and also the middle, O Arjuna. Of all sciences I am the spiritual science of the self, and among logicians I am the conclusive truth.

PURPORT

Among created manifestations, the total material elements are first created by Maha-Visnu and are annihilated by Lord Siva. Brahma is a secondary creator. All these created elements are different incarnations of the material qualities of the Supreme Lord; therefore He is the beginning, the middle and the end of all creation.

Regarding the spiritual science of the self, there are many literatures, such as the four Vedas, the Vedanta-sutra and the Puranas, the Srimad Bhagavatam and the Gita. These are all representatives of Krsna. Among logicians there are different stages of argument. The presentation of evidence is called jalpa. The attempt to defeat one another is called vitanda, and the final conclusion is called vada. The conclusive truth, the end of all reasoning processes, is Krsna.

SYNONYMS

aksaranam—of letters; akarah—the first; asmi—I am; dvandvah—dual; samasikasya—compounds; ca—and; aham—I am; eva—certainly; aksayah—eternal; kalah—time; dhata—creator; aham—I am; visvatah—mukhah—Brahma.

TRANSLATION

Of letters I am the letter A, and among compound words I am the dual compound. I am also inexhaustible time, and of creators I am Brahma, whose manifold faces turn everywhere.

PURPORT

Akara, the first letter of the Sanskrit alphabet, is the beginning of the Vedic literature. Without akara, nothing can be sounded; therefore it is the beginning of sound. In Sanskrit there are also many compound words, of which the dual word, like Rama—krsna, is called dvandva. For instance, Rama and Krsna have the same rhythm, and therefore are called dual.

Among all kinds of killers, time is the ultimate because time kills everything. Time is the representative of Krsna because in due course of time there will be a great fire and everything will be annihilated.

Among the creators and living entities, Brahma is the chief. The various Brahmas exhibit four, eight, sixteen, etc., heads accordingly, and they are the chief creators in their respective universes. The Brahmas are representatives of Krsna.

vak—beautiful speech; ca—also; narinam—of women; smrtih—memory;
medha—intelligence; dhrtih—faithfulness; ksama—patience.

TRANSLATION

I am all—devouring death, and I am the generator of all things yet to be. Among women I am fame, fortune, speech, memory, intelligence, faithfulness and patience.

PURPORT

As soon as a man is born, he dies at every moment. Thus death is devouring every living entity at every moment, but the last stroke is called death itself. That death is Krsna. All species of life undergo six basic changes. They are born, they grow, they remain for some time, they reproduce, they dwindle and finally they vanish. Of these changes, the first is deliverance from the womb, and that is Krsna. The first generation is the beginning of all future activities.

The seven opulences listed are considered to be feminine. If a woman possesses all of them or some of them she becomes glorious. Sanskrit is a perfect language and is therefore very glorious. After studying, if one can remember the subject matter, he is gifted with a good memory, or smṛti. One need not read many books on different subject matters; the ability to remember a few and quote them when necessary is another opulence.

brhat-sama tatha samnam

gayatri chandasam aham

masanam marga-sirso 'ham

rtunam kusumakarah

SYNONYMS

brhat-sama—the Brhat-sama; tatha—also; samnam—of the Sama Veda songs; gayatri—the Gayatri hymns; chandasam—of all poetry; aham—I am; masanam—of months; marga-sirsa—the month of November-December; aham—I am; rtunam—of all seasons; kusuma-akarah—spring.

TRANSLATION

Of hymns I am the Brhat–sama sung to the Lord Indra, and of poetry I am the Gayatri verse, sung daily by Brahmanas. Of months I am November and December, and of seasons I am flower–bearing spring.

PURPORT

It has already been explained by the Lord that amongst all the Vedas, the Sama Veda is rich with beautiful songs played by the various demigods. One of these songs is the Brhat–sama, which has an exquisite melody and is sung at midnight.

In Sanskrit there are definite rules that regulate poetry; rhyme and meter are not written whimsically, as in much modern poetry. Amongst the regulated poetry, the Gayatri mantra, which is chanted by the duly qualified brahmanas, is the most prominent. The Gayatri mantra is mentioned in the Srimad–Bhagavatam. Because the Gayatri mantra is especially meant for God realization, it represents the Supreme Lord. This mantra is meant for spiritually advanced people, and when one attains success in chanting it, he can enter into the transcendental position of the Lord. One must first acquire the qualities of the perfectly situated person, the qualities of goodness according to the laws of material nature, in order to chant the Gayatri mantra. The Gayatri mantra is very important in Vedic civilization and is considered to be the sound incarnation of Brahman. Brahma is its initiator, and it is passed down from him in disciplic succession.

The months of November and December are considered the best of all months because in India grains are collected from the fields at this time, and the people become very happy. Of course spring is a season universally liked because it is neither too hot nor too cold, and the flowers and trees blossom and flourish. In spring there are also many ceremonies commemorating Kṛṣṇa's pastimes; therefore this is considered to be the most joyful of all seasons, and it is the representative of the Supreme Lord, Kṛṣṇa.

TRANSLATION

I am also the gambling of cheats, and of the splendid I am the splendor. I am victory, I am adventure, and I am the strength of the strong.

PURPORT

There are many kinds of cheaters all over the universe. Of all cheating processes, gambling stands supreme and therefore represents Krsna. As the Supreme, Krsna can be more deceitful than any mere man. If Krsna chooses to deceive a person, no one can surpass Him in His deceit. His greatness is not simply one-sided—it is all-sided.

Among the victorious, He is victory. He is the splendor of the splendid. Among enterprising industrialists, He is the most enterprising, the most industrious. Among adventurers, He is the most adventurous, and among the strong He is the strongest. When Krsna was present on earth, no one could surpass Him in strength. Even in His childhood He lifted Govardhana Hill. No one can surpass Him in cheating, no one can surpass Him in splendor, no one can surpass Him in victory, no one can surpass Him in enterprise, and no one can surpass Him in strength.

TRANSLATION

Of the descendants of Vrsni I am Vasudeva, and of the Pandavas I am Arjuna. Of the sages I am Vyasa, and among great thinkers I am Usana.

PURPORT

Krsna is the original Supreme Personality of Godhead, and Vasudeva is the immediate expansion of Krsna. Both Lord Krsna and Baladeva appear as the sons of Vasudeva. Amongst the sons of Pandu, Arjuna is famous and valiant. Indeed, He is the best of men and therefore represents Kṛṣṇa. Among the munis, or learned men conversant in Vedic knowledge, Vyasa is the greatest because he explained Vedic knowledge in many different ways for the understanding of the common mass of people in this Age of Kali. And Vyasa is also known as an incarnation of Kṛṣṇa; therefore Vyasa also represents Kṛṣṇa. Kavis are those who are capable of thinking thoroughly on any subject matter. Among the kavis, Usana was the spiritual master of the demons; he was an extremely intelligent, far-seeing, political and spiritual in every way. Thus Usana is another representative of the opulence of Kṛṣṇa.

TRANSLATION

Among punishments I am the rod of chastisement, and of those who seek victory I am morality. Of secret things I am silence, and of the wise I am wisdom.

PURPORT

There are many suppressing agents, of which the most important are those that cut down the miscreants. When miscreants are punished, the rod of chastisement represents Kṛṣṇa. Among those who are trying to be victorious in some field of activity, the most victorious element is morality. Among the confidential activities of hearing, thinking and meditating, silence is most important because by silence one can make progress very quickly. The wise man is he who can discriminate between matter and spirit, between God's superior and inferior natures. Such knowledge is Kṛṣṇa Himself.

TRANSLATION

Furthermore, O Arjuna, I am the generating seed of all existences. There is no being—moving or unmoving—that can exist without Me.

PURPORT

Everything has a cause, and that cause or seed of manifestation is Krsna. Without Krsna's energy, nothing can exist; therefore He is called omnipotent. Without His potency, neither the movable nor the unmovable can exist. Whatever existence is not founded on the energy of Krsna is called maya, that which is not.

TRANSLATION

O mighty conqueror of enemies, there is no end to My divine manifestations. What I have spoken to you is but a mere indication of My infinite opulences.

PURPORT

As stated in the Vedic literature, although the opulences and energies of the Supreme are understood in various ways, there is no limit to such opulences; therefore not all the opulences and energies can be explained. Simply a few examples are being described to Arjuna to pacify his inquisitiveness.

PURPORT

Any glorious or beautiful existence should be understood to be but a fragmental manifestation of Kṛṣṇa's opulence, whether it be in the spiritual or material world. Anything extraordinarily opulent should be considered to represent Kṛṣṇa's opulence.

TRANSLATION

But what need is there, Arjuna, for all this detailed knowledge? With a single fragment of Myself I pervade and support this entire universe.

PURPORT

The Supreme Lord is represented throughout the entire material universes by His entering into all things as the Supersoul. The Lord here tells Arjuna that there is no point in understanding how things exist in their separate opulence and grandeur. He should know that all things are existing due to Kṛṣṇa's entering them as Supersoul. From Brahma, the most gigantic entity, on down to the smallest ant, all are existing because the Lord has entered each and all and is sustaining them.

Worship of demigods is discouraged herein because even the greatest demigods like Brahma and Śiva only represent part of the opulence of the Supreme Lord. He is the origin of everyone born, and no one is greater than Him. He is asamaurdhva, which means that no one is superior to Him and that no one is equal to Him. In the Padma Purāṇa it is said that one who considers the Supreme Lord Kṛṣṇa in the same category with demigods—be they even Brahma or Śiva—becomes at once an atheist. If, however, one thoroughly studies the different descriptions of the opulences and expansions of Kṛṣṇa's energy, then one can understand without any doubt the position of Lord Śrī Kṛṣṇa and can fix his mind in the worship of Kṛṣṇa without deviation. The Lord is all-pervading by the expansion of His partial representation, the Supersoul, who enters into everything that is. Pure devotees, therefore, concentrate their minds in Kṛṣṇa consciousness in full devotional service; therefore they are always situated in the transcendental position. Devotional service and worship of Kṛṣṇa are very clearly indicated in this chapter in verses eight through eleven. That is the way of pure devotional service. How one can attain the highest devotional perfection of association with the Supreme Personality of Godhead has been thoroughly explained in this chapter.

Thus end the Bhaktivedānta Purports to the Tenth Chapter of the Srīmad Bhagavad-gītā in the matter of the Opulence of the Absolute.

The Universal Form

TEXT 1

SYNONYMS

arjunah uvaca—Arjuna said; mat–anugrahaya—just show me favor; paramam—supreme; guhyam—confidential; adhyatma—spiritual; samjnitam—in the matter of; yat—what; tvaya—by You; uktam—said; vacah—words; tena—by that;
mohah—illusion; ayam—this; vigatah—is educated; mama—my.

TRANSLATION

Arjuna said: I have heard Your instruction on confidential spiritual matters which You have so kindly delivered unto me, and my illusion is now dispelled.

PURPORT

This chapter reveals Kṛṣṇa as the cause of all causes. He is even the cause of the Mahā-Viṣṇu, and from Him the material universes emanate. Kṛṣṇa is not an incarnation; He is the source of all incarnations. That has been completely explained in the last chapter.

Now, as far as Arjuna is concerned, he says that his illusion is over. This means that Arjuna no longer thinks of Kṛṣṇa as a mere human being, as a friend of his, but as the source of everything. Arjuna is very enlightened and is glad that he has a great friend like Kṛṣṇa, but now he is thinking that although he may accept Kṛṣṇa as the source of everything, others may not. So in order to establish Kṛṣṇa's divinity for all, he is requesting Kṛṣṇa in this chapter to show His universal form. Actually when one sees the universal form of Kṛṣṇa one becomes frightened, like Arjuna, but Kṛṣṇa is so kind that after showing it He converts Himself again into His original form. Arjuna agrees to what Kṛṣṇa has said several times. Kṛṣṇa is speaking to him just for his benefit, and Arjuna acknowledges that all this is happening to him by Kṛṣṇa's grace. He is now convinced that Kṛṣṇa is the cause of all causes and is present in everyone's heart as the Supersoul.

SYNONYMS

bhava—appearance; apyayau—disappearance; hi—certainly; bhutanam—of all living entities; srutau—have heard; vistarasah—detail; maya—by me; tvattah—from You; kamala-patra-aksa—O lotus-eyed one; mahatmyam—glories; api—also; ca—and; avyayam—inexhaustible.

TRANSLATION

O lotus-eyed one, I have heard from You in detail about the appearance and disappearance of every living entity, as realized through Your inexhaustible glories.

PURPORT

Arjuna addresses Lord Krsna as "lotus-eyed" (Krsna's eyes appear just like the petals of a lotus flower) out of his joy, for Krsna has assured him, in the last verse of the previous chapter, that He sustains the entire universe with just a fragment of Himself. He is the source of everything in this material manifestation, and Arjuna has heard of this from the Lord in detail. Arjuna further knows that in spite of His being the source of all appearances and disappearances, He is aloof from them. His personality is not lost, although He is all-pervading. That is the inconceivable opulence of Krsna which Arjuna admits that he has thoroughly understood.

TRANSLATION

O greatest of all personalities, O supreme form, though I see here before me Your actual position, I wish to see how You have entered into this cosmic manifestation. I want to see that form of Yours.

PURPORT

The Lord said that because He entered into the material universe by His personal representation, the cosmic manifestation has been made possible and is going on. Now as far as Arjuna is concerned, he is inspired by the statements of Krsna, but in order to convince others in the future who may think that Krsna is an ordinary person, he desires to see Him actually in His universal form, to see how He is acting from within the universe, although He is apart from it. Arjuna's asking the Lord's permission is also significant. Since the Lord is the Supreme Personality of Godhead, He is present within Arjuna himself; therefore He knows the desire of Arjuna, and He can understand that Arjuna has no special desire to see Him in His universal form, for he is completely satisfied to see Him in His personal form of Krsna. But He can understand also that Arjuna wants to see the universal form to convince others. He did not have any personal desire for confirmation. Krsna also understands that Arjuna wants to see the universal form to set a criterion, for in the future there would be so many imposters who would pose themselves as incarnations of God. The people, therefore, should be careful; one who claims to be Krsna should be prepared to show his universal form to confirm his claim to the people.

manyase—if You think; yadi—if; tat—that; sakyam—able to see; maya—by me; drastum—to see; iti—thus; prabho—O Lord; yoga-isvara—O Lord of all mystic power; tatah—then; me—unto me; tvam—You; darsaya—show; atmanam—Yourself; avyayam—eternal.

TRANSLATION

If You think that I am able to behold Your cosmic form, O my Lord, O master of all mystic power, then kindly show me that universal Self.

PURPORT

It is said that one can neither see, hear, understand nor perceive the Supreme Lord, Kṛṣṇa, by the material senses. But if one is engaged in loving transcendental service to the Lord from the beginning, then one can see the Lord by revelation. Every living entity is only a spiritual spark; therefore it is not possible to see or to understand the Supreme Lord. Arjuna, as a devotee, does not depend on his speculative strength; rather, he admits his limitations as a living entity and acknowledges Kṛṣṇa's inestimable position. Arjuna could understand that for a living entity it is not possible to understand the unlimited infinite. If the infinite reveals Himself, then it is possible to understand the nature of the infinite by the grace of the infinite. The word yogesvara is also very significant here because the Lord has inconceivable power. If He likes, He can reveal Himself by His grace, although He is unlimited. Therefore Arjuna pleads for the inconceivable grace of Kṛṣṇa. He does not give Kṛṣṇa orders. Kṛṣṇa is not obliged to reveal Himself to anyone unless one surrenders fully in Kṛṣṇa consciousness and engages in devotional service. Thus it is not possible for persons who depend on the strength of their mental speculations to see Kṛṣṇa.

TRANSLATION

The Blessed Lord said: My dear Arjuna, O son of Prtha, behold now My opulences, hundreds of thousands of varied divine forms, multicolored like the sea.

PURPORT

Arjuna wanted to see Krsna in His universal form, which, although a transcendental form, is just manifested for the cosmic manifestation and is therefore subject to the temporary time of this material nature. As the material nature is manifested and not manifested, similarly this universal form of Krsna is manifested and nonmanifested. It is not eternally situated in the spiritual sky like Krsna's other forms. As far as a devotee is concerned, he is not eager to see the universal form, but because Arjuna wanted to see Krsna in this way, Krsna reveals this form. This universal form is not possible to be seen by any ordinary man. Krsna must give one the power to see it.

TRANSLATION

O best of the Bharatas, see here the different manifestations of Adityas, Rudras, and all the demigods. Behold the many things which no one has ever seen or heard before.

PURPORT

Even though Arjuna was a personal friend of Krsna and the most advanced of learned men, it was still not possible for him to know everything about Krsna. Here it is stated that humans have neither heard nor known of all these forms and manifestations. Now Krsna reveals these wonderful forms.

TRANSLATION

Whatever you wish to see can be seen all at once in this body. This universal form can show you all that you now desire, as well as whatever you may desire in the future. Everything is here completely.

PURPORT

No one can see the entire universe sitting in one place. Even the most advanced scientist cannot see what is going on in other parts of the universe. But a devotee like Arjuna can see everything that exists in any part of the universe. Krsna gives him the power to see anything he wants to see, past, present and future. Thus by the mercy of Krsna, Arjuna is able to see everything.

TRANSLATION

But you cannot see Me with your present eyes. Therefore I give you divine eyes by which you can behold My mystic opulence!

PURPORT

A pure devotee does not like to see Krsna in any form except His form with two hands; a devotee must see His universal form by His grace, not with the mind but with spiritual eyes. To see the universal form of Krsna, Arjuna is told not to change his mind but his vision. The universal form of Krsna is not very important; that will be clear in the verses. Yet because Arjuna wanted to see it, the Lord gives him the particular vision required to see that universal form.

Devotees who are correctly situated in a transcendental relationship with Krsna are attracted by loving features, not by a godless display of opulences. The playmates of Krsna, the friends of Krsna and the parents of Krsna never want Krsna to show His opulences. They are so immersed in pure love that they do not even know that Krsna is the Supreme Personality of Godhead. In their loving exchange they forget that Krsna is the Supreme Lord. In the Srimad-Bhagavatam it is stated that the boys who play with Krsna are all highly pious souls, and after many, many births they are able to play with Krsna. Such boys do not know that Krsna is the Supreme Personality of Godhead. They take Him as a personal friend. The Supreme Person is considered the impersonal Brahman by great sages, as the Supreme Personality of Godhead by the devotees, and as a product of this material nature by ordinary men. The fact is that the devotee is not concerned to see the visva-rupa, the universal form, but Arjuna wanted to see it to substantiate Krsna's statement so that in the future people could understand that Krsna not only theoretically or philosophically presented Himself as the Supreme but actually presented Himself as such to Arjuna. Arjuna must confirm this because Arjuna is the beginning of the parampara system. Those who are actually interested to understanding the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Krsna, and who follow in the footsteps of Arjuna should understand that Krsna not only theoretically presented Himself as the Supreme, but actually revealed Himself as the Supreme.

The Lord gave Arjuna the necessary power to see His universal form because He knew that Arjuna did not particularly want to see it, as we have already explained.

TRANSLATION

Arjuna saw in that universal form unlimited mouths and unlimited eyes. It was all wondrous. The form was decorated with divine, dazzling ornaments and arrayed in many garbs. He was garlanded gloriously, and there were many scents smeared over His body. All was magnificent, all-expanding, unlimited. This was seen by Arjuna.

PURPORT

These two verses indicate that there is no limit to the hands, mouths, legs, etc., of the Lord. These manifestations are distributed throughout the universe and are unlimited. By the grace of the Lord, Arjuna could see them while sitting in one place. That is due to the inconceivable potency of Kṛṣṇa.

TEXT 12

divi surya-sahasrasya

bhaved yugapad utthita

yadi bhah sadrsi sa syad

bhasas tasya mahatmanah

SYNONYMS

divi—in the sky; surya—sun; sahasrasya—of many thousands; bhaved—there were; yugapat—simultaneously; utthita—present; yadi—if; bhah—light; sadrsi—like that; sa—that; syat—may be; bhasah—effulgence; tasya—there is; maha-atmanah—of the great Lord.

TRANSLATION

If hundreds of thousands of suns rose up at once into the sky, they might resemble the effulgence of the Supreme Person in that universal form.

PURPORT

What Arjuna saw was indescribable, yet Sanjaya is trying to give a mental picture of that great revelation to Dhrtarastra. Neither Sanjaya nor Dhrtarastra was present, but Sanjaya, by the grace of Vyasa, could see whatever happened. Thus he now compares the situation, as far as it can be understood, to an imaginable phenomenon (i.e. thousands of suns).

tatraika—stham jagat krtsnam

pravibhaktam anekadha

sarire pandavas tada

SYNONYMS

tatra—there; eka—stham—one place; jagat—universe; krtśnam—completely;
pravibhaktam—divided in; anekadha—many kinds; apasyat—could see;
deva—devasya—of the Supreme Personality of Godhead; sarire—in the universal form;
pandavah—Arjuna; tada—at that time.

TRANSLATION

At that time Arjuna could see in the universal form of the Lord the unlimited expansions of the universe situated in one place although divided into many, many thousands.

PURPORT

The word tatra (there) is very significant. It indicates that both Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa were sitting on the chariot when Arjuna saw the universal form. Others on the battlefield could not see this form because Kṛṣṇa gave the vision only to Arjuna. Arjuna could see in the body of Kṛṣṇa many thousands of universes. As we learn from Vedic scriptures, there are many universes and many planets. Some of them are made of earth, some are made of gold, some are made of jewels, some are very great, some are not so great, etc. Sitting on his chariot, Arjuna could see all these universes. But no one could understand what was going on between Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa.

TEXT 14

tataḥ sa viśmayāvisto

hr̥ṣṭa-roma dhananjayah

pranamyā sirasā devam

kṛtanjalir abhasata

SYNONYMS

tatah—thereafter; sah—he; vismaya—avistah—being overwhelmed with wonder; hrsta—roma—with his bodily hairs standing on end due to his great ecstasy; dhananjayah—Arjuna; pranamya—offering obeisances; sirasa—with the head; devam—to the Supreme Personality of Godhead; kṛta—anjaliḥ—with folded hands; abhasata—began to say.

TRANSLATION

Then, bewildered and astonished, his hair standing on end, Arjuna began to pray with folded hands, offering obeisances to the Supreme Lord.

PURPORT

Once the divine vision is revealed, the relationship between Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna changes immediately. Before, Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna had a relationship based on friendship, but here, after the revelation, Arjuna is offering obeisances with great respect, and with folded hands he is praying to Kṛṣṇa. He is praising the universal form. Thus Arjuna's relationship becomes one of wonder rather than friendship. Great devotees see Kṛṣṇa as the reservoir of all relationships. In the scriptures there are twelve basic kinds of relationships mentioned, and all of them are present in Kṛṣṇa. It is said that He is the ocean of all the relationships exchanged between two living entities, between the gods, or between the Supreme Lord and His devotees.

It is said that Arjuna was inspired by the relationship of wonder, and in that wonder, although he was by nature very sober, calm and quiet, he became ecstatic, his hair stood up, and he began to offer his obeisances unto the Supreme Lord with folded hands. He was not, of course, afraid. He was affected by the wonders of the Supreme Lord. The immediate context is wonder; his natural loving friendship was overwhelmed by wonder, and thus he reacted in this way.

TRANSLATION

Arjuna said: My dear Lord Krsna, I see assembled together in Your body all the demigods and various other living entities. I see Brahma sitting on the lotus flower as well as Lord Siva and many sages and divine serpents.

PURPORT

Arjuna sees everything in the universe; therefore he sees Brahma, who is the first creature in the universe, and the celestial serpent upon which the Garbhodakasayi Visnu lies in the lower regions of the universe. This snake bed is called Vasuki. There are also other snakes known as Vasuki. Arjuna can see from the Garbhodakasayi Visnu up to the topmost part of the universe on the lotus–flower planet where Brahma, the first creature of the universe, resides. That means that from the beginning to the end, everything could be seen by Arjuna sitting in one place on his chariot. This was possible by the grace of the Supreme Lord, Krsna.

TRANSLATION

O Lord of the universe, I see in Your universal body many, many forms—bellies, mouths, eyes—expanded without limit. There is no end, there is no beginning, and there is no middle to all this.

PURPORT

Krsna is the Supreme Personality of Godhead and is unlimited; thus through Him everything could be seen.

hutasa—vaktram—fire coming out of Your mouth; sva—tejasa—by Your; visvam—this universe; idam—this; tapantam—heating.

TRANSLATION

You are the origin without beginning, middle or end. You have numberless arms, and the sun and moon are among Your great unlimited eyes. By Your own radiance You are heating this entire universe.

PURPORT

There is no limit to the extent of the six opulences of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Here and in many other places there is repetition, but according to the scriptures, repetition of the glories of Kṛṣṇa is not a literary weakness. It is said that at a time of bewilderment or wonder or of great ecstasy, statements are repeated over and over. That is not a flaw.

TRANSLATION

Although You are one, You are spread throughout the sky and the planets and all space between. O great one, as I behold this terrible form, I see that all the planetary systems are perplexed.

PURPORT

Dyav a—prthivyoh (the space between heaven and earth) and loka—trayam (the three worlds) are significant words in this verse because it appears that not only Arjuna saw this universal form of the Lord, but others in other planetary systems also saw it. The vision was not a dream. All whom were spiritually awake with the divine vision saw it.

TRANSLATION

All the demigods are surrendering and entering into You. They are very much afraid, and with folded hands they are singing the Vedic hymns.

PURPORT

The demigods in all the planetary systems feared the terrific manifestation of the universal form and its glowing effulgence and so prayed for protection.

TRANSLATION

All the sons of Dhrtarastra along with their allied kings, and Bhisma, Drona and Karna, and all our soldiers are rushing into Your mouths, their heads smashed by Your fearful teeth. I see that some are being crushed between Your teeth as well.

PURPORT

In a previous verse the Lord promised to show Arjuna things he would be very interested in seeing. Now Arjuna sees that the leaders of the opposite party (Bhisma, Drona, Karna and all the sons of Dhrtarastra) and their soldiers and Arjuna's own soldiers are all being annihilated. This is an indication that Arjuna will emerge victorious in battle, despite heavy losses on both sides. It is also mentioned here that Bhisma, who is supposed to be unconquerable, will also be smashed. So also Karna. Not only will the great warriors of the other party like Bhisma be smashed, but some of the great warriors of Arjuna's side also.

TRANSLATION

The Blessed Lord said: Time I am, destroyer of the worlds, and I have come to engage all people. With the exception of you [the Pandavas], all the soldiers here on both sides will be slain.

PURPORT

Although Arjuna knew that Kṛṣṇa was his friend and the Supreme Personality of Godhead, he was nonetheless puzzled by the various forms exhibited by Kṛṣṇa. Therefore he asked further about the actual mission of this devastating force. It is written in the Vedas that the Supreme Truth destroys everything, even Brahma. As stated in the Katha Upanisad (1.2.25),

yasya brahma ca ksatram ca

mṛtyur yasyopasecanam

ka ittha veda yatra sah

Eventually all the brahmanas, ksatriyas and everyone else are devoured by the Supreme. This form of the Supreme Lord is the all-devouring giant, and here Kṛṣṇa presents Himself in that form of all-devouring time. Except for a few Pandavas, everyone who was present in that battlefield would be devoured by Him.

TEXT 33

SYNONYMS

tasmat—therefore; tvam—you; uttistha—get up; yasah—fame; labhasva—gain; jitva—conquering; satrun—enemies; bhunksva—enjoy; rajyam—kingdom; samrddham—flourishing; maya—by Me; eva—certainly; ete—all these; nihatah—already killed; purvam eva—by previous arrangement; nimitta—matram—just the cause; bhava—become; savya—sacin—O Savyasaci.

TRANSLATION

Therefore get up and prepare to fight. After conquering your enemies you will enjoy a flourishing kingdom. They are already put to death by My arrangement, and you, O Savyasaci, can be but an instrument in the fight.

PURPORT

Savya-sacin refers to one who can shoot arrows very expertly in the field; thus Arjuna is addressed as an expert warrior capable of delivering arrows to kill his enemies. "Just become an instrument": nimitta-matram. This word is also very significant. The whole world is moving according to the plan of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Foolish persons who do not have sufficient knowledge think that nature is moving without a plan and all manifestations are but accidental formations. There are many so-called scientists who suggest that perhaps it was like this, or maybe like that, but there is no question of "perhaps" and "maybe." There is a specific plan being carried out in this material world. What is this plan? This cosmic manifestation is a chance for the conditioned souls to go back to Godhead, back to home. As long as they have the domineering mentality which makes them try to lord it over material nature, they are conditioned. But anyone who can understand the plan of the Supreme Lord and cultivate Kṛṣṇa consciousness is most intelligent. The creation and destruction of the cosmic manifestation are under the superior guidance of God. Thus the Battle of Kurukṣetra was fought according to the plan of God. Arjuna was refusing to fight, but he was told that he should fight and at the same time desire the Supreme Lord. Then he would be happy. If one is in full Kṛṣṇa consciousness and if his life is devoted to His transcendental service, he is perfect.

TRANSLATION

The Blessed Lord said: All the great warriors—Drona, Bhishma, Jayadratha, Karna—are already destroyed. Simply fight, and you will vanquish your enemies.

PURPORT

Every plan is made by the Supreme Personality of Godhead, but He is so kind and merciful to His devotees that He wants to give the credit to His devotees who carry out His plan according to His desire. Life should therefore move in such a way that everyone acts in Kṛṣṇa consciousness and understands the Supreme Personality of Godhead through the medium of a spiritual master. The plans of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are understood by His mercy, and the plans of the devotees are as good as His plans. One should follow such plans and be victorious in the struggle for existence.

TRANSLATION

Sanjaya said to Dhrtarastra: O King, after hearing these words from the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Arjuna trembled, fearfully offered obeisances with folded hands and began, falteringly, to speak as follows:

PURPORT

As we have already explained, because of the situation created by the universal form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Arjuna became bewildered in wonder; thus he began to offer his respectful obeisances to Kṛṣṇa again and again, and with faltering voice he began to pray, not as a friend, but as a devotee in wonder.

TRANSLATION

O Hṛṣikesa, the world becomes joyful upon hearing Your name, and thus everyone becomes attached to You. Although the perfected beings offer You their respectful homage, the demons are afraid, and they flee here and there. All this is rightly done.

PURPORT

Arjuna, after hearing from Kṛṣṇa about the outcome of the Battle of Kurukṣetra, became an enlightened devotee of the Supreme Lord. He admitted that everything done by Kṛṣṇa is quite fit. Arjuna confirmed that Kṛṣṇa is the maintainer and the object of worship for the devotees and the destroyer of the undesirables. His actions are equally good for all. Arjuna understood herein that when the Battle of Kurukṣetra was being concluded, in outer space there were present many demigods, siddhas, and the intelligentsia of the higher planets, and they were observing the fight because Kṛṣṇa was present there. When Arjuna saw the universal form of the Lord, the demigods took pleasure in it, but others, who were demons and atheists, could not stand it when the Lord was praised. Out of their natural fear of the devastating form of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, they fled. Kṛṣṇa's treatment of the devotees and the atheists is praised by Arjuna. In all cases a devotee glorifies the Lord because he knows that whatever He does is good for all.

api—although; adi—kartre—the supreme creator; ananta—unlimited; deva—isa—God of the gods; jagat—nivasa—O refuge of the universe; tvam—You are; aksaram—imperishable; sat—asat—cause and effect; tat param—transcendental; yat—because.

TRANSLATION

O great one, who stands above even Brahma, You are the original master. Why should they not offer their homage up to You, O limitless one? O refuge of the universe, You are the invincible source, the cause of all causes, transcendental to this material manifestation.

PURPORT

By this offering of obeisances, Arjuna indicates that Kṛṣṇa is worshipable by everyone. He is all-pervading, and He is the Soul of every soul. Arjuna is addressing Kṛṣṇa as mahatma, which means that He is most magnanimous and unlimited. Ananta indicates that there is nothing which is not covered by the influence and energy of the Supreme Lord, and devesa means that He is the controller of all demigods and is above them all. He is the center of the whole universe. Arjuna also thought that it was fitting that all the perfect living entities and all powerful demigods offer their respectful obeisances unto Him because no one is greater than Him. He especially mentions that Kṛṣṇa is greater than Brahma because Brahma is created by Him. Brahma is born out of the lotus stem grown from the navel abdomen of Garbhodakasayi Viṣṇu, who is Kṛṣṇa's plenary expansion; therefore Brahma and Lord Śiva, who is born of Brahma, and all other demigods must offer their respectful obeisances. Thus the Lord is respected by Lord Śiva and Brahma and similar other demigods. The word aksaram is very significant because this material creation is subject to destruction but the Lord is above this material creation. He is the cause of all causes, and being so, He is superior to all the conditioned souls within this material nature as well as the material cosmic manifestation itself. He is therefore the all-great Supreme.

TRANSLATION

You are the original Personality, the Godhead. You are the only sanctuary of this manifested cosmic world. You know everything, and You are all that is knowable. You are above the material modes O limitless form! This whole cosmic manifestation is pervaded by You!

PURPORT

Everything is resting on the Supreme Personality of Godhead; therefore He is the ultimate rest. Nidhanam means that everything, even the Brahman effulgence, rests on the Supreme Personality of Godhead Krsna. He is the knower of everything that is happening in this world, and if knowledge has any end, He is the end of all knowledge; therefore He is the known and the knowable. He is the object of knowledge because He is all-pervading. Because He is the cause in the spiritual world, He is transcendental. He is also the chief personality in the transcendental world.

TRANSLATION

You are air, fire, water and You are the moon! You are the supreme controller and the grandfather. Thus I offer my respectful obeisances unto You a thousand times, and again and yet again!

PURPORT

The Lord is addressed here as air because the air is the most important representation of all the demigods, being all-pervasive. Arjuna also addresses Kṛṣṇa as the grandfather because He is the father of Brahma, the first living creature in the universe.

TRANSLATION

Obeisances from the front, from behind and from all sides! O unbounded power, You are the master of limitless might! You are all-pervading, and thus You are everything!

PURPORT

Out of loving ecstasy for Krsna, his friend, Arjuna is offering his respects from all sides. He is accepting that He is the master of all potencies and all prowess and far superior to all the great warriors assembled on the battlefield. It is said in the Visnu Purana (1.9.69):

TRANSLATION

I have in the past addressed You as "O Krsna," "O Yadava," "O my friend," without knowing Your glories. Please forgive whatever I may have done in madness or in love. I have dishonored You many times while relaxing or while lying on the same bed or eating together, sometimes alone and sometimes in front of many friends. Please excuse me for all my offenses.

PURPORT

Although Krsna is manifested before Arjuna in His universal form, Arjuna remembers his friendly relationship with Krsna and is therefore asking pardon and requesting Him to excuse him for the many informal gestures which arise out of friendship. He is admitting that formerly he did not know that Krsna could assume such a universal form, although Krsna explained it as his intimate friend. Arjuna did not know how many times he may have dishonored Kṛṣṇa by addressing Him "O my friend," "O Kṛṣṇa," "O Yādava," etc., without acknowledging His opulence. But Kṛṣṇa is so kind and merciful that in spite of such opulence He played with Arjuna as a friend. Such is the transcendental loving reciprocation between the devotee and the Lord. The relationship between the living entity and Kṛṣṇa is fixed eternally; it cannot be forgotten, as we can see from the behavior of Arjuna. Although Arjuna has seen the opulence in the universal form, he cannot forget his friendly relationship with Kṛṣṇa.

TRANSLATION

You are the father of this complete cosmic manifestation, the worshipable chief, the spiritual master. No one is equal to You, nor can anyone be one with You. Within the three worlds, You are immeasurable.

PURPORT

The Lord Kṛṣṇa is worshipable as a father is worshipable for his son. He is the spiritual master because He originally gave the Vedic instructions to Brahma, and presently He is also instructing Bhagavad-gītā to Arjuna; therefore He is the original spiritual master, and any bona fide spiritual master at the present moment must be a descendant in the line of disciplic succession stemming from Kṛṣṇa. Without being a representative of Kṛṣṇa, one cannot become a teacher or spiritual master of transcendental subject matter.

The Lord is being paid obeisances in all respects. He is of immeasurable greatness. No one can be greater than the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Kṛṣṇa, because no one is equal to or higher than Kṛṣṇa within any manifestation, spiritual or material. Everyone is below Him. No one can excel Him.

The Supreme Lord, Kṛṣṇa, has senses and a body like the ordinary man, but for Him there is no difference between His senses, body, mind and Himself. Foolish persons who do not know Him perfectly say that Kṛṣṇa is different from His soul, mind, heart and everything else. Kṛṣṇa is absolute; therefore His activities and potencies are supreme. It is also stated that He does not have senses like ours. He can perform all sensual activities; therefore His senses are neither imperfect nor limited. No one can be greater than Him, no one can be equal to Him, and everyone is lower than Him.

Whoever knows His transcendental body, activities and perfection, after quitting his body, returns to Him and doesn't come back again to this miserable world. Therefore one should know that Kṛṣṇa's activities are different from others. The best policy is to follow the principles of Kṛṣṇa; that will make one perfect. It is also stated that there is no one who is master of Kṛṣṇa; everyone is His servant. The Caitanya-caritāmṛta (Adi 5.142) confirms, ekale isvara kṛṣṇa, ara saba bhrtya: only Kṛṣṇa is God, and everyone else is His servant. Everyone is complying with His order. There is no one who can deny His order. Everyone is acting according to His direction, being under His superintendence. As stated in the Brahma-saṁhita, He is the cause of all causes.

TRANSLATION

You are the Supreme Lord, to be worshiped by every living being. Thus I fall down to offer You my respects and ask Your mercy. Please tolerate the wrongs that I may have done to You and bear with me as a father with his son, or a friend with his friend, or a lover with his beloved.

PURPORT

Kṛṣṇa's devotees relate to Kṛṣṇa in various relationships; one might treat Kṛṣṇa as a son, one might treat Kṛṣṇa as a husband, as a friend, as a master, etc. Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna are related in friendship. As the father tolerates, or the husband or master tolerates, so Kṛṣṇa tolerates.

TRANSLATION

After seeing this universal form, which I have never seen before, I am gladdened, but at the same time my mind is disturbed with fear. Therefore please bestow Your grace upon me and reveal again Your form as the Personality of Godhead, O Lord of lords, O abode of the universe.

PURPORT

Arjuna is always in confidence with Kṛṣṇa because he is a very dear friend, and as a dear friend is gladdened by his friend's opulence, Arjuna is very joyful to see that his friend, Kṛṣṇa, is the Supreme Personality of Godhead and can show such a wonderful universal form. But at the same time, after seeing that universal form, he is afraid that he has committed so many offenses to Kṛṣṇa out of his unalloyed friendship. Thus his mind is disturbed out of fear, although he had no reason to fear. Arjuna therefore is asking Kṛṣṇa to show His Nārāyaṇa form because He can assume any form. This universal form is material and temporary, as the material world is temporary. But in the Vaikuntha planets He has His transcendental form with four hands as Nārāyaṇa. There are innumerable planets in the spiritual sky, and in each of them Kṛṣṇa is present by His plenary manifestations of different names. Thus Arjuna desired to see one of the forms manifest in the Vaikuntha planets. Of course in each Vaikuntha planet the form of Nārāyaṇa is four-handed, and the four hands hold different arrangements of symbols—the conchshell, mace, lotus and disc. According to the different hands these four things are held in, the Nārāyaṇas are named. All of these forms are one and the same to Kṛṣṇa; therefore Arjuna requests to see His four-handed feature.

TRANSLATION

O universal Lord, I wish to see You in Your four-armed form, with helmeted head and with club, wheel, conch and lotus flower in Your hands. I long to see You in that form.

PURPORT

In the Brahma-samhita (5.39) it is stated, ramadi-murtisu kala-niyamena tisthan: the Lord is eternally situated in hundreds and thousands of forms, and the main forms are those like Rama, Nrsimha, Narayana, etc. There are innumerable forms. But Arjuna knew that Krsna is the original Personality of Godhead assuming His temporary universal form. He is now asking to see the form of Narayana, a spiritual form. This verse establishes without any doubt the statement of the Srimad-Bhagavatam that Krsna is the original Personality of Godhead and all other features originate from Him. He is not different from His plenary expansions, and He is God in any of His innumerable forms. In all of these forms He is fresh like a young man. That is the constant feature of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. One who knows Krsna at once becomes free from all contamination of the material world.

TRANSLATION

The Blessed Lord said: My dear Arjuna, happily do I show you this universal form within the material world by My internal potency. No one before you has ever seen this unlimited and glaringly effulgent form.

PURPORT

Arjuna wanted to see the universal form of the Supreme Lord, so out of His mercy upon His devotee Arjuna, Lord Krsna showed him His universal form full of effulgence and opulence. This form was glaring like the sun, and its many faces were rapidly changing. Krsna showed this form just to satisfy the desire of His friend Arjuna. This form was manifested by Krsna through His internal potency, which is inconceivable by human speculation. No one had seen this universal form of the Lord before Arjuna, but because the form was shown to Arjuna, other devotees in the heavenly planets and in other planets in outer space could also see it. They did not see it before, but because of Arjuna they were able to see it. In other words, all the disciplic devotees of the Lord could see the universal form which was shown to Arjuna by the mercy of Krsna. Someone commented that this form was shown to Duryodhana also when Krsna went to Duryodhana to negotiate for peace. Unfortunately, Duryodhana did not accept the peace offer, but at that time Krsna manifested some of His universal forms. But those forms are different from this one shown to Arjuna. It is clearly said that no one has ever seen this form before.

TRANSLATION

O best of the Kuru warriors, no one before you has ever seen this universal form of Mine, for neither by studying the Vedas, nor by performing sacrifices, nor by charities or similar activities can this form be seen. Only you have seen this.

PURPORT

The divine vision in this connection should be clearly understood. Who can have divine vision? Divine means godly. Unless one attains the status of divinity as a demigod, he cannot have divine vision. And what is a demigod? It is stated in the Vedic scriptures that those who are devotees of Lord Visnu are demigods (visnu—bhaktah smṛta devah). Those who are atheistic, i.e., who do not believe in Visnu, or who only recognize the impersonal part of Kṛṣṇa as the Supreme, cannot have the divine vision. It is not possible to decry Kṛṣṇa and at the same time have the divine vision. One cannot have the divine vision without becoming divine. In other words, those who have divine vision can also see like Arjuna.

The Bhagavad-gita gives the description of the universal form, and this description was unknown to everyone before Arjuna. Now one can have some idea of the visva-rupa after this incident; those who are actually divine can see the universal form of the Lord. But one cannot be divine without being a pure devotee of Kṛṣṇa. The devotees, however, who are actually in the divine nature and who have divine vision, are not very much interested to see the universal form of the Lord. As described in the previous verse, Arjuna desired to see the four-handed form of Lord Kṛṣṇa as Viṣṇu, and he was actually afraid of the universal form.

In this verse there are some significant words, like veda-yajñadhyayanaiḥ, which refers to studying Vedic literature and the subject matter of sacrificial regulations. Veda refers to all kinds of Vedic literature, namely the four Vedas (Rg, Yajur, Sama and Atharva) and the eighteen Puranas, the Upanisads and the Vedānta-sūtra. One can study these at home or anywhere else. Similarly, there are sūtras—Kālpa-sūtras and Mīmāṃsa-sūtras—for studying the method of sacrifice. Dānaiḥ refers to charity which is offered to a suitable party, such as those who are engaged in the transcendental loving service of the Lord—the brahmanas and the Vaiṣṇavas. Similarly, "pious activities" refers to the agni-hotra and the prescribed duties of the different castes. And the voluntary acceptance of some bodily pains is called tapasya. So one can perform all these, can accept bodily penances, give charity, study the Vedas, etc., but unless he is a devotee like Arjuna, it is not possible to see that universal form. Those who are impersonalists are also imagining that they are seeing the universal form of the Lord, but from Bhagavad-gita we understand that the impersonalists are not devotees. Therefore they are unable to see the universal form of the Lord.

There are many persons who create incarnations. They falsely claim an ordinary human being to be an incarnation, but all this is foolishness. We should follow the principles of Bhagavad-gita, otherwise there is no possibility of attaining perfect spiritual knowledge. Although Bhagavad-gita is considered the preliminary study of the science of God, still it is so perfect that one can distinguish what is what. The followers of a pseudo incarnation may say that they have also seen the transcendental incarnation of God, the universal form, but that is not acceptable because it is clearly stated here that unless one becomes a devotee of Kṛṣṇa, one cannot see the universal form of God. So one first of all has to become a pure devotee of Kṛṣṇa; then he can claim that he can show the universal form of what he has seen. A devotee of Kṛṣṇa cannot accept false incarnations or followers of false incarnations.

TRANSLATION

Your mind has been perturbed upon seeing this horrible feature of Mine. Now let it be finished. My devotee, be free from all disturbance. With a peaceful mind you can now see the form you desire.

PURPORT

In the beginning of Bhagavad-gita Arjuna was worried about killing Bhisma and Drona, his worshipful grandfather and master. But Krsna said that he need not be afraid of killing his grandfather. When they tried to disrobe Draupadi in the assembly, Bhisma and Drona were silent, and for such negligence of duty they should be killed. Krsna showed His universal form to Arjuna just to show him that these people were already killed for their unlawful action. That scene was shown to Arjuna because devotees are always peaceful, and they cannot perform such horrible actions. The purpose of the revelation of the universal form was shown; now Arjuna wanted to see the four-armed form, and Kṛṣṇa showed him. A devotee is not much interested in the universal form, for it does not enable one to reciprocate loving feelings. A devotee wants to offer his respectful worshiping feelings; thus he wants to see the two-handed or four-handed Kṛṣṇa form so he can reciprocate in loving service with the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

TRANSLATION

Sanjaya said to Dhrtarastra: The Supreme Personality of Godhead, Krsna, while speaking thus to Arjuna, displayed His real four-armed form, and at last He showed him His two-armed form, thus encouraging the fearful Arjuna.

PURPORT

When Krsna appeared as the son of Vasudeva and Devaki, He first of all appeared as four-armed Narayana, but when He was requested by His parents, He transformed Himself into an ordinary child in appearance. Similarly, Krsna knew that Arjuna was not interested in seeing a four-handed form of Krsna, but since he asked to see this four-handed form, He also showed him this form again and then showed Himself in His two-handed form. The word saumya-vapuh is very significant. Saumya-vapuh is a very beautiful form; it is known as the most beautiful form. When He was present, everyone was attracted simply by Krsna's form, and because Krsna is director of the universe, He just banished the fear of Arjuna, His devotee, and showed him again His beautiful form of Krsna. In the Brahma-samhita (5.38) it is stated, premanjana-cchurita-bhakti-vilocanena: only a person whose eyes are smeared with the ointment of love can see the beautiful form of Sri Krsna.

SYNONYMS

arjunah uvaca—Arjuna said; drstva—seeing; idam—this; manusam—human being; rupam—form; tava—Your; saumyam—very beautiful; janardana—O chastiser of the enemies; idanim—just now; asmi—I am; samvrttah—settled; sa-cetah—in my consciousness; prakrtim—my own; gatah—I am.

TRANSLATION

When Arjuna thus saw Krsna in His original form, he said: Seeing this humanlike form, so very beautiful, my mind is now pacified and I am restored to my original nature.

PURPORT

Here the words manusam rupam clearly indicate the Supreme Personality of Godhead to be originally two-handed. Those who deride Krsna to be an ordinary person are shown here to be ignorant of His divine nature. If Krsna is like an ordinary human being, then how is it possible for Him to show the universal form and again to show the four-handed Narayana form? So it is very clearly stated in Bhagavad-gita that one who thinks that Krsna is an ordinary person and misguides the reader by claiming that it is the impersonal Brahman within Krsna speaking, is doing the greatest injustice. Krsna has actually shown His universal form and His four-handed Visnu form. So how can He be an ordinary human being? A pure devotee is not confused by misguiding commentaries on Bhagavad-gita because he knows what is what. The original verses of Bhagavad-gita are as clear as the sun; they do not require lamp-light from foolish commentators.

TRANSLATION

The Blessed Lord said: My dear Arjuna, the form which you are now seeing is very difficult to behold. Even the demigods are ever seeking the opportunity to see this form which is so dear.

PURPORT

In the forty-eighth verse of this chapter Lord Kṛṣṇa concluded revealing His universal form and informed Arjuna that this form is not possible to be seen by so many activities, sacrifices, etc. Now here the word su-durdarsam is used, indicating that Kṛṣṇa's two-handed form is still more confidential. One may be able to see the universal form of Kṛṣṇa by adding a little tinge of devotional service to various activities like penance, Vedic study and philosophical speculation, etc. It may be possible, but without a tinge of bhakti, one cannot see; that has already been explained. Still, beyond that universal form, the form of Kṛṣṇa as a two-handed man is still more difficult to see, even for demigods like Brahma and Lord Śiva. They desire to see Him, and we have evidence in the Śrīmad-Bhagavatam that when He was supposed to be in the womb of His mother, Devaki, all the demigods from heaven came to see the marvel of Kṛṣṇa. They even waited to see Him. A foolish person may deride Him, but that is an ordinary person. Kṛṣṇa is actually desired to be seen by demigods like Brahma and Siva in His two-armed form.

In Bhagavad-gīta (9.11) it is also confirmed, avajananti mam mudha manusim tanum asritah: He is not visible to the foolish persons who deride Him. Kṛṣṇa's body, as confirmed by Brahma-saṁhita and confirmed by Kṛṣṇa Himself in Bhagavad-gīta, is completely spiritual and full of bliss and eternity. His body is never like a material body. But for some who make a study of Kṛṣṇa by reading Bhagavad-gīta or similar Vedic scriptures, Kṛṣṇa is a problem. For one using a material process, Kṛṣṇa is considered to be a great historical personality and very learned philosopher. But He isn't an ordinary man. But some think that even though He was so powerful, He had to accept a material body. Ultimately they think that the Absolute Truth is impersonal; therefore they think that from His impersonal feature He assumed a personal feature attached to material nature. This is a materialistic calculation of the Supreme Lord. Another calculation is speculative. Those who are in search of knowledge also speculate on Kṛṣṇa and consider Him to be less important than the universal form of the Supreme. Thus some think that the universal form of Kṛṣṇa which was manifested to Arjuna is more important than His personal form. According to them, the personal form of the Supreme is something imaginary. They believe that in the ultimate issue, the Absolute Truth is not a person. But the transcendental process is described in Bhagavad-gīta, Chapter Two: to hear about Kṛṣṇa from authorities. That is the actual Vedic process, and those who are actually in the Vedic line hear about Kṛṣṇa from authority, and by repeated hearing about Him, Kṛṣṇa becomes dear. As we have several times discussed, Kṛṣṇa is covered by His yoga-māya potency. He is not to be seen or revealed to anyone and everyone. Only by one to whom He reveals Himself can He be seen. This is confirmed in Vedic literature; for one who is a surrendered soul, the Absolute Truth can actually be understood. The transcendentalist, by continuous Kṛṣṇa consciousness and devotional service to Kṛṣṇa, can have his spiritual eyes opened and can see Kṛṣṇa by revelation. Such a revelation is not possible even for the demigods; therefore it is difficult even for the demigods to understand Kṛṣṇa in His two-handed form. The conclusion is that although to see the universal form of Kṛṣṇa is very, very difficult and not possible for anyone and everyone, it is still more difficult to understand His personal form as Syāmasundara.

TRANSLATION

The form which you are seeing with your transcendental eyes cannot be understood simply by studying the Vedas, nor by undergoing serious penances, nor by charity, nor by worship. It is not by these means that one can see Me as I am.

PURPORT

Kṛṣṇa first appeared before His parents Devakī and Vasudeva in a four-handed form, and then He transformed Himself into the two-handed form. This mystery is very difficult to understand for those who are atheists or who are devoid of devotional service. For scholars who have simply studied Vedic literature by way of speculation or mere academic interest, Kṛṣṇa is not easy to understand. Nor is He to be understood by persons who officially go to the temple to offer worship. They make their visit, but they cannot understand Kṛṣṇa as He is. Kṛṣṇa can be understood only through the path of devotional service, as explained by Kṛṣṇa Himself in the next verse.

TRANSLATION

My dear Arjuna, only by undivided devotional service can I be understood as I am, standing before you, and can thus be seen directly. Only in this way can you enter into the mysteries of My understanding.

PURPORT

Kṛṣṇa can be understood only by the process of undivided devotional service. He explicitly explains this in this verse so unauthorized commentators, who try to understand Bhagavad-gītā by the speculative process, will know that they are simply wasting their time. No one can understand Kṛṣṇa or how He came from parents in a four-handed form and at once changed Himself into a two-handed form. It is clearly stated here that no one can see Him. Those who, however, are very experienced students of Vedic literature can learn about Him from the Vedic literature in so many ways. There are so many rules and regulations, and if one at all wants to understand Krsna, he must follow the regulative principles described in the authoritative literature. One can perform penance in accordance with those principles. As far as charity is concerned, it is plain that charity should be given to the devotees of Krsna who are engaged in His devotional service to spread the Krsna philosophy or Krsna consciousness throughout the world. Krsna consciousness is a benediction to humanity. Lord Caitanya was appreciated by Rupa Gosvami as the most munificent man of charity because love of Krsna, which is very difficult to achieve, was distributed freely by Him. And if one worships as prescribed in the temple (in the temples in India there is always some statue, usually of Visnu or Krsna), that is a chance to progress by offering worship and respect to the Supreme Personality of Godhead. For the beginners in devotional service to the Lord, temple worship is essential, and this is confirmed in the Vedic literature.

One who has unflinching devotion for the Supreme Lord and is directed by the spiritual master, can see the Supreme Personality of Godhead by revelation. For one who does not take personal training under the guidance of a bona fide spiritual master, it is impossible to even begin to understand Krsna. The word tu is specifically used here to indicate that no other process can be used, can be recommended, or can be successful in understanding Krsna.

The personal forms of Krsna, the two-handed form and the four-handed, are completely different from the temporary universal form shown to Arjuna. The four-handed form is Narayana and the two-handed form is Krsna; they are eternal and transcendental, whereas the universal form exhibited to Arjuna is temporary. The very word sudurdarsam, meaning difficult to see, suggests that no one saw that universal form. It also suggests that amongst the devotees there was no necessity of showing it. That form was exhibited by Krsna at the request of Arjuna because in the future, when one represents himself as an incarnation of God, people can ask to see his universal form.

Krsna changes from the universal form to the four-handed form of Narayana and then to His own natural form of two hands. This indicates that the four-handed forms and other forms mentioned in Vedic literature are all emanations of the original two-handed Krsna. He is the origin of all emanations. Krsna is distinct even from these forms, what to speak of the impersonal conception. As far as the four-handed forms of Krsna are concerned, it is stated clearly that even the most identical four-handed form of Krsna (which is known as Maha-Visnu, who is lying on the cosmic ocean and from whose breathing so many innumerable universes are passing out and entering) is also an expansion of the Supreme Lord. Therefore one should conclusively worship the personal form of Krsna as the Supreme Personality of Godhead who is eternity, bliss and knowledge. He is the source of all forms of Visnu, He is the source of all forms of incarnation, and He is the original Supreme Personality, as confirmed in Bhagavad-gita.

In the Vedic literature it is stated that the Supreme Absolute Truth is a person. His name is Kṛṣṇa, and He sometimes descends on this earth. Similarly, in Srimad-Bhagavatam there is a description of all kinds of incarnations of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, and there it is said that Kṛṣṇa is not an incarnation of God but is the original Supreme Personality of Godhead Himself (kṛṣṇas tu bhagavan svayam). Similarly, in Bhagavad-gītā the Lord says, mattah parataram nanyat: "There is nothing superior to My form as the Personality of Godhead Kṛṣṇa." He also says elsewhere in Bhagavad-gītā, aham adir hi devānam: "I am the origin of all the demigods." And after understanding Bhagavad-gītā from Kṛṣṇa, Arjuna also confirms this in the following words: param brahma param dhama pavitram-paramam bhavan: "I now fully understand that You are the Supreme Personality of Godhead, the Absolute Truth, and that You are the refuge of everything." Therefore the universal form which Kṛṣṇa showed to Arjuna is not the original form of God. The original is the Kṛṣṇa form. The universal form, with its thousands and thousands of heads and hands, is manifest just to draw the attention of those who have no love for God. It is not God's original form.

The universal form is not attractive for pure devotees, who are in love with the Lord in different transcendental relationships. The Supreme Godhead exchanges transcendental love in His original form of Kṛṣṇa. Therefore to Arjuna, who was so intimately related with Kṛṣṇa in friendship, this form of the universal manifestation was not pleasing; rather, it was fearful. Arjuna, who is a constant companion of Kṛṣṇa's, must have had transcendental eyes; he was not an ordinary man. Therefore he was not captivated by the universal form. This form may seem wonderful to persons who are involved in elevating themselves by fruitive activities, but to persons who are engaged in devotional service, the two-handed form of Kṛṣṇa is the most dear.

TRANSLATION

My dear Arjuna, one who is engaged in My pure devotional service, free from the contaminations of previous activities and from mental speculation, who is friendly to every living entity, certainly comes to Me.

PURPORT

Anyone who wants to approach the supreme of all the Personalities of Godhead, on the Krsnaloka planet in the spiritual sky, and be intimately connected with the Supreme Personality, Krsna, must take this formula, as is stated by the Supreme Himself. Therefore, this verse is considered to be the essence of Bhagavad-gita. The Bhagavad-gita is a book directed to the conditioned souls, who are engaged in the material world with the purpose of lording it over nature and who do not know of the real, spiritual life. The Bhagavad-gita is meant to show how one can understand his spiritual existence and his eternal relationship with the supreme spiritual personality and to teach one how to go back home, back to Godhead. Now here is the verse which clearly explains the process by which one can attain success in his spiritual activity: devotional service.

As far as work is concerned, one should transfer his energy entirely to Krsna conscious activities. No work should be done by any man except in relationship to Krsna. This is called krsna-karma. One may be engaged in various activities, but one should not be attached to the result of his work, but the result should be done for Him. For example, one may be engaged in business, but to transform that activity into Krsna consciousness, one has to do business for Krsna. If Krsna is the proprietor of the business, then Krsna should enjoy the profit of the business. If a businessman is in possession of thousands and thousands of dollars, and if he has to offer all this to Krsna, he can do it. This is work for Krsna. Instead of constructing a big building for his sense gratification, he can construct a nice temple for Krsna, and he can install the Deity of Krsna and arrange for the Deity's service, as is outlined in the authorized books of devotional service. This is all krsna-karma. One should not be attached to the result of his work, but the result should be offered to Krsna. One should also accept as prasadam, food, the remnants of offerings to Krsna. If one constructs a very big building for Krsna and installs the Deity of Krsna, one is not prohibited from living there, but it is understood that the proprietor of the building is Krsna. That is called Krsna consciousness. If, however, one is not able to construct a temple for Krsna, one can engage himself in cleansing the temple of Krsna; that is also krsna-karma. One can cultivate a garden. Anyone who has land—in India, at least, any poor man has a certain amount of land—can utilize that for Krsna by growing flowers to offer Him. One can sow tulasi plants, because tulasi leaves are very important, and Krsna has recommended this in Bhagavad-gita. Patram puspam phalam toyam. Krsna desires that one offer Him either a leaf, or a flower, or fruit, or a little water—and He is satisfied. This leaf especially refers to the tulasi. So one can sow tulasi and pour water on the plant. Thus, even the poorest man can engage in the service of Krsna. These are some of the examples of how one can engage in working for Krsna.

The word mat-paramah refers to one who considers the association of Krsna in His supreme abode to be the highest perfection of life. Such a person does not wish to be elevated to the higher planets such as the moon or sun or heavenly planets, or even the highest planet of this universe, Brahmaloka. He has no attraction for that. He is only attracted to being transferred to the spiritual sky. And even in the spiritual sky he is not satisfied with merging into the glowing brahmajyoti effulgence, for he wants to enter into the highest spiritual planet, namely Krsnaloka, Goloka Vrndavana. He has full knowledge of that planet, and therefore he is not interested in any other. As indicated by the word mad-bhaktah, he fully engages in devotional service, specifically in the nine processes of devotional engagement: hearing, chanting, remembering, worshiping, serving the lotus feet of the Lord, offering prayers, carrying out the orders of the Lord, making friends with Him, and surrendering everything to Him. One can engage in all nine devotional processes, or eight, or seven, or at least in one, and that will surely make one perfect.

The term sanga-varjitah is very significant. One should disassociate himself from persons who are against Krsna. Not only are the atheistic persons against Krsna, but so also are those who are attracted to fruitive activities and mental speculation. Therefore the pure form of devotional service is described in Bhakti-rasamrta-sindhu (1.1.11) as follows:

jnana-karmady-anavrtam

silanam bhaktir uttama

In this verse Srila Rupa Gosvami clearly states that if anyone wants to execute unalloyed devotional service, he must be freed from all kinds of material contamination. He must be freed from the association of persons who are addicted to fruitive activities and mental speculation. When, freed from such unwanted association and from the contamination of material desires, one favorably cultivates knowledge of Krsna, that is called pure devotional service. Anukulyasya sankalpah pratikulyasya varjanam (Hari—bhakti—vilasa 11.676). One should think of Krsna and act for Krsna favorably, not unfavorably. Kamsa was an enemy of Krsna's. From the very beginning of Krsna's birth, he planned in so many ways to kill Him, and because he was always unsuccessful, he was always thinking of Krsna. Thus while working, while eating and while sleeping, he was always Krsna conscious in every respect, but that Krsna consciousness was not favorable, and therefore in spite of his always thinking of Krsna twenty—four hours a day, he was considered a demon, and Krsna at last killed him. Of course anyone who is killed by Krsna attains salvation immediately, but that is not the aim of the pure devotee. The pure devotee does not even want salvation. He does not want to be transferred even to the highest planet, Goloka Vrndavana. His only objective is to serve Krsna wherever he may be.

A devotee of Krsna is friendly to everyone. Therefore it is said here that he has no enemy (nirvairah). How is this? A devotee situated in Krsna consciousness knows that only devotional service to Krsna can relieve a person from all the problems of life. He has personal experience of this, and therefore he wants to introduce this system, Krsna consciousness, into human society. There are many examples in history of devotees of the Lord risking their lives for the spreading of God consciousness. The favorite example is Lord Jesus Christ. He was crucified by the nondevotees, but he sacrificed his life for spreading God consciousness. Of course, it would be superficial to understand that he was killed. Similarly, in India also there are many examples, such as Thakura Haridasa and Prahlada Maharaja. Why such risk? Because they wanted to spread Krsna consciousness, and it is difficult. A Krsna conscious person knows that if a man is suffering, it is due to his forgetfulness of his eternal relationship with Krsna. Therefore, the highest benefit one can render to human society is relieving one's neighbor from all material problems. In such a way, a pure devotee is engaged in the service of the Lord. Now, we can imagine how merciful Krsna is to those engaged in His service, risking everything for Him. Therefore it is certain that such persons must reach the supreme planet after leaving the body.

In summary, the universal form of Krsna, which is a temporary manifestation, and the form of time which devours everything, and even the form of Visnu, four—handed, have all been exhibited by Krsna. Thus Krsna is the origin of all these manifestations. It is not that Krsna is a manifestation of the original visva-rupa, or Visnu. Krsna is the origin of all forms. There are hundreds and thousands of Visnus, but for a devotee, no form of Krsna is important but the original form, two-handed Syamasundara. In the Brahma-samhita it is stated that those who are attached to the Syamasundara form of Krsna in love and devotion can see Him always within the heart and cannot see anything else. One should understand, therefore, that the purport of this Eleventh Chapter is that the form of Krsna is essential and supreme.

Thus end the Bhaktivedanta Purports to the Eleventh Chapter of the Srimad Bhagavad-gita in the matter of the Universal Form.

TRANSLATION

Arjuna inquired: What is considered to be more perfect, those who are properly engaged in Your devotional service, or those who worship the impersonal Brahman, the unmanifested?

PURPORT

Kṛṣṇa has now explained about the personal, the impersonal and the universal and has described all kinds of devotees and yogis. Generally, the transcendentalists can be divided into two classes. One is the impersonalist, and the other is the personalist. The personalist devotee engages himself with all energy in the service of the Supreme Lord. The impersonalist engages himself not directly in the service of Kṛṣṇa but in meditation on the impersonal Brahman, the unmanifested.

We find in this chapter that of the different processes for realization of the Absolute Truth, bhakti-yoga, devotional service, is the highest. If one at all desires to have the association of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, then he must take to devotional service.

Those who worship the Supreme Lord directly by devotional service are called personalists. Those who engage themselves in meditation on the impersonal Brahman are called impersonalists. Arjuna is here questioning which position is better. There are different ways to realize the Absolute Truth, but Kṛṣṇa indicates in this chapter that bhakti-yoga, or devotional service to Him, is highest of all. It is the most direct, and it is the easiest means for association with the Godhead.

In the Second Chapter the Lord explains that a living entity is not the material body but is a spiritual spark, a part of the Absolute Truth. In the Seventh Chapter He speaks of the living entity as part and parcel of the supreme whole and recommends that he transfer his attention fully to the whole. In the Eighth Chapter it is stated that whoever thinks of Kṛṣṇa at the moment of death is at once transferred to the spiritual sky, Kṛṣṇa's abode. And at the end of the Sixth Chapter the Lord says that out of all the yogis, he who thinks of Kṛṣṇa within himself is considered to be the most perfect. So throughout the Gita personal devotion to Kṛṣṇa is recommended as the highest form of spiritual realization. Yet there are those who are still attracted to Kṛṣṇa's impersonal brahmajyoti effulgence, which is the all-pervasive aspect of the Absolute Truth and which is unmanifest and beyond the reach of the senses. Arjuna would like to know which of these two types of transcendentalists is more perfect in knowledge. In other words, he is clarifying his own position because he is attached to the personal form of Kṛṣṇa. He is not attached to the impersonal Brahman. He wants to know whether his position is secure. The impersonal manifestation, either in this material world or in the spiritual world of the Supreme Lord, is a problem for meditation. Actually one cannot perfectly conceive of the impersonal feature of the Absolute Truth. Therefore Arjuna wants to say, "What is the use of such a waste of time?" Arjuna experienced in the Eleventh Chapter that to be attached to the personal form of Kṛṣṇa is best because he could thus understand all other forms at the same time and there was no disturbance to his love for Kṛṣṇa. This important question asked of Kṛṣṇa by Arjuna will clarify the distinction between the impersonal and personal conceptions of the Absolute Truth.

TRANSLATION

The Blessed Lord said: He whose mind is fixed on My personal form, always engaged in worshiping Me with great and transcendental faith, is considered by Me to be most perfect.

PURPORT

In answer to Arjuna's question, Kṛṣṇa clearly says that he who concentrates upon His personal form and who worships Him with faith and devotion is to be considered the most perfect in yoga. For one in such Kṛṣṇa consciousness there are no material activities because everything is done for Kṛṣṇa. A pure devotee is constantly engaged. Sometimes he chants, sometimes he hears or reads books about Kṛṣṇa, or sometimes he cooks prasadam or goes to the marketplace to purchase something for Kṛṣṇa, or sometimes he washes the temple or the dishes—whatever he does, he does not let a single moment pass without devoting his activities to Kṛṣṇa. Such action is in full samadhi.

TRANSLATION

But those who fully worship the unmanifested, that which lies beyond the perception of the senses, the all—pervading, inconceivable, fixed and immovable—the impersonal conception of the Absolute Truth—by controlling the various senses and being equally disposed to everyone, such persons, engaged in the welfare of all, at last achieve Me.

PURPORT

Those who do not directly worship the Supreme Godhead, Kṛṣṇa, but who attempt to achieve the same goal by an indirect process, also ultimately achieve the supreme goal, Sri Kṛṣṇa, as is stated, "After many births the man of wisdom seeks refuge in Me, knowing that Vasudeva is all." When a person comes to full knowledge after many births, he surrenders unto Lord Kṛṣṇa. If one approaches the Godhead by the method mentioned in this verse, he has to control the senses, render service to everyone and engage in the welfare of all beings. It is inferred that one has to approach Lord Kṛṣṇa, otherwise there is no perfect realization. Often there is much penance involved before one fully surrenders unto Him.

In order to perceive the Supersoul within the individual soul, one has to cease the sensual activities of seeing, hearing, tasting, working, etc. Then one comes to understand that the Supreme Soul is present everywhere. Realizing this, one envies no living entity—he sees no difference between man and animal because he sees soul only, not the outer covering. But for the common man, this method of impersonal realization is very difficult.

TRANSLATION

For those whose minds are attached to the unmanifested, impersonal feature of the Supreme, advancement is very troublesome. To make progress in that discipline is always difficult for those who are embodied.

PURPORT

The group of transcendentalists who follow the path of the inconceivable, unmanifested, impersonal feature of the Supreme Lord are called jnana-yogis, and persons who are in full Kṛṣṇa consciousness, engaged in devotional service to the Lord, are called bhakti-yogis. Now, here the difference between jnana-yoga and bhakti-yoga is definitely expressed. The process of jnana-yoga, although ultimately bringing one to the same goal, is very troublesome, whereas the path of bhakti-yoga, the process of being in direct service to the Supreme Personality of Godhead, is easier and is natural for the embodied soul. The individual soul is embodied since time immemorial. It is very difficult for him to simply theoretically understand that he is not the body. Therefore, the bhakti-yogi accepts the Deity of Kṛṣṇa as worshipable because there is some bodily conception fixed in the mind, which can thus be applied. Of course, worshiping the Supreme Personality of Godhead in His form within the temple is not idol worship. There is evidence in the Vedic literature that worship may be saguna and nirguna—of the Supreme possessing or not possessing attributes. Worship of the Deity in the temple is saguna worship, for the Lord is represented by material qualities. But the form of the Lord, though represented by material qualities such as stone, wood or oil paint, is not actually material. That is the absolute nature of the Supreme Lord.

A crude example may be given here. We may find some mailboxes on the street, and if we post our letters in those boxes, they will naturally go to their destination without difficulty. But any old box, or an imitation, which we may find somewhere, which is not authorized by the post office, will not do the work. Similarly, God has an authorized representation in the Deity form, which is called arca-vigraha. This arca-vigraha is an incarnation of the Supreme Lord. God will accept service through that form. The Lord is omnipotent and all-powerful; therefore, by His incarnation as arca-vigraha, He can accept the services of the devotee, just to make it convenient for the man in conditioned life.

So, for a devotee, there is no difficulty in approaching the Supreme immediately and directly, but for those who are following the impersonal way to spiritual realization, the path is difficult. They have to understand the unmanifested representation of the Supreme through such Vedic literatures as the Upanisads, and they have to learn the language, understand the nonperceptual feelings, and they have to realize all these processes. This is not very easy for a common man. A person in Kṛṣṇa consciousness, engaged in devotional service, simply by the guidance of the bona fide spiritual master, simply by offering regulative obeisances unto the Deity, simply by hearing the glories of the Lord, and simply by eating the remnants of foodstuffs offered to the Lord, realizes the Supreme Personality of Godhead very easily. There is no doubt that the impersonalists are unnecessarily taking a troublesome path with the risk of not realizing the Absolute Truth at the ultimate end. But the personalist, without any risk, trouble, or difficulty, approaches the Supreme Personality directly. A similar passage appears in Srimad-Bhagavatam. It is stated there that if one ultimately has to surrender unto the Supreme Personality of Godhead (this surrendering process is called bhakti), but instead takes the trouble to understand what is Brahman and what is not Brahman and spends his whole life in that way, the result is simply troublesome. Therefore it is advised here that one should not take up this troublesome path of self-realization because there is uncertainty in the ultimate result.

A living entity is eternally an individual soul, and if he wants to merge into the spiritual whole, he may accomplish the realization of the eternal and knowledgeable aspects of his original nature, but the blissful portion is not realized. By the grace of some devotee, such a transcendentalist, highly learned in the process of jnana-yoga, may come to the point of bhakti-yoga, or devotional service. At that time, long practice in impersonalism also becomes a source of trouble, because he cannot give up the idea. Therefore an embodied soul is always in difficulty with the unmanifest, both at the time of practice and at the time of realization. Every living soul is partially independent, and one should know for certain that this unmanifested realization is against the nature of his spiritual blissful self. One should not take up this process. For every individual living entity the process of Krsna consciousness, which entails full engagement in devotional service, is the best way. If one wants to ignore this devotional service, there is the danger of turning to atheism. Thus this process of centering attention on the unmanifested, the inconceivable, which is beyond the approach of the senses, as already expressed in this verse, should never be encouraged at any time, especially in this age. It is not advised by Lord Krsna.

TRANSLATION

For one who worships Me, giving up all his activities unto Me and being devoted to Me without deviation, engaged in devotional service and always meditating upon Me, who has fixed his mind upon Me, O son of Prtha—for him I am the swift deliverer from the ocean of birth and death.

PURPORT

It is explicitly stated here that the devotees are very fortunate to be delivered very soon from material existence by the Lord. In pure devotional service one comes to the realization that God is great and that the individual soul is subordinate to Him. His duty is to render service to the Lord—if not, then he will render service to maya.

As stated before, the Supreme Lord can only be appreciated by devotional service. Therefore, one should be fully devoted. One should fix his mind fully on Kṛṣṇa in order to achieve Him. One should work only for Kṛṣṇa. It does not matter in what kind of work one engages, but that work should be done only for Kṛṣṇa. That is the standard of devotional service. The devotee does not desire any achievement other than pleasing the Supreme Personality of Godhead. His life's mission is to please Kṛṣṇa, and he can sacrifice everything for Kṛṣṇa's satisfaction, just as Arjuna did in the Battle of Kurukṣetra. The process is very simple: one can devote himself in his occupation and engage at the same time in chanting Hare Kṛṣṇa, Hare Kṛṣṇa, Kṛṣṇa Kṛṣṇa, Hare Hare/ Hare Rama, Hare Rama, Rama Rama, Hare Hare. Such transcendental chanting attracts the devotee to the Personality of Godhead.

The Supreme Lord herein promises that He will without delay deliver a pure devotee thus engaged from the ocean of material existence. Those who are advanced in yoga practice can willfully transfer the soul to whatever planet they like by the yoga process, and others take the opportunity in various ways, but as far as the devotee is concerned, it is clearly stated here that the Lord Himself takes him. He does not need to wait to become very experienced in order to transfer himself to the spiritual sky.

In the Varaha Purana this verse appears:

nayami paramam sthanam

arcir-adi-gatim vina

yathēccham anivaritah

The purport of this verse is that a devotee does not need to practice astanga-yoga in order to transfer his soul to the spiritual planets. The responsibility is taken by the Supreme Lord Himself. He clearly states here that He Himself becomes the deliverer. A child is completely cared for by his parents, and thus his position is secure. Similarly, a devotee does not need to endeavor to transfer himself by yoga practice to other planets. Rather, the Supreme Lord, by His great mercy, comes at once, riding on His bird carrier Garuda, and at once delivers the devotee from this material existence. Although a man who has fallen in the ocean may struggle very hard and may be very expert in swimming, he cannot save himself. But if someone comes and picks him up from the water, then he is easily rescued. Similarly, the Lord picks up the devotee from this material existence. One simply has to practice the easy process of Kṛṣṇa consciousness and fully engage himself in devotional service. Any intelligent man should always prefer the process of devotional service to all other paths. In the Narayaniya this is confirmed as follows:

ya vai sadhana–sāmpattih

purusārtha–catustaye

taya vina tad apnoti

naro nārāyaṇasrayaḥ

The purport of this verse is that one should not engage in the different processes of fruitive activity or cultivate knowledge by the mental speculative process. One who is devoted to the Supreme Personality can attain all the benefits derived from other yogic processes, speculation, rituals, sacrifices, charities, etc. That is the specific benediction of devotional service.

Simply by chanting the holy name of Kṛṣṇa—Hare Kṛṣṇa, Hare Kṛṣṇa, Kṛṣṇa Kṛṣṇa, Hare Hare/ Hare Rāma, Hare Rāma, Rāma Rāma, Hare Hare—a devotee of the Lord can approach the supreme destination easily and happily, but this destination cannot be approached by any other process of religion.

The conclusion of Bhagavad–gītā is stated in the Eighteenth Chapter:

mam ekam śaraṇam vraja

mokṣayisyāmi ma śucaḥ

One should give up all other processes of self–realization and simply execute devotional service in Kṛṣṇa consciousness. That will enable one to reach the highest perfection of life. There is no need for one to consider the sinful actions of his past life because the Supreme Lord fully takes charge of him. Therefore one should not futilely try to deliver himself in spiritual realization. Let everyone take shelter of the supreme omnipotent Godhead, Kṛṣṇa. That is the highest perfection of life.

SYNONYMS

mayi—unto Me; eva—certainly; manah—mind; adhatsva—fix; mayi—upon Me; buddhim—intelligence; nivesaya—apply; nivasisyasi—you live; mayi—unto Me; eva—certainly; atah urdhvam—thereafter; na—never; samsayah—doubt.

TRANSLATION

Just fix your mind upon Me, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, and engage all your intelligence in Me. Thus you will live with Me always, without a doubt.

PURPORT

One who is engaged in Lord Kṛṣṇa's devotional service lives in a direct relationship with the Supreme Lord, so there is no doubt that his position is transcendental from the very beginning. A devotee does not live on the material plane—he lives in Kṛṣṇa. The holy name of the Lord and the Lord are nondifferent; therefore when a devotee chants Hare Krsna, Krsna and His internal potency are dancing on the tongue of the devotee. When he offers Krsna food, Krsna directly accepts these eatables, and the devotee becomes Krsna-ized by eating the remnants. One who does not engage in such service cannot understand how this is so, although this is a process recommended in the Bhagavad-gita and in other Vedic literatures.

atha—if, therefore; cittam—mind; samadhatum—fixing; na—not; saknosi—able; mayi—upon Me; sthiram—fixed; abhyasa—practice; yogena—by devotional service; tatah—therefore; mam—Me; iccha—desire; aptum—to get; dhanam-jaya—O Arjuna.

TRANSLATION

My dear Arjuna, O winner of wealth, if you cannot fix your mind upon Me without deviation, then follow the regulative principles of bhakti-yoga. In this way you will develop a desire to attain to Me.

PURPORT

In this verse, two different processes of bhakti–yoga are indicated. The first applies to one who has actually developed an attachment for Kṛṣṇa, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, by transcendental love. And the other is for one who has not developed an attachment for the Supreme Person by transcendental love. For this second class there are different prescribed rules and regulations one can follow to be ultimately elevated to the stage of attachment to Kṛṣṇa.

Bhakti–yoga is the purification of the senses. At the present moment in material existence the senses are always impure, being engaged in sense gratification. But, by the practice of bhakti–yoga these senses can become purified, and in the purified state they come directly in contact with the Supreme Lord. In this material existence, I may be engaged in some service to some master, but I don't really lovingly serve my master. I simply serve to get some money. And the master also is not in love; he takes service from me and pays me. So there is no question of love. But for spiritual life, one must be elevated to the pure stage of love. That stage of love can be achieved by practice of devotional service, performed with the present senses.

This love of God is now in a dormant state in everyone's heart. And, there, love of God is manifested in different ways, but it is contaminated by material association. Now the material association has to be purified, and that dormant, natural love for Kṛṣṇa has to be revived. That is the whole process.

To practice the regulative principles of bhakti–yoga one should, under the guidance of an expert spiritual master, follow certain principles: one should rise early in the morning, take bath, enter the temple and offer prayers and chant Hare Kṛṣṇa, then collect flowers to offer to the Deity, cook foodstuffs to offer to the Deity, take prasadam, and so on. There are various rules and regulations which one should follow. And one should constantly hear Bhagavad–gītā and Śrīmad–Bhagavatam from pure devotees. This practice can help anyone to rise to the level of love of God, and then he is sure of his progress into the spiritual kingdom of God. This practice of bhakti–yoga, under the rules and regulations, with the direction of a spiritual master, will surely bring one to the stage of love of God.

TRANSLATION

If you cannot practice the regulations of bhakti-yoga, then just try to work for Me, because by working for Me you will come to the perfect stage.

PURPORT

One who is not able even to practice the regulative principles of bhakti-yoga, under the guidance of a spiritual master, can still be drawn to this perfectional stage by working for the Supreme Lord. How to do this work has already been explained in the fifty-fifth verse of the Eleventh Chapter. One should be sympathetic to the propagation of Kṛṣṇa consciousness. There are many devotees who are engaged in the propagation of Kṛṣṇa consciousness, and they require help. So, even if one cannot directly practice the regulative principles of bhakti-yoga, he can try to help such work. Every endeavor requires land, capital, organization and labor. Just as in business one requires a place to stay, some capital to use, some labor and some organization to expand, so the same is required in the service of Kṛṣṇa. The only difference is that in materialism one works for sense gratification. The same work, however, can be performed for the satisfaction of Kṛṣṇa, and that is spiritual activity. If one has sufficient money, he can help in building an office or temple for propagating Kṛṣṇa consciousness. Or he can help with publications. There are various fields of activity, and one should be interested in such activities. If one cannot sacrifice the results of his activities, the same person can still sacrifice some percentage to propagate Kṛṣṇa consciousness. This voluntary service to the cause of Kṛṣṇa consciousness will help one rise to a higher state of love for God, whereupon one becomes perfect.

TRANSLATION

If, however, you are unable to work in this consciousness, then try to act giving up all results of your work and try to be self-situated.

PURPORT

It may be that one is unable to even sympathize with the activities of Kṛṣṇa consciousness because of social, familial or religious considerations or because of some other impediments. If one attaches himself directly to the activities of Kṛṣṇa consciousness, there may be objections from family members, or so many other difficulties. For one who has such a problem, it is advised that he sacrifice the accumulated result of his activities to some good cause. Such procedures are described in the Vedic rules. There are many descriptions of sacrifices and special functions of punya, or special work in which the result of one's previous action may be applied. Thus one may gradually become elevated to the state of knowledge. It is also found that when one who is not even interested in the activities of Kṛṣṇa consciousness gives charity to some hospital or some other social institution, he gives up the hard-earned results of his activities. That is also recommended here because by the practice of giving up the fruits of one's activities one is sure to purify his mind gradually, and in that purified stage of mind one becomes able to understand Kṛṣṇa consciousness. Of course Kṛṣṇa consciousness is not dependent on any other experience, because Kṛṣṇa consciousness itself can purify one's mind, but if there are impediments to accepting Kṛṣṇa consciousness, one may try to give up the results of his actions. In that respect, social service, community service, national service, sacrifice for one's country, etc., may be accepted so that some day one may come to the stage of pure devotional service to the Supreme Lord. In Bhagavad-gītā (18.46) we find it is stated, yataḥ pravṛttir bhūtaṇāṃ: if one decides to sacrifice for the supreme cause, even if he does not know that the supreme cause is Kṛṣṇa, he will come gradually to understand that Kṛṣṇa is the supreme cause by the sacrificial method.

TRANSLATION

If you cannot take to this practice, then engage yourself in the cultivation of knowledge. Better than knowledge, however, is meditation, and better than meditation is renunciation of the fruits of action, for by such renunciation one can attain peace of mind.

PURPORT

As mentioned in the previous verses, there are two kinds of devotional service: the way of regulative principles and the way of full attachment in love to the Supreme Personality of Godhead. For those who are actually not able to follow the principles of Kṛṣṇa consciousness it is better to cultivate knowledge because by knowledge one can be able to understand his real position. Gradually knowledge will develop to the point of meditation. By meditation one can be able to understand the Supreme Personality of Godhead by a gradual process. There are processes which make one understand that one himself is the Supreme, and that sort of meditation is preferred if one is unable to engage in devotional service. If one is not able to meditate in such a way, then there are prescribed duties, as enjoined in the Vedic literature, for the brahmanas, ksatriyas, vaiśyas and sudras, which we shall find in a later chapter of Bhagavad-gītā. But in all cases, one should give up the result or fruits of labor; this means to employ the result of karma for some good cause.

In summary, to reach the Supreme Personality of Godhead, the highest goal, there are two processes: one process is by gradual development, and the other process is direct. Devotional service in Kṛṣṇa consciousness is the direct method, and the other method involves renouncing the fruits of one's activities. Then one can come to the stage of knowledge, then to the stage of meditation, then to the stage of understanding the Supersoul, and then to the stage of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. One may either take the step by step process or the direct path. The direct process is not possible for everyone; therefore the indirect process is also good. It is, however, to be understood that the indirect process is not recommended for Arjuna because he is already at the stage of loving devotional service to the Supreme Lord. It is for others who are not at this stage; for them the gradual process of renunciation, knowledge, meditation and realization of the Supersoul and Brahman should be followed. But as far as Bhagavad-gita is concerned, it is the direct method that is stressed. Everyone is advised to take to the direct method and surrender unto the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Kṛṣṇa.

TRANSLATION

One who is not envious but who is a kind friend to all living entities, who does not think himself a proprietor, who is free from false ego and equal both in happiness and distress, who is always satisfied and engaged in devotional service with determination and whose mind and intelligence are in agreement with Me—he is very dear to Me.

PURPORT

Coming again to the point of pure devotional service, the Lord is describing the transcendental qualifications of a pure devotee in these two verses. A pure devotee is never disturbed in any circumstances. Nor is he envious of anyone. Nor does a devotee become his enemy's enemy; he thinks that one is acting as his enemy due to his own past misdeeds. Thus it is better to suffer than to protest. In the Srimad-Bhagavatam (10.14.8) it is stated: tat te 'nukampam susamiksamano. Whenever a devotee is in distress or has fallen into difficulty, he thinks that it is the Lord's mercy upon him. He thinks: "Thanks to my past misdeeds I should suffer far, far greater than I am suffering now. So it is by the mercy of the Supreme Lord that I am not getting all the punishment I am due. I am just getting a little, by the mercy of the Supreme Personality of Godhead." Therefore he is always calm, quiet and patient, despite many distressful conditions. A devotee is always kind to everyone, even to his enemy. Nirmama means that a devotee does not attach much importance to the pains and trouble pertaining to the body because he knows perfectly well that he is not the material body. He does not identify with the body; therefore he is freed from the conception of false ego and is equipoised both in happiness and distress. He is tolerant, and he is satisfied with whatever comes by the grace of the Supreme Lord. He does not endeavor much to achieve something with great difficulty; therefore he is always joyful. He is a completely perfect mystic because he is fixed in the instructions received from the spiritual master, and because his senses are controlled, he is determined. He is not swayed by false argument because no one can lead him from the fixed determination of devotional service. He is fully conscious that Kṛṣṇa is the eternal Lord, so no one can disturb him. All his qualifications enable him to depend entirely on the Supreme Lord. Such a standard of devotional service is undoubtedly very rare, but a devotee becomes situated in that stage by following the regulative principles of devotional service. Furthermore, the Lord says that such a devotee is very dear to Him, for the Lord is always pleased with all his activities in full Kṛṣṇa consciousness.

TRANSLATION

He for whom no one is put into difficulty and who is not disturbed by anxiety, who is steady in happiness and distress, is very dear to Me.

PURPORT

A few of a devotee's qualifications are further being described. No one is put into difficulty, anxiety, fearfulness or dissatisfaction by such a devotee. Since a devotee is kind to everyone, he does not act in such a way as to put others into anxiety. At the same time, if others try to put a devotee into anxiety, he is not disturbed. It is by the grace of the Lord that he is so practiced that he is not disturbed by any outward disturbance. Actually because a devotee is always engrossed in Kṛṣṇa consciousness and engaged in devotional service, all such material circumstances cannot woo him. Generally a materialistic person becomes very happy when there is something for his sense gratification and his body, but when he sees that others have something for their sense gratification and he hasn't, he is sorry and envious. When he is expecting some retaliation from an enemy, he is in a state of fear, and when he cannot successfully execute something he becomes dejected. But a devotee is always transcendental to all these disturbances; therefore he is very dear to Kṛṣṇa.

TRANSLATION

A devotee who is not dependent on the ordinary course of activities, who is pure, expert, without cares, free from all pains, and who does not strive for some result, is very dear to Me.

PURPORT

Money may be offered to a devotee, but he should not struggle to acquire it. If automatically by the grace of the Supreme, money comes to him, he is not agitated. Naturally a devotee takes bath at least twice in a day and rises early in the morning for devotional service. Thus he is naturally clean both inwardly and outwardly. A devotee is always expert because he fully knows the essence of all activities of life and he is convinced of the authoritative scriptures. A devotee never takes the part of a particular party; therefore he is carefree. He is never pained, because he is free from all designations; he knows that his body is a designation, so if there are some bodily pains, he is free. The pure devotee does not endeavor for anything which is against the principles of devotional service. For example, constructing a big building requires great energy, and a devotee does not take to such business if it does not benefit him by advancing his devotional service. He may construct a temple for the Lord, and for that he may take all kinds of anxiety, but he does not construct a big house for his personal relations.

TRANSLATION

One who neither grasps pleasure or grief, who neither laments nor desires, and who renounces both auspicious and inauspicious things, is very dear to Me.

PURPORT

A pure devotee is neither happy nor distressed over material gain and loss, nor is he very much anxious to get a son or a disciple, nor is he distressed by not getting them. If he loses anything which is very dear to him, he does not lament. Similarly, if he does not get that which he desires, he is not distressed. He is transcendental in the face of all kinds of auspicious, inauspicious and sinful activities. He is prepared to accept all kinds of risks for the satisfaction of the Supreme Lord. Nothing is an impediment in the discharge of his devotional service. Such a devotee is very dear to Kṛṣṇa.

TRANSLATION

One who is equal to friends and enemies, who is equipoised in honor and dishonor, heat and cold, happiness and distress, fame and infamy, who is always free from contaminated association, always silent and satisfied with anything, who doesn't care for any residence, who is fixed in knowledge and engaged in devotional service, is very dear to Me.

PURPORT

A devotee is always free from all bad association. Sometimes one is praised and sometimes one is defamed; that is the nature of human society. But a devotee is always transcendental to artificial fame and infamy, distress or happiness. He is very patient. He does not speak of anything but the topics about Kṛṣṇa; therefore he is called silent. Silent does not mean that one should not speak; silent means that one should not speak nonsense. One should speak only of essentials, and the most essential speech for the devotee is to speak of the Supreme Lord. He is happy in all conditions; sometimes he may get very palatable foodstuffs, sometimes not, but he is satisfied. Nor does he care for any residential facility. He may sometimes live underneath a tree, and he may sometimes live in a very palatial building; he is attracted to neither. He is called fixed because he is fixed in his determination and knowledge. We may find some repetition in the descriptions of the qualifications of a devotee, but this is just to give an illustration of the fact that a devotee must acquire all these qualifications. Without good qualifications, one cannot be a pure devotee. Harav abhaktasya kuto mahad-guṇah: one who is not a devotee has no good qualification. One who wants to be recognized as a devotee should develop the good qualifications. Of course he does not extraneously endeavor to acquire these qualifications, but engagement in Kṛṣṇa consciousness and devotional service automatically help him develop them.

TRANSLATION

He who follows this imperishable path of devotional service and who completely engages himself with faith, making Me the supreme goal, is very, very dear to Me.

PURPORT

In this chapter the religion of eternal engagement, the explanation of the processes of transcendental service for approaching the Supreme Lord, is given. This process is very dear to the Lord, and He accepts a person who is engaged in such a process. The question who is better—one who is engaged in the path of impersonal Brahman or one who is engaged in the personal service of the Supreme Personality of Godhead—was raised by Arjuna, and the Lord replied to him so explicitly that there is no doubt that devotional service to the Personality of Godhead is the best of all processes of spiritual realization. In other words, in this chapter it is decided that through good association, one develops attachment for pure devotional service and thereby accepts a bona fide spiritual master and from him begins to hear and chant and observe the regulative principles of devotional service with faith, attachment and devotion and thus becomes engaged in the transcendental service of the Lord. This path is recommended in this chapter; therefore there is no doubt that devotional service is the only absolute path for self-realization, for the attainment of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. The impersonal conception of the Supreme Absolute Truth, as described in this chapter, is recommended only up to the time one surrenders himself for self-realization. In other words, as long as one does not have the chance to associate with a pure devotee, the impersonal conception may be beneficial. In the impersonal conception of the Absolute Truth one works without fruitive result, meditates and cultivates knowledge to understand spirit and matter. This is necessary as long as one is not in the association of a pure devotee. Fortunately, if one develops directly a desire to engage in Kṛṣṇa consciousness in pure devotional service, he does not need to undergo step by step improvements in spiritual realization. Devotional service, as described in the middle six chapters of the Bhagavad-gītā, is more congenial. One need not bother about materials to keep body and soul together because by the grace of the Lord everything is carried out automatically.

Thus end the Bhaktivedanta Purports to the Twelfth Chapter of the Srimad Bhagavad-gita in the matter of Devotional Service.

TRANSLATION

Arjuna said: O my dear Kṛṣṇa, I wish to know about prakṛti [nature], puruṣa [the enjoyer], and the field and the knower of the field, and of knowledge and of the end of knowledge.

The Blessed Lord said: This body, O son of Kuntī, is called the field, and one who knows this body is called the knower of the field.

PURPORT

Arjuna was inquisitive about prakṛti, or nature, puruṣa, the enjoyer, ksetra, the field, ksetra-jna, its knower, and of knowledge and the object of knowledge. When he inquired about all these, Kṛṣṇa said that this body is called the field and that one who knows this body is called the knower of the field. This body is the field of activity for the conditioned soul. The conditioned soul is entrapped in material existence, and he attempts to lord over material nature. And so, according to his capacity to dominate material nature, he gets a field of activity. That field of activity is the body. And what is the body? The body is made of senses. The conditioned soul wants to enjoy sense gratification, and, according to his capacity to enjoy sense gratification, he is offered a body, or field of activity. Therefore the body is called ksetra, or the field of activity for the conditioned soul. Now, the person who identifies himself with the body, is called ksetra-jna, the knower of the field. It is not very difficult to understand the difference between the field and its knower, the body and the knower of the body. Any person can consider that from childhood to old age he undergoes so many changes of body and yet is still one person, remaining. Thus there is a difference between the knower of the field of activities and the actual field of activities. A living conditioned soul can thus understand that he is different from the body. It is described in the beginning—dehino 'smin—that the living entity is within the body and that the body is changing from childhood to boyhood and from boyhood to youth and from youth to old age, and the person who owns the body knows that the body is changing. The owner is distinctly ksetra-jna. Sometimes we understand that, "I am happy," "I am a man," "I am a woman," "I am a dog," "I am a cat." These are the bodily designations of the knower. But the knower is different from the field. Although we use many articles—our clothes, etc.—we know that we are different from the things used. Similarly, we also understand by a little contemplation that we are different from the body.

In the first six chapters of Bhagavad-gita the knower of the body, the living entity, and the position by which he can understand the Supreme Lord are described. In the middle six chapters of the Gita, the Supreme Personality of Godhead and the relationship between the individual soul and the Supersoul in regard to devotional service are described. The superior position of the Supreme Personality of Godhead and the subordinate position of the individual soul are definitely defined in these chapters. The living entities are subordinate under all circumstances, but in their forgetfulness they are suffering. When enlightened by pious activities, they approach the Supreme Lord in different capacities—as the distressed, those in want of money, the inquisitive, and those in search of knowledge. That is also described. Now, starting with the Thirteenth Chapter, how the living entity comes in contact with material nature, how he is delivered by the Supreme Lord through the different methods of fruitive activities, cultivation of knowledge, and the discharge of devotional service are explained. Although the living entity is completely different from the material body, he somehow becomes related. This also is explained.

TRANSLATION

O scion of Bharata, you should understand that I am also the knower in all bodies, and to understand this body and its knower is called knowledge. That is My opinion.

PURPORT

While discussing the subject of this body and the knower of the body, the soul and the Supersoul, we shall find three different topics of study: the Lord, the living entity, and matter. In every field of activities, in every body, there are two souls: the individual soul and the Supersoul. Because the Supersoul is the plenary expansion of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Krsna, Krsna says, "I am also the knower, but I am not the individual knower of the body. I am the superknower. I am present in every body as the Paramatma, or Supersoul."

One who studies the subject matter of the field of activity and the knower of the field very minutely, in terms of this Bhagavad-gita, can attain to knowledge.

The Lord says, "I am the knower of the field of activities in every individual body." The individual may be the knower of his own body, but he is not in knowledge of other bodies. The Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is present as the Supersoul in all bodies, knows everything about all bodies. He knows all the different bodies of all the various species of life. A citizen may know everything about his patch of land, but the king knows not only his palace but also all the properties possessed by the individual citizens. Similarly, one may be the proprietor of the body individually, but the Supreme Lord is the proprietor of all bodies. The king is the original proprietor of the kingdom, and the citizen is the secondary proprietor. Similarly, the Supreme Lord is the supreme proprietor of all bodies.

The body consists of the senses. The Supreme Lord is Hrsikesa, Which means "the controller of the senses." He is the original controller of the senses, just as the king is the original controller of all the activities of the state; the citizens are secondary controllers. The Lord says, "I am also the knower." This means that He is the superknower; the individual soul knows only his particular body. In the Vedic literature, it is stated as follows:

ksetrani hi sarirani

bijam capi subhasubhe

This body is called the ksetra, and within it dwells the owner of the body and the Supreme Lord who knows both the body and the owner of the body. Therefore He is called the knower of all fields. The distinction between the field of activities, the knower of activities, and the supreme knower of activities is described as follows. Perfect knowledge of the constitution of the body, the constitution of the individual soul, and the constitution of the Supersoul is known in terms of Vedic literature as jnana. That is the opinion of Krsna. To understand both the soul and the Supersoul as one yet distinct is knowledge. One who does not understand the field of activity and the knower of activity is not in perfect knowledge. One has to understand the position of prakrti, nature, purusa, the enjoyer of the nature, and isvara, the knower who dominates or controls nature and the individual soul. One should not confuse the three in their different capacities. One should not confuse the painter, the painting and the easel. This material world, which is the field of activities, is nature, and the enjoyer of nature is the living entity, and above them both is the supreme controller, the Personality of Godhead. It is stated in the Vedic language (in the Svetasvatara Upanisad 1.12), bhokta bhogyam preritaram ca matva. sarvam proktam tri vidham—brahmam etat. There are three Brahman conceptions: prakrti is Brahman as the field of activities, and the jiva (individual soul) is also Brahman and is trying to control material nature, and the controller of both of them is also Brahman, but He is the factual controller.

In this chapter it will be also explained that out of the two knowers, one is fallible and the other is infallible. One is superior and the other is subordinate. One who understands the two knowers of the field to be one and the same contradicts the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who states here very clearly, "I am also the knower of the field of activity." One who misunderstands a rope to be a serpent is not in knowledge. There are different kinds of bodies, and there are different owners of the bodies. Because each individual soul has his individual capacity for lording it over material nature, there are different bodies. But the Supreme also is present in them as the controller. The word ca is significant for it indicates the total number of bodies. That is the opinion of Srila Baladeva Vidyabhusana: Krsna is the Supersoul present in each and every body apart from the individual soul. And Krsna explicitly says here that the Supersoul is the controller of both the field of activities and the finite enjoyer.

TRANSLATION

Now please hear My brief description of this field of activity and how it is constituted, what its changes are, whence it is produced, who that knower of the field of activities is, and what his influences are.

PURPORT

The Lord is describing the field of activities and the knower of the field of activities in their constitutional positions. One has to know how this body is constituted, the materials of which this body is made, under whose control this body is working, how the changes are taking place, wherefrom the changes are coming, what the causes are, what the reasons are, what the ultimate goal of the individual soul is, and what the actual form of the individual soul is. One should also know the distinction between the individual living soul and the Supersoul, their different influences, their potentials, etc. One just has to understand this Bhagavad-gita directly from the description given by the Supreme Personality of Godhead, and all this will be clarified. But one should be careful not to consider the Supreme Personality of Godhead in every body and individual soul to be the jiva. This is something like equalizing the potent and the impotent.

TRANSLATION

That knowledge of the field of activities and of the knower of activities is described by various sages in various Vedic writings—especially in the Vedanta-sutra—and is presented with all reasoning as to cause and effect.

PURPORT

The Supreme Personality of Godhead, Kṛṣṇa, is the highest authority in explaining this knowledge. Still, as a matter of course, learned scholars and standard authorities always give evidence from previous authorities. Kṛṣṇa is explaining this most controversial point regarding the duality and nonduality of the soul and the Supersoul by referring to the scriptures, the Vedānta, which are accepted as authority. First, He says, "This is according to different sages." As far as the sages are concerned, besides Himself, Vyāsadeva, the author of the Vedānta-sūtra, is a great sage, and in the Vedānta-sūtra duality is perfectly explained. And Vyāsadeva's father, Parasara, was also a great sage, and he writes in his books of religiosity: aham tvam ca tathanye... "we—you, I and the various other living entities—are all transcendental, although in material bodies. Now we are fallen into the ways of the three modes of material nature according to our different karma. As such, some are on higher levels, and some are in the lower nature. The higher and lower natures exist due to ignorance and are being manifested in an infinite number of living entities. But the Supersoul, which is infallible, is uncontaminated by the three qualities of nature and is transcendental." Similarly, in the original Vedas, a distinction between the soul, the Supersoul and the body is made, especially in the Katha Upaniṣad.

There is a manifestation of the Supreme Lord's energy known as anna-māya, by which one depends simply upon food for existence. This is a materialistic realization of the Supreme. Then there is prāṇa-māya; this means that after realizing the Supreme Absolute Truth in foodstuff, one can realize the Absolute Truth in the living symptoms, or life forms. In jñāna-māya the living symptom develops to the point of thinking, feeling and willing. Then there is Brahman realization and realization called vijnana–maya by which the living entity's mind and life symptoms are distinguished from the living entity himself. The next and supreme stage is ananda–maya, realization of the all–blissful nature. Thus there are five stages of Brahman realization, which are called brahma puccham. Out of these the first three—anna–maya, prana–maya and jnana–maya—involve the fields of activities of the living entities. Transcendental to all these fields of activities is the Supreme Lord, who is called ananda–maya. In the Vedanta–sutra also the Supreme is called, ananda–mayo 'bhyasat: the Supreme Personality of Godhead is by nature full of joy, and to enjoy His transcendental bliss, He expands into vijnana–maya, prana–maya, jnana–maya, and anna–maya. In this field of activities the living entity is considered to be the enjoyer, and different from him is the ananda–maya. That means that if the living entity decides to enjoy, in dovetailing himself with the ananda–maya, then he becomes perfect. This is the real picture of the Supreme Lord, as the supreme knower of the field, the living entity as the subordinate knower, and the nature of the field of activities.

TRANSLATION

The five great elements, false ego, intelligence, the unmanifested, the ten senses, the mind, the five sense objects, desire, hatred, happiness, distress, the aggregate, the life symptoms, and convictions—all these are considered, in summary, to be the field of activities and its interactions.

PURPORT

From all the authoritative statements of the great sages, the Vedic hymns and the aphorisms of the Vedanta-sutra, the components of this world are earth, water, fire, air and ether. These are the five great elements (maha-bhuta). Then there are false ego, intelligence and the unmanifested stage of the three modes of nature. Then there are five senses for acquiring knowledge: the eyes, ears, nose, tongue and touch. Then five working senses: voice, legs, hands, anus and genitals. Then, above the senses, there is the mind, which is within and which can be called the sense within. Therefore, including the mind, there are eleven senses altogether. Then there are the five objects of the senses: smell, taste, form, touch and sound. Now the aggregate of these twenty-four elements is called the field of activity. If one makes an analytical study of these twenty-four subjects, then he can very well understand the field of activity. Then there is desire, hatred, pleasure and pain, which are interactions, representations of the five great elements in the gross body. The living symptoms, represented by consciousness and conviction, are the manifestation of the subtle body—the mind, ego and intelligence. These subtle elements are included within the field of activities.

The five great elements are a gross representation of the subtle false ego. They are a representation in the material conception. Consciousness is represented by intelligence, of which the unmanifested stage is the three modes of material nature. The unmanifested three modes of material nature is called pradhana.

One who desires to know the twenty–four elements in detail along with their interactions should study the philosophy in more detail. In Bhagavad–gita, a summary only is given.

The body is the representation of all these factors, and there are changes of the body, which are six in number: the body is born, it grows, it stays, it produces by–products, then it begins to decay, and at the last stage it vanishes. Therefore the field is a nonpermanent material thing. However, the ksetra–jna, the knower of the field, its proprietor, is different.

TRANSLATION

Humility, pridelessness, nonviolence, tolerance, simplicity, approaching a bona fide spiritual master, cleanliness, steadiness and self-control; renunciation of the objects of sense gratification; absence of false ego, the perception of the evil of birth, death, old age and disease; nonattachment to children, wife, home and the rest and even-mindedness amid pleasant and unpleasant events; constant and unalloyed devotion to Me, resorting to solitary places, detachment from the general mass of people; accepting the importance of self-realization, and philosophical search for the Absolute Truth—all these I thus declare to be knowledge and what is contrary to these is ignorance.

PURPORT

This process of knowledge is sometimes misunderstood by less intelligent men as being the interaction of the field of activity. But actually this is the real process of knowledge. If one accepts this process, then the possibility of approaching the Absolute Truth exists. This is not the interaction of the twenty-four elements, as described before. This is actually the means to get out of it. Of all the descriptions of the process of knowledge, the most important point is described in the first line of the eleventh verse. Mayi cananya-yogena bhaktir avyabhicarini: the process of knowledge terminates in unalloyed devotional service to the Lord. So, if one does not approach, or is not able to approach, the transcendental service of the Lord, then the other nineteen items are of no particular value. But, if one takes to devotional service in full Krsna consciousness, the other nineteen items automatically develop within him. The principle of accepting a spiritual master, as mentioned in the eighth verse, is essential. Even for one who takes to devotional service, it is most important. Transcendental life begins when one accepts a bona fide spiritual master. The Supreme Personality of Godhead, Sri Krsna, clearly states here that this process of knowledge is the actual path. Anything speculated beyond this is nonsense.

As for the knowledge outlined here, the items may be analyzed as follows: Humility means that one should not be anxious to have the satisfaction of being honored by others. The material conception of life makes us very eager to receive honor from others, but from the point of view of a man in perfect knowledge—who knows that he is not this body—anything, honor or dishonor, pertaining to this body is useless. One should not be hankering after this material deception. People are very anxious to be famous for their religion, and consequently sometimes it is found that without understanding the principles of religion, one enters into some group, which is not actually following religious principles, and then wants to advertise himself as a religious mentor. As for actual advancement in spiritual science, one should have a test to see how far he is progressing. He can judge by these items.

Nonviolence is generally taken to mean not killing or destroying the body, but actually nonviolence means not to put others into distress. People in general are trapped by ignorance in the material concept of life, and they perpetually suffer material pains. So, unless one elevates people to spiritual knowledge, one is practicing violence. One should try his best to distribute real knowledge to the people, so that they may become enlightened and leave this material entanglement. That is nonviolence.

Tolerance means that one should be practiced to bear insult and dishonor from others. If one is engaged in the advancement of spiritual knowledge, there will be so many insults and so much dishonor from others. This is expected because material nature is so constituted. Even a boy like Prahlada, who, only five years old, was engaged in the cultivation of spiritual knowledge, was endangered when his father became antagonistic to his devotion. The father tried to kill him in so many ways, but Prahlada tolerated him. So, for making advancement in spiritual knowledge, there may be many impediments, but we should be tolerant and continue our progress with determination.

Simplicity means that without diplomacy one should be so straight-forward that he can disclose the real truth even to an enemy. As for acceptance of the spiritual master, that is essential, because without the instruction of a bona fide spiritual master, one cannot progress in the spiritual science. One should approach the spiritual master with all humility and offer him all services so that he will be pleased to bestow his blessings upon the disciple. Because a bona fide spiritual master is a representative of Krsna, if he bestows any blessings upon his disciple, that will make the disciple immediately advanced without the disciple's following the regulative principles. Or, the regulative principles will be easier for one who has served the spiritual master without reservation.

Cleanliness is essential for making advancement in spiritual life. There are two kinds of cleanliness: external and internal. External cleanliness means taking a bath, but for internal cleanliness, one has to think of Krsna always and chant Hare Krsna, Hare Krsna, Krsna Krsna, Hare Hare/ Hare Rama, Hare Rama, Rama Rama, Hare Hare. This process cleans the accumulated dust of past karma from the mind.

Steadiness means that one should be very determined to make progress in spiritual life. Without such determination, one cannot make tangible progress. And self-control means that one should not accept anything which is detrimental to the path of spiritual progress. One should become accustomed to this and reject anything which is against the path of spiritual progress. This is real renunciation. The senses are so strong that they are always anxious to have sense gratification. One should not cater to these demands, which are not necessary. The senses should only be gratified to keep the body fit so that one can discharge his duty in advancing in spiritual life. The most important and uncontrollable sense is the tongue. If one can control the tongue, then there is every possibility of controlling the other senses. The function of the tongue is to taste and to vibrate. Therefore, by systematic regulation, the tongue should always be engaged in tasting the remnants of foodstuffs offered to Kṛṣṇa and chanting Hare Kṛṣṇa. As far as the eyes are concerned, they should not be allowed to see anything but the beautiful form of Kṛṣṇa. That will control the eyes. Similarly, the ears should be engaged in hearing about Kṛṣṇa and the nose in smelling the flowers offered to Kṛṣṇa. This is the process of devotional service, and it is understood here that Bhagavad-gītā is simply expounding the science of devotional service. Devotional service is the main and sole objective. Unintelligent commentators on the Bhagavad-gītā try to divert the mind of the reader to other subjects, but there is no other subject in Bhagavad-gītā than devotional service.

False ego means accepting this body as oneself. When one understands that he is not his body and is spirit soul, that is real ego. Ego is there. False ego is condemned, but not real ego. In the Vedic literature (Bṛhad-āraṇyaka Upaniṣad 1.4.10) it is said, aham brahmasmi: I am Brahman, I am spirit. This "I am," the sense of self, also exists in the liberated stage of self-realization. This sense of "I am" is ego, but when the sense of "I am" is applied to this false body it is false ego. When the sense of self is applied to reality, that is real ego. There are some philosophers who say we should give up our ego, but we cannot give up our ego, because ego means identity. We ought, of course, to give up the false identification with the body.

One should try to understand the distress of accepting birth, death, old age and disease. There are descriptions in various Vedic literatures of birth. In the Srimad-Bhagavatam the world of the unborn, the child's stay in the womb of the mother, its suffering, etc., are all very graphically described. It should be thoroughly understood that birth is distressful. Because we forget how much distress we have suffered within the womb of the mother, we do not make any solution to the repetition of birth and death. Similarly at the time of death there are all kinds of sufferings, and they are also mentioned in the authoritative scriptures. These should be discussed. And as far as disease and old age are concerned, everyone gets practical experience. No one wants to be diseased, and no one wants to become old, but there is no avoiding these. Unless we have a pessimistic view of this material life, considering the distresses of birth, death, old age and disease, there is no impetus for our making advancement in spiritual life.

As for detachment from children, wife and home, it is not meant that one should have no feeling for these. They are natural objects of affection. But when they are not favorable to spiritual progress, then one should not be attached to them. The best process for making the home pleasant is Kṛṣṇa consciousness. If one is in full Kṛṣṇa consciousness, he can make his home very happy, because this process of Kṛṣṇa consciousness is very easy. One need only chant Hare Kṛṣṇa, Hare Kṛṣṇa, Kṛṣṇa Kṛṣṇa, Hare Hare/ Hare Rama, Hare Rama, Rama Rama, Hare Hare, accept the remnants of foodstuffs offered to Kṛṣṇa, have some discussion on books like Bhagavad-gīta and Srimad-Bhagavatam, and engage oneself in Deity worship. These four will make one happy. One should train the members of his family in this way. The family members can sit down morning and evening and chant together Hare Kṛṣṇa, Hare Kṛṣṇa, Kṛṣṇa Kṛṣṇa, Hare Hare/ Hare Rama, Hare Rama, Rama Rama, Hare Hare. If one can mold his family life in this way to develop Kṛṣṇa consciousness, following these four principles, then there is no need to change from family life to renounced life. But if it is not congenial, not favorable for spiritual advancement, then family life should be abandoned. One must sacrifice everything to realize or serve Kṛṣṇa, just as Arjuna did. Arjuna did not want to kill his family members, but when he understood that these family members were impediments to his Kṛṣṇa realization, he accepted the instruction of Kṛṣṇa and fought and killed them. In all cases, one should be detached from the happiness and distress of family life, because in this world one can never be fully happy or fully miserable.

Happiness and distress are concomitant factors of material life. One should learn to tolerate, as advised in Bhagavad-gīta. One can never restrict the coming and going of happiness and distress, so one should be detached from the materialistic way of life and be automatically equipoised in both cases. Generally, when we get something desirable, we are very happy, and when we get something undesirable, we are distressed. But if we are actually in the spiritual position, these things will not agitate us. To reach that stage, we have to practice unbreakable devotional service; Devotional service to Kṛṣṇa without deviation means engaging oneself in the nine processes of devotional service, chanting, hearing, worshiping, offering respect, etc., as described in the last verse of the Ninth Chapter. That process should be followed.

Naturally, when one is adapted to the spiritual way of life, he will not want to mix with materialistic men. That would go against his grain. One may test himself by seeing how far he is inclined to live in a solitary place without unwanted association. Naturally a devotee has no taste for unnecessary sporting or cinema-going or enjoying some social function, because he understands that these are simply a waste of time. There are many research scholars and philosophers who study sex life or some other subject, but according to Bhagavad-gīta, such research work and philosophical speculation have no value. That is more or less nonsensical. According to Bhagavad-gīta, one should make research, by philosophical discretion into the nature of the soul. One should make research to understand with what the self is concerned. That is recommended here.

As far as self-realization is concerned, it is clearly stated here that bhakti-yoga is especially practical. As soon as there is a question of devotion, one must consider the relationship between the Supersoul and the individual soul. The individual soul and the Supersoul cannot be one, at least not in the bhakti conception, the devotional conception of life. This service of the individual soul to the Supreme Soul is eternal, nityam, as it is clearly stated. So bhakti or devotional service is eternal. One should be established in that philosophical conviction, otherwise it is only a waste of time, ignorance.

In the Srimad-Bhagavatam (1.2.11) this is explained; vadanti tat tattva-vidas tattvam yaj jnanam advayam. "Those who are actually knowers of the Absolute Truth know that the Self is realized in three different phases, as Brahman, Paramatma and Bhagavan."

Bhagavan is the last word in the realization of the Absolute Truth; therefore one should reach up to that platform of understanding the Supreme Personality of Godhead and thus engage in the devotional service of the Lord. That is perfection of knowledge.

Beginning from practicing humility up to the point of realization of the Supreme Truth, the Absolute Personality of Godhead, this process is just like a staircase beginning from the ground floor up to the top floor. Now on this staircase there are so many people who have reached the first floor, or the second or the third floor, etc., but unless one reaches the top floor, which is the understanding of Krsna, he is at a lower stage of knowledge. If anyone wants to compete with God and at the same time make advancement in spiritual knowledge, he will be frustrated. It is clearly stated that without humility understanding is harmful. To think oneself God is most puffed up. Although the living entity is always being kicked by the stringent laws of material nature, still he thinks, "I am God" because of ignorance. One should be humble and know that he is subordinate to the Supreme Lord. Due to rebellion against the Supreme Lord, one becomes subordinate to material nature. One must know and be convinced of this truth.

TRANSLATION

I shall now explain the knowable, knowing which you will taste the eternal. This is beginningless, and it is subordinate to Me. It is called Brahman, the spirit, and it lies beyond the cause and effect of this material world.

PURPORT

The Lord has explained the field of activities and the knower of the field. He has also explained the process of knowing the knower of the field of activities. Now He is explaining the knowable, both the soul and the Supersoul respectively. By knowledge of the knower, both the soul and the Supersoul, one can relish the nectar of life. As explained in the Second Chapter, the living entity is eternal. This is also confirmed here. There is no specific date at which the jiva was born. Nor can anyone trace out the history of the jivatma's manifestation from the Supreme Lord. Therefore it is beginningless. The Vedic literature confirms this: na jayate mriyate va vipascit (Katha Upanisad 1.2.18). The knower of the body is never born and never dies, and he is full of knowledge.

The Supreme Lord is also stated in the Vedic literature (Svetasvatara Upanisad 6.16) as pradhana-ksetrajna-patir gunesah. The Supreme Lord as the Supersoul is the chief knower of the body and He is the master of the three modes of material nature. In the smṛti it is said: dasa-bhuto harer eva nanyasvaiva kadacana. The living entities are eternally in the service of the Supreme Lord. This is also confirmed by Lord Caitanya in His teachings; therefore the description of Brahman mentioned in this verse is in relation to the individual soul, and when the word Brahman is applied to the living entity, it is to be understood that he is vijñāna-brahma as opposed to ananda-brahma. Ananda-brahma is the Supreme Brahman Personality of Godhead.

TRANSLATION

Everywhere are His hands and legs, His eyes and faces, and He hears everything. In this way the Supersoul exists.

PURPORT

As the sun exists diffusing its unlimited rays, so does the Supersoul, or Supreme Personality of Godhead. He exists in His all-pervading form, and in Him exist all the individual living entities, beginning from the first great teacher, Brahma, down to the small ants. There are unlimited heads, legs, hands and eyes, and unlimited living entities. All are existing in and on the Supersoul. Therefore the Supersoul is all-pervading. The individual soul, however, cannot say that he has his hands, legs and eyes everywhere. That is not possible. If he thinks that although under ignorance he is not conscious that his hands and legs are diffused all over, but when he attains to proper knowledge he will come to that stage, his thinking is contradictory. This means that the individual soul, having become conditioned by material nature, is not supreme. The Supreme is different from the individual soul. The Supreme Lord can extend His hand without limit; the individual soul cannot. In Bhagavad-gita the Lord says that if anyone offers Him a flower, or a fruit, or a little water, He accepts. If the Lord is a far distance away, how can He accept things? This is the omnipotence of the Lord: even though He is situated in His own abode, far, far away from earth, He can extend His hand to accept what anyone offers. That is His potency. In the Brahma-samhita (5.37) it is stated, goloka eva nivasaty: although He is always engaged in pastimes in His transcendental planet, He is all-pervading. The individual soul cannot claim that he is all-pervading. Therefore this verse describes the Supreme Soul, the Personality of Godhead, not the individual soul.

SYNONYMS

sarva—all; indriya—senses; guna—qualities; abhasam—original source; sarva—all; indriya—senses; vivarjitam—being without; asaktam—without attachment; sarva-bhrt—maintainer of everyone; ca—also; eva—certainly; nirgunam—without material qualities; guna-bhoktr—simultaneously master of the gunas; ca—also.

TRANSLATION

The Supersoul is the original source of all senses, yet He is without senses. He is unattached, although He is the maintainer of all living beings. He transcends the modes of nature, and at the same time He is the master of all modes of material nature.

PURPORT

The Supreme Lord, although the source of all the senses of the living entities, doesn't have material senses like they have. Actually, the individual souls have spiritual senses, but in conditioned life they are covered with the material elements, and therefore the sense activities are exhibited through matter. The Supreme Lord's senses are not so covered. His senses are transcendental and are therefore called nirguna. Guna means the material modes, but His senses are without material covering. It should be understood that His senses are not exactly like ours. Although He is the source of all our sensual activities, He has His transcendental senses which are uncontaminated. This is very nicely explained in the Svetasvatara Upanisad (3.19) in the verse apani-pado javano grahita. The Supreme Personality of Godhead has no hands which are materially contaminated, but He has His hands and accepts whatever sacrifice is offered to Him. That is the distinction between the conditioned soul and the Supersoul. He has no material eyes, but He has eyes—otherwise how could He see? He sees everything, past, present and future. He lives within the heart of the living being, and He knows what we have done in the past, what we are doing now, and what is awaiting us in the future. This is also confirmed in Bhagavad-gita: He knows everything, but no one knows Him. It is said that the Supreme Lord has no legs like us, but He can travel throughout space because He has spiritual legs. In other words, the Lord is not impersonal; He has His eyes, legs, hands and everything else, and because we are part and parcel of the Supreme Lord we also have these things. But His hands, legs, eyes and senses are not contaminated by material nature.

Bhagavad-gita also confirms that when the Lord appears He appears as He is by His internal potency. He is not contaminated by the material energy because He is the Lord of material energy. In the Vedic literature we find that His whole embodiment is spiritual. He has His eternal form called sac-cid-ananda-vigraha. He is full of all opulence. He is the proprietor of all wealth and the owner of all energy. He is the most intelligent and is full of knowledge. These are some of the symptoms of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. He is maintainer of all living entities and the witness of all activity. As far as we can understand from Vedic literature, the Supreme Lord is always transcendental. Although we do not see His head, face, hands, or legs, He has them, and when we are elevated to the transcendental situation then we can see the Lord's form. Due to materially contaminated senses, we cannot see His form. Therefore the impersonalists who are still materially affected cannot understand the Personality of Godhead.

TRANSLATION

The Supreme Truth exists both internally and externally, in the moving and nonmoving. He is beyond the power of the material senses to see or to know. Although far, far away, He is also near to all.

PURPORT

In Vedic literature we understand that Narayana, the Supreme Person, is residing both outside and inside of every living entity. He is present in both the spiritual and material worlds. Although He is far, far away, still He is near to us. These are the statements of Vedic literature. Asino duram vrajati sayano yati sarvatah (Katha Upanisad 1.2.21). And because He is always engaged in transcendental bliss, we cannot understand how He is enjoying His full opulence. We cannot see or understand with these material senses. Therefore in the Vedic language it is said that to understand Him our material mind and senses cannot act. But one who has purified his mind and senses by practicing Kṛṣṇa consciousness in devotional service can see Him constantly. It is confirmed in Brahma-saṁhita that the devotee who has developed love for the Supreme God can see Him always, without cessation. And it is confirmed in Bhagavad-gītā (11.54) that He can be seen and understood only by devotional service. Bhaktiā tv anyanyā sakyah.

TRANSLATION

Although the Supersoul appears to be divided, He is never divided. He is situated as one. Although He is the maintainer of every living entity, it is to be understood that He devours and develops all.

PURPORT

The Lord is situated in everyone's heart as the Supersoul. Does this mean that He has become divided? No. Actually, He is one. The example is given of the sun: The sun, at the meridian, is situated in its place. But if one goes for five thousand miles in all directions and asks, "Where is the sun?" everyone will say that it is shining on his head. In the Vedic literature this example is given to show that although He is undivided, He is situated as if divided. Also it is said in Vedic literature that one Visnu is present everywhere by His omnipotence, just as the sun appears in many places to many persons. And the Supreme Lord, although the maintainer of every living entity, devours everything at the time of annihilation. This was confirmed in the Eleventh Chapter when the Lord said that He had come to devour all the warriors assembled at Kuruksetra. He also mentioned that in the form of time He devours also. He is the annihilator, the killer of all. When there is creation, He develops all from their original state, and at the time of annihilation He devours them. The Vedic hymns confirm the fact that He is the origin of all living entities and the rest of all. After creation, everything rests in His omnipotence, and after annihilation everything again returns to rest in Him. These are the confirmations of Vedic hymns. Yato va imani bhutani jayante yena jatani jivanti yat prayanty abhisam-visanti tad brahma tad vijijnasasva (Taittiriya Upanisad 3.1).

TRANSLATION

He is the source of light in all luminous objects. He is beyond the darkness of matter and is unmanifested. He is knowledge, He is the object of knowledge, and He is the goal of knowledge. He is situated in everyone's heart.

PURPORT

The Supersoul, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, is the source of light in all luminous objects like the sun, moon and stars. In the Vedic literature we find that in the spiritual kingdom there is no need of sun or moon because the effulgence of the Supreme Lord is there. In the material world that brahmajyoti, the Lord's spiritual effulgence, is covered by mahat-tattva, the material elements; therefore in this material world we require the assistance of sun, moon, electricity, etc., for light. But in the spiritual world there is no need of such things. It is clearly stated in the Vedic literature that because of His luminous effulgence, everything is illuminated. It is clear, therefore, that His situation is not in the material world. He is situated in the spiritual world, which is far, far away in the spiritual sky. That is also confirmed in the Vedic literature. Aditya-varnam tamasah parastat (Svetasvatara Upanisad 3.8). He is just like the sun, eternally luminous, but He is far, far beyond the darkness of this material world. His knowledge is transcendental. The Vedic literature confirms that Brahman is concentrated transcendental knowledge. To one who is anxious to be transferred to that spiritual world, knowledge is given by the Supreme Lord who is situated in everyone's heart.

One Vedic mantra (Svetasvatara Upanisad 6.18) says, tam ha devam atma–buddhi–prakasam mumuksur vai saranam aham prapadye. One must surrender unto the Supreme Personality of Godhead if he at all wants liberation. As far as the goal of ultimate knowledge is concerned, it is also confirmed in Vedic literature: tam eva viditvati mrtyum eti. "Only by knowing Him can one surpass the boundary of birth and death." (Svetasvatara Upanisad 3.8) He is situated in everyone's heart as the supreme controller. The Supreme has legs and hands distributed everywhere, and this cannot be said of the individual soul. Therefore that there are two knowers of the field of activity, the individual soul and the Supersoul, must be admitted. One's hands and legs are distributed locally, but Kṛṣṇa's hands and legs are distributed everywhere. This is confirmed in the Svetasvatara Upanisad (3.17): sarvasya prabhum isanam sarvasya saranam brhat. That Supreme Personality of Godhead, Supersoul, is the prabhu or master, of all living entities; therefore He is the ultimate shelter of all living entities. So there is no denying the fact that the Supreme Supersoul and the individual soul are always different.

TRANSLATION

Thus the field of activities [the body], knowledge and the knowable have been summarily described by Me. Only My devotees can understand this thoroughly and thus attain to My nature.

PURPORT

The Lord has described in summary the body, knowledge and the knowable. This knowledge is of three things: the knower, the knowable and the process of knowing. Combined, these are called vijñāna, or the science of knowledge. Perfect knowledge can be understood by the unalloyed devotees of the Lord directly. Others are unable to understand. The monists say that at the ultimate stage these three items become one, but the devotees do not accept this. Knowledge and development of knowledge mean understanding oneself in Kṛṣṇa consciousness. We are being led by material consciousness, but as soon as we transfer all consciousness to Kṛṣṇa's activities and realize that Kṛṣṇa is everything, then we attain real knowledge. In other words, knowledge is nothing but the preliminary stage of understanding devotional service perfectly.

TRANSLATION

Material nature and the living entities should be understood to be beginningless. Their transformations and the modes of matter are products of material nature.

PURPORT

By this knowledge, the body, the field of activities and the knowers of the body (both the individual soul and the Supersoul) can be known. The body is the field of activity and is composed of material nature. It is the individual soul which is embodied. Enjoying the activities of the body is the purusa, or the living entity. He is one knower, and the other is the Supersoul. Of course, it is to be understood that both the Supersoul and the individual entity are different manifestations of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. The living entity is in the category of His energy, and the Supersoul is in the category of His personal expansion.

Both material nature and the living entity are eternal. That is to say that they existed before the creation. The material manifestation is from the energy of the Supreme Lord and so also are the living entities, but they are of the superior energy. Both the living entities and material nature existed before this cosmos was manifested. Material nature was absorbed in the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Maha-Visnu, and when it was required, it was manifested by the agency of mahat-tattva. Similarly, the living entities are also in Him, and because they are conditioned, they are averse to serving the Supreme Lord. Thus they are not allowed to enter into the spiritual sky. After the winding up of material nature, these living entities are again given a chance to act in the material world and prepare themselves to enter into the spiritual world. That is the mystery of this material creation. Actually the living entity is originally the spiritual part and parcel of the Supreme Lord, but due to his rebellious nature, he is conditioned within material nature. It really does not matter how these living entities or superior entities of the Supreme Lord have come in contact with material nature. The Supreme Personality of Godhead knows, however, how and why this actually took place. In the scriptures the Lord says that those attracted by this material nature are undergoing a hard struggle for existence. But we should know it with certainty from the descriptions of these few verses that all the transformations and influences of material nature by the three modes are also productions of material nature. All transformations and variety in respect to living entities are due to the body. As far as spirit is concerned, living entities are all the same.

TRANSLATION

Nature is said to be the cause of all material activities and effects, whereas the living entity is the cause of the various sufferings and enjoyments in this world.

PURPORT

The different manifestations of body and senses among the living entities are due to material nature. There are 8,400,000 different species of life, and these varieties are the creation of the material nature. They arise from the different sensual pleasures of the living entity, who thus desires to live in this body or that. When he is put into different bodies, he enjoys different kinds of happiness and distress. His material happiness and distress are due to his body, and not to himself as he is. In his original state there is no doubt of enjoyment; therefore that is his real state. Because of the desire to lord it over material nature, he is in the material world. In the spiritual world there is no such thing. The spiritual world is pure, but in the material world everyone is struggling hard to acquire victims who present different pleasures to the body. It might be more clear to state that this body is the effect of the senses. The senses are instruments for gratifying desire. Now, the sum total—body and instrument senses—are offered by material nature and, as will be clear in the next verse, the living entity is blessed or damned with circumstances according to his past desire and activity. According to one's desires and activities, material nature places one in various residential quarters. The being himself is the cause of his attaining such residential quarters and his attendant enjoyment or suffering. Once placed in some particular kind of body, he comes under the control of nature because the body, being matter, acts according to the laws of nature. At that time, the living entity has no power to change that law. Suppose an entity is put into the body of a dog. As soon as he is put into the body of a dog, he must act like a dog. He cannot act otherwise. And if the living entity is put into the body of a hog, then he is forced to eat stool and act like a hog. Similarly, if the living entity is put into the body of a demigod, he must act according to his body. This is the law of nature. But in all circumstances, the Supersoul is with the individual soul. That is explained in the Vedas (Mundaka Upanisad 3.1.1) as follows: dva suparna sayuja sakhayah. The Supreme Lord is so kind upon the living entity that He always accompanies the individual soul and in all circumstances is present as the Supersoul, or Paramatma.

TRANSLATION

The living entity in material nature thus follows the ways of life, enjoying the three modes of nature. This is due to his association with that material nature. Thus he meets with good and evil amongst various species.

PURPORT

This verse is very important for an understanding of how the living entities transmigrate from one body to another. It is explained in the Second Chapter that the living entity is transmigrating from one body to another just as one changes dress. This change of dress is due to his attachment to material existence. As long as he is captivated by this false manifestation, he has to continue transmigrating from one body to another. Due to his desire to lord it over material nature, he is put into such undesirable circumstances. Under the influence of material desire, the entity is born sometimes as a demigod, sometimes as a man, sometimes as a beast, as a bird, as a worm, as an aquatic, as a saintly man, as a bug. This is going on. And in all cases the living entity thinks himself to be the master of his circumstances, yet he is under the influence of material nature.

How he is put into such different bodies is explained here. It is due to association with the different modes of nature. One has to rise, therefore, above the three material modes and become situated in the transcendental position. That is called Kṛṣṇa consciousness. Unless one is situated in Kṛṣṇa consciousness, his material consciousness will oblige him to transfer from one body to another because he has material desires since time immemorial. But he has to change that conception. That change can be effected only by hearing from authoritative sources. The best example is here: Arjuna is hearing the science of God from Kṛṣṇa. The living entity, if he submits to this hearing process, will lose his long-cherished desire to dominate material nature, and gradually and proportionately, as he reduces his long desire to dominate, he comes to enjoy spiritual happiness. In a Vedic mantra it is said that as he becomes learned in association with the Supreme Personality of Godhead, he proportionately relishes his eternal blissful life.

TRANSLATION

Yet in this body there is another, a transcendental enjoyer who is the Lord, the supreme proprietor, who exists as the overseer and permitter, and who is known as the Supersoul.

PURPORT

It is stated here that the Supersoul, who is always with the individual soul, is the representation of the Supreme Lord. He is not an ordinary living entity. Because the monist philosophers take the knower of the body to be one, they think that there is no difference between the Supersoul and the individual soul. To clarify this, the Lord says that He is the representation of Paramatma in every body. He is different from the individual soul; He is para, transcendental. The individual soul enjoys the activities of a particular field, but the Supersoul is present not as finite enjoyer nor as one taking part in bodily activities, but as the witness, overseer, permitter and supreme enjoyer. His name is Paramatma, not atma, and He is transcendental. It is distinctly clear that the atma and Paramatma are different. The Supersoul, the Paramatma, has legs and hands everywhere, but the individual soul does not. And because He is the Supreme Lord, He is present within to sanction the individual soul's desiring material enjoyment. Without the sanction of the Supreme Soul, the individual soul cannot do anything. The individual is bhukta, or the sustained, and the Lord is bhokta, or the maintainer. There are innumerable living entities, and He is staying in them as a friend.

The fact is that individual living entities are eternally part and parcel of the Supreme Lord, and both of them are very intimately related as friends. But the living entity has the tendency to reject the sanction of the Supreme Lord and act independently in an attempt to dominate nature, and because he has this tendency, he is called the marginal energy of the Supreme Lord. The living entity can be situated either in the material energy or the spiritual energy. As long as he is conditioned by the material energy, the Supreme Lord, as his friend, the Supersoul, stays with him just to get him to return to the spiritual energy. The Lord is always eager to take him back to the spiritual energy, but due to his minute independence, the individual entity is continually rejecting the association of spiritual light. This misuse of independence is the cause of his material strife in the conditioned nature. The Lord, therefore, is always giving instruction from within and from without. From without He gives instructions as stated in Bhagavad-gita, and from within He tries to convince him that his activities in the material field are not conducive to real happiness. "Just give it up and turn your face toward Me. Then you will be happy,"

He says. Thus the intelligent person who places his faith in the Paramatma or the Supreme Personality of Godhead begins to advance toward a blissful eternal life of knowledge.

TRANSLATION

One who understands this philosophy concerning material nature, the living entity and the interaction of the modes of nature is sure to attain liberation. He will not take birth here again, regardless of his present position.

PURPORT

Clear understanding of material nature, the Supersoul, the individual soul and their interrelation makes one eligible to become liberated and turn to the spiritual atmosphere without being forced to return to this material nature. This is the result of knowledge. The purpose of knowledge is to understand distinctly that the living entity has by chance fallen into this material existence. By his personal endeavor in association with authorities, saintly persons and a spiritual master, he has to understand his position and then revert to spiritual consciousness or Kṛṣṇa consciousness by understanding Bhagavad-gītā as it is explained by the Personality of Godhead. Then it is certain that he will never come again into this material existence; he will be transferred into the spiritual world for a blissful eternal life of knowledge.

TRANSLATION

That Supersoul is perceived by some through meditation, by some through the cultivation of knowledge, and by others through working without fruitive desire.

PURPORT

The Lord informs Arjuna that the conditioned souls can be divided into two classes as far as man's search for self-realization is concerned. Those who are atheists, agnostics and skeptics are beyond the sense of spiritual understanding. But there are others who are faithful in their understanding of spiritual life, and they are called workers who have renounced fruitive results. Those who always try to establish the doctrine of monism are also counted amongst the atheists and agnostics. In other words, only the devotees of the Supreme Personality of Godhead are really capable of spiritual understanding because they understand that beyond this material nature there is the spiritual world and the Supreme Personality of Godhead who is expanded as the Paramatma, the Supersoul in everyone, the all-pervading Godhead. Of course there are those who try to understand the Supreme Absolute Truth by cultivation of knowledge, and they can be counted in the second class. The atheistic philosophers analyze this material world into twenty-four elements, and they place the individual soul as the twenty-fifth item. When they are able to understand the nature of the individual soul to be transcendental to the material elements, they are able to understand also that above the individual soul there is the Supreme Personality of Godhead. He is the twenty-sixth element. Thus gradually they also come to the standard of devotional service in Kṛṣṇa consciousness. Those who work without fruitive results are also perfect in their attitude. They are given a chance to advance to the platform of devotional service in Kṛṣṇa consciousness. Here it is stated that there are some people who are pure in consciousness and who try to find out the Supersoul by meditation, and when they discover the Supersoul within themselves, they become transcendently situated. Similarly, there are others who also try to understand the Supreme Soul by cultivation of knowledge, and there are others who cultivate the hatha-yoga system and who try to satisfy the Supreme Personality of Godhead by childish activities.

TRANSLATION

Again there are those who, although not conversant in spiritual knowledge, begin to worship the Supreme Person upon hearing about Him from others. Because of their tendency to hear from authorities, they also transcend the path of birth and death.

PURPORT

This verse is particularly applicable to modern society because in modern society there is practically no education in spiritual matters. Some of the people may appear to be atheistic or agnostic or philosophical, but actually there is no knowledge of philosophy. As for the common man, if he is a good soul, then there is a chance for advancement by hearing. This hearing process is very important. Lord Caitanya, who preached Kṛṣṇa consciousness in the modern world, gave great stress to hearing because if the common man simply hears from authoritative sources, he can progress, especially, according to Lord Caitanya, if he hears the transcendental vibration Hare Kṛṣṇa, Hare Kṛṣṇa, Kṛṣṇa Kṛṣṇa, Hare Hare/ Hare Rama, Hare Rama, Rama Rama, Hare Hare. It is stated, therefore, that all men should take advantage of hearing from realized souls and gradually become able to understand everything. The worship of the Supreme Lord will then undoubtedly take place. Lord Caitanya has said that in this age no one needs to change his position, but one should give up the endeavor to understand the Absolute Truth by speculative reasoning. One should learn to become the servant of those who are in knowledge of the Supreme Lord. If one is fortunate enough to take shelter of a pure devotee, hear from him about self-realization and follow in his footsteps, he will be gradually elevated to the position of a pure devotee. In this verse particularly, the process of hearing is strongly recommended, and this is very appropriate. Although the common man is often not as capable as so-called philosophers, faithful hearing from an authoritative person will help one transcend this material existence and go back to Godhead, back to home.

TRANSLATION

O chief of the Bharatas, whatever you see in existence, both moving and unmoving, is only the combination of the field of activities and the knower of the field.

PURPORT

Both material nature and the living entity, which were existing before the creation of the cosmos, are explained in this verse. Whatever is created is but a combination of the living entity and material nature. There are many manifestations like trees, mountains and hills, which are not moving, and there are many existences which are moving, and all of them are but combinations of material nature and superior nature, the living entity. Without the touch of superior nature, the living entity, nothing can grow. Therefore the relationship between matter and nature is eternally going on, and this combination is effected by the Supreme Lord; therefore He is the controller of both the superior and inferior natures. The material nature is created by Him, and the superior nature is placed in this material nature, and thus all these activities and manifestations take place.

samam—equally; sarvesu—in all; bhutesu—living entities; tisthan—tam—residing; parama—svaram—the Supersoul; vinasyatsu—in the destructible; avinasyantam—not destroyed; yah—anyone; pasyati—sees; sah—he; pasyati—actually sees.

TRANSLATION

One who sees the Supersoul accompanying the individual soul in all bodies, and who understands that neither the soul nor the Supersoul is ever destroyed, actually sees.

PURPORT

Anyone who can see three things—the body, the proprietor of the body, or individual soul, and the friend of the individual soul, combined together by good association—is actually in knowledge. Those who are not associated with the soul's friend are ignorant; they simply see the body, and when the body is destroyed they think that everything is finished, but actually it is not so. After the destruction of the body, both the soul and the Supersoul exist, and they go on eternally in many various moving and unmoving forms. The Sanskrit word paramesvara is sometimes translated as "the individual soul" because the soul is the master of the body, and after the destruction of the body he transfers to another form. In that way he is master. But there are others who interpret this paramesvara to be the Supersoul. In either case, both the Supersoul and the individual soul continue. They are not destroyed. One who can see in this way can actually see what is happening.

SYNONYMS

samam—equally; pasyan—seeing; hi—certainly; sarvatra—everywhere;
samavasthitam—equally situated; isvaram—Supersoul; na—does not; hinasti—degrade; atmana—by the mind; atmanam—the soul; tatah yati—then reaches; param—the

TRANSLATION

One who sees the Supersoul in every living being and equal everywhere does not degrade himself by his mind. Thus he approaches the transcendental destination.

PURPORT

The living entity, by accepting his material existence as just so much suffering, can become situated in his spiritual existence. If one understands that the Supreme is situated in His Paramatma manifestation everywhere, that is, if one can see the presence of the Supreme Personality of Godhead in every living thing, he does not degrade himself, and he therefore gradually advances to the spiritual world. The mind is generally addicted to self-centered processes; but when the mind turns to the Supersoul, one becomes advanced in spiritual understanding.

SYNONYMS

prakṛtya—by material nature; eva—certainly; ca—also; karmani—activities; kriyamanani—engaged in performing; sarvasah—in all respects; yah—anyone who; pasyati—sees; tatha—also; atmanam—himself; akartaram—non-doer; sah—he; pasyati—sees perfectly.

TRANSLATION

One who can see that all activities are performed by the body, which is created of material nature, and sees that the self does nothing, actually sees.

PURPORT

This body is made by material nature under the direction of the Supersoul, and whatever activities are going on in respect to one's body are not his doing. Whatever one is supposed to do, either for happiness or for distress, one is forced to do because of the bodily constitution. The self, however, is outside all these bodily activities. This body is given according to one's past desires. To fulfill desires, one is given the body, with which he acts accordingly. Practically speaking, the body is a machine, designed by the Supreme Lord, to fulfill desires. Because of desires, one is put into difficult circumstances to suffer or to enjoy. This transcendental vision of the living entity, when developed, makes one separate from bodily activities. One who has such a vision is an actual seer.

SYNONYMS

yada—when; bhuta—living entities; prthag—bhavam—separated identities; eka—stham—situated in one; anupasyati—tries to see through authority; tatah eva—thereafter; ca—also; vistaram—expanded; brahma—the Absolute; sampadyate—attains; tada—at that time.

TRANSLATION

When a sensible man ceases to see different identities, which are due to different material bodies, he attains to the Brahman conception. Thus he sees that beings are expanded everywhere.

PURPORT

When one can see that the various bodies of living entities arise due to the different desires of the individual soul and do not actually belong to the soul itself, one actually sees. In the material conception of life, we find someone a demigod, someone a human being, a dog, a cat, etc. This is material vision, not actual vision. This material differentiation is due to a material conception of life. After the destruction of the material body, the spirit soul is one. The spirit soul, due to contact with material nature, gets different types of bodies. When one can see this, he attains spiritual vision; thus being freed from differentiations like man, animal, big, low, etc., one becomes purified in his consciousness and able to develop Kṛṣṇa consciousness in his spiritual identity. How he then sees things will be explained in the next verse.

TRANSLATION

Those with the vision of eternity can see that the soul is transcendental, eternal, and beyond the modes of nature. Despite contact with the material body, O Arjuna, the soul neither does anything nor is entangled.

PURPORT

A living entity appears to be born because of the birth of the material body, but actually the living entity is eternal; he is not born, and in spite of his being situated in a material body, he is transcendental and eternal. Thus he cannot be destroyed. By nature he is full of bliss. He does not engage himself in any material activities; therefore the activities performed due to his contact with material bodies do not entangle him.

TRANSLATION

The sky, due to its subtle nature, does not mix with anything, although it is all–pervading. Similarly, the soul, situated in Brahman vision, does not mix with the body, though situated in that body.

PURPORT

The air enters into water, mud, stool and whatever else is there; still it does not mix with anything. Similarly, the living entity, even though situated in varieties of bodies, is aloof from them due to his subtle nature. Therefore it is impossible to see with the material eyes how the living entity is in contact with this body and how he is out of it after the destruction of the body. No one in science can ascertain this.

TRANSLATION

O son of Bharata, as the sun alone illuminates all this universe, so does the living entity, one within the body, illuminate the entire body by consciousness.

PURPORT

There are various theories regarding consciousness. Here in Bhagavad-gita the example of the sun and the sunshine is given. As the sun is situated in one place, but is illuminating the whole universe, so a small particle of spirit soul, although situated in the heart of this body, is illuminating the whole body by consciousness. Thus consciousness is the proof of the presence of the soul, as sunshine or light is the proof of the presence of the sun. When the soul is present in the body, there is consciousness all over the body, and as soon as the soul has passed from the body, there is no more consciousness. This can be easily understood by any intelligent man. Therefore consciousness is not a production of the combinations of matter. It is the symptom of the living entity. The consciousness of the living entity, although qualitatively one with the supreme consciousness, is not supreme because the consciousness of one particular body does not share that of another body. But the Supersoul, which is situated in all bodies as the friend of the individual soul, is conscious of all bodies. That is the difference between supreme consciousness and individual consciousness.

TRANSLATION

One who knowingly sees this difference between the body and the owner of the body and can understand the process of liberation from this bondage, also attains to the supreme goal.

PURPORT

The purport of this Thirteenth Chapter is that one should know the distinction between the body, the owner of the body, and the Supersoul. A faithful person should at first have some good association to hear of God and thus gradually become enlightened. If one accepts a spiritual master, he can learn to distinguish between matter and spirit, and that becomes the steppingstone for further spiritual realization. A spiritual master teaches his students to get free from the material concept of life by various instructions. For instance, in Bhagavad-gītā we find Kṛṣṇa instructing Arjuna to free him from materialistic considerations.

One can understand that this body is matter; it can be analyzed with its twenty-four elements. That is the gross manifestation. And the subtle manifestation is the mind and psychological effects. And the symptoms of life are the interaction of these features. But over and above this, there is the soul, and there is also the Supersoul. The soul and the Supersoul are two. This material world is working by the conjunction of the soul and the twenty-four material elements. One who can see the constitution of the whole material manifestation as this combination of the soul and material elements and also can see the situation of the Supreme Soul becomes eligible for transfer to the spiritual world. These things are meant for contemplation and for realization, and one should have a complete understanding of this chapter with the help of the spiritual master.

Thus end the Bhaktivedānta Purports to the Thirteenth Chapter of the Srimad Bhagavad-gītā in the matter of Nature, the Enjoyer and Consciousness.

TRANSLATION

The Blessed Lord said: Again I shall declare to you this supreme wisdom, the best of all knowledge, knowing which all the sages have attained the supreme perfection.

PURPORT

From the Seventh Chapter to the end of the Twelfth Chapter, Sri Kṛṣṇa in detail reveals the Absolute Truth, the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Now, the Lord Himself is further enlightening Arjuna. If one understands this chapter through the process of philosophical speculation, he will come to an understanding of devotional service. In the Thirteenth Chapter, it was clearly explained that by humbly developing knowledge one may possibly be freed from material entanglement. It has also been explained that it is due to association with the modes of nature that the living entity is entangled in this material world. Now, in this chapter, the Supreme Personality explains what those modes of nature are, how they act, how they bind and how they give liberation. The knowledge explained in this chapter is proclaimed by the Supreme Lord to be superior to the knowledge given so far in other chapters. By understanding this knowledge, various great sages attained perfection and transferred to the spiritual world. The Lord now explains the same knowledge in a better way. This knowledge is far, far superior to all other processes of knowledge thus far explained, and knowing this many attained perfection. Thus it is expected that one who understands this Fourteenth Chapter will attain perfection.

SYNONYMS

idam—this; jnanam—knowledge; upasritya—taking shelter of; mama—My; sadharmyam—nature; agatah—attained; sarge api—even in the creation; na—never; upajayante—comes in; pralaye—in the annihilation; na—nor; vyathanti—disturbed; ca—also.

TRANSLATION

By becoming fixed in this knowledge, one can attain to the transcendental nature, which is like My own nature. Thus established, one is not born at the time of creation nor disturbed at the time of dissolution.

PURPORT

After acquiring perfect transcendental knowledge, one acquires qualitative equality with the Supreme Personality of Godhead, becoming free from the repetition of birth and death. One does not, however, lose his identity as an individual soul. It is understood from Vedic literature that the liberated souls who have reached the transcendental planets of the spiritual sky always look to the lotus feet of the Supreme Lord, being engaged in His transcendental loving service. So, even after liberation, the devotees do not lose their individual identities.

Generally, in the material world, whatever knowledge we get is contaminated by the three modes of material nature. But knowledge which is not contaminated by the three modes of nature is called transcendental knowledge. As soon as one is situated in that transcendental knowledge, he is on the same platform as that of the Supreme Person. Those who have no knowledge of the spiritual sky hold that after being freed from the material activities of the material form, this spiritual identity becomes formless, without any variegatedness. However, just as there is material variegatedness in this world, so, in the spiritual world, there is also variegatedness. Those in ignorance of this think that spiritual existence is opposed to material variety. But actually, in the spiritual sky, one attains spiritual form. There are spiritual activities, and the spiritual situation is called devotional life. That atmosphere is said to be uncontaminated and there one is equal in quality with the Supreme Lord. To obtain such knowledge, one must develop all the spiritual qualities. One who thus develops the spiritual qualities is not affected either by the creation or the destruction of the material world.

SYNONYMS

mama—My; yonih—source of birth; mahat—the total material existence; brahma—supreme; tasmin—in that; garbham—pregnancy; dadhami—create; aham—I;
sambhavah—possibility; sarva—bhutanam—of all living entities; tatah—thereafter;
bhavati—becomes; bharata—O son of Bharata.

TRANSLATION

The total material substance, called Brahman, is the source of birth, and it is that Brahman that I impregnate, making possible the births of all living beings, O son of Bharata.

PURPORT

This is an explanation of the world: everything that takes place is due to the combination of ksetra and ksetra-jna, the body and the spirit soul. This combination of material nature and the living entity is made possible by the Supreme God Himself. The mahat-tattva is the total cause of the total cosmic manifestation, and because in the total substance of the material cause there are three modes of nature, it is sometimes called Brahman. The Supreme Personality impregnates that total substance, and thus innumerable universes become possible. This total material substance, the mahat-tattva, is described as Brahman in the Vedic literature (Mundaka Upanisad 1.1.19): tasmad etad brahma nama-rupam annam ca jayate. Into that Brahman the seeds of the living entities are impregnated by the Supreme Person. The twenty-four elements, beginning from earth, water, fire and air, are all material energy, called mahad brahma, or the great Brahman, the material nature. As is explained in the Seventh Chapter, beyond this there is another, superior nature—the living entity. In material nature the superior nature is mixed by the will of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, and thereafter all living entities are born of this material nature.

The scorpion lays its eggs in piles of rice, and sometimes it is said that the scorpion is born out of rice. But the rice is not the cause of the scorpion. Actually, the eggs were laid by the mother. Similarly, material nature is not the cause of the birth of the living entities. The seed is given by the Supreme Personality of Godhead, and they only seem to come out as products of material nature. Thus every living entity, according to his past activities, has a different body, created by this material nature, and the entity can enjoy or suffer according to his past deeds. The Lord is the cause of all the manifestations of living entities in this material world.

TRANSLATION

It should be understood that all species of life, O son of Kunti, are made possible by birth in this material nature, and that I am the seed—giving father.

PURPORT

In this verse it is clearly explained that the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Kṛṣṇa, is the original father of all living entities. The living entities are combinations of the material nature and the spiritual nature. Such living entities are seen not only on this planet, but in every planet, even in the highest, where Brahma is situated. Everywhere there are living entities; within the earth there are living entities, even within water and within fire. All these appearances are due to the mother, material nature, and Kṛṣṇa's seed—giving process. The purport is that the living entities, being impregnated in the material world, come out in various forms at the time of creation according to their past deeds.

SYNONYMS

sattvam—mode of goodness; rajah—mode of passion; tamah—mode of ignorance; iti—thus; gunah—qualities; prakrti—material nature; sambhavah—produced of; nibadhnanti—does condition; maha-baho—O mighty-armed one; dehe—in this body; dehinam—the living entity; avyayam—eternal.

TRANSLATION

Material nature consists of the three modes—goodness, passion and ignorance. When the living entity comes in contact with nature, he becomes conditioned by these modes.

PURPORT

The living entity, because he is transcendental, has nothing to do with this material nature. Still, because he has become conditioned by the material world, he is acting under the spell of the three modes of material nature. Because living entities have different kinds of bodies, in terms of the different aspects of nature, they are induced to act according to that nature. This is the cause of the varieties of happiness and distress.

TEXT 6

tatra sattvam nirmalatvat

prakasakam anamayam

sukha-sangena badhnati

SYNONYMS

tatra—thereafter; sattvam—mode of goodness; nirmalatvat—being purest in the material world; prakasakam—illuminating; anamayam—without any sinful reaction; sukha—happiness; sangena—association; badhnati—conditions; jnana—knowledge; sangena—association; ca—also; anagha—O sinless one.

TRANSLATION

O sinless one, the mode of goodness, being purer than the others, is illuminating, and it frees one from all sinful reactions. Those situated in that mode develop knowledge, but they become conditioned by the concept of happiness.

PURPORT

The living entities conditioned by material nature are of various types. One is happy, another is very active, and another is helpless. All these types of psychological manifestations are causes of the entities' conditioned status in nature. How they are differently conditioned is explained in this section of Bhagavad-gita. The mode of goodness is first considered. The effect of developing the mode of goodness in the material world is that one becomes wiser than those otherwise conditioned. A man in the mode of goodness is not so much affected by material miseries, and he has a sense of advancement in material knowledge. The representative type is the brahmana, who is supposed to be situated in the mode of goodness. This sense of happiness is due to understanding that, in the mode of goodness, one is more or less free from sinful reactions. Actually, in the Vedic literature it is said that the mode of goodness means greater knowledge and a greater sense of happiness.

The difficulty here is that when a living entity is situated in the mode of goodness, he becomes conditioned to feel that he is advanced in knowledge and is better than others. In this way he becomes conditioned. The best examples are the scientist and philosopher: each is very proud of his knowledge, and because they generally improve their living conditions, they feel a sort of material happiness. This sense of advanced happiness in conditioned life makes them bound by the mode of goodness of material nature. As such, they are attracted toward working in the mode of goodness, and, as long as they have an attraction for working in that way, they have to take some type of body in the modes of nature. Thus there is no likelihood of liberation, or of being transferred to the spiritual world. Repeatedly one may become a philosopher, a scientist or a poet, and repeatedly become entangled in the same disadvantages of birth and death. But, due to the illusion of the material energy, one thinks that that sort of life is pleasant.

rajah—the mode of passion; raga—atmakam—born of desire or lust; viddhi—know; trsna—with hankering; sanga—association; samudbhavam—produced of; tat—that; nibadhnati—binds; kaunteya—O son of Kunti; karma—sangena—by association with fruitive activity; dehinam—the embodied.

TRANSLATION

The mode of passion is born of unlimited desires and longings, O son of Kunti, and because of this the embodied living entity is bound to material fruitive actions.

PURPORT

The mode of passion is characterized by the attraction between man and woman. Woman has attraction for man, and man has attraction for woman. This is called the mode of passion. And, when the mode of passion is increased, one develops the hankering for material enjoyment. He wants to enjoy sense gratification. For sense gratification, a man in the mode of passion wants some honor in society, or in the nation, and he wants to have a happy family, with nice children, wife, and house. These are the products of the mode of passion. As long as one is hankering after these things, he has to work very hard. Therefore it is clearly stated here that he becomes associated with the fruits of his activities and thus becomes bound by such activities. In order to please his wife, children and society and to keep up his prestige, one has to work. Therefore, the whole material world is more or less in the mode of passion. Modern civilization is considered to be advanced in the standards of the mode of passion. Formerly, the advanced condition was considered to be in the mode of goodness. If there is no liberation for those in the mode of goodness, what to speak of those who are entangled in the mode of passion?

TEXT 8

tamah—mode of ignorance; tu—but; ajnana—jam—products of ignorance; viddhi—knowing; mohanam—delusion; sarva—dehinam—of all embodied beings;
pramada—madness; alasya—indolence; nidrabhih—sleep; tat—that;
nibadhnati—binds; bharata—O son of Bharata.

TRANSLATION

O son of Bharata, the mode of darkness causes the delusion of all living entities. The result of this mode is madness, indolence and sleep, which bind the conditioned soul.

PURPORT

In this verse the specific application of the word tu is very significant. This means that the mode of ignorance is a very peculiar qualification of the embodied soul. This mode of ignorance is just the opposite of the mode of goodness. In the mode of goodness, by development of knowledge, one can understand what is what, but the mode of ignorance is just the opposite. Everyone under the spell of the mode of ignorance becomes mad, and a madman cannot understand what is what. Instead of making advancement, one becomes degraded. The definition of the mode of ignorance is stated in the Vedic literature. Vastu—yathatmya—jnanavarakam viparyaya—jnana—janakam tamah: under the spell of ignorance, one cannot understand a thing as it is. For example, everyone can see that his grandfather has died, and therefore he will also die; man is mortal. The children that he conceives will also die. So death is sure. Still, people are madly accumulating money and working very hard all day and night, not caring for the eternal spirit. This is madness. In their madness, they are very reluctant to make advancement in spiritual understanding. Such people are very lazy. When they are invited to associate for spiritual understanding, they are not much interested. They are not even active like the man who is controlled by the mode of passion. Thus another symptom of one embedded in the mode of ignorance is that he sleeps more than is required. Six hours of sleep is sufficient, but a man in the mode of ignorance sleeps at least ten or twelve hours a day. Such a man appears to be always dejected and is addicted to intoxicants and sleeping. These are the symptoms of a person conditioned by the mode of ignorance.

TRANSLATION

The mode of goodness conditions one to happiness, passion conditions him to fruits of action, and ignorance to madness.

PURPORT

A person in the mode of goodness is satisfied by his work or intellectual pursuit, just as a philosopher, scientist, or educator may be engaged in a particular field of knowledge and may be satisfied in that way. A man in the modes of passion and goodness may be engaged in fruitive activity, he owns as much as he can and spends for good causes. Sometimes he tries to open hospitals, give to charity institutions, etc. These are the signs of one in the mode of passion. And the mode of ignorance covers knowledge. In the mode of ignorance, whatever one does is neither good for him nor for anyone.

TRANSLATION

Sometimes the mode of passion becomes prominent, defeating the mode of goodness, O son of Bharata. And sometimes the mode of goodness defeats passion, and at other times the mode of ignorance defeats goodness and passion. In this way there is always competition for supremacy.

PURPORT

When the mode of passion is prominent, the modes of goodness and ignorance are defeated. When the mode of goodness is prominent, passion and ignorance are defeated. And when the mode of ignorance is prominent, passion and goodness are defeated. This competition is always going on. Therefore, one who is actually intent on advancing in Kṛṣṇa consciousness has to transcend these three modes. The prominence of some certain mode of nature is manifested in one's dealings, in his activities, in eating, etc. All this will be explained in later chapters. But if one wants, he can develop, by practice, the mode of goodness and thus defeat the modes of ignorance and passion. One can similarly develop the mode of passion and defeat goodness and ignorance. Or, one can develop the mode of ignorance and defeat goodness and passion. Although there are these three modes of material nature, if one is determined, he can be blessed by the mode of goodness, and by transcending the mode of goodness he can be situated in pure goodness, which is called the vasudeva state, a state in which one can understand the science of God. By the manifestation of particular activities, it can be understood in what mode of nature one is situated.

TRANSLATION

The manifestations of the mode of goodness can be experienced when all the gates of the body are illuminated by knowledge.

PURPORT

There are nine gates in the body: two eyes, two ears, two nostrils, the mouth, the genitals and the anus. In every gate, when the symptom of goodness is illuminated, it should be understood that one has developed the mode of goodness. In the mode of goodness, one can see things in the right position, one can hear things in the right position, and one can taste things in the right position. One becomes cleansed inside and outside. In every gate there is development of the symptoms of happiness, and that is the position of goodness.

TRANSLATION

O chief of the Bharatas, when there is an increase in the mode of passion, the symptoms of great attachment, uncontrollable desire, hankering, and intense endeavor develop.

PURPORT

One in the mode of passion is never satisfied with the position he has already acquired; he hankers to increase his position. If he wants to construct a residential house, he tries his best to have a palatial house, as if he would be able to reside in that house eternally. And he develops a great hankering for sense gratification. There is no end to sense gratification. He always wants to remain with his family and in his house and to continue the process of sense gratification. There is no cessation of this. All these symptoms should be understood as characteristic of the mode of passion.

aprakasaḥ—darkness; apravṛttih—inactivity; ca—and; pramadaḥ—madness; mohah—illusion; eva—certainly; ca—also; tamasi—of the mode of ignorance; etani—these; jayante—are manifested; vivṛddhe—is developed; kuru-nandana—O son of Kuru.

TRANSLATION

O son of Kuru, when there is an increase in the mode of ignorance, madness, illusion, inertia and darkness are manifested.

PURPORT

When there is no illumination, knowledge is absent. One in the mode of ignorance does not work by a regulative principle; he wants to act whimsically for no purpose. Even though he has the capacity to work, he makes no endeavor. This is called illusion. Although consciousness is going on, life is inactive. These are the symptoms of one in the mode of ignorance.

TRANSLATION

When one dies in the mode of goodness, he attains to the pure higher planets.

PURPORT

One in goodness attains higher planetary systems, like Brahmaloḥa or Janoloka, and there enjoys godly happiness. The word amalan is significant; it means free from the modes of passion and ignorance. There are impurities in the material world, but the mode of goodness is the purest form of existence in the material world. There are different kinds of planets for different kinds of living entities. Those who die in the mode of goodness are elevated to the planets where great sages and great devotees live.

SYNONYMS

rajasi—in passion; pralayam—dissolution; gatva—attaining; karma—sangisu—in the association of fruitive activities; jayate—takes birth; tatha—thereafter; pralinah—being dissolved; tamasi—in ignorance; mudha—animal; yonisu—species; jayate—take birth.

TRANSLATION

When one dies in the mode of passion, he takes birth among those engaged in fruitive activities; and when he dies in the mode of ignorance, he takes birth in the animal kingdom.

PURPORT

Some people have the impression that when the soul reaches the platform of human life, it never goes down again. This is incorrect. According to this verse, if one develops the mode of ignorance, after his death he is degraded to an animal form of life. From there one has to again elevate himself, by an evolutionary process, to come again to the human form of life. Therefore, those who are actually serious about human life should take to the mode of goodness and in good association transcend the modes and become situated in Kṛṣṇa consciousness. This is the aim of human life. Otherwise, there is no guarantee that the human being will again attain to the human status.

TRANSLATION

By acting in the mode of goodness, one becomes purified. Works done in the mode of passion result in distress, and actions performed in the mode of ignorance result in foolishness.

PURPORT

By pious activities in the mode of goodness one is purified; therefore the sages, who are free from all illusion, are situated in happiness. Similarly activities in the mode of passion are simply miserable. Any activity for material happiness is bound to be defeated. If, for example, one wants to have a skyscraper, so much human misery has to be undergone before a big skyscraper can be built. The financier has to take much trouble to earn a mass of wealth, and those who are slaving to construct the building have to render physical toil. The miseries are there. Thus Bhagavad-gita says that in any activity performed under the spell of the mode of passion, there is definitely great misery. There may be a little so-called mental happiness—"I have this house or this money"—but this is not actual happiness.

As far as the mode of ignorance is concerned, the performer is without knowledge, and therefore all his activities result in present misery, and afterwards he will go on toward animal life. Animal life is always miserable, although, under the spell of the illusory energy, maya, the animals do not understand this. Slaughtering poor animals is also due to the mode of ignorance. The animal killers do not know that in the future the animal will have a body suitable to kill them. That is the law of nature. In human society, if one kills a man he has to be hanged. That is the law of the state. Because of ignorance, people do not perceive that there is a complete state controlled by the Supreme Lord. Every living creature is a son of the Supreme Lord, and He does not tolerate even an ant's being killed. One has to pay for it. So, indulgence in animal killing for the taste of the tongue is the grossest kind of ignorance. A human being has no need to kill animals because God has supplied so many nice things. If one indulges in meat-eating anyway, it is to be understood that he is acting in ignorance and is making his future very dark. Of all kinds of animal killing, the killing of cows is most vicious because the cow gives us all kinds of pleasure by supplying milk. Cow slaughter is an act of the grossest type of ignorance. In the Vedic literature (Rg Veda 9.4.64) the words gobhih prinita-matsaram indicate that one who, being fully satisfied by milk, is desirous of killing the cow is, in the grossest ignorance. There is also a prayer in the Vedic literature that states:

namo brahmanya-devaya

govindaya namo namah

"My Lord, You are the well-wisher of the cows and the brahmanas, and You are the well-wisher of the entire human society and world." (Visnu Purana 1.19.65) The purport is that special mention is given in that prayer for the protection of the cows and the brahmanas. Brahmanas are the symbol of spiritual education, and cows are the symbol of the most valuable food; these two living creatures, the brahmanas and the cows, must be given all protection—that is real advancement of civilization. In modern human society, spiritual knowledge is neglected, and cow killing is encouraged. It is to be understood, then, that human society is advancing in the wrong direction and is clearing the path to its own condemnation. A civilization which guides the citizens to become animals in their next lives is certainly not a human civilization. The present human civilization is, of course, grossly misled by the modes of passion and ignorance. It is a very dangerous age, and all nations should take care to provide the easiest process, Kṛṣṇa consciousness, to save humanity from the greatest danger.

TRANSLATION

From the mode of goodness, real knowledge develops; from the mode of passion, greed develops; and from the mode of ignorance develop foolishness, madness and illusion.

PURPORT

Since the present civilization is not very congenial to the living entities, Kṛṣṇa consciousness is recommended. Through Kṛṣṇa consciousness, society will develop the mode of goodness. When the mode of goodness is developed, people will see things as they are. In the mode of ignorance, people are just like animals and cannot see things clearly. In the mode of ignorance, for example, they do not see that by killing one animal they are taking a chance of being killed by the same animal in the next life. Because people have no education in actual knowledge, they become irresponsible. To stop this irresponsibility, education for developing the mode of goodness of the people in general must be there. When they are actually educated in the mode of goodness, they will become sober, in full knowledge of things as they are. Then people will be happy and prosperous. Even if the majority of the people aren't happy and prosperous, if a certain percentage of the population develops Kṛṣṇa consciousness and becomes situated in the mode of goodness, then there is the possibility for peace and prosperity all over the world. Otherwise, if the world is devoted to the modes of passion and ignorance, there can be no peace or prosperity. In the mode of passion, people become greedy, and their hankering for sense enjoyment has no limit. One can see that even if one has enough money and adequate arrangement for sense gratification, there is neither happiness nor peace of mind. That is not possible because one is situated in the mode of passion. If one wants happiness at all, his money will not help him; he has to elevate himself to the mode of goodness by practicing Kṛṣṇa consciousness. One engaged in the mode of passion is not only mentally unhappy, but his profession and occupation are also very troublesome. He has to devise so many plans and schemes to acquire enough money to maintain his status quo. This is all miserable. In the mode of ignorance, people become mad. Being distressed by their circumstances, they take shelter of intoxication, and thus they sink further into ignorance. Their future in life is very dark.

TRANSLATION

Those situated in the mode of goodness gradually go upward to the higher planets; those in the mode of passion live on the earthly planets; and those in the mode of ignorance go down to the hellish worlds.

PURPORT

In this verse the results of actions in the three modes of nature are more explicitly set forth. There is an upper planetary system, consisting of the heavenly planets, where everyone is highly elevated. According to the degree of development of the mode of goodness, the living entity can be transferred to various planets in this system. The highest planet is Satyaloka, or Brahmaloka, where the prime person of this universe, Lord Brahma, resides. We have seen already that we can hardly calculate the wondrous condition of life in Brahmaloka, but the highest condition of life, the mode of goodness, can bring us to this.

The mode of passion is mixed. It is in the middle, between the modes of goodness and ignorance. A person is not always pure, but even if he should be purely in the mode of passion, he will simply remain on this earth as a king or a rich man. But because there are mixtures, one can also go down. People on this earth, in the mode of passion or ignorance, cannot forcibly approach the higher planets by machine. In the mode of passion, there is also the chance of becoming mad in the next life.

The lowest quality, the mode of ignorance, is described here as abominable. The result of developing ignorance is very, very risky. It is the lowest quality in material nature.

Beneath the human level there are eight million species of life: birds, beasts, reptiles, trees, etc., and, according to the development of the mode of ignorance, people are brought down to these abominable conditions. The word tamasah is very significant here. Tamasah indicates those who stay continually in the mode of ignorance without rising to a higher mode. Their future is very dark.

There is an opportunity for men in the modes of ignorance and passion to be elevated to the mode of goodness, and that system is called Kṛṣṇa consciousness. But one who does not take advantage of this opportunity will certainly continue in the lower modes.

TRANSLATION

When you see that there is nothing beyond these modes of nature in all activities and that the Supreme Lord is transcendental to all these modes, then you can know My spiritual nature.

PURPORT

One can transcend all the activities of the modes of material nature simply by understanding them properly by learning from the proper souls. The real spiritual master is Kṛṣṇa, and He is imparting this spiritual knowledge to Arjuna. Similarly, it is from those who are fully in Kṛṣṇa consciousness that one has to learn this science of activities in terms of the modes of nature. Otherwise, one's life will be misdirected. By the instruction of a bona fide spiritual master, a living entity can know of his spiritual position, his material body, his senses, how he is entrapped, and how he is under the spell of the material modes of nature. He is helpless, being in the grip of these modes, but when he can see his real position, then he can attain to the transcendental platform, having the scope for spiritual life. Actually, the living entity is not the performer of different activities. He is forced to act because he is situated in a particular type of body, conducted by some particular mode of material nature. Unless one has the help of spiritual authority, he cannot understand in what position he is actually situated. With the association of a bona fide spiritual master, he can see his real position, and, by such an understanding, he can become fixed in full Kṛṣṇa consciousness. A man in Kṛṣṇa consciousness is not controlled by the spell of the material modes of nature. It has already been stated in the Seventh Chapter that one who has surrendered to Kṛṣṇa is relieved from the activities of material nature. Therefore for one who is able to see things as they are, the influence of material nature gradually ceases.

TRANSLATION

When the embodied being is able to transcend these three modes, he can become free from birth, death, old age and their distresses and can enjoy nectar even in this life.

PURPORT

How one can stay in the transcendental position, even in this body, in full Kṛṣṇa consciousness, is explained in this verse. The Sanskrit word dehi means "embodied." Although one is within this material body, by his advancement in spiritual knowledge he can be free from the influence of the modes of nature. He can enjoy the happiness of spiritual life even in this body because, after leaving this body, he is certainly going to the spiritual sky. But even in this body he can enjoy spiritual happiness. In other words, devotional service in Kṛṣṇa consciousness is the sign of liberation from material entanglement, and this will be explained in the Eighteenth Chapter. When one is freed from the influence of the modes of material nature, he enters into devotional service.

TRANSLATION

Arjuna inquired: O my Lord, by what symptoms is one known who is transcendental to those modes? What is his behavior? And how does he transcend the modes of nature?

PURPORT

In this verse, Arjuna's questions are very appropriate. He wants to know the symptoms of a person who has already transcended the material modes. He first inquires of the symptoms of such a transcendental person. How can one understand that he has already transcended the influence of the modes of material nature? The second question asks how he lives and what his activities are. Are they regulated or nonregulated? Then Arjuna inquires of the means by which he can attain the transcendental nature. That is very important. Unless one knows the direct means by which one can be situated always transcendently, there is no possibility of showing the symptoms. So all these questions put by Arjuna are very important, and the Lord answers them.

TRANSLATION

The Blessed Lord said: He who does not hate illumination, attachment and delusion when they are present, nor longs for them when they disappear; who is seated like one unconcerned, being situated beyond these material reactions of the modes of nature, who remains firm, knowing that the modes alone are active; who regards alike pleasure and pain, and looks on a lump of earth, a stone and a piece of gold with an equal eye; who is wise and holds praise and blame to be the same; who is unchanged in honor and dishonor, who treats friend and foe alike, who has abandoned all fruitive undertakings—such a man is said to have transcended the modes of nature.

PURPORT

Arjuna submitted three different questions, and the Lord answers them one after another. In these verses, Kṛṣṇa first indicates that a person transcendently situated neither envies anyone nor hankers for anything. When a living entity stays in this material world embodied by the material body, it is to be understood that he is under the control of one of the three modes of material nature. When he is actually out of the body, then he is out of the clutches of the material modes of nature. But as long as he is not out of the material body, he should be neutral. He should engage himself in the devotional service of the Lord so that his identity with the material body will automatically be forgotten. When one is conscious of the material body, he acts only for sense gratification, but when one transfers the consciousness to Kṛṣṇa, sense gratification automatically stops. One does not need this material body, and he does not need to accept the dictations of the material body. The qualities of the material modes in the body will act, but as spirit soul the self is aloof from such activities. How does he become aloof? He does not desire to enjoy the body, nor does he desire to get out of it. Thus transcendently situated, the devotee becomes automatically free. He need not try to become free from the influence of the modes of material nature.

The next question concerns the dealings of a transcendently situated person. The materially situated person is affected by so-called honor and dishonor offered to the body, but the transcendently situated person is not affected by such false honor and dishonor. He performs his duty in Kṛṣṇa consciousness and does not mind whether a man honors or dishonors him. He accepts things that are favorable for his duty in Kṛṣṇa consciousness, otherwise he has no necessity of anything material, either a stone or gold. He takes everyone as his dear friend who helps him in his execution of Kṛṣṇa consciousness, and he does not hate his so-called enemy. He is equally disposed and sees everything on an equal level because he knows perfectly well that he has nothing to do with material existence. Social and political issues do not affect him because he knows the situation of temporary upheavals and disturbances. He does not attempt anything for his own sake. He can attempt anything for Kṛṣṇa, but for his personal self he does not attempt anything. By such behavior one becomes actually transcendently situated.

TRANSLATION

One who engages in full devotional service, who does not fall down in any circumstance, at once transcends the modes of material nature and thus comes to the level of Brahman.

PURPORT

This verse is a reply to Arjuna's third question: What is the means of attaining to the transcendental position? As explained before, the material world is acting under the spell of the modes of material nature. One should not be disturbed by the activities of the modes of nature; instead of putting his consciousness into such activities, he may transfer his consciousness to Krsna activities. Krsna activities are known as bhakti-yoga—always acting for Krsna. This includes not only Krsna, but His different plenary expansions such as Rama and Narayana. He has innumerable expansions. One who is engaged in the service of any of the forms of Krsna, or of His plenary expansions, is considered to be transcendently situated. One should also note that all the forms of Krsna are fully transcendental, blissful, full of knowledge and eternal. Such personalities of Godhead are omnipotent and omniscient, and they possess all transcendental qualities. So, if one engages himself in the service of Krsna or His plenary expansions with unflinching determination, although these modes of material nature are very difficult to overcome, he can overcome them easily. This has already been explained in the Seventh Chapter. One who surrenders unto Krsna at once surmounts the influence of the modes of material nature. To be in Kṛṣṇa consciousness or in devotional service means to acquire equality with Kṛṣṇa. The Lord says that His nature is eternal, blissful and full of knowledge, and the living entities are part and parcel of the Supreme, as gold particles are part of a gold mine. Thus the living entity's spiritual position is as good as gold, as good as Kṛṣṇa in quality. The difference of individuality continues, otherwise there is no question of bhakti–yoga. Bhakti–yoga means that the Lord is there, the devotee is there and the activity of exchange of love between the Lord and the devotee is there. Therefore the individuality of two persons is present in the Supreme Personality of Godhead and the individual person, otherwise there would be no meaning to bhakti–yoga. If one is not situated in the same transcendental position with the Lord, one cannot serve the Supreme Lord. To be a personal assistant to a king, one must acquire the qualifications. Thus the qualification is to become Brahman, or freed from all material contamination. It is said in the Vedic literature, brahmaiva san brahmapy eti. One can attain the Supreme Brahman by becoming Brahman. This means that one must qualitatively become one with Brahman. By attainment of Brahman, one does not lose his eternal Brahman identity as an individual soul.

TRANSLATION

And I am the basis of impersonal Brahman, which is the constitutional position of ultimate happiness, and which is immortal, imperishable and eternal.

PURPORT

The constitution of Brahman is immortality, imperishability, eternity, and happiness. Brahman is the beginning of transcendental realization. Paramatma, the Supersoul, is the middle, the second stage in transcendental realization, and the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the ultimate realization of the Absolute Truth. Therefore, both Paramatma and the impersonal Brahman are within the Supreme Person. It is explained in the Seventh Chapter that material nature is the manifestation of the inferior energy of the Supreme Lord. The Lord impregnates the inferior material nature with fragments of the superior nature, and that is the spiritual touch in the material nature. When a living entity conditioned by this material nature begins the cultivation of spiritual knowledge, he elevates himself from the position of material existence and gradually rises up to the Brahman conception of the Supreme. This attainment of the Brahman conception of life is the first stage in self-realization. At this stage the Brahman-realized person is transcendental to the material position, but he is not actually perfect in Brahman realization. If he wants, he can continue to stay in the Brahman position and then gradually rise up to Paramatma realization and then to the realization of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. There are many examples of this in Vedic literature. The four Kumaras were situated first in the impersonal Brahman conception of truth, but then they gradually rose to the platform of devotional service. One who cannot elevate himself beyond the impersonal conception of Brahman runs the risk of falling down. In Srimad-Bhagavatam it is stated that although a person may rise to the stage of impersonal Brahman, without going further, with no information of the Supreme Person, his intelligence is not perfectly clear. Therefore, in spite of being raised to the Brahman platform, there is the chance of falling down if one is not engaged in the devotional service of the Lord. In the Vedic language it is also said, raso vai sah, rasam hy evayam labdhvanandi bhavati: "When one understands the Personality of Godhead, the reservoir of pleasure, Kṛṣṇa, he actually becomes transcendently blissful." (Taittiriya Upanisad 2.7.1) The Supreme Lord is full in six opulences, and when a devotee approaches Him, there is an exchange of these six opulences. The servant of the king enjoys on an almost equal level with the king. And so, eternal happiness, imperishable happiness, and eternal life accompany devotional service. Therefore, realization of Brahman, or eternity, or imperishability is included in devotional service. This is already possessed by a person who is engaged in devotional service.

The living entity, although Brahman by nature, has the desire to lord it over the material world, and due to this he falls down. In his constitutional position, a living entity is above the three modes of material nature, but association with material nature entangles him in the different modes of material nature, goodness, passion and ignorance. Due to the association of these three modes, his desire to dominate the material world is there. By engagement in devotional service in full Kṛṣṇa consciousness, he is immediately situated in the transcendental position, and his unlawful desire to control material nature is removed. Therefore the process of devotional service begins with hearing, chanting, remembering—the prescribed nine methods for realizing devotional service—should be practiced in the association of devotees. Gradually, by such association, by the influence of the spiritual master, one's material desire to dominate is removed, and one becomes firmly situated in the Lord's transcendental loving service. This method is prescribed from the twenty-second to the last verse of this chapter. Devotional service to the Lord is very simple: one should always engage in the service of the Lord, should eat the remnants of foodstuffs offered to the Deity, smell the flowers offered to the lotus feet of the Lord, see the places where the Lord had His transcendental pastimes, read of the different activities of the Lord, His reciprocation of love with His devotees, chant always the transcendental vibration Hare Kṛṣṇa, Hare Kṛṣṇa, Kṛṣṇa Kṛṣṇa, Hare Hare/ Hare Rama, Hare Rama, Rama Rama, Hare Hare, and observe the fasting days commemorating the appearances and disappearances of the Lord and His devotees. By following such a process one becomes completely detached from all material activities. One who can thus situate himself in the brahma-jyoti is equal to the Supreme Personality of Godhead in quality.

Thus end the Bhaktivedanta Purports to the Fourteenth Chapter of the Srimad Bhagavad-gita in the matter of the Three Modes of Material Nature.

TRANSLATION

The Blessed Lord said: There is a banyan tree which has its roots upward and its branches down and whose leaves are the Vedic hymns. One who knows this tree is the knower of the Vedas.

PURPORT

After the discussion of the importance of bhakti–yoga, one may question, "What about the Vedas?" It is explained in this chapter that the purpose of Vedic study is to understand Kṛṣṇa. Therefore one who is in Kṛṣṇa consciousness, who is engaged in devotional service, already knows the Vedas.

The entanglement of this material world is compared here to a banyan tree. For one who is engaged in fruitive activities, there is no end to the banyan tree. He wanders from one branch to another, to another, to another. The tree of this material world has no end, and for one who is attached to this tree, there is no possibility of liberation. The Vedic hymns, meant for elevating oneself, are called the leaves of this tree. This tree's roots grow upward because they begin from where Brahma is located, the topmost planet of this universe. If one can understand this indestructible tree of illusion, then one can get out of it.

This process of extrication should be understood. In the previous chapters it has been explained that there are many processes by which to get out of the material entanglement. And, up to the Thirteenth Chapter, we have seen that devotional service to the Supreme Lord is the best way. Now, the basic principle of devotional service is detachment from material activities and attachment to the transcendental service of the Lord. The process of breaking attachment to the material world is discussed in the beginning of this chapter. The root of this material existence grows upward. This means that it begins from the total material substance, from the topmost planet of the universe. From there, the whole universe is expanded, with so many branches, representing the various planetary systems. The fruits represent the results of the living entities' activities, namely, religion, economic development, sense gratification and liberation.

Now, there is no ready experience in this world of a tree situated with its branches down and its roots upward, but there is such a thing. That tree can be found beside a reservoir of water. We can see that the trees on the bank reflect upon the water with their branches down and roots up. In other words, the tree of this material world is only a reflection of the real tree of the spiritual world. This reflection of the spiritual world is situated on desire, just as a tree's reflection is situated on water. Desire is the cause of things being situated in this reflected material light. One who wants to get out of this material existence must know this tree thoroughly through analytical study. Then he can cut off his relationship with it.

This tree, being the reflection of the real tree, is an exact replica. Everything is there in the spiritual world. The impersonalists take Brahma to be the root of this material tree, and from the root, according to Sankhya philosophy, come prakṛti, puruṣa, then the three guṇas, then the five gross elements (panca-maha-bhuta), then the ten senses (dasendriya), mind, etc. In this way they divide up the whole material world into twenty-four elements. If Brahma is the center of all manifestations, then this material world is a manifestation of the center by 180 degrees, and the other 180 degrees constitute the spiritual world. The material world is the perverted reflection, so the spiritual world must have the same variegatedness, but in reality. The prakṛti is the external energy of the Supreme Lord, and the puruṣa is the Supreme Lord Himself, and that is explained in Bhagavad-gīta. Since this manifestation is material, it is temporary. A reflection is temporary, for it is sometimes seen and sometimes not seen. But the origin from whence the reflection is reflected is eternal. The material reflection of the real tree has to be cut off. When it is said that a person knows the Vedas, it is assumed that he knows how to cut off attachment to this material world. If one knows that process, he actually knows the Vedas. One who is attracted by the ritualistic formulas of the Vedas is attracted by the beautiful green leaves of the tree. He does not exactly know the purpose of the Vedas. The purpose of the Vedas, as disclosed by the Personality of Godhead Himself, is to cut down this reflected tree and attain the real tree of the spiritual world.

SYNONYMS

adhah—downward; ca—and; urdhvam—upward; prasrtah—extended; tasya—its; sakhah—branches; guna—modes of material nature; pravreddhah—developed; visaya—sense objects; pravalah—twigs; adhah—downward; ca—and; mulani—roots; anusantatani—extended; karma—according to work; anubandhini—bound; manusya-loke—in the world of human society.

TRANSLATION

The branches of this tree extend downward and upward, nourished by the three modes of material nature. The twigs are the objects of the senses. This tree also has roots going down, and these are bound to the fruitive actions of human society.

PURPORT

The description of the banyan tree is further explained here. Its branches spread in all directions. In the lower parts, there are variegated manifestations of living entities such as human beings, animals, horses, cows, dogs, cats, etc. These are situated on the lower parts of the branches, whereas on the upper parts are higher forms of living entities: the demigods, Gandharvas and many other higher species of life. As a tree is nourished by water, so this tree is nourished by the three modes of material nature. Sometimes we find that a tract of land is barren for want of sufficient water, and sometimes a tract is very green; similarly, where the modes of material nature are proportionately greater in quantity, the different species of life are manifest in that proportion accordingly.

The twigs of the tree are considered to be the sense objects. By development of the different modes of nature, we develop different senses, and, by the senses, we enjoy different varieties of sense objects. The source of the senses—the ears, the nose, eyes, etc.—is considered to be the upper twigs, tuned to the enjoyment of different sense objects. The leaves are sound, form, touch—the sense objects. The roots, which are subsidiary, are the by-products of different varieties of suffering and sense enjoyment. Thus we develop attachment and aversion. The tendencies toward piety and impiety are considered to be the secondary roots, spreading in all directions. The real root is from Brahmaloaka, and the other roots are in the human planetary systems. After one enjoys the results of virtuous activities in the upper planetary systems, he comes down to this earth and renews his karma, or fruitive activities for promotion. This planet of human beings is considered the field of activities.

TRANSLATION

The real form of this tree cannot be perceived in this world. No one can understand where it ends, where it begins, or where its foundation is. But with determination one must cut down this tree with the weapon of detachment. So doing, one must seek that place from which, having once gone, one never returns, and there surrender to that Supreme Personality of Godhead from whom everything has began and in whom everything is abiding since time immemorial.

PURPORT

It is now clearly stated that the real form of this banyan tree cannot be understood in this material world. Since the root is upwards, the extension of the real tree is at the other end. No one can see how far the tree extends, nor can one see the beginning of this tree. Yet one has to find out the cause. "I am the son of my father, my father is the son of such and such a person, etc." By searching in this way, one comes to Brahma, who is generated by the Garbhodakasayi Visnu. Finally, in this way, when one reaches the Supreme Personality of Godhead, that is the end of research work. One has to search out the origin of this tree, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, through the association of persons who are in knowledge of that Supreme Personality of Godhead. Then by understanding one becomes gradually detached from this false reflection of reality, and by knowledge one can cut off the connection and actually become situated in the real tree.

The word asanga is very important in this connection because the attachment for sense enjoyment and lording it over material nature is very strong. Therefore one must learn detachment by discussion of spiritual science based on authoritative scriptures, and one must hear from persons who are actually in knowledge. As a result of such discussion in the association of devotees, one comes to the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Then the first thing one must do is surrender to Him. The description of that place whence going no one returns to this false reflected tree is given here. The Supreme Personality of Godhead, Krsna, is the original root from whom everything has emanated. To gain favor of that Personality of Godhead, one has only to surrender, and this is a result of performing devotional service by hearing, chanting, etc. He is the cause of this extension of the material world. This has already been explained by the Lord Himself: aham sarvasya prabhava, "I am the origin of everything." Therefore to get out of the entanglement of this strong banyan tree of material life, one must surrender to Kṛṣṇa. As soon as one surrenders unto Kṛṣṇa, he becomes detached automatically from this material extension.

TRANSLATION

One who is free from illusion, false prestige, and false association, who understands the eternal, who is done with material lust and is freed from the duality of happiness and distress, and who knows how to surrender unto the Supreme Person, attains to that eternal kingdom.

PURPORT

The surrendering process is described here very nicely. The first qualification is that one should not be deluded by pride. Because the conditioned soul is puffed up, thinking himself the lord of material nature, it is very difficult for him to surrender unto the Supreme Personality of Godhead. One should know by the cultivation of real knowledge that he is not lord of material nature; the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the Lord. When one is free from delusion caused by pride, he can begin the process of surrender. For one who is always expecting some honor in this material world, it is not possible to surrender to the Supreme Person. Pride is due to illusion, for although one comes here, stays for a brief time and then goes away, he has the foolish notion that he is the lord of the world. He thus makes all things complicated, and he is always in trouble. The whole world moves under this impression. People are considering that the land, this earth, belongs to human society, and they have divided the land under the false impression that they are the proprietors. One has to get out of this false notion that human society is the proprietor of this world. When one is freed from such a false notion, he becomes free from all the false associations caused by familial, social and national affections. These faulty associations bind one to this material world. After this stage, one has to develop spiritual knowledge. One has to cultivate knowledge of what is actually his own and what is actually not his own. And, when one has an understanding of things as they are, he becomes free from all dual conceptions such as happiness and distress, pleasure and pain. He becomes full in knowledge; then it is possible for him to surrender to the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

SYNONYMS

TRANSLATION

That abode of Mine is not illumined by the sun or moon, nor by electricity. One who reaches it never returns to this material world.

PURPORT

The spiritual world, the abode of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Krsna—which is known as Krsnaloka, Goloka Vrndavana—is described here. In the spiritual sky there is no need of sunshine, moonshine, fire or electricity, because all the planets are self-luminous. We have only one planet in this universe, the sun, which is self-luminous, but all the planets in the spiritual sky are self-luminous. The shining effulgence of all those planets (called Vaikunthas) constitutes the shining sky known as the brahmajyoti. Actually, the effulgence is emanating from the planet of Krsna, Goloka Vrndavana. Part of that shining effulgence is covered by the mahat-tattva, the material world. Other than this, the major portion of that shining sky is full of spiritual planets, which are called Vaikunthas, chief of which is Goloka Vrndavana.

As long as a living entity is in this dark material world, he is in conditional life, but as soon as he reaches the spiritual sky by cutting through the false, perverted tree of this material world, he becomes liberated. Then there is no chance of his coming back here. In his conditional life, the living entity considers himself to be the lord of this material world, but in his liberated state he enters into the spiritual kingdom and becomes an associate of the Supreme Lord. There he enjoys eternal bliss, eternal life, and full knowledge.

One should be captivated by this information. He should desire to transfer himself to that eternal world and extricate himself from this false reflection of reality. For one who is too much attached to this material world, it is very difficult to cut that attachment, but if he takes to Krsna consciousness, there is a chance of gradually becoming detached. One has to associate himself with devotees, those who are in Krsna consciousness. One should search out a society dedicated to Krsna consciousness and learn how to discharge devotional service. In this way he can cut off his attachment to the material world. One cannot become detached from the attraction of the material world simply by dressing himself in saffron cloth. He must become attached to the devotional service of the Lord. Therefore one should take it very seriously that devotional service as described in the Twelfth Chapter is the only way to get out of this false representation of the real tree. In Chapter Fourteen the contamination of all kinds of processes by material nature is described. Only devotional service is described as purely transcendental.

The words paramam mama are very important here. Actually every nook and corner is the property of the Supreme Lord, but the spiritual world is paramam, full of six opulences. The Katha Upanisad (2.2.15) also confirms that in the spiritual world there is no need of sunshine or moonshine (na tatra suryo bhati na candratarakam), for the whole spiritual sky is illuminated by the internal potency of the Supreme Lord. That supreme abode can be achieved only by surrender and by no other means.

SYNONYMS

mama—My; eva—certainly; amsah—fragmental particles; jiva-loke—world of conditional life; jiva-bhutah—the conditioned living entity; sanatanah—eternal; manah—mind; sasthan—six; indriyani—senses; prakrti—material nature; sthani—situated; karsati—struggling hard.

TRANSLATION

The living entities in this conditioned world are My eternal fragmental parts. Due to conditioned life, they are struggling very hard with the six senses, which include the mind.

PURPORT

In this verse the identity of the living being is clearly given. The living entity is the fragmental part and parcel of the Supreme Lord—eternally. It is not that he assumes individuality in his conditional life and in his liberated state becomes one with the Supreme Lord. He is eternally fragmented. It is clearly said, sanatanah. According to the Vedic version, the Supreme Lord manifests and expands Himself in innumerable expansions, of which the primary expansions are called visnu-tattva and the secondary expansions are called the living entities. In other words, the visnu-tattva is the personal expansion, and the living entities are separated expansions. By His personal expansion, He is manifested in various forms like Lord Rama, Nrsimhadeva, Visnumurti and all the predominating Deities in the Vaikuntha planets. The separated expansions, the living entities, are eternally servitors. The personal expansions of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, the individual identities of the Godhead, are always present. Similarly, the separated expansions of the living entities have their identities. As fragmental parts and parcels of the Supreme Lord, the living entities also have fragmental portions of His qualities, of which independence is one. Every living entity, as an individual soul, has his personal individuality and a minute form of independence. By misuse of that independence one becomes a conditioned soul, and by proper use of independence he is always liberated. In either case, he is qualitatively eternal, as the Supreme Lord is. In his liberated state he is freed from this material condition, and he is under the engagement of transcendental service unto the Lord; in his conditioned life he is dominated by the material modes of nature, and he forgets the transcendental loving service of the Lord. As a result, he has to struggle very hard to maintain his existence in the material world.

The living entities, not only the human beings and the cats and dogs, but even the greater controllers of the material world—Brahma, Lord Siva and even Visnu—are all parts and parcels of the Supreme Lord. They are all eternal, not temporary manifestations. The word karsati (struggling or grappling hard) is very significant. The conditioned soul is bound up, as though shackled by iron chains. He is bound up by the false ego, and the mind is the chief agent which is driving him in this material existence. When the mind is in the mode of goodness, his activities are good; when the mind is in the mode of passion, his activities are troublesome; and when the mind is in the mode of ignorance, he travels in the lower species of life. It is clear, however, in this verse, that the conditioned soul is covered by the material body, with the mind and the senses, and when he is liberated this material covering perishes, but his spiritual body manifests its individual capacity. The following information is there in the Madhyandinayana–sruti: sa va esa brahma–nistha idam sariram martyam atisrjya brahmabhisampadya brahmana pasyati brahmana srnoti brahmanaivedam sarvam anubhavati. It is stated here that when a living entity gives up this material embodiment and enters into the spiritual world, he revives his spiritual body, and in his spiritual body he can see the Supreme Personality of Godhead face to face. He can hear and speak to Him face to face, and he can understand the Supreme Personality as He is. In smṛti also it is understood, vasanti yatra puruṣa sarve vaikuntha–murtayah: in the spiritual planets everyone lives in bodies featured like the Supreme Personality of Godhead's. As far as bodily construction is concerned, there is no difference between the part and parcel living entities and the expansions of viṣṇu–murti. In other words, at liberation the living entity gets a spiritual body by the grace of the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

The word mamaivamsaḥ (fragmental parts and parcels of the Supreme Lord) is also very significant. The fragmental portion of the Supreme Lord is not like some material broken part. We have already understood in the Second Chapter that the spirit cannot be cut into pieces. This fragment is not materially conceived. It is not like matter, which can be cut into pieces and joined together again. That conception is not applicable here, because the Sanskrit word sanatana (eternal) is used. The fragmental portion is eternal. It is also stated in the beginning of the Second Chapter that (dehino 'smin yatha dehe) in each and every individual body the fragmental portion of the Supreme Lord is present. That fragmental portion, when liberated from the bodily entanglement, revives its original spiritual body in the spiritual sky in a spiritual planet and enjoys association with the Supreme Lord. It is, however, understood here that the living entity, being the fragmental part and parcel of the Supreme Lord, is qualitatively one with the Lord, just as the parts and parcels of gold are also gold.

TRANSLATION

The living entity in the material world carries his different conceptions of life from one body to another as the air carries aromas.

PURPORT

Here the living entity is described as isvara, the controller of his own body. If he likes, he can change his body to a higher grade, and if he likes he can move to a lower class. Minute independence is there. The change his body undergoes depends upon him. At the time of death, the consciousness he has created will carry him on to the next type of body. If he has made his consciousness like that of a cat or dog, he is sure to change to a cat's or dog's body. And, if he has fixed his consciousness on godly qualities, he will change into the form of a demigod. And, if he is in Kṛṣṇa consciousness, he will be transferred to Kṛṣṇaloka in the spiritual world and will associate with Kṛṣṇa. It is a false claim that after the annihilation of this body everything is finished. The individual soul is transmigrating from one body to another, and his present body and present activities are the background of his next body. One gets a different body according to karma, and he has to quit this body in due course. It is stated here that the subtle body, which carries the conception of the next body, develops another body in the next life. This process of transmigrating from one body to another and struggling while in the body is called karsati or struggle for existence.

TRANSLATION

The living entity, thus taking another gross body, obtains a certain type of ear, tongue, eye, nose and sense of touch, which are grouped about the mind. He thus enjoys a particular set of sense objects.

PURPORT

In other words, if the living entity adulterates his consciousness with the qualities of cats and dogs, in his next life he gets a cat or dog body and enjoys. Consciousness is originally pure, like water. But if we mix water with a certain color, it changes. Similarly, consciousness is pure, for the spirit soul is pure. But consciousness is changed according to the association of the material qualities. Real consciousness is Krsna consciousness. When, therefore, one is situated in Krsna consciousness, he is in his pure life. But if his consciousness is adulterated by some type of material mentality, in the next life he gets a corresponding body. He does not necessarily get a human body again; he can get the body of a cat, dog, hog, demigod or one of many other forms, for there are 8,400,000 species.

SYNONYMS

utkramantam—quitting the body; sthitam—situated in the body; va api—either; bhunjanam—enjoying; va—or; guna-anvitam—under the spell of the modes of material nature; vimudhah—foolish persons; na—never; anupasyanti—can see; pasyanti—one can see; jnana-caksusah—one who has the eyes of knowledge.

TRANSLATION

The foolish cannot understand how a living entity can quit his body, nor can they understand what sort of body he enjoys under the spell of the modes of nature. But one whose eyes are trained in knowledge can see all this.

PURPORT

The word jnana–caksusah is very significant. Without knowledge, one cannot understand how a living entity leaves his present body, nor what form of body he is going to take in the next life, nor even why he is living in a particular type of body. This requires a great amount of knowledge understood from Bhagavad–gita and similar literatures heard from a bona fide spiritual master. One who is trained to perceive all these things is fortunate. Every living entity is quitting his body under certain circumstances; he is living under certain circumstances, and he is enjoying under certain circumstances under the spell of material nature. As a result, he is suffering different kinds of happiness and distress, under the illusion of sense enjoyment. Persons who are everlastingly fooled by lust and desire lose all power of understand their change of body and their stay in a particular body. They cannot comprehend it. Those who have developed spiritual knowledge, however, can see that the spirit is different from the body and is changing its body and enjoying in different ways. A person in such knowledge can understand how the conditioned living entity is suffering in this material existence. Therefore those who are highly developed in Krsna consciousness try their best to give this knowledge to the people in general, for their conditional life is very much troublesome. They should come out of it and be Krsna conscious and liberate themselves to transfer to the spiritual world.

TRANSLATION

The endeavoring transcendentalist, who is situated in self-realization, can see all this clearly. But those who are not situated in self-realization cannot see what is taking place, though they may try to.

PURPORT

There are many transcendentalists on the path of spiritual self-realization, but one who is not situated in self-realization cannot see how things are changing in the body of the living entity. The word yoginah is significant in this connection. In the present day there are many so-called yogis, and there are many so-called associations of yogis, but they are actually blind in the matter of self-realization. They are simply addicted to some sort of gymnastic exercise and are satisfied if the body is well-built and healthy. They have no other information. They are called yatanto 'py akṛtatmanah. Even though they are endeavoring in a so-called yoga system, they are not self-realized. Such people cannot understand the process of the transmigration of the soul. Only those who are actually in the yoga system and have realized the self, the world, and the Supreme Lord, in other words, the bhakti-yogis, those engaged in pure devotional service in Kṛṣṇa consciousness, can understand how things are taking place.

SYNONYMS

yat—that which; aditya-gatam—in the sunshine; tejah—splendor; jagat—the whole world; bhasayate—illuminates; akhilam—entirely; yat—that which; candramasi—in the moon; yat—that which; ca—also; agnau—in the fire; tat—that; tejah—splendor; viddhi—understand; mamakam—from Me.

TRANSLATION

The splendor of the sun, which dissipates the darkness of this whole world, comes from Me. And the splendor of the moon and the splendor of fire are also from Me.

PURPORT

The unintelligent cannot understand how things are taking place. The beginning of knowledge can be established by understanding what the Lord explains here. Everyone sees the sun, moon, fire and electricity. One should simply try to understand that the splendor of the sun, the splendor of the moon, and the splendor of electricity or fire are coming from the Supreme Personality of Godhead. In such a conception of life, the beginning of Kṛṣṇa consciousness, lies a great deal of advancement for the conditioned soul in this material world. The living entities are essentially the parts and parcels of the Supreme Lord, and He is giving herewith the hint how they can come back to Godhead, back to home.

From this verse we can understand that the sun is illuminating the whole solar system. There are different universes and solar systems, and there are different suns, moons and planets also, but in each universe there is only one sun. As stated in Bhagavad-gita (10.21), the moon is one of the stars (naksatranam aham asi). Sunlight is due to the spiritual effulgence in the spiritual sky of the Supreme Lord. With the rise of the sun, the activities of human beings are set up. They set fire to prepare their foodstuff, they set fire to start the factories, etc. So many things are done with the help of fire. Therefore sunrise, fire and moonlight are so pleasing to the living entities. Without their help no living entity can live. So if one can understand that the light and splendor of the sun, moon and fire are emanating from the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Kṛṣṇa, then one's Kṛṣṇa consciousness will begin. By the moonshine, all the vegetables are nourished. The moonshine is so pleasing that people can easily understand that they are living by the mercy of the Supreme Personality of Godhead Kṛṣṇa. Without His mercy there cannot be sun, without His mercy there cannot be moon, and without His mercy there cannot be fire, and without the help of sun, moon and fire, no one can live. These are some thoughts to provoke Kṛṣṇa consciousness in the conditioned soul.

TRANSLATION

I enter into each planet, and by My energy they stay in orbit. I become the moon and thereby supply the juice of life to all vegetables.

PURPORT

It is understood that all the planets are floating in the air only by the energy of the Lord. The Lord enters into every atom, every planet, and every living being. That is discussed in the Brahma-samhita. It is said there that one plenary portion of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Paramatma, enters into the planets, the universe, the living entity, and even into the atom. So due to His entrance, everything is appropriately manifested. When the spirit soul is there, a living man can float on the water, but when the living spark is out of the body and the body is dead, it sinks. Of course when it is decomposed it floats just like straw and other things, but as soon as the man is dead, he at once sinks in the water. Similarly, all these planets are floating in space, and this is due to the entrance of the supreme energy of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. His energy is sustaining each planet, just like a handful of dust. If someone holds a handful of dust, there is no possibility of the dust's falling, but if one throws it in the air, it will fall down. Similarly, these planets, which are floating in the air, are actually held in the fist of the universal form of the Supreme Lord. By His strength and energy, all moving and unmoving things stay in their place. It is said in the Vedic hymns that because of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, the sun is shining and the planets are steadily moving. Were it not for Him, all the planets would scatter, like dust in air, and perish. Similarly, it is due to the Supreme Personality of Godhead that the moon nourishes all vegetables. Due to the moon's influence, the vegetables become delicious. Without the moonshine, the vegetables can neither grow nor taste succulent. Human society is working, living comfortably and enjoying food due to the supply from the Supreme Lord. Otherwise, mankind could not survive. The word rasatmakah is very significant. Everything becomes palatable by the agency of the Supreme Lord through the influence of the moon.

I am the fire of digestion in every living body, and I am the air of life, outgoing and incoming, by which I digest the four kinds of foodstuff.

PURPORT

According to Ayur–vedic sastra, we understand that there is a fire in the stomach which digests all food sent there. When the fire is not blazing, there is no hunger, and when the fire is in order we become hungry. Sometimes when the fire is not going nicely, treatment is required. In any case, this fire is representative of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Vedic mantras (Brhad–aranyaka Upanisad 5.9.1) also confirm that the Supreme Lord or Brahman is situated in the form of fire within the stomach and is digesting all kinds of foodstuff (ayam agnir vaisvanaro yo 'yam antah puruse yenedam annam pacyate). Therefore since He is helping the digestion of all kinds of foodstuff, the living entity is not independent in the eating process. Unless the Supreme Lord helps him in digesting, there is no possibility of eating. He thus produces and digests foodstuff, and, by His grace, we are enjoying life. In the Vedanta-sutra (1.2.27) this is also confirmed. Sabdadibhyo 'ntah pratisthanac ca: the Lord is situated within the sound and within the body, within the air and even within the stomach as the digestive force. There are four kinds of foodstuff, some are swallowed, some are chewed, some are licked up, and some are sucked, and He is the digestive force for all of them.

TRANSLATION

I am seated in everyone's heart, and from Me come remembrance, knowledge and forgetfulness. By all the Vedas I am to be known; indeed I am the compiler of Vedanta, and I am the knower of the Vedas.

PURPORT

The Supreme Lord is situated as Paramatma in everyone's heart, and it is from Him that all activities are initiated. The living entity forgets everything of his past life, but he has to act according to the direction of the Supreme Lord, who is witness to all his work. Therefore he begins his work according to his past deeds. Required knowledge is supplied to him, and remembrance is given to him, and he forgets, also, about his past life. Thus, the Lord is not only all-pervading; He is also localized in every individual heart. He awards the different fruitive results. He is not only worshipable as the impersonal Brahman, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, and the localized Paramatma, but as the form of the incarnation of the Vedas as well. The Vedas give the right direction to the people so that they can properly mold their lives and come back to Godhead, back to home. The Vedas offer knowledge of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Kṛṣṇa, and Kṛṣṇa in His incarnation as Vyāsadeva is the compiler of the Vedānta-sūtra. The commentation on the Vedānta-sūtra by Vyāsadeva in the Śrīmad-Bhagavatam gives the real understanding of Vedānta-sūtra. The Supreme Lord is so full that for the deliverance of the conditioned soul He is the supplier and digester of foodstuff, the witness of his activity, the giver of knowledge in the form of Vedas and as the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the teacher of the Bhagavad-gītā. He is worshipable by the conditioned soul. Thus God is all-good; God is all-merciful.

Antah-pravistah sasta jananam. The living entity forgets as soon as he quits his present body, but he begins his work again, initiated by the Supreme Lord. Although he forgets, the Lord gives him the intelligence to renew his work where he ended in his last life. So not only does a living entity enjoy or suffer in this world according to the dictation from the Supreme Lord situated locally in the heart, but he receives the opportunity to understand the Vedas from Him. If one is serious to understand the Vedic knowledge, then Kṛṣṇa gives the required intelligence. Why does He present the Vedic knowledge for understanding? Because a living entity individually needs to understand Kṛṣṇa. Vedic literature confirms this: yo 'sau sarvair vedair giyate. In all Vedic literature, beginning from the four Vedas, Vedānta-sūtra and the Upanisads and Puranas, the glories of the Supreme Lord are celebrated. By performing Vedic rituals, discussing the Vedic philosophy and worshiping the Lord in devotional service, He is attained. Therefore the purpose of the Vedas is to understand Kṛṣṇa. The Vedas give us direction to understand Kṛṣṇa and the process of understanding. The ultimate goal is the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Vedānta-sūtra (1.1.4) confirms this in the following words: tat tu samanvayat. One can attain perfection by understanding Vedic literature, and one can understand his relationship with the Supreme Personality of Godhead by performing the different processes. Thus one can approach Him and at the end one can attain the supreme goal, who is no other than the Supreme Personality of Godhead. In this verse, however, the purpose of the Vedas, the understanding of the Vedas, and the goal of the Vedas are clearly defined.

SYNONYMS

dvau—two; imau—in this (world); purusau—living entities; loke—in the world; ksarah—fallible; ca—and; aksarah—infallible; eva—certainly; ca—and; ksarah—the fallible; sarvani—all; bhutani—living entities; kuta—sthah—in oneness; aksarah—infallible; ucyate—is said.

TRANSLATION

There are two classes of beings, the fallible and the infallible. In the material world every entity is fallible, and in the spiritual world every entity is called infallible.

PURPORT

As already explained, the Lord in His incarnation as Vyasadeva compiled the Vedanta–sutra. Here the Lord is giving, in summary, the contents of the Vedanta–sutra. He says that the living entities, who are innumerable, can be divided into two classes—the fallible and the infallible. The living entities are eternally separated parts and parcels of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. When they are in contact with the material world, they are called jiva–bhuta, and the Sanskrit words given here, ksarah sarvani bhutani, mean that they are fallible. Those who are in oneness with the Supreme Personality of Godhead, however, are called infallible. Oneness does not mean that they have no individuality, but that there is no disunity. They are all agreeable to the purpose of the creation. Of course, in the spiritual world, there is no such thing as creation, but since the Supreme Personality of Godhead, as stated in the Vedanta–sutra, is the source of all emanations, that conception is explained.

According to the statement of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Lord Krsna, there are two classes of men. The Vedas give evidence of this, so there is no doubt about it. The living entities, who are struggling in this world with the mind and five senses, have their material bodies which are changing as long as the living entities are conditioned. One's body changes due to contact with matter; matter is changing, so the living entity appears to be changing. But in the spiritual world the body is not made of matter; therefore there is no change. In the material world the living entity undergoes six changes—birth, growth, duration, reproduction, then dwindling and vanishing. These are the changes of the material body. But in the spiritual world the body does not change; there is no old age, there is no birth, there is no death. There all exists in oneness. It is more clearly explained as ksarah sarvani bhutani: any living entity who has come in contact with matter, beginning from the first created being, Brahma, down to a small ant, is changing its body; therefore they are all fallible. In the spiritual world, however, they are always liberated in oneness.

uttamah—the best; purusah—personality; tu—but; anyah—another; parama—the supreme; atma—self; iti—thus; udahrtah—is said; yah—one who; loka—of the universe; trayam—the three divisions; avisya—entering; bibharti—maintaining; avyayah—inexhaustible; isvarah—the Lord.

TRANSLATION

Besides these two, there is the greatest living personality, the Lord Himself, who has entered into these worlds and is maintaining them.

PURPORT

This verse is very nicely expressed in the Katha Upanisad (2.2.13) and Svetasvatara Upanisad (6.13). It is clearly stated there that above the innumerable living entities, some of whom are conditioned and some of whom are liberated, there is the Supreme Personality who is Paramatma. The Upanisadic verse runs as follows: nityo nityanam cetanas cetananam. The purport is that amongst all the living entities, both conditioned and liberated, there is one supreme living personality, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who maintains them and gives them all facility of enjoyment according to different work. That Supreme Personality of Godhead is situated in everyone's heart as Paramatma. A wise man who can understand Him is eligible to attain the perfect peace, not others.

It is incorrect to think of the Supreme Lord and the living entities as being on the same level or equal in all respects. There is always the question of superiority and inferiority in their personalities. This particular word uttama is very significant. No one can surpass the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Loke is also significant because in the paurusa, a Vedic literature, it is stated, lokyate vedartha 'nena. This Supreme Lord in His localized aspect as Paramatma explains the purpose of the Vedas. The following verse also appears in the Vedas (Chandogya Upanisad 8.12.3):

charirat samutthaya param

jyoti—rupam sampadya svena

rupenabhinispadyate sa uttamah purusah.

"The Supersoul coming out of the body enters the impersonal brahmajyoti; then in His form He remains in His spiritual identity. That Supreme is called the Supreme Personality." This means that the Supreme Personality is exhibiting and diffusing His spiritual effulgence, which is the ultimate illumination. That Supreme Personality also has a localized aspect as Paramatma. By incarnating Himself as the son of Satyavati and Parasara, He explains the Vedic knowledge as Vyasadeva.

TRANSLATION

Because I am transcendental, beyond both the fallible and the infallible, and because I am the greatest, I am celebrated both in the world and in the Vedas as that Supreme Person.

PURPORT

No one can surpass the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Kṛṣṇa—neither the conditioned soul nor the liberated soul. He is, therefore, the greatest of personalities. Now it is clear here that the living entities and the Supreme Personality of Godhead are individuals. The difference is that the living entities, either in the conditioned state or in the liberated state, cannot surpass in quantity the inconceivable potencies of the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

SYNONYMS

yah—anyone; mam—unto Me; evam—certainly; asammudhah—without a doubt; janati—knows; purusa—uttamam—the Supreme Personality of Godhead; sah—he; sarva—vit—knower of everything; bhajati—renders devotional service; mam—unto Me; sarva—bhavena—in all respects; bharata—O son of Bharata.

TRANSLATION

Whoever knows Me as the Supreme Personality of Godhead, without doubting, is to be understood as the knower of everything, and He therefore engages himself in full devotional service, O son of Bharata.

PURPORT

There are many philosophical speculations about the constitutional position of the living entities and the Supreme Absolute Truth. Now in this verse the Supreme Personality of Godhead clearly explains that anyone who knows Lord Kṛṣṇa as the Supreme Person is actually the knower of everything. The imperfect knower goes on simply speculating about the Absolute Truth, but the perfect knower, without wasting his valuable time, engages directly in Kṛṣṇa consciousness, the devotional service of the Supreme Lord. Throughout the whole of Bhagavad-gīta, this fact is being stressed at every step. And still there are so many stubborn commentators on Bhagavad-gīta who consider the Supreme Absolute Truth and the living entities to be one and the same.

The Vedic knowledge is called śruti, learning by aural reception. One should actually receive the Vedic messages from authorities like Kṛṣṇa and His representatives. Here Kṛṣṇa distinguishes everything very nicely, and one should hear from this source. Simply to hear like the hogs is not sufficient; one must be able to understand from the authorities. It is not that one should simply speculate academically. One should submissively hear from Bhagavad-gīta that these living entities are always subordinate to the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Anyone who is able to understand this, according to the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Śrī Kṛṣṇa, knows the purpose of the Vedas; no one else knows the purpose of the Vedas.

The word bhajati is very significant. In many places the word bhajati is expressed in relationship with the service of the Supreme Lord. If a person is engaged in full Kṛṣṇa consciousness in devotional service of the Lord, it is to be understood that he has understood all the Vedic knowledge. In the Vaisnava parampara it is said that if one is engaged in the devotional service of Kṛṣṇa, then there is no need for any other spiritual process for understanding the Supreme Absolute Truth. He has already come to the point, because he is engaged in the devotional service of the Lord. He has ended all preliminary processes of understanding; similarly, if anyone, after speculating for hundreds of thousands of lives, does not come to the point that Kṛṣṇa is the Supreme Personality of Godhead and that one has to surrender there, all his speculation for so many years and lives is a useless waste of time.

iti—thus; guhya—tamam—the most confidential; sastram—revealed scripture; idam—this; uktam—disclosed; maya—by Me; anagha—O sinless one; etat—this; buddhva—understanding; buddhi—man—intelligent; syat—one becomes; krta-kṛtyah—the most perfect; ca—and; bharata—O son of Bharata.

TRANSLATION

This is the most confidential part of the Vedic scriptures, O sinless one, and it is disclosed now by Me. Whoever understands this will become wise, and his endeavors will know perfection.

PURPORT

The Lord clearly explains here that this is the substance of all revealed scriptures. And one should understand this as it is given by the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Thus one will become intelligent and perfect in transcendental knowledge. In other words, by understanding this philosophy of the Supreme Personality of Godhead and engaging in His transcendental service, everyone can become freed from all contaminations of the modes of material nature. Devotional service is a process of spiritual understanding. Wherever devotional service exists, the material contamination cannot coexist. Devotional service to the Lord and the Lord Himself are one and the same because they are spiritual—the internal energy of the Supreme Lord. The Lord is said to be the sun, and ignorance is called darkness. Where the sun is present, there is no question of darkness. Therefore, whenever devotional service is present under the proper guidance of a bona fide spiritual master, there is no question of ignorance.

Everyone must take to this consciousness of Kṛṣṇa and engage in devotional service to become intelligent and purified. Unless one comes to this position of understanding Kṛṣṇa and engages in devotional service, however intelligent he may be in the estimation of some common man, he is not perfectly intelligent.

The word anagha, by which Arjuna is addressed, is significant. Anagha, "O sinless one," means that unless one is free from all sinful reactions it is very difficult to understand Kṛṣṇa. One has to become free from all contamination, all sinful activities; then he can understand. But devotional service is so pure and potent that once one is engaged in devotional service he automatically comes to the stage of sinlessness.

While performing devotional service in the association of pure devotees in full Kṛṣṇa consciousness, there are certain things which require to be vanquished altogether. The most important thing one has to surmount is weakness of the heart. The first falldown is caused by the desire to lord it over material nature. Thus one gives up the transcendental loving service of the Supreme Lord. The second weakness of the heart is that as one increases the propensity of lording it over material nature, he becomes attached to matter and the possession of matter. The problems of material existence are due to these weaknesses of the heart.

Thus end the Bhaktivedanta Purports to the Fifteenth Chapter of the Srimad Bhagavad-gita in the matter of Purusottama-yoga, the Yoga of the Supreme Person.

TRANSLATION

The Blessed Lord said: Fearlessness, purification of one's existence, cultivation of spiritual knowledge, charity, self-control, performance of sacrifice, study of the Vedas, austerity and simplicity; nonviolence, truthfulness, freedom from anger; renunciation, tranquillity, aversion to faultfinding, compassion and freedom from covetousness; gentleness, modesty and steady determination; vigor, forgiveness, fortitude, cleanliness, freedom from envy and the passion for honor—these transcendental qualities, O son of Bharata, belong to godly men endowed with divine nature.

PURPORT

In the beginning of the Fifteenth Chapter, the banyan tree of this material world was explained. The extra roots coming out of it were compared to the activities of the living entities, some auspicious, some inauspicious. In the Ninth Chapter, also, the devas, or godly, and the asuras, the ungodly, or demons, were explained. Now, according to Vedic rites, activities in the mode of goodness are considered auspicious for progress on the path of liberation, and such activities are known as daivi prakṛti, transcendental by nature. Those who are situated in the transcendental nature make progress on the path of liberation. For those who are acting in the modes of passion and ignorance, on the other hand, there is no possibility of liberation. Either they will have to remain in this material world as human beings, or they will descend among the species of animals or even lower life forms. In this Sixteenth Chapter the Lord explains both the transcendental nature and its attendant qualities and the demoniac nature and its qualities. He also explains the advantages and disadvantages of these qualities.

The word abhijātasya in reference to one born of transcendental qualities or godly tendencies is very significant. To beget a child in a godly atmosphere is known in the Vedic scriptures as Garbhadhana-samskāra. If the parents want a child in the godly qualities they should follow the ten principles of the human being. In Bhagavad-gītā we have studied also before that sex life for begetting a good child is Kṛṣṇa Himself. Sex life is not condemned provided the process is used in Kṛṣṇa consciousness. Those who are in Kṛṣṇa consciousness at least should not beget children like cats and dogs but should beget them so that they may become Kṛṣṇa conscious after birth. That should be the advantage of children born of a father or mother absorbed in Kṛṣṇa consciousness.

The social institution known as varnāśrama-dharma—the institution dividing society into four divisions or castes—is not meant to divide human society according to birth. Such divisions are in terms of educational qualifications. They are to keep the society in a state of peace and prosperity. The qualities mentioned herein are explained as transcendental qualities meant for making a person progress in spiritual understanding so that he can get liberated from the material world. In the varnāśrama institution the sannyāsī, or the person in the renounced order of life, is considered to be the head or the spiritual master of all the social statuses and orders. A brāhmaṇa is considered to be the spiritual master of the three other sections of a society, namely, the kṣātrīyas, the vaiśyas and the śūdras, but a sannyāsī, who is on the top of the institution, is considered to be the spiritual master of the brāhmaṇas also. For a sannyāsī, the first qualification should be fearlessness. Because a sannyāsī has to be alone without any support or guarantee of support, he has simply to depend on the mercy of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. If he thinks, "After I leave my connections, who will protect me?" he should not accept the renounced order of life. One must be fully convinced that Kṛṣṇa or the Supreme Personality of Godhead in His localized aspect as Paramātmā is always within, that He is seeing everything and that He always knows what one intends to do. One must thus have firm conviction that Kṛṣṇa as Paramātmā will take care of a soul surrendered to Him. "I shall never be alone," one should think. "Even if I live in the darkest regions of a forest I shall be accompanied by Kṛṣṇa, and He will give me all protection." That conviction is called abhayam, without fear. This state of mind is necessary for a person in the renounced order of life. Then he has to purify his existence. There are so many rules and regulations to be followed in the renounced order of life. Most important of all, a sannyāsī is strictly forbidden to have any intimate relationship with a woman. He is even forbidden to talk with a woman in a secluded place. Lord Caitanya was an ideal sannyasi, and when He was at Puri His feminine devotees could not even come near to offer their respects. They were advised to bow down from a distant place. This is not a sign of hatred for women as a class, but it is a stricture imposed on the sannyasi not to have close connections with women. One has to follow the rules and regulations of a particular status of life in order to purify his existence. For a sannyasi, intimate relations with women and possession of wealth for sense gratification are strictly forbidden. The ideal sannyasi was Lord Caitanya Himself, and we can learn from His life that He was very strict in regards to women. Although He is considered to be the most liberal incarnation of Godhead, accepting the most fallen conditioned souls, He strictly followed the rules and regulations of the sannyasa order of life in connection with association with woman. One of His personal associates, namely Chota Haridasa, was personally associated with Lord Caitanya along with His other confidential personal associates, but somehow or other this Chota Haridasa looked lustily on a young woman, and Lord Caitanya was so strict that He at once rejected him from the society of His personal associates. Lord Caitanya said, "For a sannyasi or anyone who is aspiring to get out of the clutches of material nature and trying to elevate himself to the spiritual nature and go back home, back to Godhead, for him, looking toward material possessions and women for sense gratification—not even enjoying them, but just looking toward them with such a propensity—is so condemned that he had better commit suicide before experiencing such illicit desires." So these are the processes for purification.

The next item is jnana–yoga–vyavasthiti: being engaged in the cultivation of knowledge. Sannyasi life is meant for distributing knowledge to the householders and others who have forgotten their real life of spiritual advancement. A sannyasi is supposed to beg from door to door for his livelihood, but this does not mean that he is a beggar. Humility is also one of the qualifications of a transcendently situated person, and out of sheer humility the sannyasi goes from door to door, not exactly for the purpose of begging, but to see the householders and awaken them to Krsna consciousness. This is the duty of a sannyasi. If he is actually advanced and so ordered by his spiritual master, he should preach Krsna consciousness with logic and understanding, and if he is not so advanced he should not accept the renounced order of life. But even if he has accepted the renounced order of life without sufficient knowledge, he should engage himself fully in hearing from a bona fide spiritual master to cultivate knowledge. A sannyasi, or one in the renounced order of life, must be situated in fearlessness, sattva–samsuddhi (purity) and jnana–yoga (knowledge).

The next item is charity. Charity is meant for the householders. The householders should earn a livelihood by an honorable means and spend fifty percent of their income to propagate Krsna consciousness all over the world. Thus a householder should give in charity to such institutional societies that are engaged in that way. Charity should be given to the right receiver. There are different kinds of charities, as will be explained later on, charity in the modes of goodness, passion and ignorance. Charity in the mode of goodness is recommended by the scriptures, but charity in the modes of passion and ignorance is not recommended because it is simply a waste of money. Charity should be given only to propagate Kṛṣṇa consciousness all over the world. That is charity in the mode of goodness.

Then as far as dama (self-control) is concerned, it is not only meant for other orders of religious society, but it is especially meant for the householder. Although he has a wife, a householder should not use his senses for sex life unnecessarily. There are restrictions for the householders even in sex life, which should only be engaged in for the propagation of children. If he does not require children, he should not enjoy sex life with his wife. Modern society enjoys sex life with contraceptive methods or more abominable methods to avoid the responsibility of children. This is not in the transcendental quality but is demoniac. If anyone, even if he is a householder, wants to make progress in spiritual life, he must control his sex life and should not beget a child without the purpose of serving Kṛṣṇa. If he is able to beget children who will be in Kṛṣṇa consciousness, one can produce hundreds of children, but without this capacity one should not indulge only for sense pleasure.

Sacrifice is another item to be performed by the householders because sacrifices require a large amount of money. Other orders of life, namely brahmacarya, vanaprastha and sannyasa, have no money; they live by begging. So performance of different types of sacrifice is meant for the householder. They should perform agni-hotra sacrifices as enjoined in the Vedic literature, but such sacrifices at the present moment are very expensive, and it is not possible for any householder to perform them. The best sacrifice recommended in this age is called sankirtana-yajna, the chanting of Hare Kṛṣṇa, Hare Kṛṣṇa, Kṛṣṇa Kṛṣṇa, Hare Hare/ Hare Rama, Hare Rama, Rama Rama, Hare Hare. This is the best and most inexpensive sacrifice; everyone can adopt it and derive benefit. So these three items, namely charity, sense control and performance of sacrifice, are meant for the householder.

Then svadhyaya, Vedic study, and tapas, austerity, and arjavam, gentleness or simplicity, are meant for brahmacarya or student life. Brahmacaris should have no connection with women; they should live a life of celibacy and engage the mind in the study of Vedic literature for cultivation of spiritual knowledge. This is called svadhyaya.

Tapas or austerity, is especially meant for the retired life. One must not remain a householder throughout his whole life; he must always remember that there are four divisions of life, brahmacarya, grhastha, vanaprastha and sannyasa. So after grhastha, householder life, one should retire. If one lives for a hundred years, he should spend twenty-five years in student life, twenty-five in householder life, twenty-five in retired life and twenty-five in the renounced order of life. These are the regulations of the Vedic religious discipline. A man retired from household life must practice austerities of the body, mind and tongue. That is tapasya. The entire varnasrama–dharma society is meant for tapasya. Without tapasya or austerity, no human being can get liberation. The theory that there is no need of austerity in life, that one can go on speculating and everything will be nice, is neither recommended in the Vedic literature nor in Bhagavad–gita. Such theories are manufactured by show–bottle spiritualists who are trying to gather more followers. If there are restrictions, rules and regulations, people will not become attracted. Therefore those who want followers in the name of religion, just to have a show only, don't restrict the lives of their students nor their own lives. But that method is not approved by the Vedas.

As far as simplicity is concerned, not only should a particular order of life follow this principle, but every member, be he in the brahmacari asrama, or grhastha asrama, or vanaprastha asrama or sannyasa asrama. One must live very simply.

Ahimsa means not arresting the progressive life of any living entity. One should not think that since the spirit spark is never killed even after the killing of the body there is no harm in killing animals for sense gratification. People are now addicted to eating animals, in spite of having an ample supply of grains, fruits and milk. There is no necessity for animal killing. This injunction is for everyone. When there is no other alternative, one may kill an animal, but it should be offered in sacrifice. At any rate, when there is an ample food supply for humanity, persons who are desiring to make advancement in spiritual realization should not commit violence to animals. Real ahimsa means not checking anyone's progressive life. The animals are also making progress in their evolutionary life by transmigrating from one category of animal life to another. If a particular animal is killed, then his progress is checked. If an animal is staying in a particular body for so many days or so many years and is untimely killed, then he has to come back again in that form of life to complete the remaining days in order to be promoted to another species of life. So their progress should not be checked simply to satisfy one's palate. This is called ahimsa.

Satyam. This word means that one should not distort the truth for some personal interest. In Vedic literature there are some difficult passages, but the meaning or the purpose should be learned from a bona fide spiritual master. That is the process for understanding the Vedas. Sruti means that one should hear from the authority. One should not construe some interpretation for his personal interest. There are so many commentaries on Bhagavad–gita that misinterpret the original text. The real import of the word should be presented, and that should be learned from a bona fide spiritual master.

Akrodha means to check anger. Even if there is provocation one should be tolerant, for once one becomes angry his whole body becomes polluted. Anger is a product of the modes of passion and lust, so one who is transcendently situated should check himself from anger. Apaisunam means that one should not find fault with others or correct them unnecessarily. Of course to call a thief a thief is not faultfinding, but to call an honest person a thief is very much offensive for one who is making advancement in spiritual life. Hri means that one should be very modest and must not perform some act which is abominable. Acapalam, determination, means that one should not be agitated or frustrated in some attempt. There may be failure in some attempt, but one should not be sorry for that; he should make progress with patience and determination.

The word tejas used here is meant for the ksatriyas. The ksatriyas should always be very strong to be able to give protection to the weak. They should not pose themselves as nonviolent. If violence is required, they must exhibit it.

Saucam means cleanliness, not only in mind and body but in one's dealings also. It is especially meant for the mercantile people, who should not deal in the black market. Nati–manita, not expecting honor, applies to the sudras, the worker class, who are considered, according to Vedic injunctions, to be the lowest of the four classes. They should not be puffed up with unnecessary prestige or honor and should remain in their own status. It is the duty of the sudras to offer respect to the higher classes for the upkeep of the social order.

All these twenty–six qualifications mentioned are transcendental qualities. They should be cultivated according to the different statuses of the social order. The purport is that even though material conditions are miserable, if these qualities are developed by practice, by all classes of men, then gradually it is possible to rise to the highest platform of transcendental realization.

TRANSLATION

Arrogance, pride, anger, conceit, harshness and ignorance—these qualities belong to those of demoniac nature, O son of Prtha.

PURPORT

In this verse, the royal road to hell is described. The demoniac want to make a show of religion and advancement in spiritual science, although they do not follow the principles. They are always arrogant and proud in possessing some type of education or so much wealth. They desire to be worshiped by others, and demand respectability, although they do not command respect. Over trifles they become very angry and speak harshly, not gently. They do not know what should be done and what should not be done. They do everything whimsically, according to their own desire, and they do not recognize any authority. These demoniac qualities are taken on by them from the beginning of their bodies in the wombs of their mothers, and as they grow they manifest all these inauspicious qualities.

SYNONYMS

daivi—transcendental; sampat—nature; vimoksaya—meant for liberation; nibandhaya—for bondage; asuri—demoniac qualities; mata—it is considered; ma—do not; sucah—worry; sampadam—nature; daivim—transcendental; abhijatah—born; asi—you are; pandava—O son of Pandu.

TRANSLATION

The transcendental qualities are conducive to liberation, whereas the demoniac qualities make for bondage. Do not worry, O son of Pandu, for you are born with the divine qualities.

PURPORT

Lord Kṛṣṇa encouraged Arjuna by telling him that he was not born with demoniac qualities. His involvement in the fight was not demoniac because he was considering the pros and cons. He was considering whether respectable persons such as Bhīṣma and Drōṇa should be killed or not, so he was not acting under the influence of anger, false prestige, or harshness. Therefore he was not of the quality of the demons. For a ksatriya, a military man, shooting arrows at the enemy is considered transcendental, and refraining from such a duty is demoniac. Therefore, there was no cause for Arjuna to lament. Anyone who performs the regulative principles of the different orders of life is transcendently situated.

TRANSLATION

O son of Prtha, in this world there are two kinds of created beings. One is called the divine and the other demoniac. I have already explained to you at length the divine qualities. Now hear from Me of the demoniac.

PURPORT

Lord Krsna, having assured Arjuna that he was born with the divine qualities, is now describing the demoniac way. The conditioned living entities are divided into two classes in this world. Those who are born with divine qualities follow a regulated life; that is to say they abide by the injunctions in scriptures and by the authorities. One should perform duties in the light of authoritative scripture. This mentality is called divine. One who does not follow the regulative principles as they are laid down in the scriptures and who acts according to his whims is called demoniac or asuric. There is no other criterion but obedience to the regulative principles of scriptures. It is mentioned in Vedic literature that both the demigods and the demons are born of the Prajapati; the only difference is that one class obeys the Vedic injunctions and the other does not.

TRANSLATION

Those who are demoniac do not know what is to be done and what is not to be done. Neither cleanliness nor proper behavior nor truth is found in them.

PURPORT

In every civilized human society there is some set of scriptural rules and regulations which are followed from the beginning, especially among the Aryans, those who adopt the Vedic civilization and who are known as the most advanced civilized people. Those who do not follow the scriptural injunctions are supposed to be demons. Therefore it is stated here that the demons do not know the scriptural rules, nor do they have any inclination to follow them. Most of them do not know them, and even if some of them know, they do not have the tendency to follow them. They have no faith, nor are they willing to act in terms of the Vedic injunctions. The demons are not clean, either externally or internally. One should always be careful to keep his body clean by bathing, brushing teeth, shaving, changing clothes, etc. As far as internal cleanliness is concerned, one should always remember the holy names of God and chant Hare Krsna, Hare Krsna, Krsna Krsna, Hare Hare/ Hare Rama, Hare Rama, Rama Rama, Hare Hare. The demons neither like nor follow all these rules for external and internal cleanliness.

As for behavior, there are many rules and regulations guiding human behavior, such as the Manu-samhita, which is the law of the human race. Even up to today, those who are Hindu follow the Manu-samhita. Laws of inheritance and other legalities are derived from this book. Now, in the Manu-samhita, it is clearly stated that a woman should not be given freedom. That does not mean that women are to be kept as slaves, but they are like children. Children are not given freedom, but that does not mean that they are kept as slaves. The demons have now neglected such injunctions, and they think that women should be given as much freedom as men. However, this has not improved the social condition of the world. Actually, a woman should be given protection at every stage of life. She should be given protection by the father in her younger days, by the husband in her youth, and by the grown-up sons in her old age. This is proper social behavior according to the Manu-samhita. But modern education has artificially devised a puffed-up concept of womanly life, and therefore marriage is practically now an imagination in human society. Nor is the moral condition of women very good now. The demons, therefore, do not accept any instruction which is good for society, and because they do not follow the experience of great sages and the rules and regulations laid down by the sages, the social condition of the demoniac people is very miserable.

asatyam—unreal; apratistham—without foundation; te—they; jagat—the cosmic manifestation; ahuh—is said; anisvaram—with no controller; aparaspara—by mutual lust; sambhutam—cause; kim anyat—there is no other cause; kama—haitukam—it is due to lust only.

TRANSLATION

They say that this world is unreal, that there is no foundation and that there is no God in control. It is produced of sex desire, and has no cause other than lust.

PURPORT

The demonic conclude that the world is phantasmagoria. There is no cause, no effect, no controller, no purpose: everything is unreal. They say that this cosmic manifestation arises due to chance material actions and reactions. They do not think that the world was created by God for a certain purpose. They have their own theory: that the world has come about in its own way and that there is no reason to believe that there is a God behind it. For them there is no difference between spirit and matter, and they do not accept the Supreme Spirit. Everything is matter only, and the whole cosmos is supposed to be a mass of ignorance. According to them, everything is void, and whatever manifestation exists is due to our ignorance in perception. They take it for granted that all manifestation of diversity is a display of ignorance. Just as in a dream we may create so many things which actually have no existence, so when we are awake we shall see that everything is simply a dream. But factually, although the demons say that life is a dream, they are very expert in enjoying this dream. And so, instead of acquiring knowledge, they become more and more implicated in their dreamland. They conclude that as a child is simply the result of sexual intercourse between man and woman, this world is born without any soul. For them it is only a combination of matter that has produced the living entities, and there is no question of the existence of the soul. As many living creatures come out from perspiration and from a dead body without any cause, similarly, the whole living world has come out of the material combinations of the cosmic manifestation. Therefore material nature is the cause of this manifestation, and there is no other cause. They do not believe in the words of Kṛṣṇa in Bhagavad-gītā: mayādhyakṣena prakṛtiḥ suyate sa-caracaram. "Under My direction the whole material world is moving." In other words, amongst the demons there is no perfect knowledge of the creation of the world; every one of them has some particular theory of his own. According to them, one interpretation of the scriptures is as good as another, for they do not believe in a standard understanding of the scriptural injunctions.

TRANSLATION

Following such conclusions, the demoniac, who are lost to themselves and who have no intelligence, engage in unbeneficial, horrible works meant to destroy the world.

PURPORT

The demoniac are engaged in activities that will lead the world to destruction. The Lord states here that they are less intelligent. The materialists, who have no concept of God, think that they are advancing. But, according to Bhagavad-gita, they are unintelligent and devoid of all sense. They try to enjoy this material world to the utmost limit and therefore always engage in inventing something for sense gratification. Such materialistic inventions are considered to be advancement of human civilization, but the result is that people grow more and more violent and more and more cruel, cruel to animals and cruel to other human beings. They have no idea how to behave toward one another. Animal killing is very prominent amongst demoniac people. Such people are considered the enemies of the world because ultimately they will invent or create something which will bring destruction to all. Indirectly, this verse anticipates the invention of nuclear weapons, of which the whole world today is very proud. At any moment war may take place, and these atomic weapons may create havoc. Such things are created solely for the destruction of the world, and this is indicated here. Due to godlessness, such weapons are invented in human society; they are not meant for the peace and prosperity of the world.

TRANSLATION

The demoniac, taking shelter of insatiable lust, pride and false prestige, and being thus illusioned, are always sworn to unclean work, attracted by the impermanent.

PURPORT

The demoniac mentality is described here. The demon's lust is never satiated. They will go on increasing and increasing their insatiable desires for material enjoyment. Although they are always full of anxieties on account of accepting nonpermanent things, they still continue to engage in such activities out of illusion. They have no knowledge and cannot tell that they are heading the wrong way. Accepting nonpermanent things, such demoniac people create their own God, create their own hymns and chant accordingly. The result is that they become more and more attracted to two things—sex enjoyment and accumulation of material wealth. The word asuci-vratah, "unclean vows," is very significant in this connection. Such demoniac people are only attracted by wine, women, gambling and meat-eating; those are their asuci, unclean habits. Induced by pride and false prestige, they create some principles of religion which are not approved by the Vedic injunctions. Although such demoniac people are most abominable in the world, still, by artificial means the world creates a false honor for them. Although they are gliding toward hell, they consider themselves very much advanced.

TRANSLATION

They believe that to gratify the senses unto the end of life is the prime necessity of human civilization. Thus there is no end to their anxiety. Bound by hundreds and thousands of desires, by lust and anger, they secure money by illegal means for sense gratification.

PURPORT

The demoniac accept that the enjoyment of the senses is the ultimate goal of life, and this concept they maintain until death. They do not believe in life after death, and they do not believe that one takes on different types of bodies according to one's karma, or activities in this world. Their plans for life are never finished, and they go on preparing plan after plan, all of which are never finished. We have personal experience of a person of such demoniac mentality, who, even at the point of death, was requesting the physician to prolong his life for four years more because his plans were not yet complete. Such foolish people do not know that a physician cannot prolong life even for a moment. When the notice is there, there is no consideration of the man's desire. The laws of nature do not allow a second beyond what one is destined to enjoy.

The demoniac person, who has no faith in God or the Supersoul within himself, performs all kinds of sinful activities simply for sense gratification. He does not know that there is a witness sitting within his heart. The Supersoul is observing the activities of the individual soul. As it is stated in the Upanisads, there are two birds sitting in one tree; one is acting and enjoying or suffering the fruits of the branches, and the other is witnessing. But one who is demoniac has no knowledge of Vedic scripture, nor has he any faith; therefore he feels free to do anything for sense enjoyment, regardless of the consequences.

killed. I am the lord of everything. I am the enjoyer. I am perfect, powerful and happy. I am the richest man, surrounded by aristocratic relatives. There is none so powerful and happy as I am. I shall perform sacrifices, I shall give some charity, and thus I shall rejoice." In this way, such persons are deluded by ignorance.

TRANSLATION

Thus perplexed by various anxieties and bound by a network of illusions, one becomes too strongly attached to sense enjoyment and falls down into hell.

PURPORT

The demoniac man knows no limit to his desire to acquire money. That is unlimited. He only thinks how much assessment he has just now and schemes to engage that stock of wealth further and further. For that reason, he does not hesitate to act in any sinful way and so deals in the black market for illegal gratification. He is enamored by the possessions he has already, such as land, family, house and bank balance, and he is always planning to improve them. He believes in his own strength, and he does not know that whatever he is gaining is due to his past good deeds. He is given an opportunity to accumulate such things, but he has no conception of past causes. He simply thinks that all his mass of wealth is due to his own endeavor. A demoniac person believes in the strength of his personal work, not in the law of karma. According to the law of karma, a man takes his birth in a high family, or becomes rich, or very well educated, or very beautiful because of good work in the past. The demoniac think that all these things are accidental and due to the strength of his personal ability. He does not sense any arrangement behind all the varieties of people, beauty and education. Anyone who comes into competition with such a demoniac man is his enemy. There are many demoniac people, and each is enemy to the others. This enmity becomes more and more deep—between persons, then between families, then between societies, and at last between nations. Therefore there is constant strife, war and enmity all over the world.

Each demoniac person thinks that he can live at the sacrifice of all others. Generally, a demoniac person thinks of himself as the Supreme God, and a demoniac preacher tells his followers: "Why are you seeking God elsewhere? You are all yourselves God! Whatever you like, you can do. Don't believe in God. Throw away God. God is dead." These are the demoniac's preachings.

Although the demoniac person sees others equally rich and influential, or even more so, he thinks that no one is richer than he and that no one is more influential than he. As far as promotion to the higher planetary system is concerned, he does not believe in performing yajnas or sacrifices. Demons think that they will manufacture their own process of yajna and prepare some machine, by which they will be able to reach any higher planet. The best example of such a demoniac man was Ravana. He offered a program to the people by which he would prepare a staircase so that anyone could reach the heavenly planets without performing sacrifices, such as are prescribed in the Vedas. Similarly, in the present age such demoniac men are striving to reach the higher planetary systems by mechanical arrangements. These are examples of bewilderment. The result is that, without their knowledge, they are gliding toward hell. Here the Sanskrit word moha-jala is very significant. Jala means net; like fish caught in a net, they have no way to come out.

TRANSLATION

Self–complacent and always impudent, deluded by wealth and false prestige, they sometimes perform sacrifices in name only, without following any rules or regulations.

PURPORT

Thinking themselves all in all, not caring for any authority or scripture, the demoniac sometimes perform so–called religious or sacrificial rites. And since they do not believe in authority, they are very impudent. This is due to illusion caused by accumulating some wealth and false prestige. Sometimes such demons take up the role of preacher, mislead the people, and become known as religious reformers or as incarnations of God. They make a show of performing sacrifices, or they worship the demigods, or manufacture their own God. Common men advertise them as God and worship them, and by the foolish they are considered advanced in the principles of religion, or in the principles of spiritual knowledge. They take the dress of the renounced order of life and engage in all nonsense in that dress. Actually there are so many restrictions for one who has renounced this world. The demons, however, do not care for such restrictions. They think that whatever path one can create is one's own path; there is no such thing as a standard path one has to follow. The word avidhi-purvakam, meaning a disregard for the rules and regulations, is especially stressed here. These things are always due to ignorance and illusion.

TRANSLATION

Bewildered by false ego, strength, pride, lust and anger, the demon becomes envious of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is situated in his own body and in the bodies of others, and blaspheme against the real religion.

PURPORT

A demoniac person, being always against God's supremacy, does not like to believe in the scriptures. He is envious of both the scriptures and of the existence of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. This is caused by his so-called prestige and his accumulation of wealth and strength. He does not know that the present life is a preparation for the next life. Not knowing this, he is actually envious of his own self, as well as of others. He commits violence on other bodies and on his own. He does not care for the supreme control of the Personality of Godhead because he has no knowledge. Being envious of the scriptures and the Supreme Personality of Godhead, he puts forward false arguments against the existence of God and refutes the scriptural authority. He thinks himself independent and powerful in every action. He thinks that since no one can equal him in strength, power, or in wealth, he can act in any way and no one can stop him. If he has an enemy who might check the advancement of his sensual activities, he makes plans to cut him down by his own power.

TRANSLATION

Those who are envious and mischievous, who are the lowest among men, are cast by Me into the ocean of material existence, into various demoniac species of life.

PURPORT

In this verse it is clearly indicated that the placing of a particular individual soul in a particular body is the prerogative of the supreme will. The demoniac person may not agree to accept the supremacy of the Lord, and it is a fact that he may act according to his own whims, but his next birth will depend upon the decision of the Supreme Personality of Godhead and not on himself. In the Srimad-Bhagavatam, Third Canto, it is stated that an individual soul, after his death, is put into the womb of a mother where he gets a particular type of body under the supervision of superior power. Therefore in the material existence we find so many species of life—animals, insects, men, and so on. All are arranged by the superior power. They are not accidental. As for the demoniac, it is clearly said here that they are perpetually put into the wombs of demons, and thus they continue to be envious, the lowest of mankind. Such demoniac species of men are held to be always full of lust, always violent and hateful and always unclean. They are just like so many beasts in a jungle.

TRANSLATION

Attaining repeated birth amongst the species of demoniac life, such persons can never approach Me. Gradually they sink down to the most abominable type of existence.

PURPORT

It is known that God is all-merciful, but here we find that God is never merciful to the demoniac. It is clearly stated that the demoniac people, life after life, are put into the wombs of similar demons, and, not achieving the mercy of the Supreme Lord, they go down and down, so that at last they achieve bodies like those of cats, dogs and hogs. It is clearly stated that such demons have practically no chance of receiving the mercy of God at any stage of later life. In the Vedas also it is stated that such persons gradually sink to become dogs and hogs. It may be then argued in this connection that God should not be advertised as all-merciful if He is not merciful to such demons. In answer to this question, in the Vedanta-sutra we find that the Supreme Lord has no hatred for anyone. The placing of the asuras, the demons, in the lowest status of life is simply another feature of His mercy. Sometimes the asuras are killed by the Supreme Lord, but this killing is also good for them, for in Vedic literature we find that anyone who is killed by the Supreme Lord becomes liberated. There are instances in history of many asuras—Ravana, Kamsa, Hiranyakasipu—to whom the Lord appeared in various incarnations just to kill them. Therefore God's mercy is shown to the asuras if they are fortunate enough to be killed by Him.

TRANSLATION

There are three gates leading to this hell—lust, anger and greed. Every sane man should give these up, for they lead to the degradation of the soul.

PURPORT

The beginning of demoniac life is described herein. One tries to satisfy his lust, and when he cannot, anger and greed arise. A sane man who does not want to glide down to the species of demoniac life must try to give up these three enemies which can kill the self to such an extent that there will be no possibility of liberation from this material entanglement.

TRANSLATION

The man who has escaped these three gates of hell, O son of Kunti, performs acts conducive to self-realization and thus gradually attains the supreme destination.

PURPORT

One should be very careful of these three enemies to human life: lust, anger and greed. The more a person is freed from lust, anger and greed, the more his existence becomes pure. Then he can follow the rules and regulations enjoined in the Vedic literature. By following the regulative principles of human life, one gradually raises himself to the platform of spiritual realization. If one is so fortunate, by such practice, to rise to the platform of Kṛṣṇa consciousness, then success is guaranteed for him. In the Vedic literature, the ways of action and reaction are prescribed to enable one to come to the stage of purification. The whole method is based on giving up lust, greed and anger. By cultivating knowledge of this process, one can be elevated to the highest position of self-realization; this self-realization is perfected in devotional service. In that devotional service, the liberation of the conditioned soul is guaranteed. Therefore, according to the Vedic system, there are instituted the four orders of life and the four statuses of life, called the caste system and the spiritual order system. There are different rules and regulations for different castes or divisions of society, and if a person is able to follow them, he will be automatically raised to the highest platform of spiritual realization. Then he can have liberation without a doubt.

SYNONYMS

yah—anyone; sastra-vidhim—the regulations of the scriptures; utsrjya—giving up; vartate—remains; kama-karatah—acting whimsically in lust; na—never; sah—he; siddhim—perfection; avapnoti—achieves; na—never; sukham—happiness; na—never; param—the supreme; gatim—perfectional stage.

TRANSLATION

But he who discards scriptural injunctions and acts according to his own whims attains neither perfection, nor happiness, nor the supreme destination.

PURPORT

As described before, the sastra–vidhi, or the direction of the sastra, is given to the different castes and orders of human society. Everyone is expected to follow these rules and regulations. If one does not follow them and acts whimsically according to his lust, greed and desire, then he never will be perfect in his life. In other words, a man may theoretically know all these things, but if he does not apply them in his own life, then he is to be known as the lowest of mankind. In the human form of life, a living entity is expected to be sane and to follow the regulations given for elevating his life to the highest platform, but if he does not follow them, then he degrades himself. But even if he follows the rules and regulations and moral principles and ultimately does not come to the stage of understanding the Supreme Lord, then all his knowledge becomes spoiled. Therefore one should gradually raise himself to the platform of Kṛṣṇa consciousness and devotional service; it is then and there that he can attain the highest perfectional stage, not otherwise.

The word kama–karatah is very significant. A person who knowingly violates the rules acts in lust. He knows that this is forbidden, still he acts. This is called acting whimsically. He knows that this should be done, but still he does not do it; therefore he is called whimsical. Such persons are destined to be condemned by the Supreme Lord. Such persons cannot have the perfection which is meant for the human life. The human life is especially meant for purifying one's existence, and one who does not follow the rules and regulations cannot purify himself, nor can he attain the real stage of happiness.

tasmat—therefore; sastram—scriptures; pramanam—evidence; te—your; karya—duty; akarya—forbidden activities; vyavasthitau—in determining; jnatva—knowing; sastra—of scripture; vidhana—regulations; uktam—as declared; karma—work; kartum—to do; iha arhasi—you should do it.

TRANSLATION

One should understand what is duty and what is not duty by the regulations of the scriptures. Knowing such rules and regulations, one should act so that he may gradually be elevated.

PURPORT

As stated in the Fifteenth Chapter, all the rules and regulations of the Vedas are meant for knowing Krsna. If one understands Krsna from the Bhagavad-gita and becomes situated in Krsna consciousness, engaging himself in devotional service, he has reached the highest perfection of knowledge offered by the Vedic literature. Lord Caitanya Mahaprabhu made this process very easy: He asked people simply to chant Hare Krsna, Hare Krsna, Krsna Krsna, Hare Hare/ Hare Rama, Hare Rama, Rama Rama, Hare Hare and to engage in the devotional service of the Lord and eat the remnants of foodstuff offered to the Deity. One who is directly engaged in all these devotional activities is to be understood as having studied all Vedic literature. He has come to the conclusion perfectly. Of course, for the ordinary persons who are not in Krsna consciousness or who are not engaged in devotional service, what is to be done and what is not to be done must be decided by the injunctions of the Vedas. One should act accordingly, without argument. That is called following the principles of sastra, or scripture. Sastra is without the four principal defects that are visible in the conditioned soul: imperfect senses, the propensity for cheating, certainty of committing mistakes, and certainty of being illusioned. These four principal defects in conditioned life disqualify one from putting forth rules and regulations. Therefore, the rules and regulations as described in the sastra—being above these defects—are accepted without alteration by all great saints, acaryas and great souls.

In India there are many parties of spiritual understanding, generally classified as two: the impersonalist and the personalist. Both of them, however, lead their lives according to the principles of the Vedas. Without following the principles of the scriptures, one cannot elevate himself to the perfectional stage. One who actually, therefore, understands the purport of the sastras is considered fortunate.

In human society, aversion to the principles of understanding the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the cause of all falldowns. That is the greatest offense of human life. Therefore, maya, the material energy of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, is always giving us trouble in the shape of the threefold miseries. This material energy is constituted of the three modes of material nature. One has to raise himself at least to the mode of goodness before the path to understanding the Supreme Lord can be opened. Without raising oneself to the standard of the mode of goodness, one remains in ignorance and passion, which are the cause of demoniac life. Those in the modes of passion and ignorance deride the scriptures, deride the holy man, and deride the proper understanding of the spiritual master, and they do not care for the regulations of the scriptures. In spite of hearing the glories of devotional service, they are not attracted. Thus they manufacture their own way of elevation. These are some of the defects of human society, which lead to the demoniac status of life. If, however, one is able to be guided by a proper and bona fide spiritual master, who can lead one to the path of elevation, to the higher stage, then one's life becomes successful.

Thus end the Bhaktivedanta Purports to the Sixteenth Chapter of the Srimad Bhagavad-gita in the matter of the Divine and Demoniac Natures.

The Divisions of Faith

SYNONYMS

arjunah uvaca—Arjuna said; ye—those; sastra-vidhim—the regulations of scripture; utsrjya—giving up; yajante—worship; sraddhaya—full faith; anvitah—possessed of; tesam—of them; nistha—faith; tu—but; ka—what is that; krsna—O Krsna; sattvam—in goodness; aho—said; rajah—in passion; tamah—in ignorance.

TRANSLATION

Arjuna said, O Krsna, what is the situation of one who do not follow the principles of scripture but who worships according to his own imagination? Is he in goodness, in passion or in ignorance?

PURPORT

In the Fourth Chapter, thirty–ninth verse, it is said that a person faithful to a particular type of worship gradually becomes elevated to the stage of knowledge and attains the highest perfectional stage of peace and prosperity. In the Sixteenth Chapter, it is concluded that one who does not follow the principles laid down in the scriptures is called an asura, demon, and one who follows the scriptural injunctions faithfully is called a deva, or demigod. Now, if one, with faith, follows some rules which are not mentioned in the scriptural injunctions, what is his position? This doubt of Arjuna's is to be cleared by Kṛṣṇa. Are those who create some sort of God by selecting a human being and placing their faith in him worshiping in goodness, passion or ignorance? Do such persons attain the perfectional stage of life? Is it possible for them to be situated in real knowledge and elevate themselves to the highest perfectional stage? Do those who do not follow the rules and regulations of the scriptures but who have faith in something and worship gods and demigods and men attain success in their effort? Arjuna is putting these questions to Kṛṣṇa.

TRANSLATION

The Supreme Lord said, according to the modes of nature acquired by the embodied soul, one's faith can be of three kinds—goodness, passion or ignorance. Now hear about these.

PURPORT

Those who know the rules and regulations of the scriptures, but, out of laziness or indolence, give up following these rules and regulations are governed by the modes of material nature. According to their previous activities in the modes of goodness, passion or ignorance, they acquire a nature which is of a specific quality. The association of the living entity with the different modes of nature has been going on perpetually since the living entity is in contact with material nature. Thus he acquires different types of mentality according to his association with the material modes. But this nature can be changed if one associates with a bona fide spiritual master and abides by his rules and the scriptures. Gradually, one can change his position from ignorance to goodness, or from passion to goodness. The conclusion is that blind faith in a particular mode of nature cannot help a person become elevated to the perfectional stage. One has to consider things carefully, with intelligence, in the association of a bona fide spiritual master. Thus one can change his position to a higher mode of nature.

yo yac-chraddhah sa eva sah

sattva-anurupa—according to the existence; sarvasya—of everyone; sraddha—faith; bhavati—becomes; bharata—O son of Bharata; sraddha—faith; mayah—full; ayam—this; purusah—living entity; yah—anyone; yat—that; sraddhah—faith; sah—that; eva—certainly; sah—he.

TRANSLATION

According to one's existence under the various modes of nature, one evolves a particular kind of faith. The living being is said to be of a particular faith according to the modes he has acquired.

PURPORT

Everyone has a particular type of faith, regardless of what he is. But his faith is considered good, passionate or ignorant according to the nature he has acquired. Thus, according to his particular type of faith, one associates with certain persons. Now the real fact is that every living being, as is stated in the Fifteenth Chapter, is originally the fragmental part and parcel of the Supreme Lord. Therefore one is originally transcendental to all the modes of material nature. But when one forgets his relationship with the Supreme Personality of Godhead and comes into contact with the material nature in conditional life, he generates his own position by association with the different varieties of material nature. The resultant artificial faith and existence are only material. Although one may be conducted by some impression, or some conception of life, still, originally, he is nirguna, or transcendental. Therefore one has to become cleansed of the material contamination that he has acquired in order to regain his relationship with the Supreme Lord. That is the only path back without fear: Krsna consciousness. If one is situated in Krsna consciousness, then that path is guaranteed for his elevation to the perfectional stage. If one does not take to this path of self-realization, then he is surely to be conducted by the influence of the modes of nature.

The word sraddha, or faith, is very significant in this verse. Sraddha or faith always comes out of the works of goodness. One's faith may be in a demigod or some created God or some mental concoction. It is supposed to be one's strong faith in something that is productive of the works of material goodness. But in material conditional life, no works of material nature are completely purified. They are mixed. They are not in pure goodness. Pure goodness is transcendental; in pure goodness one can understand the real nature of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. As long as one's faith is not completely in purified goodness, the faith is subject to contamination by any of the modes of material nature. The contaminated modes of material nature expand to the heart. Therefore according to the position of the heart in contact with a particular mode of material nature, one's faith is established. It should be understood, that if one's heart is in the mode of goodness, his faith is also in the mode of goodness. If his heart is in the mode of passion, his faith is also in the mode of passion. And if his heart is in the mode of darkness, illusion, his faith is also thus contaminated. Thus we find different types of faith in this world, and there are different types of religions due to different types of faith. The real principle of religious faith is situated in the mode of pure goodness, but because the heart is tainted, we find different types of religious principles. Thus according to different types of faith, there are different kinds of worship.

yajante—worship; sattvikah—those who are in the mode of goodness;
devan—demigods; yaksa-raksamsi rajasah—those who are in the mode of passion worship demons; pretan—dead spirits; bhuta-ganan—ghosts; ca anye—and others; yajante—worship; tamasah—in the mode of ignorance; janah—people.

TRANSLATION

Men in the mode of goodness worship the demigods; those in the mode of passion worship the demons and those in the mode of ignorance worship ghosts and spirits.

PURPORT

In this verse the Supreme Personality of Godhead describes different kinds of worshipers according to their external activities. According to scriptural injunction only the Supreme Personality of Godhead is worshipable, but those who are not very conversant with, or faithful to, the scriptural injunctions worship different objects, according to their specific situations in the modes of material nature. Those who are situated in goodness generally worship the demigods. The demigods include Brahma, Siva and others such as Indra, Candra and the sun-god. There are various demigods. Those in goodness worship a particular demigod for a particular purpose. Similarly, those who are in the mode of passion worship the demons. We recall that during the Second World War, a man in Calcutta worshiped Hitler because thanks to that war he had amassed a large amount of wealth by dealing in the black market. Similarly, those in the modes of passion and ignorance generally select a powerful man to be God. They think that anyone can be worshiped as God and that the same results will be obtained.

Now, it is clearly described here that those who are in the mode of passion worship and create such gods, and those who are in the mode of ignorance, in darkness, worship dead spirits. Sometimes people worship at the tomb of some dead man. Sexual service is also considered to be in the mode of darkness. Similarly, in remote villages in India there are worshipers of ghosts. We have seen that in India the lower-class people sometimes go to the forest, and if they have knowledge that a ghost lives in a tree, they worship that tree and offer sacrifices. These different kinds of worship are not actually God worship. God worship is for persons who are transcendently situated in pure goodness. In the Srimad-Bhagavatam (4.3.23) it is said, sattvam visuddham vasudeva-sabditam: "When a man is situated in pure goodness, he worships Vasudeva." The purport is that those who are completely purified of the material modes of nature and who are transcendently situated can worship the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

The impersonalists are supposed to be situated in the mode of goodness, and they worship five kinds of demigods. They worship the impersonal Visnu, or the Visnu form in the material world, which is known as philosophized Visnu. Visnu is the expansion of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, but the impersonalists, because they do not ultimately believe in the Supreme Personality of Godhead, imagine that the Visnu form is just another aspect of the impersonal Brahman; similarly, they imagine that Lord Brahma is the impersonal form in the material mode of passion. Thus they sometimes describe five kinds of gods that are worshipable, but because they think that the actual truth is impersonal Brahman, they dispose of all worshipable objects at the ultimate end. In conclusion, the different qualities of the material modes of nature can be purified through association with persons who are of transcendental nature.

TRANSLATION

Those who undergo severe austerities and penances not recommended in the scriptures, performing them out of pride, egoism, lust and attachment, who are impelled by passion and who torture their bodily organs as well as the Supersoul dwelling within are to be known as demons.

PURPORT

There are persons who manufacture modes of austerity and penances which are not mentioned in the scriptural injunctions. For instance, fasting for some ulterior purpose, such as to promote a purely political end is not mentioned in the scriptural directions. The scriptures recommend fasting for spiritual advancement, not for some political end or social purpose. Persons who take to such austerities are, according to Bhagavad-gita, certainly demoniac. Their acts are against the scriptural injunctions and are not beneficial for the people in general. Actually, they act out of pride, false ego, lust and attachment for material enjoyment. By such activities, not only is the combination of material elements of which the body is constructed disturbed, but also the Supreme Personality of Godhead Himself living within the body. Such unauthorized fasting or austerities for some political end are certainly very disturbing to others. They are not mentioned in the Vedic literature.

A demoniac person may think that he can force his enemy or other parties to comply with his desire by this method, but sometimes one dies by such fasting. These acts are not approved by the Supreme Personality of Godhead, and He says that those who engage in them are demons. Such demonstrations are insults to the Supreme Personality of Godhead because they are enacted in disobedience to the Vedic scriptural injunctions. The word acetasaḥ is significant in this connection. Persons of normal mental condition must obey the scriptural injunctions. Those who are not in such a position neglect and disobey the scriptures and manufacture their own way of austerities and penances. One should always remember the ultimate end of the demoniac people, as described in the previous chapter. The Lord forces them to take birth in the wombs of demoniac persons. Consequently they will live by demoniac principles life after life without knowing their relationship with the Supreme Personality of Godhead. If, however, such persons are fortunate enough to be guided by a spiritual master who can direct them to the path of Vedic wisdom, they can get out of this entanglement and ultimately achieve the supreme goal.

TRANSLATION

Even food of which all partake is of three kinds, according to the three modes of material nature. The same is true of sacrifices, austerities and charity. Listen, and I shall tell you of the distinctions of these.

PURPORT

In terms of different situations in the modes of material nature, there are differences in the manner of eating, performing sacrifices, austerities and charities. They are not all conducted on the same level. Those who can understand analytically what kind of performances are in what modes of material nature are actually wise; those who consider all kinds of sacrifice or foods or charity to be the same cannot discriminate, and they are foolish. There are missionary workers who advocate that one can do whatever he likes and attain perfection. But these foolish guides are not acting according to the direction of the scripture. They are manufacturing ways and misleading the people in general.

TRANSLATION

Foods in the mode of goodness increase the duration of life, purify one's existence and give strength, health, happiness and satisfaction. Such nourishing foods are sweet, juicy, fatty and palatable. Foods that are too bitter, too sour, salty, pungent, dry and hot, are liked by people in the mode of passion. Such foods cause pain, distress, and disease. Food cooked more than three hours before being eaten, which is tasteless, stale, putrid, decomposed and unclean, is food liked by people in the mode of ignorance.

PURPORT

The purpose of food is to increase the duration of life, purify the mind and aid bodily strength. This is its only purpose. In the past, great authorities selected those foods that best aid health and increase life's duration, such as milk products, sugar, rice, wheat, fruits and vegetables. These foods are very dear to those in the mode of goodness. Some other foods, such as baked corn and molasses, while not very palatable in themselves, can be made pleasant when mixed with milk or other foods. They are then in the mode of goodness. All these foods are pure by nature. They are quite distinct from untouchable things like meat and liquor. Fatty foods, as mentioned in the eighth verse, have no connection with animal fat obtained by slaughter. Animal fat is available in the form of milk, which is the most wonderful of all foods. Milk, butter, cheese and similar products give animal fat in a form which rules out any need for the killing of innocent creatures. It is only through brute mentality that this killing goes on. The civilized method of obtaining needed fat is by milk. Slaughter is the way of subhumans. Protein is amply available through split peas, dal, whole wheat, etc.

Foods in the mode of passion, which are bitter, too salty, or too hot or overly mixed with red pepper, cause misery by producing mucus in the stomach, leading to disease. Foods in the mode of ignorance or darkness are essentially those that are not fresh. Any food cooked more than three hours before it is eaten (except prasadam, food offered to the Lord) is considered to be in the mode of darkness. Because they are decomposing, such foods give a bad odor, which often attracts people in this mode but repulses those in the mode of goodness.

Remnants of food may be eaten only when they are part of a meal that was first offered to the Supreme Lord or first eaten by saintly persons, especially the spiritual master. Otherwise the remnants of food are considered to be in the mode of darkness, and they increase infection or disease. Such foodstuffs, although very palatable to persons in the mode of darkness, are neither liked nor even touched by those in the mode of goodness. The best food is the remnants of what is offered to the Supreme Personality of Godhead. In Bhagavad-gita the Supreme Lord says that He accepts preparations of vegetables, flour and milk when offered with devotion. Patram puspam phalam toyam. Of course, devotion and love are the chief things which the Supreme Personality of Godhead accepts. But it is also mentioned that the prasadam should be prepared in a particular way. Any food prepared by the injunctions of the scripture and offered to the Supreme Personality of Godhead can be taken even if prepared long, long ago, because such food is transcendental. Therefore to make food antiseptic, eatable and palatable for all persons, one should offer food to the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

TRANSLATION

Of sacrifices, that sacrifice performed according to duty and to scriptural rules, and with no expectation of reward, is of the nature of goodness.

PURPORT

The general tendency is to offer sacrifice with some purpose in mind, but here it is stated that sacrifice should be performed without any such desire. It should be done as a matter of duty. Take, for example, the performance of rituals in temples or in churches.

Generally they are performed with the purpose of material benefit, but that is not in the mode of goodness. One should go to a temple or church as a matter of duty, offer respect to the Supreme Personality of Godhead and offer flowers and eatables. Everyone thinks that there is no use in going to the temple just to worship God. But worship for economic benefit is not recommended in the scriptural injunctions. One should go simply to offer respect to the Deity. That will place one in the mode of goodness. It is the duty of every civilized man to obey the injunctions of the scriptures and offer respect to the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

TRANSLATION

But that sacrifice performed for some material end or benefit or performed ostentatiously, out of pride, is of the nature of passion, O chief of the Bharatas.

PURPORT

Sometimes sacrifices and rituals are performed for elevation to the heavenly kingdom or for some material benefits in this world. Such sacrifices or ritualistic performances are considered to be in the mode of passion.

TRANSLATION

And that sacrifice performed in defiance of scriptural injunctions, in which no spiritual food is distributed, no hymns are chanted and no remunerations are made to the priests, and which is faithless—that sacrifice if of the nature of ignorance.

PURPORT

Faith in the mode of darkness or ignorance is actually faithlessness. Sometimes people worship some demigod just to make money and then spend the money for recreation, ignoring the scriptural injunctions. Such ceremonial shows of religiosity are not accepted as genuine. They are all in the mode of darkness; they produce a demoniac mentality and do not benefit human society.

TRANSLATION

The austerity of the body consists of this: worship of the Supreme Lord, the brahmanas, the spiritual master, and superiors like the father and mother. Cleanliness, simplicity, celibacy and nonviolence are also austerities of the body.

PURPORT

The Supreme Godhead here explains the different kinds of austerity and penance. First He explains the austerities and penances practiced by the body. One should offer, or learn to offer, respect to God or to the demigods, the perfect, qualified brahmanas and the spiritual master and superiors like father, mother or any person who is conversant with Vedic knowledge. These should be given proper respect. One should practice cleansing oneself externally and internally, and he should learn to become simple in behavior. He should not do anything which is not sanctioned by the scriptural injunctions. He should not indulge in sex outside of married life, for sex is sanctioned in the scriptures only in marriage, not otherwise. This is called celibacy. These are penances and austerities as far as the body is concerned.

TRANSLATION

Austerity of speech consists in speaking truthfully and beneficially and in avoiding speech that offends. One should also recite the Vedas regularly.

PURPORT

One should not speak in such a way as to agitate the minds of others. Of course, when a teacher speaks, he can speak the truth for the instruction of his students, but such a teacher should not speak to others who are not his students if he will agitate their minds. This is penance as far as talking is concerned. Besides that, one should not talk nonsense. When speaking in spiritual circles, one's statements must be upheld by the scriptures. One should at once quote from scriptural authority to back up what he is saying. At the same time, such talk should be very pleasurable to the ear. By such discussions, one may derive the highest benefit and elevate human society. There is a limitless stock of Vedic literature, and one should study this. This is called penance of speech.

tapo manasam ucyate

manah—prasadah—satisfaction of the mind; saumyatvam—without duplicity towards others; maunam—gravity; atma—self; vinigraha—control; bhava—nature; samsuddhih—purification; iti—thus; etat—that is; tapah—austerity; manasam—of the mind; ucyate—is said to be.

TRANSLATION

And satisfaction, simplicity, gravity, self-control and purity of thought are the austerities of the mind.

PURPORT

To make the mind austere is to detach it from sense gratification. It should be so trained that it can be always thinking of doing good for others. The best training for the mind is gravity in thought. One should not deviate from Kṛṣṇa consciousness and must always avoid sense gratification. To purify one's nature is to become Kṛṣṇa conscious. Satisfaction of the mind can be obtained only by taking the mind away from thoughts of sense enjoyment. The more we think of sense enjoyment, the more the mind becomes dissatisfied. In the present age we unnecessarily engage the mind in so many different ways for sense gratification, and so there is no possibility of the mind's becoming satisfied. The best course is to divert the mind to the Vedic literature, which is full of satisfying stories, as in the Purāṇas and the Mahābhārata. One can take advantage of this knowledge and thus become purified. The mind should be devoid of duplicity, and one should think of the welfare of all. Silence means that one is always thinking of self-realization. The person in Kṛṣṇa consciousness observes perfect silence in this sense. Control of the mind means detaching the mind from sense enjoyment. One should be straightforward in his dealings and thereby purify his existence. All these qualities together constitute austerity in mental activities.

SYNONYMS

sraddhaya—-with faith; paraya—-transcendental; taptam—-execution; tapah—-austerity; tat—-that; tri-vidham—-three kinds; naraih—-by men; aphala-akanksibhih—-without desires for fruits; yuktaih—-engaged; sattvikam—-in the mode of goodness; paricaksate—-is called.

TRANSLATION

This threefold austerity, practiced by men whose aim is not to benefit themselves materially but to please the Supreme, is of the nature of goodness.

TEXT 18

SYNONYMS

sat—kara—respect; mana—honor; puja—artham—for worship; tapah—austerity; dambhena—pride; ca—also; eva—certainly; yat—which is; kriyate—performed; tat—that; iha—in this world; proktam—is said; rajasam—in the mode of passion; calam—flickering; adhruvam—temporary.

TRANSLATION

Those ostentatious penances and austerities which are performed in order to gain respect, honor and worship are said to be in the mode of passion. They are neither stable nor permanent.

PURPORT

Sometimes penance and austerity are executed to attract people and receive honor, respect and worship from others. Persons in the mode of passion arrange to be worshiped by subordinates and let them wash their feet and offer riches. Such arrangements artificially made by the performance of penances are considered to be in the mode of passion. The results are temporary; they can be continued for some time, but they are not permanent.

SYNONYMS

mudha—foolish; grahena—with endeavor; atmanah—of one's own self; yat—which; pidaya—by torture; kriyate—is performed; tapah—penance; parasya—to others; utsadana—artham—causing annihilation; va—or; tat—that; tamasam—in the mode of darkness; udahrtam—is said to be.

TRANSLATION

And those penances and austerities which are performed foolishly by means of obstinate self-torture, or to destroy or injure others, are said to be in the mode of ignorance.

PURPORT

There are instances of foolish penance undertaken by demons like Hiranyakasipu, who performed austere penances to become immortal and kill the demigods. He prayed to Brahma for such things, but ultimately he was killed by the Supreme Personality of Godhead. To undergo penances for something which is impossible is certainly in the mode of ignorance.

SYNONYMS

datavyam—worth giving; iti—thus; yat—that which; danam—charity; diyate—given; anupakarine—to any person irrespective of doing good; dese—in place; kale—in time; ca—also; patre—suitable person; ca—and; tat—that; danam—charity; sattvikam—in the mode of goodness; smrtam—consider.

TRANSLATION

That gift which is given out of duty, at the proper time and place, to a worthy person, and without expectation of return, is considered to be charity in the mode of goodness.

PURPORT

In the Vedic literature, charity given to a person engaged in spiritual activities is recommended. There is no recommendation for giving charity indiscriminately. Spiritual perfection is always a consideration. Therefore charity is recommended to be given at a place of pilgrimage and at lunar or solar eclipses or at the end of the month or to a qualified brahmana or a Vaisnava (devotee) or in temples. Such charities should be given without any consideration of return. Charity to the poor is sometimes given out of compassion, but if a poor man is not worth giving charity to, then there is no spiritual advancement. In other words, indiscriminate charity is not recommended in the Vedic literature.

SYNONYMS

yat—that which; tu—but; prati-upakara-artham—for the sake of getting some return; phalam—result; uddisya—desiring; va—or; punah—again; diyate—is given in charity; ca—also; pariklistam—grudgingly; tat—that; danam—charity; rajasam—in the mode of passion; smrtam—is understood to be.

TRANSLATION

But charity performed with the expectation of some return, or with a desire for fruitive results, or in a grudging mood, is said to be charity in the mode of passion.

PURPORT

Charity is sometimes performed for elevation to the heavenly kingdom and sometimes with great trouble and with repentance afterwards. "Why have I spent so much in this way?" Charity is also sometimes given under some obligation, at the request of a superior. These kinds of charity are said to be in the mode of passion.

There are many charitable foundations which offer their gifts to institutions where sense gratification goes on. Such charities are not recommended in the Vedic scripture. Only charity in the mode of goodness is recommended.

TRANSLATION

And charity performed at an improper place and time and given to unworthy persons without respect and with contempt is charity in the mode of ignorance.

PURPORT

Contributions for indulgence in intoxication and gambling are not encouraged here. That sort of contribution is in the mode of ignorance. Such charity is not beneficial; rather, sinful persons are encouraged. Similarly, if a person gives charity to a suitable person without respect and without attention, that sort of charity is also said to be in the mode of darkness.

SYNONYMS

om—indication of the Supreme; tat—that; sat—eternal; iti—that; nirdesah—indication; brahmanah—of the Supreme; tri-vidhah—three kinds; smrtah—consider; brahmanah—the brahmanas; tena—therefore; vedah—the Vedic literature; ca—also; yajnah—sacrifice; ca—also; vihitah—used; pura—formerly.

TRANSLATION

From the beginning of creation, the three syllables—om tat sat—have been used to indicate the Supreme Absolute Truth [Brahman]. They were uttered by brahmanas while chanting Vedic hymns and during sacrifices, for the satisfaction of the Supreme.

PURPORT

It has been explained that penance, sacrifice, charity and foods are divided into three categories: the modes of goodness, passion and ignorance. But whether first class, second class or third class, they are all conditioned, contaminated by the material modes of nature. When they are aimed at the Supreme—om tat sat, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, the eternal—they become means for spiritual elevation. In the scriptural injunctions such an objective is indicated. These three words, om tat sat, particularly indicate the Absolute Truth, the Supreme Personality of Godhead. In the Vedic hymns, the word om is always found.

One who acts without following the regulations of the scriptures will not attain the Absolute Truth. He will get some temporary result, but not the ultimate end of life. The conclusion is that the performance of charity, sacrifice and penance must be done in the mode of goodness. Performed in the mode of passion and ignorance, they are certainly inferior in quality. The three words om tat sat are uttered in conjunction with the holy name of the Supreme Lord, e.g., om tad visnoh. Whenever a Vedic hymn or the holy name of the Supreme Lord is uttered, om is added. This is the indication of Vedic literature. These three words are taken from Vedic hymns. Om ity etad brahmano nedistham nama (Rg Veda) indicates the first goal. Then tat tvam asi (Chandogya Upanisad 6.8.7) indicates the second goal. And sad eva saumya (Chandogya Upanisad 6.2.1) indicates the third goal. Combined they become om tat sat. Formerly when Brahma, the first created living entity, performed sacrifices, he spoke these three names of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. The same principle holds by disciplic succession. So this hymn has great significance. Bhagavad-gita recommends, therefore, that any work done should be done for om tat sat, or for the Supreme Personality of Godhead. When one performs penance, charity, and sacrifice with these three words, he is acting in Kṛṣṇa consciousness. Kṛṣṇa consciousness is a scientific execution of transcendental activities which enables one to return home, back to Godhead. There is no loss of energy in acting in such a transcendental way.

tasmat—therefore; om—beginning with om; iti—thus; udahrtya—indicating; yajna—sacrifice; dana—charity; tapah—penance; kriyah—performances; pravartante—begin; vidhana–uktah—according to scriptural regulation; satatam—always; brahma–vadinam—of the transcendentalists.

TRANSLATION

Thus the transcendentalists undertake sacrifices, charities, and penances, beginning always with om, to attain the Supreme.

PURPORT

Om tad visnō paramam padam (Rg Veda 1.22.20). The lotus feet of Visnu are the supreme devotional platform. The performance of everything on behalf of the Supreme Personality of Godhead assures the perfection of all activity.

TEXT 25

TRANSLATION

One should perform sacrifice, penance and charity with the word tat. The purpose of such transcendental activities is to get free from the material entanglement.

PURPORT

To be elevated to the spiritual position, one should not act for any material gain. Acts should be performed for the ultimate gain of being transferred to the spiritual kingdom, back to home, back to Godhead.

TRANSLATION

The Absolute Truth is the objective of devotional sacrifice, and it is indicated by the word sat. These works of sacrifice, of penance and of charity, true to the absolute nature, are performed to please the Supreme Person, O son of Prtha.

PURPORT

The words prasaste karmani, or prescribed duties, indicate that there are many activities prescribed in the Vedic literature which are purificatory processes beginning from the parental care up to the end of one's life. Such purificatory processes are adopted for the ultimate liberation of the living entity. In all such activities it is recommended that one should vibrate om tat sat. The words sad-bhave and sadhu-bhave indicate the transcendental situation. One who is acting in Krsna consciousness is called sattva, and one who is fully conscious of the activities in Krsna consciousness is called a sadhu. In the Srimad-Bhagavatam (3.25.25) it is said that the transcendental subject matter becomes clear in the association of the devotees. Without good association one cannot achieve transcendental knowledge. When initiating a person or offering the sacred thread, one vibrates the words om tat sat. Similarly, in all kinds of yajna performances, the supreme object, om tat sat is invoked. These words om tat sat are used to perfect all activities. The supreme om tat sat makes everything complete.

TEXT 28

asraddhaya—without faith; hutam—offered in sacrifice; dattam—given; tapah—penance; taptam—executed; krtam—performed; ca—also; yat—that which; asat—false; iti—thus; ucyate—is said to be; partha—O son of Prtha; na—never;

ca—also; tat—that; pretya—after death; no—nor; iha—in this life.

TRANSLATION

But sacrifices, austerities and charities performed without faith in the Supreme are nonpermanent, O son of Prtha, regardless of whatever rites are performed. They are called asat and are useless both in this life and the next.

PURPORT

Anything done without the transcendental objective—whether it be sacrifice, charity or penance—is useless. Therefore, in this verse, it is declared that such activities are abominable. Everything should be done for the Supreme in Kṛṣṇa consciousness. Without such faith, and without the proper guidance, there can never be any fruit. In all the Vedic scriptures, faith in the Supreme is advised. In the pursuit of all Vedic instructions, the ultimate goal is the understanding of Kṛṣṇa. No one can obtain success without following this principle. Therefore, the best course is to work from the very beginning in Kṛṣṇa consciousness under the guidance of a bona fide spiritual master. That is the way to make everything successful.

In the conditional state, people are attracted to worship demigods, ghosts, or Yaksas like Kuvera. The mode of goodness is better than the modes of passion and ignorance, but one who takes directly to Kṛṣṇa consciousness is transcendental to all three modes of material nature. Although there is a process of gradual elevation, if one, by the association of pure devotees, takes directly to Kṛṣṇa consciousness, that is the best way. And that is recommended in this chapter. To achieve success in this way, one must first find the proper spiritual master and receive training under his direction. Then one can achieve faith in the Supreme. When that faith matures, in course of time, it is called love of God. This love is the ultimate goal of the living entities. One should, therefore, take to Kṛṣṇa consciousness directly. That is the message of this Seventeenth Chapter.

Thus end the Bhaktivedānta Purports to the Seventeenth Chapter of the Srimad Bhagavad-gītā in the matter of the Divisions of Faith.

Chapter 18

Conclusion—The Perfection of Renunciation

TEXT 1

SYNONYMS

TRANSLATION

Arjuna said, O mighty-armed one, I wish to understand the purpose of renunciation [tyaga] and of the renounced order of life [sannyasa], O killer of the Kesi demon,

PURPORT

Actually the Bhagavad-gita is finished in seventeen chapters. The Eighteenth Chapter is a supplementary summarization of the topics discussed before. In every chapter of Bhagavad-gita, Lord Kṛṣṇa stresses that devotional service unto the Supreme Personality of Godhead is the ultimate goal of life. This same point is summarized in the Eighteenth Chapter as the most confidential path of knowledge. In the first six chapters, stress was given to devotional service: yoginam api sarvesam... "Of all yogis or transcendentalists, one who always thinks of Me within himself is best." In the next six chapters, pure devotional service and its nature and activity were discussed. In the third six chapters, knowledge, renunciation, the activities of material nature and transcendental nature, and devotional service were described. It was concluded that all acts should be performed in conjunction with the Supreme Lord, summarized by the words om tat sat, which indicate Viṣṇu, the Supreme Person. In the third part of Bhagavad-gita, devotional service was established by the example of past ācāryas and the Brahma-sūtra, the Vedānta-sūtra, which cites that devotional service is the ultimate purpose of life and nothing else. Certain impersonalists consider themselves monopolizers of the knowledge of Vedānta-sūtra, but actually the Vedānta-sūtra is meant for understanding devotional service, for the Lord Himself is the composer of the Vedānta-sūtra, and He is its knower. That is described in the Fifteenth Chapter. In every scripture, every Veda, devotional service is the objective. That is explained in Bhagavad-gita.

As in the Second Chapter a synopsis of the whole subject matter was described, similarly, in the Eighteenth Chapter also the summary of all instruction is given. The purpose of life is indicated to be renunciation and attainment of the transcendental position above the three material modes of nature. Arjuna wants to clarify the two distinct subject matters of Bhagavad-gita, namely renunciation (tyāga) and the renounced order of life (sannyāsa). Thus he is asking the meaning of these two words.

Two words used in this verse to address the Supreme Lord—Hṛṣīkeśa and Keśi-nisudana—are significant. Hṛṣīkeśa is Kṛṣṇa, the master of all senses, who can always help us attain mental serenity. Arjuna requests Him to summarize everything in such a way that he can remain equipoised. Yet he has some doubts, and doubts are always compared to demons. He therefore addresses Kṛṣṇa as Keśi-nisudana. Keśi was a most formidable demon who was killed by the Lord; now Arjuna is expecting Kṛṣṇa to kill the demon of doubt.

SYNONYMS

sri-bhagavan uvaca—the Supreme Personality of Godhead said; kamyanam—with desire; karmanam—activities; nyasam—renunciation; sannyasam—renounced order of life; kavayah—the learned; viduh—know; sarva—of all; karma—activities; phala—of results; tyagam—renunciation; prahuh—call; tyagam—renunciation; vicaksanah—the experienced.

TRANSLATION

The Supreme Lord said, to give up the results of all activities is called renunciation [tyaga] by the wise. And that state is called the renounced order of life [sannyasa] by great learned men.

PURPORT

The performance of activities for results has to be given up. This is the instruction of Bhagavad-gita. But activities leading to advanced spiritual knowledge are not to be given up. This will be made clear in the next verse. There are many prescriptions of methods for performing sacrifice for some particular purpose in the Vedic literatures. There are certain sacrifices to perform to attain a good son or to attain elevation to the higher planets, but sacrifices prompted by desires should be stopped. However, sacrifice for the purification of one's heart or for advancement in the spiritual science should not be given up.

tyajyam—must be given up; dosa-vat—as an evil; iti—thus; eke—one group; karma—work; prahuh—said; manisinah—of great thinkers; yajna—sacrifice; dana—charity; tapah—penance; karma—work; na—never; tyajyam—is to be given up; iti—thus; ca—certainly; apare—others.

TRANSLATION

Some learned men declare that all kinds of fruitive activities should be given up, but there are yet other sages who maintain that acts of sacrifice, charity and penance should never be abandoned.

PURPORT

There are many activities in the Vedic literatures which are subjects of contention. For instance, it is said that an animal can be killed in a sacrifice, yet some maintain animal killing is completely abominable. Although animal killing in a sacrifice is recommended in the Vedic literature, the animal is not considered to be killed. The sacrifice is to give a new life to the animal. Sometimes the animal is given a new animal life after being killed in the sacrifice, and sometimes the animal is promoted immediately to the human form of life. But there are different opinions among the sages. Some say that animal killing should always be avoided, and others say that for a specific sacrifice it is good. All these different opinions on sacrificial activity are now being clarified by the Lord Himself.

TRANSLATION

O best of the Bharatas, hear from Me now about renunciation. O tiger among men, there are three kinds of renunciation declared in the scriptures.

PURPORT

Although there are differences of opinion about renunciation, here the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Sri Kṛṣṇa, gives His judgment, which should be taken as final. After all, the Vedas are different laws given by the Lord. Here the Lord is personally present, and His word should be taken as final. The Lord says that the process of renunciation should be considered in terms of the modes of material nature in which they are performed.

pavanani—purifying; manisnam—even of the great souls.

TRANSLATION

Acts of sacrifice, charity and penance are not to be given up but should be performed. Indeed, sacrifice, charity and penance purify even the great souls.

PURPORT

The yogis should perform acts for the advancement of human society. There are many purificatory processes for advancing a human being to spiritual life. The marriage ceremony, for example, is considered to be one of these sacrifices. It is called vivaha–yajna. Should a sannyasi, who is in the renounced order of life and who has given up his family relations, encourage the marriage ceremony? The Lord says here that any sacrifice which is meant for human welfare should never be given up. Vivaha–yajna, the marriage ceremony, is meant to regulate the human mind to become peaceful for spiritual advancement. For most men, this vivaha–yajna should be encouraged even by persons in the renounced order of life. Sannyasis should never associate with women, but that does not mean that one who is in the lower stages of life, a young man, should not accept a wife in the marriage ceremony. All prescribed sacrifices are meant for achieving the Supreme Lord. Therefore, in the lower stages, they should not be given up. Similarly, charity is for the purification of the heart. If charity is given to suitable persons, as described previously, it leads one to advanced spiritual life.

TRANSLATION

All these activities should be performed without any expectation of result. They should be performed as a matter of duty, O son of Prtha. That is My final opinion.

PURPORT

Although all sacrifices are purifying, one should not expect any result by such performances. In other words, all sacrifices which are meant for material advancement in life should be given up, but sacrifices that purify one's existence and elevate one to the spiritual plane should not be stopped. Everything that leads to Krsna consciousness must be encouraged. In the Srimad-Bhagavatam also it is said that any activity which leads to devotional service to the Lord should be accepted. That is the highest criterion of religion. A devotee of the Lord should accept any kind of work, sacrifice or charity which will help him in the discharge of devotional service to the Lord.

TEXT 7

SYNONYMS

TRANSLATION

Prescribed duties should never be renounced. If, by illusion, one gives up his prescribed duties, such renunciation is said to be in the mode of ignorance.

PURPORT

Work for material satisfaction must be given up, but activities which promote one to spiritual activity, like cooking for the Supreme Lord and offering the food to the Lord and then accepting the food, are recommended. It is said that a person in the renounced order of life should not cook for himself. Cooking for oneself is prohibited, but cooking for the Supreme Lord is not prohibited. Similarly, a sannyasi may perform a marriage ceremony to help his disciple in the advancement of Kṛṣṇa consciousness. If one renounces such activities, it is to be understood that he is acting in the mode of darkness.

SYNONYMS

duhkham—unhappy; iti—thus; eva—certainly; yat—that which; karma—work; kaya—body; klesa—troublesome; bhayat—out of fear; tyajet—gives up; sah—that; krtva—after doing; rajasam—in the mode of passion; tyagam—renunciation; na eva—certainly not; tyaga—renounced; phalam—results; labhet—gain.

TRANSLATION

Anyone who gives up prescribed duties as troublesome, or out of fear, is said to be in the mode of passion. Such action never leads to the elevation of renunciation.

PURPORT

One who is in Kṛṣṇa consciousness should not give up earning money out of fear that he is performing fruitive activities. If by working one can engage his money in Kṛṣṇa consciousness, or if by rising early in the morning one can advance his transcendental Kṛṣṇa consciousness, one should not desist out of fear or because such activities are considered troublesome. Such renunciation is in the mode of passion. The result of passionate work is always miserable. Even if a person renounces work in that spirit, he never gets the result of renunciation.

TEXT 9

SYNONYMS

karyam—must be done; iti—thus; eva—thus; yat—that which; karma—work; niyatam—prescribed; kriyate—performed; arjuna—O Arjuna; sangam—association; tyaktva—giving up; phalam—result; ca—also; eva—certainly; sah—that; tyagah—renunciation; sattvikah—in the mode of goodness; matah—in My opinion.

TRANSLATION

But he who performs his prescribed duty only because it ought to be done, and renounces all attachment to the fruit—his renunciation is of the nature of goodness, O Arjuna.

PURPORT

Prescribed duties must be performed with this mentality. One should act without attachment for the result; he should be disassociated from the modes of work. A man working in Kṛṣṇa consciousness in a factory does not associate himself with the work of the factory, nor with the workers of the factory. He simply works for Kṛṣṇa. And when he gives up the result for Kṛṣṇa, he is acting transcendently.

TRANSLATION

Those who are situated in the mode of goodness, who neither hate inauspicious work nor are attached to auspicious work, have no doubts about work.

PURPORT

A person in Kṛṣṇa consciousness or in the mode of goodness does not hate anyone or anything which troubles his body. He does work in the proper place and at the proper time without fearing the troublesome effects of his duty. Such a person situated in transcendence should be understood to be most intelligent and beyond all doubts in his activities.

TRANSLATION

It is indeed impossible for an embodied being to give up all activities. Therefore it is said that he who renounces the fruits of action is one who has truly renounced.

PURPORT

It is said in Bhagavad-gita that one can never give up work at any time. Therefore he who works for Kṛṣṇa and does not enjoy the fruitive results, who offers everything to Kṛṣṇa, is actually a renouncer. There are many members of the International Society for Krishna Consciousness who work very hard in their office or in the factory or some other place, and whatever they earn they give to the Society. Such highly elevated souls are actually sannyasis and are situated in the renounced order of life. It is clearly outlined here how to renounce the fruits of work and for what purpose fruits should be renounced.

TEXT 12

anistam istam misram ca

SYNONYMS

anistam—leading to hell; istam—leading to heaven; misram ca—or mixture;
tri-vidham—three kinds; karmanah—work; phalam—result; bhavati—becomes; atyaginam—of the renouncer; pretya—after death; na tu—but not; sannyasinam—of the renounced order; kvacit—at any time.

TRANSLATION

For one who is not renounced, the threefold fruits of action—desirable, undesirable and mixed—accrue after death. But those who are in the renounced order of life have no such results to suffer or enjoy.

PURPORT

A person in Kṛṣṇa consciousness acting in knowledge of his relationship with Kṛṣṇa is always liberated. Therefore he does not have to enjoy or suffer the results of his acts after death.

TRANSLATION

O mighty—armed Arjuna, learn from Me of the five factors which bring about the accomplishment of all action. These are declared in sankhya philosophy to be the place of action, the performer, the senses, the endeavor, and ultimately the Supersoul.

PURPORT

A question may be raised that since any activity performed must have some reaction, how is it that the person in Krsna consciousness does not suffer or enjoy the reactions of work? The Lord is citing Vedanta philosophy to show how this is possible. He says that there are five causes for all activities, and for success in all activity, one should know these five causes. Sankhya means the stalk of knowledge, and Vedanta is the final stalk of knowledge accepted by all leading acaryas. Even Sankara accepts Vedanta—sutra as such. Therefore such authority should be consulted.

The ultimate will is invested in the Supersoul, as it is stated in the Gita, sarvasya caham hr̥di sannivistah. He is engaging everyone in certain activities. Acts done under His direction from within yield no reaction, either in this life or in the life after death.

The instruments of action are the senses, and by senses the soul acts in various ways, and for each and every action there is a different endeavor. But all one's activities depend on the will of the Supersoul, who is seated within the heart as a friend. The Supreme Lord is the supercause. Under these circumstances, he who is acting in Krsna consciousness under the direction of the Supersoul situated within the heart is naturally not bound by any activity. Those in complete Krsna consciousness are not ultimately responsible for their actions. Everything is dependent on the supreme will, the Supersoul, the Supreme

Whatever right or wrong action a man performs by body, mind or speech is caused by these five factors.

PURPORT

The words "right" and "wrong" are very significant in this verse. Right work is work done in terms of the prescribed directions in the scriptures, and wrong work is work done against the principles of the scriptural injunctions. But whatever is done requires these five factors for its complete performance.

TEXT 16

SYNONYMS

tatra—there; evam—certainly; sati—being; kartaram—of the worker; atmanam—the self; kevalam—only; tu—but; yah—anyone; pasyati—sees; akṛta-buddhitvat—due to unintelligence; na—never; sa—he; pasyati—sees; durmatih—foolish.

TRANSLATION

Therefore one who thinks himself the only doer, not considering the five factors, is certainly not very intelligent and cannot see things as they are.

PURPORT

A foolish person cannot understand that the Supersoul is sitting as a friend within and conducting his actions. Although the material causes are the place, the worker, the endeavor and the senses, the final cause is the Supreme, the Personality of Godhead. Therefore, one should see not only the four material causes, but the supreme efficient cause as well. One who does not see the Supreme thinks himself to be the doer.

TEXT 17

na hanti na nibadhyate

SYNONYMS

yasya—of one who; na—never; ahankrtah—false ego; bhavah—nature; buddhih—intelligence; yasya—one who; na—never; lipyate—is attached; hatva api—even killing; sah—he; iman—this; lokan—world; na—never; hanti—kills; na—never; nibadhyate—becomes entangled.

TRANSLATION

One who is not motivated by false ego, whose intelligence is not entangled, though he kills men in this world, is not the slayer. Nor is he bound by his actions.

PURPORT

In this verse the Lord informs Arjuna that the desire not to fight arises from false ego. Arjuna thought himself to be the doer of action, but he did not consider the supreme sanction within and without. If one does not know that a supersanction is there, why should he act? But one who knows the instrument of work, himself as the worker, and the Supreme Lord as the supreme sanctioner is perfect in doing everything. Such a person is never in illusion. Personal activity and responsibility arise from false ego and godlessness, or a lack of Kṛṣṇa consciousness. Anyone who is acting in Kṛṣṇa consciousness under the direction of the Supersoul or the Supreme Personality of Godhead, even though killing, does not kill. Nor is he ever affected with the reaction of such killing. When a soldier kills under the command of a superior officer, he is not subject to be judged. But if a soldier kills on his own personal account, then he is certainly judged by a court of law.

TEXT 18

jnanam—knowledge; jneyam—objective; pariñata—the knower; tri-vidha—three kinds; karma—work; codana—impetus; karanam—the senses; karma—work; karta—the doer; iti—thus; tri-vidhah—three kinds; karma—work; sangrahaḥ—accumulation.

TRANSLATION

Knowledge, the object of knowledge and the knower are the three factors which motivate action; the senses, the work and the doer comprise the threefold basis of action.

PURPORT

There are three kinds of impetus for daily work: knowledge, the object of knowledge and the knower. The instruments of work, the work itself and the worker are called the constituents of work. Any work done by any human being has these elements. Before one acts, there is some impetus, which is called inspiration. Any solution arrived at before work is actualized is a subtle form of work. Then work takes the form of action. First one has to undergo the psychological processes of thinking, feeling and willing, and that is called impetus. Actually the faith to perform acts is called knowledge. The inspiration to work is the same if it comes from the scripture or from the instruction of the spiritual master. When the inspiration is there and the worker is there, then actual activity takes place by the help of the senses. The mind is the center of all senses, and the object is work itself. These are the different phases of work as described in Bhagavad-gita. The sum total of all activities is called accumulation of work.

SYNONYMS

jnanam—knowledge; karma—work; ca—also; karta—worker; ca—also; tridha—three kinds; eva—certainly; guna-bhedatah—in terms of different modes of material nature; procyate—is said; guna-sankhyane—in terms of different modes; yatha-vat—as they act; srnu—hear; tani—all of them; api—also.

TRANSLATION

In accordance with the three modes of material nature, there are three kinds of knowledge, action, and performers of action. Listen as I describe them.

PURPORT

In the Fourteenth Chapter the three divisions of the modes of material nature were elaborately described. In that chapter it was said that the mode of goodness is illuminating, the mode of passion materialistic, and the mode of ignorance conducive to laziness and indolence. All the modes of material nature are binding; they are not sources of liberation. Even in the mode of goodness one is conditioned. In the Seventeenth Chapter, the different types of worship by different types of men in different modes of material nature were described. In this verse, the Lord wishes to speak about the different types of knowledge, workers, and work itself according to the three material modes.

sarva-bhutesu yenaikam

SYNONYMS

sarva—bhutesu—in all living entities; yena—by whom; ekam—one; bhavam—situation; avyayam—imperishable; iksate—does see; avibhaktam—undivided; vibhaktesu—in the numberless divided; tat—that; jnanam—knowledge; viddhi—know; sattvikam—in the mode of goodness.

TRANSLATION

That knowledge by which one undivided spiritual nature is seen in all existences, undivided in the divided, is knowledge in the mode of goodness.

PURPORT

A person who sees one spirit soul in every living being, whether a demigod, human being, animal, bird, beast, aquatic or plant, possesses knowledge in the mode of goodness. In all living entities, one spirit soul is there, although they have different bodies in terms of their previous work. As described in the Seventh Chapter, the manifestation of the living force in every body is due to the superior nature of the Supreme Lord. Thus to see that one superior nature, that living force, in every body is to see in the mode of goodness. That living energy is imperishable, although the bodies are perishable. The difference is perceived in terms of the body because there are many forms of material existence in conditional life; therefore they appear to be divided. Such impersonal knowledge finally leads to self-realization.

TEXT 21

prthaktvena—because of division; tu—but; yat jnanam—which knowledge; nana—bhavan—multifarious situations; prthag—vidhan—differently; vetti—one who knows; sarvesu—in all; bhutesu—living entities; tat jnanam—that knowledge; viddhi—must be known; rajasam—in terms of passion.

TRANSLATION

That knowledge by which a different type of living entity is seen to be dwelling in different bodies is knowledge in the mode of passion.

PURPORT

The concept that the material body is the living entity and that with the destruction of the body the consciousness is also destroyed is called knowledge in the mode of passion.
According to that knowledge, bodies differ from one another because of the development of different types of consciousness, otherwise there is no separate soul which manifests consciousness. The body is itself the soul, and there is no separate soul beyond the body.
According to such knowledge, consciousness is temporary. Or else there are no individual souls, but there is an all-pervading soul, which is full of knowledge, and this body is a manifestation of temporary ignorance. Or beyond this body there is no special individual or supreme soul. All such conceptions are considered products of the mode of passion.

SYNONYMS

yat—that which; tu—but; krtsna—vat—all in all; ekasmin—in one; karye—work; saktam—attached; ahaitukam—without cause; atattva—artha—vat—without reality; alpam—very meager; ca—and; tat—that; tamasam—in the mode of darkness; udahrtam—is spoken.

TRANSLATION

And that knowledge by which one is attached to one kind of work as the all in all, without knowledge of the truth, and which is very meager, is said to be in the mode of darkness.

PURPORT

The "knowledge" of the common man is always in the mode of darkness or ignorance because every living entity in conditional life is born into the mode of ignorance. One who does not develop knowledge through the authorities or scriptural injunctions has knowledge that is limited to the body. He is not concerned about acting in terms of the directions of scripture. For him God is money, and knowledge means the satisfaction of bodily demands. Such knowledge has no connection with the Absolute Truth. It is more or less like the knowledge of the ordinary animals: the knowledge of eating, sleeping, defending and mating. Such knowledge is described here as the product of the mode of darkness. In other words, knowledge concerning the spirit soul beyond this body is called knowledge in the mode of goodness, and knowledge producing many theories and doctrines by dint of mundane logic and mental speculation is the product of the mode of passion, and knowledge concerned with only keeping the body comfortable is said to be in the mode of ignorance.

TRANSLATION

As for actions, that action in accordance with duty, which is performed without attachment, without love or hate, by one who has renounced fruitive results, is called action in the mode of goodness.

PURPORT

Regulated occupational duties, as prescribed in the scriptures in terms of the different orders and divisions of society, performed without attachment or proprietary rights and therefore without any love or hatred, and performed in Kṛṣṇa consciousness for the satisfaction of the Supreme, without self-satisfaction or self-gratification, are called actions in the mode of goodness.

TRANSLATION

But action performed with great effort by one seeking to gratify his desires, and which is enacted from a sense of false ego, is called action in the mode of passion.

TRANSLATION

And that action performed in ignorance and delusion without consideration of future bondage or consequences, which inflicts injury and is impractical, is said to be action in the mode of ignorance.

PURPORT

One has to give account of one's actions to the state or to the agents of the Supreme Lord called the Yamadutas. Irresponsible work is destructive because it destroys the regulative principles of scriptural injunction. It is often based on violence and is distressing to other living entities. Such irresponsible work is carried out in the light of one's personal experience. This is called illusion. And all such illusory work is a product of the mode of ignorance.

TEXT 26

TRANSLATION

The worker who is free from all material attachments and false ego, who is enthusiastic and resolute and who is indifferent to success or failure, is a worker in the mode of goodness.

PURPORT

A person in Kṛṣṇa consciousness is always transcendental to the material modes of nature. He has no expectations for the result of the work entrusted to him because he is above false ego and pride. Still, he is always enthusiastic till the completion of such work. He does not worry about the distress undertaken; he is always enthusiastic. He does not care for success or failure; he is equal in both distress or happiness. Such a worker is situated in the mode of goodness.

SYNONYMS

ragi—very much attached; karma-phala—to the fruit of the work; prepsuh—desiring; lubdhah—greedy; himsa-atmakah—and always envious; asuciḥ—unclean; harsa-soka-anvitah—complicated, with joy and sorrow; karta—such a worker; rajasah—in the mode of passion; parikirtitah—is declared.

TRANSLATION

But that worker who is attached to the fruits of his labor and who passionately wants to enjoy them, who is greedy, envious and impure and moved by happiness and distress, is a worker in the mode of passion.

PURPORT

A person is too much attached to a certain kind of work or to the result because he has too much attachment for materialism or hearth and home, wife and children. Such a person has no desire for higher elevation in life. He is simply concerned with making this world as materially comfortable as possible. He is generally very greedy, and he thinks that anything attained by him is permanent and never to be lost. Such a person is envious of others and prepared to do anything wrong for sense gratification. Therefore such a person is unclean, and he does not care whether his earning is pure or impure. He is very happy if his work is successful and very much distressed when his work is not successful. Such a man is in the mode of passion.

tamasah—in the mode of ignorance; ucyate—is said to be.

TRANSLATION

And that worker who is always engaged in work against the injunctions of the scripture, who is materialistic, obstinate, cheating and expert in insulting others, who is lazy, always morose and procrastinating, is a worker in the mode of ignorance.

PURPORT

In the scriptural injunctions we find what sort of work should be performed and what sort of work should not be performed. Those who do not care for those injunctions engage in work not to be done, and such persons are generally materialistic. They work according to the modes of nature, not according to the injunctions of the scripture. Such workers are not very gentle, and generally they are always cunning and expert in insulting others. They are very lazy; even though they have some duty, they do not do it properly, and they put it aside to be done later on. Therefore they appear to be morose. They procrastinate; anything which can be done in an hour they drag on for years. Such workers are situated in the mode of ignorance.

TRANSLATION

Now, O winner of wealth, please listen as I tell you in detail of the three kinds of understanding and determination according to the three modes of nature.

PURPORT

Now after explaining knowledge, the object of knowledge and the knower, in three different divisions according to the modes of material nature, the Lord is explaining the intelligence and determination of the worker in the same way.

TRANSLATION

O son of Prtha, that understanding by which one knows what ought to be done and what ought not to be done, what is to be feared and what is not to be feared, what is binding and what is liberating, that understanding is established in the mode of goodness.

PURPORT

Actions which are performed in terms of the directions of the scriptures are called pravṛtti, or actions that deserve to be performed, and actions which are not so directed are not to be performed. One who does not know the scriptural directions becomes entangled in the actions and reactions of work. Understanding which discriminates by intelligence is situated in the mode of goodness.

TEXT 31

TRANSLATION

And that understanding which cannot distinguish between the religious way of life and the irreligious, between action that should be done and action that should not be done, that imperfect understanding, O son of Prtha, is in the mode of passion.

PURPORT

Intelligence in the mode of passion is always working perversely. It accepts religions which are not actually religions and rejects actual religion. All views and activities are misguided. Men of passionate intelligence understand a great soul to be a common man and accept a common man as a great soul. They think truth to be untruth and accept untruth as truth. In all activities they simply take the wrong path; therefore their intelligence is in the mode of passion.

TRANSLATION

That understanding which considers irreligion to be religion and religion to be irreligion, under the spell of illusion and darkness, and strives always in the wrong direction, O Partha, is in the mode of ignorance.

PURPORT

Intelligence in the mode of ignorance is always working the opposite of the way it should. It accepts religions which are not actually religions and rejects actual religion. Men in ignorance understand a great soul to be a common man and accept a common man as a great soul. They think truth to be untruth and accept untruth as truth. In all activities they simply take the wrong path; therefore their intelligence is in the mode of ignorance.

TRANSLATION

O son of Prtha, that determination which is unbreakable, which is sustained with steadfastness by yoga practice, and thus controls the mind, life, and the acts of the senses, is in the mode of goodness.

PURPORT

Yoga is a means to understand the Supreme Soul. One who is steadily fixed in the Supreme Soul with determination, concentrating one's mind, life and sensual activities on the Supreme, engages in Kṛṣṇa consciousness. That sort of determination is in the mode of goodness. The word avyabhicarinya is very significant, for it refers to persons who are engaged in Kṛṣṇa consciousness and are never deviated by any other activity.

TEXT 34

TRANSLATION

And that determination by which one holds fast to fruitive results in religion, economic development and sense gratification is of the nature of passion, O Arjuna.

PURPORT

Any person who is always desirous of fruitive results in religious or economic activities, whose only desire is sense gratification, and whose mind, life and senses are thus engaged, is in the mode of passion.

TEXT 35

TRANSLATION

And that determination which cannot go beyond dreaming, fearfulness, lamentation, moroseness and, illusion—such unintelligent determination is in the mode of darkness.

PURPORT

It should not be concluded that a person in the mode of goodness does not dream. Here dream means too much sleep. Dreaming is always present; either in the mode of goodness, passion or ignorance, dreaming is a natural occurrence. But those who cannot avoid oversleeping, who cannot avoid the pride of enjoying material objects and who are always dreaming of lording it over the material world, whose life, mind and senses are thus engaged, are considered to be in the mode of ignorance.

TRANSLATION

O best of the Bharatas, now please hear from Me about the three kinds of happiness which the conditioned soul enjoys, and by which he sometimes comes to the end of all distress. That which in the beginning may be just like poison but at the end is just like nectar and which awakens one to self-realization is said to be happiness in the mode of goodness.

PURPORT

A conditioned soul tries to enjoy material happiness again and again. Thus he chews the chewed, but, sometimes, in the course of such enjoyment, he becomes relieved from material entanglement by association with a great soul. In other words, a conditioned soul is always engaged in some type of sense gratification, but when he understands by good association that it is only a repetition of the same thing, and he is awakened to his real Kṛṣṇa consciousness, he is sometimes relieved from such repetitive so-called happiness.

In the pursuit of self-realization, one has to follow many rules and regulations to control the mind and the senses and to concentrate the mind on the self. All these procedures are very difficult, bitter like poison, but if one is successful in following the regulations and comes to the transcendental position, he begins to drink real nectar, and he enjoys life.

TRANSLATION

That happiness which is derived from contact of the senses with their objects and which appears like nectar at first but poison at the end is said to be of the nature of passion.

PURPORT

A young man and a young woman meet, and the senses drive the young man to see her, to touch her and to have sexual intercourse. In the beginning this may be very pleasing to the senses, but at the end, or after some time, it becomes just like poison. They are separated or there is divorce, there is lamentation, there is sorrow, etc. Such happiness is always in the mode of passion. Happiness derived from a combination of the senses and the sense objects is always a cause of distress and should be avoided by all means.

TRANSLATION

And that happiness which is blind to self-realization, which is delusion from beginning to end and which arises from sleep, laziness and illusion is said to be of the nature of ignorance.

PURPORT

One who takes pleasure in laziness and in sleep is certainly in the mode of darkness, and one who has no idea how to act and how not to act is also in the mode of ignorance. For the person in the mode of ignorance, everything is illusion. There is no happiness either in the beginning or the end. For the person in the mode of passion there might be some kind of ephemeral happiness in the beginning and at the end distress, but for the person in the mode of ignorance there is only distress both in the beginning and at the end.

TRANSLATION

By worship of the Lord, who is the source of all beings and who is all-pervading, man can, in the performance of his own duty, attain perfection.

PURPORT

As stated in the Fifteenth Chapter, all living beings are fragmental parts and parcels of the Supreme Lord. As such the Supreme Lord is the beginning of all living entities. This is confirmed in the Vedanta-sutra—janmady asya yatah. The Supreme Lord is therefore the beginning of life of every living entity. And the Supreme Lord, by His two energies, His external energy and internal energy, is all-pervading. Therefore one should worship the Supreme Lord with His energies. Generally the Vaisnava devotees worship the Supreme Lord with His internal energy. His external energy is a perverted reflection of the internal energy. The external energy is a background, but the Supreme Lord by the expansion of His plenary portion as Paramatma is situated everywhere. He is the Supersoul of all demigods, all human beings, all animals, everywhere. One should therefore know that as part and parcel of the Supreme Lord it is his duty to render service unto the Supreme. Everyone should be engaged in devotional service to the Lord in full Kṛṣṇa consciousness. That is recommended in this verse.

Everyone should think that he is engaged in a particular type of occupation by Hṛṣīkeśa, the master of the senses. And, by the result of the work in which one is engaged, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Śrī Kṛṣṇa, should be worshiped. If one thinks always in this way, in full Kṛṣṇa consciousness, then, by the grace of the Lord, he becomes fully aware of everything. That is the perfection of life. The Lord says in Bhagavad-gītā (12.7), tesam aham samuddhartā. The Supreme Lord Himself takes charge of delivering such a devotee. That is the highest perfection of life. In whatever occupation one may be engaged, if he serves the Supreme Lord, he will achieve the highest perfection.

sreyan—better; sva-dharmah—one's own occupation; vigunah—imperfectly performed; para-dharmat—another's occupation; su-anuṣṭhitat—perfectly done; svabhava-niyatam—prescribed duties according to one's nature; karma—work; kurvan—performing; na—never; aṣṇoti—achieve; kilbiṣam—sinful reactions.

TRANSLATION

It is better to engage in one's own occupation, even though one may perform it imperfectly, than to accept another's occupation and perform it perfectly. Prescribed duties according to one's nature, are never affected by sinful reactions.

PURPORT

One's occupational duty is prescribed in Bhagavad-gita. As already discussed in previous verses, the duties of a brahmana, ksatriya, vaisya and sudra are prescribed according to the particular modes of nature. One should not imitate another's duty. A man who is by nature attracted to the kind of work done by sudras should not artificially claim himself to be a brahmana, although he may have been born into a brahmana family. In this way one should work according to his own nature; no work is abominable, if performed in the service of the Supreme Lord. The occupational duty of a brahmana is certainly in the mode of goodness, but if a person is not by nature in the mode of goodness, he should not imitate the occupational duty of a brahmana. For a ksatriya, or administrator, there are so many abominable things; a ksatriya has to be violent to kill his enemies, and sometimes a ksatriya has to tell lies for the sake of diplomacy. Such violence and duplicity accompany political affairs, but a ksatriya is not supposed to give up his occupational duty and try to perform the duties of a brahmana.

One should act to satisfy the Supreme Lord. For example, Arjuna was a ksatriya. He was hesitating to fight the other party. But if such fighting is performed for the sake of Kṛṣṇa, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, there need be no fear of degradation. In the business field also, sometimes a merchant has to tell so many lies to make a profit. If he does not do so, there can be no profit. Sometimes a merchant says, "Oh, my dear customer, for you I am making no profit," but one should know that without profit the merchant cannot exist. Therefore it should be taken as a simple lie if a merchant says that he is not making a profit. But the merchant should not think that because he is engaged in an occupation in which the telling of lies is compulsory, he should give up his profession and pursue the profession of a brahmana. That is not recommended. Whether one is a ksatriya, a vaisya, or a sudra doesn't matter, if he serves, by his work, the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Even brahmanas, who perform different types of sacrifice, sometimes must kill animals because sometimes animals are sacrificed in such ceremonies. Similarly, if a ksatriya engaged in his own occupation kills an enemy, there is no sin incurred. In the Third Chapter these matters have been clearly and elaborately explained; every man should work for the purpose of Yajna, or for Viṣṇu, the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Anything done for personal sense gratification is a cause of bondage. The conclusion is that everyone should be engaged according to the particular mode of nature he has acquired, and he should decide to work only to serve the supreme cause of the Supreme Lord.

TEXT 48

SYNONYMS

saha—jam—born simultaneously; karma—work; kaunteya—O son of Kunti;
sa—dosam—with fault; api—although; na—never; tyajet—to be given up;
sarva—arambhah—any venture; hi—certainly; dosena—with fault; dhumena—with smoke; agnih—fire; iva—as; avrtah—covered.

TRANSLATION

Every endeavor is covered by some sort of fault, just as fire is covered by smoke.
Therefore one should not give up the work which is born of his nature, O son of Kunti, even if such work is full of fault.

PURPORT

In conditioned life, all work is contaminated by the material modes of nature. Even if one is a brahmana, he has to perform sacrifices in which animal killing is necessary. Similarly, a ksatriya, however pious he may be, has to fight enemies. He cannot avoid it. Similarly, a merchant, however pious he may be, must sometimes hide his profit to stay in business, or he may sometimes have to do business on the black market. These things are necessary; one cannot avoid them. Similarly, even though a man is a sudra serving a bad master, he has to carry out the order of the master, even though it should not be done. Despite these flaws, one should continue to carry out his prescribed duties, for they are born out of his own nature.

A very nice example is given herein. Although fire is pure, still there is smoke. Yet smoke does not make the fire impure. Even though there is smoke in the fire, fire is still considered to be the purest of all elements. If one prefers to give up the work of a ksatriya and take up the occupation of a brahmana, he is not assured that in the occupation of a brahmana there are no unpleasant duties. One may then conclude that in the material world no one can be completely free from the contamination of material nature. This example of fire and smoke is very appropriate in this connection. When in wintertime one takes a stone from the fire, sometimes smoke disturbs the eyes and other parts of the body, but still one must make use of the fire despite disturbing conditions. Similarly, one should not give up his natural occupation because there are some disturbing elements. Rather, one should be determined to serve the Supreme Lord by his occupational duty in Krsna consciousness. That is the perfectional point. When a particular type of occupation is performed for the satisfaction of the Supreme Lord, all the defects in that particular occupation are purified. When the results of work are purified, when connected with devotional service, one becomes perfect in seeing the self within, and that is self-realization.

TRANSLATION

One can obtain the results of renunciation simply by self-control and by becoming unattached to material things and disregarding material enjoyments. That is the highest perfectional stage of renunciation.

PURPORT

Real renunciation means that one should always think himself part and parcel of the Supreme Lord. Therefore he has no right to enjoy the results of his work. Since he is part and parcel of the Supreme Lord, the results of his work must be enjoyed by the Supreme Lord. This is actually Kṛṣṇa consciousness. The person acting in Kṛṣṇa consciousness is really a sannyasi, one in the renounced order of life. By such a mentality, one is satisfied because he is actually acting for the Supreme. Thus he is not attached to anything material; he becomes accustomed to not taking pleasure in anything beyond the transcendental happiness derived from the service of the Lord. A sannyasi is supposed to be free from the reactions of his past activities, but a person who is in Kṛṣṇa consciousness automatically attains this perfection without even accepting the so-called order of renunciation. This state of mind is called yogarudha, or the perfectional stage of yoga, as confirmed in the Third Chapter, yas tv atma-ratir eva syat: one who is satisfied in himself has no fear of any kind of reaction from his activity.

TRANSLATION

O son of Kunti, learn from Me in brief how one can attain to the supreme perfectional stage, Brahman, by acting in the way I shall now summarize.

PURPORT

The Lord describes for Arjuna how one can achieve the highest perfectional stage simply by being engaged in his occupational duty, performing that duty for the Supreme Personality of Godhead. One attains the supreme stage of Brahman simply by renouncing the result of his work for the satisfaction of the Supreme Lord. That is the process of self-realization. Actual perfection of knowledge is in attaining pure Krsna consciousness; that is described in the following verses.

TRANSLATION

Being purified by his intelligence and controlling the mind with determination, giving up the objects of sense gratification, being freed from attachment and hatred, one who lives in a secluded place, who eats little and who controls the body and the tongue, and is always in trance and is detached, who is without false ego, false strength, false pride, lust, anger, and who does not accept material things, such a person is certainly elevated to the position of self-realization.

PURPORT

When one is purified by knowledge, he keeps himself in the mode of goodness. Thus one becomes the controller of the mind and is always in trance. Because he is not attached to the objects of sense gratification, he does not eat more than what he requires, and he controls the activities of his body and mind. He has no false ego because he does not accept the body as himself. Nor has he a desire to make the body fat and strong by accepting so many material things. Because he has no bodily concept of life, he is not falsely proud. He is satisfied with everything that is offered to him by the grace of the Lord, and he is never angry in the absence of sense gratification. Nor does he endeavor to acquire sense objects. Thus when he is completely free from false ego, he becomes nonattached to all material things, and that is the stage of self-realization of Brahman. That stage is called the brahma-bhuta stage. When one is free from the material conception of life, he becomes peaceful and cannot be agitated. This is described in Bhagavad-gita (2.70):

apuryamanam acala-pratistham

samudram apah pravisanti yadvat

tadvat kama yam pravisanti sarve

sa santim apnoti na kama-kami

"A person who is not disturbed by the incessant flow of desires—that enter like rivers into the ocean, which is ever being filled but is always still—can alone achieve peace, and not the man who strives to satisfy such desires."

TEXT 54

brahma-bhutam prasannatma

na socati na kanksati

samah sarvesu bhutesu

mad-bhaktim labhate param

SYNONYMS

brahma-bhutam—being one with the Absolute; prasanna-atma—fully joyful; na—never; socati—laments; na—never; kanksati—desires; samah—equally disposed; sarvesu—all; bhutesu—living entities; mad-bhaktim—My devotional service; labhate—gains; param—transcendental.

TRANSLATION

One who is thus transcendently situated at once realizes the Supreme Brahman and becomes fully joyful. He never laments or desires to have anything. He is equally disposed to every living entity. In that state he attains pure devotional service unto Me.

PURPORT

To the impersonalist, achieving the brahma–bhuta stage, becoming one with the Absolute, is the last word. But for the personalist, or pure devotee, one has to go still further to become engaged in pure devotional service. This means that one who is engaged in pure devotional service to the Supreme Lord is already in a state of liberation, called brahma–bhuta, oneness with the Absolute. Without being one with the Supreme, the Absolute, one cannot render service unto Him. In the absolute conception, there is no difference between the served and the servitor; yet the distinction is there, in a higher spiritual sense.

In the material concept of life, when one works for sense gratification, there is misery, but in the absolute world, when one is engaged in pure devotional service, there is no misery. The devotee in Kṛṣṇa consciousness has nothing to lament or desire. Since God is full, a living entity who is engaged in God's service, in Kṛṣṇa consciousness, becomes also full in himself. He is just like a river cleansed of all dirty water. Because a pure devotee has no thought other than Kṛṣṇa, he is naturally always joyful. He does not lament for any material loss or gain, because he is full in the service of the Lord. He has no desire for material enjoyment because he knows that every living entity is a fragmental part and parcel of the Supreme Lord and therefore eternally a servant. He does not see, in the material world, someone as higher and someone as lower; higher and lower positions are ephemeral, and a devotee has nothing to do with ephemeral appearances or disappearances. For him stone and gold are of equal value. This is the brahma–bhuta stage, and this stage is attained very easily by the pure devotee. In that stage of existence, the idea of becoming one with the Supreme Brahman and annihilating one's individuality becomes hellish, and the idea of attaining the heavenly kingdom becomes phantasmagoria, and the senses are like broken serpents' teeth. As there is no fear of a serpent with broken teeth, so there is no fear from the senses when they are automatically controlled. The world is miserable for the materially infected person, but for a devotee the entire world is as good as Vaikuntha, or the spiritual sky. The highest personality in this material universe is no more significant than an ant for a devotee. Such a stage can be achieved by the mercy of Lord Caitanya, who preached pure devotional service in this age.

TRANSLATION

One can understand the Supreme Personality as He is only by devotional service. And when one is in full consciousness of the Supreme Lord by such devotion, he can enter into the kingdom of God.

PURPORT

The Supreme Personality of Godhead, Kṛṣṇa, and His plenary portions cannot be understood by mental speculation nor by the nondevotees. If anyone wants to understand the Supreme Personality of Godhead, he has to take to pure devotional service under the guidance of a pure devotee. Otherwise, the truth of the Supreme Personality of Godhead will always be hidden. It is already stated in Bhagavad-gītā (7.25), naḥam prakasaḥ sarvasya: He is not revealed to everyone. No one can understand God simply by erudite scholarship or mental speculation. Only one who is actually engaged in Kṛṣṇa consciousness and devotional service can understand what Kṛṣṇa is. University degrees are not helpful.

One who is fully conversant with the Kṛṣṇa science becomes eligible to enter into the spiritual kingdom, the abode of Kṛṣṇa. Becoming Brahman does not mean that one loses his identity. Devotional service is there, and as long as devotional service exists, there must be God, the devotee, and the process of devotional service. Such knowledge is never vanquished, even after liberation. Liberation involves getting free from the concept of material life; in spiritual life the same distinction is there, the same individuality is there, but in pure Kṛṣṇa consciousness. One should not misunderstand that the word visate, "enters into Me," supports the monist theory that one becomes homogeneous with the impersonal Brahman. No. Visate means that one can enter into the abode of the Supreme Lord in his individuality to engage in His association and render service unto Him. For instance, a green bird enters a green tree not to become one with the tree but to enjoy the fruits of the tree. Impersonalists generally give the example of a river flowing into the ocean and merging. This may be a source of happiness for the impersonalist, but the personalist keeps his personal individuality like an aquatic in the ocean. We find so many living entities within the ocean, if we go deep. Surface acquaintance with the ocean is not sufficient; one must have complete knowledge of the aquatics living in the ocean depths.

Because of his pure devotional service, a devotee can understand the transcendental qualities and the opulences of the Supreme Lord in truth. As it is stated in the Eleventh Chapter, only by devotional service can one understand. The same is confirmed here; one can understand the Supreme Personality of Godhead by devotional service and enter into His kingdom.

After attainment of the brahma-bhūta stage of freedom from material conceptions, devotional service begins by one's hearing about the Lord. When one hears about the Supreme Lord, automatically the brahma-bhūta stage develops, and material contamination—greediness and lust for sense enjoyment—disappears. As lust and desires disappear from the heart of a devotee, he becomes more attached to the service of the Lord, and by such attachment he becomes free from material contamination. In that state of life he can understand the Supreme Lord. This is the statement of Srīmad-Bhagavatam also. After liberation the process of bhakti, or transcendental service, continues. The Vedanta–sutra (4.1.12) confirms this: a–prayanat tatrapī hi dr̥ṣṭam. This means that after liberation the process of devotional service continues. In the Srimad–Bhagavatam, real devotional liberation is defined as the reinstatement of the living entity in his own identity, his own constitutional position. The constitutional position is already explained: every living entity is the part–and–parcel fragmental portion of the Supreme Lord. Therefore his constitutional position is to serve. After liberation, this service is never stopped. Actual liberation is getting free from misconceptions of life.

TRANSLATION

Though engaged in all kinds of activities, My devotee, under My protection, reaches the eternal and imperishable abode by My grace.

PURPORT

The word mad-vyapasrayah means under the protection of the Supreme Lord. To be free from material contamination, a pure devotee acts under the direction of the Supreme Lord or His representative, the spiritual master. There is no time limitation for a pure devotee. He is always, twenty-four hours, one hundred percent engaged in activities under the direction of the Supreme Lord. To a devotee who is thus engaged in Kṛṣṇa consciousness the Lord is very, very kind. In spite of all difficulties, he is eventually placed in the transcendental abode, or Kṛṣṇaloka. He is guaranteed entrance there; there is no doubt about it. In that supreme abode, there is no change; everything is eternal, imperishable and full of knowledge.

SYNONYMS

cetasa—by intelligence; sarva-karmani—all kinds of activities; mayi—unto Me; sannyasya—giving up; mat-parah—My protection; buddhi-yogam—devotional activities; upasritya—taking shelter of; mat-cittah—consciousness; satatam—twenty-four hours a day; bhava—just become.

TRANSLATION

In all activities just depend upon Me and work always under My protection. In such devotional service, be fully conscious of Me.

PURPORT

When one acts in Kṛṣṇa consciousness, he does not act as the master of the world. Just like a servant, one should act fully under the direction of the Supreme Lord. A servant has no individual independence. He acts only on the order of the master. A servant acting on behalf of the supreme master has no affection for profit and loss. He simply discharges his duty faithfully in terms of the order of the Lord. Now, one may argue that Arjuna was acting under the personal direction of Kṛṣṇa, but, when Kṛṣṇa is not present, how should one act? If one acts according to the direction of Kṛṣṇa in this book, as well as under the guidance of the representative of Kṛṣṇa, then the result will be the same. The Sanskrit word mat-parah is very important in this verse. It indicates that one has no goal in life save and except acting in Kṛṣṇa consciousness just to satisfy Kṛṣṇa. And, while working in that way, one should think of Kṛṣṇa only: "I have been appointed to discharge this particular duty by Kṛṣṇa." While acting in such a way, one naturally has to think of Kṛṣṇa. This is perfect Kṛṣṇa consciousness. One should, however, note that after doing something whimsically he should not offer the result to the Supreme Lord. That sort of duty is not in the devotional service of Kṛṣṇa consciousness. One should act according to the order of Kṛṣṇa. This is a very important point. That order of Kṛṣṇa comes through disciplic succession from the bona fide spiritual master. Therefore the spiritual master's order should be taken as the prime duty of life. If one gets a bona fide spiritual master and acts according to his direction, then his perfection of life in Kṛṣṇa consciousness is guaranteed.

TRANSLATION

If you become conscious of Me, you will pass over all the obstacles of conditional life by My grace. If, however, you do not work in such consciousness but act through false ego, not hearing Me, you will be lost.

PURPORT

A person in full Krsna consciousness is not unduly anxious to execute the duties of his existence. The foolish cannot understand this great freedom from all anxiety. For one who acts in Krsna consciousness, Lord Krsna becomes the most intimate friend. He always looks after His friend's comfort, and He gives Himself to His friend, who is so devotedly engaged working twenty-four hours a day to please the Lord. Therefore, no one should be carried away by the false ego of the bodily concept of life. One should not falsely think himself independent of the laws of material nature or free to act. He is already under strict material laws. But, as soon as he acts in Krsna consciousness, he is liberated, free from the material perplexities. One should note very carefully that one who is not active in Krsna consciousness is losing himself in the material whirlpool, in the ocean of birth and death. No conditioned soul actually knows what is to be done and what is not to be done, but a person who acts in Krsna consciousness is free to act because everything is prompted by Krsna from within and confirmed by the spiritual master.

SYNONYMS

yat—therefore; ahankaram—false ego; asritya—taking shelter; na—not; yotsye—shall fight; iti—thus; manyase—think; mithya esah—this is all false; vyavasayah te—your determination; prakrtih—material nature; tvam—you; niyoksyati—will engage you.

TRANSLATION

If you do not act according to My direction and do not fight, then you will be falsely directed. By your nature, you will have to be engaged in warfare.

PURPORT

Arjuna was a military man, and born of the nature of the ksatriya. Therefore his natural duty was to fight. But, due to false ego, he was fearing that by killing his teacher, grandfather and friends, there would be sinful reactions. Actually he was considering himself master of his actions, as if he were directing the good and bad results of such work. He forgot that the Supreme Personality of Godhead was present there, instructing him to fight. That is the forgetfulness of the conditioned soul. The Supreme Personality gives directions as to what is good and what is bad, and one simply has to act in Kṛṣṇa consciousness to attain the perfection of life. No one can ascertain his destiny as the Supreme Lord can; therefore the best course is to take direction from the Supreme Lord and act. No one should neglect the order of the Supreme Personality of Godhead or the order of the spiritual master who is the representative of God. One should act unhesitatingly to execute the order of the Supreme Personality of Godhead—that will keep him safe under all circumstances.

SYNONYMS

svabhava—jēna—by one's own nature; kaunteya—O son of Kuntī; nibaddhah—conditioned; svena—by one's own; karmana—activities; kartum—to do;
na—not; icchasi—like; yat—that; mohat—by illusion; karisyasi—you will act;
avasah—imperceptibly; api—even; tat—that.

TRANSLATION

Under illusion you are now declining to act according to My direction. But, compelled by your own nature, you will act all the same, O son of Kuntī.

PURPORT

If one refuses to act under the direction of the Supreme Lord, then he is compelled to act by the modes in which he is situated. Everyone is under the spell of a particular combination of the modes of nature and is acting in that way. But anyone who voluntarily engages himself under the direction of the Supreme Lord becomes glorious.

SYNONYMS

isvarah—the Supreme Lord; sarva-bhutanam—of all living entities; hrd-dese—in the location of the heart; arjuna—O Arjuna; tisthati—resides; bhramayan—causing to travel; sarva-bhutani—all living entities; yantra—machine; arudhani—being so placed; mayaya—under the spell of material energy.

TRANSLATION

The Supreme Lord is situated in everyone's heart, O Arjuna, and is directing the wanderings of all living entities, who are seated as on a machine, made of the material energy.

PURPORT

Arjuna was not the supreme knower, and his decision to fight or not to fight was confined to his limited discretion. Lord Kṛṣṇa instructed that the individual is not all in all. The Supreme Personality of Godhead, or He Himself, Kṛṣṇa, the localized Supersoul, sits in the heart directing the living being. After changing bodies, the living entity forgets his past deeds, but the Supersoul, as the knower of the past, present and future, remains the witness of all his activities. Therefore all the activities of living entities are directed by this Supersoul. The living entity gets what he deserves and is carried by the material body, which is created in the material energy under the direction of the Supersoul. As soon as a living entity is placed in a particular type of body, he has to work under the spell of that bodily situation. A person seated in a high-speed motorcar goes faster than one seated in a slower car, though the living entities, the drivers, may be the same. Similarly, by the order of the Supreme Soul, material nature fashions a particular type of body to a particular type of living entity to work according to his past desires. The living entity is not independent. One should not think himself independent of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. The individual is always under His control. Therefore his duty is to surrender, and that is the injunction of the next verse.

SYNONYMS

tam—unto Him; eva—certainly; saranam—surrender; gaccha—go; sarva-bhavena—in all respects; bharata—O son of Bharata; tat-prasadat—by His grace; param—transcendental; santim—in peace; sthanam—abode; prapsyasi—you will get; sasvatam—eternal.

TRANSLATION

O scion of Bharata, surrender unto Him utterly. By His grace you will attain transcendental peace and the supreme and eternal abode.

PURPORT

A living entity should therefore surrender unto the Supreme Personality of Godhead who is situated in everyone's heart, and that will relieve him from all kinds of miseries of this material existence. By such surrender, one will not only be released from all miseries in this life, but at the end he will reach the Supreme God. The transcendental world is described in the Vedic literature (Rg Veda 1.22.20) as tad visnoh paramam padam. Since all of creation is the kingdom of God, everything material is actually spiritual, but paramam padam specifically refers to the eternal abode, which is called the spiritual sky or Vaikuntha.

In the Fifteenth Chapter of Bhagavad-gita it is stated, sarvasya caham hrdi sannivistah: the Lord is seated in everyone's heart, so this recommendation that one should surrender unto the Supersoul sitting within means that one should surrender unto the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Krsna. Krsna has already been accepted by Arjuna as the Supreme. He was accepted in the Tenth Chapter as param brahma param dhama. Arjuna has accepted Krsna as the Supreme Personality of Godhead and the supreme abode of all living entities, not only because of his personal experience but also because of the evidence of great authorities like Narada, Asita, Devala and Vyasa.

TRANSLATION

Thus I have explained to you the most confidential of all knowledge. Deliberate on this fully, and then do what you wish to do.

PURPORT

The Lord has already explained to Arjuna the knowledge of brahma-bhuta. One who is in the brahma-bhuta condition is joyful; he never laments, nor does he desire anything. That is due to confidential knowledge. Krsna also discloses knowledge of the Supersoul. This is also Brahman knowledge, knowledge of Brahman, but it is superior.

Here Lord Kṛṣṇa tells Arjuna that he can do as he chooses. God does not interfere with the little independence of the living entity. In Bhagavad-gītā, the Lord has explained in all respects how one can elevate his living condition. The best advice imparted to Arjuna is to surrender unto the Supersoul seated within his heart. By right discrimination, one should agree to act according to the order of the Supersoul. That will help one become situated constantly in Kṛṣṇa consciousness, the highest perfectional stage of human life. Arjuna is being directly ordered by the Personality of Godhead to fight. Surrender to the Supreme Personality of Godhead is in the best interest of the living entities. It is not for the interest of the Supreme. Before surrendering, one is free to deliberate on this subject as far as the intelligence goes; that is the best way to accept the instruction of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Such instruction comes also through the spiritual master, the bona fide representative of Kṛṣṇa.

TRANSLATION

Because you are My very dear friend, I am speaking to you My supreme instruction, the most confidential knowledge of all. Hear this from Me, for it is for your benefit.

PURPORT

The Lord has given Arjuna confidential knowledge of the Supersoul within everyone's heart, and now He is giving the most confidential part of this knowledge: just surrender unto the Supreme Personality of Godhead. At the end of the Ninth Chapter He has said, man—manah: "Just always think of Me." The same instruction is repeated here to stress the essence of the teachings of Bhagavad—gita. This essence is not understood by a common man, but by one who is actually very dear to Kṛṣṇa, a pure devotee of Kṛṣṇa. This is the most important instruction in all Vedic literature. What Kṛṣṇa is saying in this connection is the most essential part of knowledge, and it should be carried out not only by Arjuna but by all living entities.

mat—manah—thinking of Me; bhava—just become; mat—bhaktah—My devotee; mat—yaji—My worshiper; mam—unto Me; namaskuru—offer your obeisances; mam—unto Me; eva—certainly; esyasi—come; satyam—truly; te—to you; pratijane—I promise; priyah—dear; asi—you are; me—Mine.

TRANSLATION

Always think of Me and become My devotee. Worship Me and offer your homage unto Me. Thus you will come to Me without fail. I promise you this because you are My very dear friend.

PURPORT

The most confidential part of knowledge is that one should become a pure devotee of Krsna and always think of Him and act for Him. One should not become an official meditator. Life should be so molded that one will always have the chance to think of Krsna. One should always act in such a way that all his daily activities are in connection with Krsna. He should arrange his life in such a way that throughout the twenty-four hours he cannot but think of Krsna. And the Lord's promise is that anyone who is in such pure Krsna consciousness will certainly return to the abode of Krsna, where he will be engaged in the association of Krsna face to face. This most confidential part of knowledge is spoken to Arjuna because he is the dear friend of Krsna. Everyone who follows the path of Arjuna can become a dear friend to Krsna and obtain the same perfection as Arjuna.

These words stress that one should concentrate his mind upon Krsna—the very form with two hands carrying a flute, the bluish boy with a beautiful face and peacock feathers in His hair. There are descriptions of Krsna found in the Brahma-samhita and other literatures. One should fix his mind on this original form of Godhead, Krsna. He should not even divert his attention to other forms of the Lord. The Lord has multiforms as Visnu, Narayana, Rama, Varaha, etc., but a devotee should concentrate his mind on the form that was present before Arjuna. Concentration of the mind on the form of Krsna constitutes the most confidential part of knowledge, and this is disclosed to Arjuna because Arjuna is the most dear friend of Krsna's.

sarva—dharman—all varieties of religion; parityajya—abandoning; mam—unto Me; ekam—only; saranam—surrender; vraja—go; aham—I; tvam—you; sarva—all; papebhyah—from sinful reactions; moksaisyami—deliver; ma—not; sucah—worry.

TRANSLATION

Abandon all varieties of religion and just surrender unto Me. I shall deliver you from all sinful reaction. Do not fear.

PURPORT

The Lord has described various kinds of knowledge, processes of religion, knowledge of the Supreme Brahman, knowledge of the Supersoul, knowledge of the different types of orders and statuses of social life, knowledge of the renounced order of life, knowledge of nonattachment, sense and mind control, meditation, etc. He has described in so many ways different types of religion. Now, in summarizing Bhagavad-gita, the Lord says that Arjuna should give up all the processes that have been explained to him; he should simply surrender to Kṛṣṇa. That surrender will save him from all kinds of sinful reactions, for the Lord personally promises to protect him.

In the Seventh Chapter it was said that only one who has become free from all sinful reactions can take to the worship of Lord Kṛṣṇa. Thus one may think that unless he is free from all sinful reactions he cannot take to the surrendering process. To such doubts it is here said that even if one is not free from all sinful reactions, simply by the process of surrendering to Śrī Kṛṣṇa he is automatically freed. There is no need of strenuous effort to free oneself from sinful reactions. One should unhesitatingly accept Kṛṣṇa as the supreme savior of all living entities. With faith and love, one should surrender unto Him.

According to the devotional process, one should simply accept such religious principles that will lead ultimately to the devotional service of the Lord. One may perform a particular occupational duty according to his position in the social order, but if by executing his duty one does not come to the point of Kṛṣṇa consciousness, all his activities are in vain. Anything that does not lead to the perfectional stage of Kṛṣṇa consciousness should be avoided. One should be confident that in all circumstances Kṛṣṇa will protect him from all difficulties. There is no need of thinking how one should keep the body and soul together. Kṛṣṇa will see to that. One should always think himself helpless and should consider Kṛṣṇa the only basis for his progress in life. As soon as one seriously engages himself in devotional service to the Lord in full Kṛṣṇa consciousness, at once he becomes freed from all contamination of material nature. There are different processes of religion and purificatory processes by cultivation of knowledge, meditation in the mystic yoga system, etc., but one who surrenders unto Kṛṣṇa does not have to execute so many methods. That simple surrender unto Kṛṣṇa will save him from unnecessarily wasting time. One can thus make all progress at once and be freed from all sinful reaction.

One should be attracted by the beautiful vision of Kṛṣṇa. His name is Kṛṣṇa because He is all-attractive. One who becomes attracted by the beautiful, all-powerful, omnipotent vision of Kṛṣṇa is fortunate. There are different kinds of transcendentalists—some of them are attached to the impersonal Brahman vision, some of them are attracted by the Supersoul feature, etc., but one who is attracted to the personal feature of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, and, above all, one who is attracted by the Supreme Personality of Godhead as Kṛṣṇa Himself, is the most perfect transcendentalist. In other words, devotional service to Kṛṣṇa, in full consciousness, is the most confidential part of knowledge, and this is the essence of the whole Bhagavad-gītā. Karma-yogis, empiric philosophers, mystics, and devotees are all called transcendentalists, but one who is a pure devotee is the best of all. The particular words used here, ma suçāḥ, "Don't fear, don't hesitate, don't worry," are very significant. One may be perplexed as to how one can give up all kinds of religious forms and simply surrender unto Kṛṣṇa, but such worry is useless.

TRANSLATION

This confidential knowledge may not be explained to those who are not austere, or devoted, or engaged in devotional service, nor to one who is envious of Me.

PURPORT

Persons who have not undergone the austerities of the religious process, who have never attempted devotional service in Kṛṣṇa consciousness, who have not tended a pure devotee, and especially those who are conscious of Kṛṣṇa as a historical personality or who are envious of the greatness of Kṛṣṇa, should not be told this most confidential part of knowledge. It is, however, sometimes found that even demoniac persons who are envious of Kṛṣṇa, worshiping Kṛṣṇa in a different way, take to the profession of explaining Bhagavad-gītā in a different way to make business, but anyone who desires actually to understand Kṛṣṇa must avoid such commentaries on Bhagavad-gīta. Actually the purpose of Bhagavad-gīta is not understandable to those who are sensuous—even if one is not sensuous but is strictly following the disciplines enjoined in the Vedic scripture, if he is not a devotee, he also cannot understand Kṛṣṇa. Even when one poses himself as a devotee of Kṛṣṇa, but is not engaged in Kṛṣṇa conscious activities, he also cannot understand Kṛṣṇa. There are many persons who envy Kṛṣṇa because He has explained in Bhagavad-gīta that He is the Supreme and that nothing is above Him or equal to Him. There are many persons who are envious of Kṛṣṇa. Such persons should not be told of Bhagavad-gīta, for they cannot understand. There is no possibility of faithless persons' understanding Bhagavad-gīta and Kṛṣṇa. Without understanding Kṛṣṇa from the authority of a pure devotee, one should not try to comment upon Bhagavad-gīta.

TRANSLATION

For one who explains the supreme secret to the devotees, devotional service is guaranteed, and at the end he will come back to Me.

PURPORT

Generally it is advised that Bhagavad-gita be discussed amongst the devotees only, for those who are not devotees will neither understand Kṛṣṇa nor Bhagavad-gita. Those who do not accept Kṛṣṇa as He is and Bhagavad-gita as it is should not try to explain Bhagavad-gita whimsically and become offenders. Bhagavad-gita should be explained to persons who are ready to accept Kṛṣṇa as the Supreme Personality of Godhead. It is a subject matter for the devotees only and not for philosophical speculators. Anyone, however, who tries sincerely to present Bhagavad-gita as it is will advance in devotional activities and reach the pure devotional state of life. As a result of such pure devotion, he is sure to go back home, back to Godhead.

TRANSLATION

And one who listens with faith and without envy becomes free from sinful reactions and attains to the planets where the pious dwell.

PURPORT

In the 67th verse of this chapter, the Lord explicitly forbade the Gita's being spoken to those who are envious of the Lord. In other words, Bhagavad-gita is for the devotees only. But it so happens that sometimes a devotee of the Lord will hold open class, and in that class all the students are not expected to be devotees. Why do such persons hold open class? It is explained here that although everyone is not a devotee, still there are many men who are not envious of Kṛṣṇa. They have faith in Him as the Supreme Personality of Godhead. If such persons hear from a bona fide devotee about the Lord, the result is that they become at once free from all sinful reactions and after that attain to the planetary system where all righteous persons are situated. Therefore simply by hearing Bhagavad-gītā, even a person who does not try to be a pure devotee attains the result of righteous activities. Thus a pure devotee of the Lord gives everyone a chance to become free from all sinful reactions and to become a devotee of the Lord.

Generally those who are free from sinful reactions, those who are righteous, very easily take to Kṛṣṇa consciousness. The word punya-karmanam is very significant here. This refers to the performance of great sacrifices. Those who are righteous in performing devotional service but who are not pure can attain the planetary system of the polestar, or Dhruvaloka, where Dhruva Maharaja is presiding. He is a great devotee of the Lord, and he has a special planet which is called the polestar.

TRANSLATION

O conqueror of wealth, Arjuna, have you heard this attentively with your mind? And are your illusions and ignorance now dispelled?

PURPORT

The Lord was acting as the spiritual master of Arjuna. Therefore it was His duty to inquire from Arjuna whether he understood the whole Bhagavad-gita in its proper perspective. If not, the Lord was ready to re-explain any point, or the whole Bhagavad-gita if so required. Actually, anyone who hears Bhagavad-gita from a bona fide spiritual master like Kṛṣṇa or His representative will find that all his ignorance is dispelled. Bhagavad-gita is not an ordinary book written by a poet or fiction writer; it is spoken by the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Any person, if he is fortunate enough to hear these teachings from Kṛṣṇa or from His bona fide spiritual representative, is sure to become a liberated person and get out of the darkness of ignorance.

TRANSLATION

Arjuna said: My dear Krsna, O infallible one, my illusion is now gone. I have regained my memory by Your mercy, and I am now firm and free from doubt and am prepared to act according to Your instructions.

PURPORT

The constitutional position of a living entity, represented by Arjuna, is that he has to act according to the order of the Supreme Lord. He is meant for self-discipline. Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu says that the actual position of the living entity is that of eternal servant of the Supreme Lord. Forgetting this principle, the living entity becomes conditioned by material nature, but in serving the Supreme Lord, he becomes the liberated servant of God. The living entity's constitutional position is to be a servitor; he has to serve either the illusory maya or the Supreme Lord. If he serves the Supreme Lord, he is in his normal condition, but if he prefers to serve the illusory external energy, then certainly he will be in bondage. In illusion the living entity is serving in this material world. He is bound by his lust and desires, yet he thinks of himself as the master of the world. This is called illusion. When a person is liberated, his illusion is over, and he voluntarily surrenders unto the Supreme to act according to His desires. The last illusion, the last snare of maya to trap the living entity, is the proposition that he is God. The living entity thinks that he is no longer a conditioned soul, but God. He is so unintelligent that he does not think that if he were God, then how could he be in doubt? That he does not consider. So that is the last snare of illusion. Actually to become free from the illusory energy is to understand Krsna, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, and agree to act according to His order.

The word moha is very important in this verse. Moha refers to that which is opposed to knowledge. Actually real knowledge is the understanding that every living being is eternally a servitor of the Lord, but instead of thinking oneself in that position, the living entity thinks that he is not a servant, that he is the master of this material world, for he wants to lord it over the material nature. That is his illusion. This illusion can be overcome by the mercy of the Lord or by the mercy of a pure devotee. When that illusion is over, one agrees to act in Kṛṣṇa consciousness.

Kṛṣṇa consciousness is acting according to Kṛṣṇa's order. A conditioned soul illusioned by the external energy of matter does not know that the Supreme Lord is the master who is full of knowledge and who is the proprietor of everything. Whatever He desires He can bestow upon His devotees; He is the friend of everyone, and He is especially inclined to His devotee. He is the controller of this material nature and of all living entities. He is also the controller of inexhaustible time, and He is full of all opulences and potencies. The Supreme Personality of Godhead can even give Himself to the devotee. One who does not know Him is under the spell of illusion; he does not become a devotee, but a servitor of maya. Arjuna, however, after hearing Bhagavad-gītā from the Supreme Personality of Godhead, became free from all illusion. He could understand that Kṛṣṇa was not only his friend, but the Supreme Personality of Godhead. And he understood Kṛṣṇa factually. So to study Bhagavad-gītā is to understand Kṛṣṇa factually. When a person is in full knowledge, he naturally surrenders to Kṛṣṇa. When Arjuna understood that it was Kṛṣṇa's plan to reduce the unnecessary increase of population, he agreed to fight according to Kṛṣṇa's desire. He again took up his weapons—his arrows and bow—to fight under the order of the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

TRANSLATION

Sanjaya said: Thus have I heard the conversation of two great souls, Krsna and Arjuna. And so wonderful is that message that my hair is standing on end.

PURPORT

In the beginning of Bhagavad-gita, Dhrtarastra inquired from his secretary Sanjaya, "What happened in the Battlefield of Kuruksetra?" The entire study was related to the heart of Sanjaya by the grace of his spiritual master, Vyasa. He thus explained the theme of the battlefield. The conversation was wonderful because such an important conversation between two great souls never took place before and would not take place again. It is wonderful because the Supreme Personality of Godhead is speaking about Himself and His energies to the living entity, Arjuna, a great devotee of the Lord. If we follow in the footsteps of Arjuna to understand Krsna, then our life will be happy and successful. Sanjaya realized this, and as he began to understand it, he related the conversation to Dhrtarastra. Now it is concluded that wherever there is Krsna and Arjuna, there is victory.

TRANSLATION

By the mercy of Vyasa, I have heard these most confidential talks directly from the master of all mysticism, Krsna, who was speaking personally to Arjuna.

PURPORT

Vyasa was the spiritual master of Sanjaya, and Sanjaya admits that it was by his mercy that he could understand the Supreme Personality of Godhead. This means that one has to understand Krsna not directly but through the medium of the spiritual master. The spiritual master is the transparent medium, although it is true that the experience is direct. This is the mystery of the disciplic succession. When the spiritual master is bona fide, then one can hear Bhagavad-gita directly, as Arjuna heard it. There are many mystics and yogis all over the world, but Krsna is the master of all yoga systems. Krsna's instruction is explicitly stated in Bhagavad-gita—surrender unto Krsna. One who does so is the topmost yogi. This is confirmed in the last verse of the Sixth Chapter. Yoginam api sarvesam.

Narada is the direct disciple of Krsna and the spiritual master of Vyasa. Therefore Vyasa is as bona fide as Arjuna because he comes in the disciplic succession, and Sanjaya is the direct disciple of Vyasa. Therefore by the grace of Vyasa, his senses were purified, and he could see and hear Kṛṣṇa directly. One who directly hears Kṛṣṇa can understand this confidential knowledge. If one does not come to the disciplic succession, he cannot hear Kṛṣṇa; therefore his knowledge is always imperfect, at least as far as understanding Bhagavad-gītā is concerned.

In Bhagavad-gītā, all the yoga systems, karma-yoga, jñāna-yoga and bhakti-yoga, are explained. Kṛṣṇa is the master of all such mysticism. It is to be understood, however, that as Arjuna was fortunate enough to understand Kṛṣṇa directly, similarly, by the grace of Vyasa, Sanjaya was also able to hear Kṛṣṇa directly. Actually there is no difference between hearing directly from Kṛṣṇa and hearing directly from Kṛṣṇa via a bona fide spiritual master like Vyasa. The spiritual master is the representative of Vyasadeva also. According to the Vedic system, on the birthday of the spiritual master, the disciples conduct the ceremony called Vyasa-pūjā.

TRANSLATION

O King, as I repeatedly recall this wondrous and holy dialogue between Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna, I take pleasure, being thrilled at every moment.

PURPORT

The understanding of Bhagavad-gītā is so transcendental that anyone who becomes conversant with the topics of Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa becomes righteous, and he cannot forget such talks. This is the transcendental position of spiritual life. In other words, one who hears the Gītā from the right source, directly from Kṛṣṇa, attains full Kṛṣṇa consciousness. The result of Kṛṣṇa consciousness is that one becomes increasingly enlightened, and he enjoys life with a thrill, not only for some time, but at every moment.

TRANSLATION

O King, when I remember the wonderful form of Lord Kṛṣṇa, I am struck with even greater wonder, and I rejoice again and again.

PURPORT

It appears that Sanjaya also, by the grace of Vyasa, could see the universal form Kṛṣṇa exhibited to Arjuna. It is, of course, said that Lord Kṛṣṇa had never exhibited such a form before. It was exhibited to Arjuna only, yet some great devotees could also see the universal form of Kṛṣṇa when it was shown to Arjuna, and Vyasa was one of them. He is one of the great devotees of the Lord, and he is considered to be a powerful incarnation of Kṛṣṇa. Vyasa disclosed this to his disciple Sanjaya, who remembered that wonderful form of Kṛṣṇa exhibited to Arjuna and enjoyed it repeatedly.

TRANSLATION

Wherever there is Krsna, the master of all mystics, and wherever there is Arjuna, the supreme archer, there will also certainly be opulence, victory, extraordinary power, and morality. That is my opinion.

PURPORT

The Bhagavad-gita began with an inquiry of Dhrtarastra. He was hopeful of the victory of his sons, assisted by great warriors like Bhishma, Drona and Karna. He was hopeful that the victory would be on his side. But, after describing the scene on the battlefield, Sanjaya told the King, "You are thinking of victory, but my opinion is that where Krsna and Arjuna are present, there will be all good fortune." He directly confirmed that Dhrtarastra could not expect victory for his side. Victory was certain for the side of Arjuna because Krsna was there. Krsna's acceptance of the post of charioteer for Arjuna was an exhibition of another opulence. Krsna is full of all opulences, and renunciation is one of them. There are many instances of such renunciation, for Krsna is also the master of renunciation.

The fight was actually between Duryodhana and Yudhisthira. Arjuna was fighting on behalf of his elder brother, Yudhisthira. Because Krsna and Arjuna were on the side of Yudhisthira, Yudhisthira's victory was certain. The battle was to decide who would rule the world, and Sanjaya predicted that the power would be transferred to Yudhisthira. It is also predicted here that Yudhisthira, after gaining victory in this battle, would flourish more and more because he was not only righteous and pious, but he was a strict moralist. He never spoke a lie during his life.

There are many less intelligent persons who take Bhagavad-gita to be a discussion of topics between two friends in a battlefield. But such a book cannot be scripture. Some may protest that Krsna incited Arjuna to fight, which is immoral, but the reality of the situation is clearly stated: Bhagavad-gita is the supreme instruction in morality. The supreme instruction of morality is stated in the Ninth Chapter, in the thirty-fourth verse: man-manā bhava mad-bhaktah. One must become a devotee of Krsna, and the essence of all religion is to surrender unto Krsna, as stated, Sarva-dharman. The instructions of Bhagavad-gita constitute the supreme process of religion and of morality. All other processes may be purifying and may lead to this process, but the last instruction of the Gita is the last word in all morality and religion: surrender unto Krsna. This is the verdict of the Eighteenth Chapter.

From Bhagavad-gita we can understand that to realize oneself by philosophical speculation and by meditation is one process, but to fully surrender unto Krsna is the highest perfection. This is the essence of the teachings of Bhagavad-gita. The path of regulative principles according to the orders of social life and according to the different courses of religion may be a confidential path of knowledge in as far as the rituals of religion are confidential, but one is still involved with meditation and cultivation of knowledge. Surrender unto Krsna in devotional service in full Krsna consciousness is the most confidential instruction and is the essence of the Eighteenth Chapter.

Another feature of Bhagavad-gita is that the actual truth is the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Krsna. Absolute Truth is realized in three features—impersonal Brahman, localized Paramatma, and the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Krsna. Perfect knowledge of the Absolute Truth means perfect knowledge of Krsna. If one understands Krsna, then all the departments of knowledge are part and parcel of that understanding. Krsna is transcendental, for He is always situated in His eternal internal potency. The living entities are manifested and are divided into two classes, eternally conditioned and eternally liberated. Such living entities are innumerable, and they are considered fundamental parts of Krsna. Material energy is manifested into twenty-four divisions. The creation is effected by eternal time, and it is created and dissolved by external energy. This manifestation of the cosmic world repeatedly becomes visible and invisible.

In Bhagavad-gita five principal subject matters have been discussed: the Supreme Personality of Godhead, material nature, the living entities, eternal time and all kinds of activities. All of these are dependent on the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Krsna. All conceptions of the Absolute Truth, namely, impersonal Brahman, localized Paramatma, or any other transcendental conception, exist within the category of understanding the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Although superficially the Supreme Personality of Godhead, the living entity, material nature and time appear to be different, nothing is different from the Supreme. But the Supreme is always different from everything. Lord Caitanya's philosophy is that of "inconceivably one and different." This system of philosophy constitutes perfect knowledge of the Absolute Truth.

The living entity in his original position is pure spirit. He is just like an atomic particle of the Supreme Spirit. The conditioned living entity, however, is the marginal energy of the Lord; he tends to be in contact with both the material energy and the spiritual energy. In other words, the living entity is situated between the two energies of the Lord, and because he belongs to the superior energy of the Lord, he has a particle of independence. By proper use of that independence he comes under the direct order of Krsna. Thus he attains his normal condition in the pleasure-giving potency.

Thus end the Bhaktivedanta Purports to the Eighteenth Chapter of the Srimad Bhagavad-gita in the matter of its Conclusion—the Perfection of Renunciation.

Invocation

Meditation on Sri Gita

O Bhagavad–gita, sung by the Supreme Lord Himself, You are the bestower of the enlightenment of Arjuna. You have been interwoven within the scripture Mahabharata by Srila Vedavyasa, the writer of the Puranas. In eighteen chapters, You are the rain of ever–flowing nectar, and the almighty potency of the Supreme Lord which delivers the whole material world of suffering. O Mother, I keep You in my heart forever.

Obeisances unto Srila Vyasadeva

O master of great, formidable intelligence, Srila Vyasadeva, whose eyes resemble the long petals of a blooming lotus flower, and who lit the lamp of knowledge which was filled with the oil of the Mahabharata – I offer my respectful obeisances unto you.

Obeisances unto the Lord as the chariot–driver of Arjuna

I offer my respectful obeisances unto the Supreme Lord Sri Krsna, who fulfills all the desires of His surrendered devotees. He holds a driving–rod in one hand while the other is poised in the gesture of instruction, and He is the extractor of the nectar of the Gita.

The glory of the Gita

The crest–jewels of the Vedas, the Upanisads, are like a cow, and the milker of the cow is Lord Sri Krsna, the son of Nanda Maharaj. Arjuna is the calf, the nectar of the Gita is the milk, and the virtuous devotees are the drinkers and enjoyers of that milk.

Obeisances unto Lord Sri Krsna

I offer my respectful obeisances unto the lotus feet of Lord Sri Krsna, who is the son of Vasudeva, the vanquisher of demons like Kamsa and Canura, the expander of the divine ecstasy of mother Devaki, the Supreme God of all gods, and the guru of the whole universe.

The battlefield represented as a river

The river, of which one bank is Bhishma and the other is Dronacarya; Jayadratha is the water, the sons of Gandhari are the blue lotus flower, and Salya is the crocodile; Krpa is the current, and Karna is the everchanging rising and ebbing tide; Asvatthama, Vikarna and company are the fearful sharks, and Duryodhana is the whirlpool – Sri Kesava is the fisherman of such a river of battle, which was crossed over by the Pandava brothers.

The Mahabharata as a lotus flower

The words of Sri Krsna Dvaipayana Vyasadeva, the son of Parasara Muni, are a pure lotus flower. The meaning of the Gita is the far-reaching fragrance of that lotus, and the various narrations are its stamens. The revelations of harikatha, narrations about the Supreme Lord, are the river. In this world, the pure devotees are the bees who are constantly absorbed in drinking the nectar of the lotus flower. May that Mahabharata lotus, which is the vanquisher of all evils in this age of Kali, graciously bestow auspiciousness upon us.

Obeisances unto the Supreme Lord

I offer my respectful obeisances unto the Supreme Lord whose glories are praised with celestial prayers by Lord Brahma, Lord Varuna, Lord Indra, Lord Rudra, and the Maruts, and whose glories are recited by the knowers of the Sama-veda; whose glories are sung by all the Vedas, along with their six subsidiary divisions and the Upanisads; who is seen within the hearts of the yogis absorbed in meditational trance, and whose infinite glories cannot be known, either by the gods or the demons. (Bhag. 12.13.1)

Before reciting or studying the scriptures, one must offer respectful obeisances unto the Lord's incarnations Nara-Narayana Rsi of Badarikasrama, the Supreme Personality of Godhead Sri Krsna, the goddess of speech Saraswati, and the writer of the scriptures, Srila Vyasadeva.

Preface

The Srimad Bhagavad-gita is unique in its wide publication and extensive circulation. Along with the commentaries of former great saints as well as modern scholars, this classic appears in various languages, both in India and other countries. The commentaries of the great Vaisnava acaryas such as Srimat Ramanuja, Srimat Madhvamuni, and Sri Sridhara Swamipada deserve special mention, while among the proponents of jnana-marga, or the scholastic path, the commentaries of Srimat Sankaracarya and Sri Madhusudana Saraswati are prominent. The commentaries of Sriyuta Bala Gangadhara Tilak and Sri Aurobindo favor the school of karma-yoga, or the path of action, and are also familiar to modern scholars. Furthermore, great thinkers of both Orient and Occident have ardently sung the glories of Sri Gita, being inspired by the ideals of its teaching. But fortunate persons of fine theistic intellect will experience the acintya-bhedabheda-siddhanta, or axiom of inconceivable simultaneous oneness and difference illustriously promulgated by the authentic followers of Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu, Gaudiya Acaryas Srila Visvanatha Cakravarti and Srila Baladeva Vidyabhusana as eminently faithful to exclusive devotion to the Supreme Lord. The learned and faithful devotees are also inspired within the core of their hearts by Srila Bhaktivinoda Thakur's Bengali commentary on Sri Gita, realizing it to be an all-harmonious treasure of divine love for Lord Sri Krsna (Krsna-prema), which is the fifth and ultimate goal of life, transcendental to religiosity, economy, sense enjoyment, and liberation.

In the introduction to the present edition my worshipful divine master, Sri Gurupadapadma Om Visnupada Paramahansa Parivrajakacarya Sri Srimad Bhakti Raksak Sridhar Dev-Goswami Maharaj has beautifully revealed to the readers the deep, internal devotional realization in his rendition. Among the numerous editions of Sri Gita presently available, few can be said to faithfully nurture pure devotion in accordance with the perfect conclusions of parampara, or bona fide descending disciplic succession. Therefore, our current endeavor has been justified. We shall consider ourselves blessed if our thoughtful readers will take the vital and all-auspicious essence of this sincere attempt to heart.

Introduction

vande sri-guru-gaurangau, radha-govinda-sundarau sa-gunau giyate catha, gita-gudhartha-gauravam

Bowing down to the holy feet of Sri Guru, Sri Gauranga, and Sri Sri Radha Govindasundara, all accompanied by Their associates, I shall sing the great glory of the hidden treasure of Srimad Bhagavad-gita. The Srimad Bhagavad-gita is well-known by the learned. Therefore, some explanation of the procedure adopted by this edition's editor must initially be given. The editor belongs to the school of thought descending in disciplic line from Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu. We will therefore distinguish that the present edition is based on the commentaries on Sri Gita as given by the preeminent, exalted Sri Gaudiya Vaisnava Acaryas, Sri Visvanatha, Sri Baladeva, and Srila Bhaktivinoda Thakura. By the manifest grace of our worshipful spiritual master, Om Visnupada Srila Bhaktisiddhanta Saraswati Goswami Prabhupada, and from hints given by the aforementioned great pure devotees, some new light has been shed herein, unfolding deeper meanings throughout the text. The devotional reader will appreciate this distinction particularly in noting the purport of the four verses (10.8–11) which were explained by Sri Visvanathapada to be the four essential verses (catuh-sloki) of the book.

Generally, Sri Gita is known as an excellent study of the science of religion. The language of Sri Gita is simple and sweet; its mood is grave, extensive, and fundamental; its thought is brief, distinct, and impartial; and its logic is sound and natural. The prologue, epilogue, exposition, review, analysis, synthesis, and art of presentation of Sri Gita is unprecedented and charming to the extreme. Sri Gita is activation for the lazy, courage for the coward, hope for the hopeless, and new life for the dying. Sri Gita unifies and sustains all ranks, whether revolutionist, occultist, optimist, renunciationist, liberationist, or full-fledged theist. From the atheist of grossly crude vision to the most elevated saint the essential conceptions of all classes of philosophers are dealt with in clear and forceful logic. The fruitive worker, the learned, and the yoga practitioner (karmi, jnani, and yogi) and the devotee of the Lord will find herein a comprehensive and illuminating exposition on the substance of their respective philosophies, and thus the book is highly esteemed by all. The essential teachings of the Vedas and Upanisads of the Aryans is directly explained, and upon a little closer scrutiny, the gist of various non-Aryan doctrines may also be detected in the text. Within the purport of Sri Gita we find that the purification of consciousness through wisdom arises from materially unmotivated performance of scripturally enjoined duties, resulting in self-knowledge absolute existential knowledge, or divine realization. In full maturity, this pure, spotless perception culminates in the quest for loving service in pure cognition, in the divine ecstatic realm.

In the analysis of sambandha–jnana, or knowledge of divine relationship, Sri Gita has revealed that the nature of the most original truth is a transcendental all–conscious personality. In the analysis of prayojana, or the supreme objective, internal inspiration of pure love in pursuit of the Supreme Absolute Reality has been mentioned as the perfectional attainment. And in the analysis of abhidheya, or the method of attaining the desired goal, the first stage has been revealed as offering all one's actions to the Supreme Lord, followed by the cultivation of internal self–knowledge, which arises according to one's progressive realization of the Lord. Finally, by giving up all other endeavors, one surrenders exclusively unto the Supreme Lord, Sri Krsna. In other words by taking shelter of pure unalloyed faith, one is situated in one's perfected divine identity and engages in divine loving service to the Lord, which is the ultimate goal of all devotional practices.

Sri Gita has clearly distinguished and delineated the characteristics of the nondevotional paths based on action (karma) and knowledge (jnana) and their corresponding achievable objectives of sense enjoyment (kama) and liberation (moksa). Therefore, the intelligent can note that by the statement, yo yac chraddhah sa eva sah, "One is identified by his particular faith", Sri Gita has drawn an objective comparison of different paths and their goals, thus disarming and exposing those who create confusion by supporting the concoction that the many paths and goals are "all one". In this respect, the following verses (6.46–47) deserve special attention:

 karmibhyas cadhiko yogi, tasmad yogi bhavarjuna yoginam api sarvesam, mad–gatenantaratmana sraddhavan bhajate yo mam, sa me yuktatamo matah

Tyaga or renunciation has been completely condemned, and its futility has been emphatically asserted. This proclamation shows the conclusive, intrinsic gift of Sri Gita. Karma–yoga, or offering one's actions to the Supreme Lord without provincial interest, is preferred above karma–tyaga, or renunciation of action and finally, full self–surrender to the Supreme Lord, Sri Krsna, with every action dedicated by divine inspiration in his loving service is the ultimate and supreme teaching of Sri Gita, one will find it to be the king of all scriptures as the bestower of the highest devotion. In its full–fledged nature, this devotion is the most supreme love divine, love for the all–attractive Supreme Personality Sri Krsna, Reality the Beautiful.

Sarva–dharman parityajya, mam ekam saranam vraja – the grand, vibrant, and resounding clarion call of Sri Gita has proclaimed the glories of life's superexcellent objective. Hidden, more hidden, and the most hidden treasures have been given, from the congregational chanting of the holy names of the Lord (sankirtana) up to spontaneous devotion (bhava–seva) in the life of total dedication to the cultivation of Krsna consciousness with exclusive surrender. This is the consistent and unanimous conclusion of the pure parampara, or descending spiritual succession, as corroborated by the genuine followers of the lotus footsteps of Sri Caitanyacandra, the original Supreme Lord, who descends to deliver the fallen souls of Kali–yuga, this iron age of quarrel and strife. May this edition be an offering unto Lord Sri Krsna.

Chapter One

Observing the Armies

Sainya–darsana

- 1) Dhrtarastra said: O Sanjaya, what did my sons and the sons of Pandu do, after assembling for battle at the holy place of Kuruksetra?
- 2) Sanjaya said: Looking over the Pandavas' soldiers and armies arrayed in military formation, King Duryodhana approached Dronacarya and spoke as follows:
- 3) O master, please observe the great armies of the Pandavas, arrayed in military formation by your intelligent disciple, Dhrstadyumna.
- 4–6) Among these soldiers are the expert bowmen Bhima and Arjuna, as well as others who are equally expert, such as Satyaki, King Virata, the great fighter Drupada, Dhrstaketu, Cekitana, the mighty hero Kasiraja, Purujit, Kuntibhoja, the noble King Saibya, valiant Yudhamanyu, heroic Uttamaauja, Abhimanyu, and the sons of Draupadi all of whom are certainly great warriors.
- 7) O best of the twice–born, please also be informed of the great heroes and leaders of our armies. I shall now fully describe them for your consideration.
- 8–9) Besides your worthy self, who are always victorious in battle, and Bhisma, Karna, Krpacarya, Asvatthama, Vikarna, Saumadatti (Bhurisrava), and Jayadratha, there are many other heroes who are expert in the art of warfare; they are all armed with various weapons and are determined to lay down their very lives for me.
- 10) Our army, headed by Bhisma, is inadequate, whereas the army of the Pandavas, protected by Bhima, is competent.
- 11) Therefore, remaining in your respective divisions at the strategic points of the formation, please cooperate to protect Grandfather Bhishma.

12) Then, with a war-cry like the roar of a lion, Bhishma, the mighty grandsire of the Kurus, loudly blew his conchshell to encourage Duryodhana.

13) At once, conchshells, kettledrums, hand-drums, bugles, and other instruments were suddenly sounded, producing a tumultuous vibration.

14) On the other side, Lord Sri Krsna and Arjuna, in a grand chariot drawn by white horses, resounded their divine conchshells.

15) Hrsikesa sounded His conchshell, Pancajanya; Dhananjaya sounded his, the Devadatta; and Bhimasena, the performer of mighty tasks, blew the great conchshell named Paundra.

16) King Yudhisthira, the son of Kunti, blew the Anantavijaya, while Nakula and Sahadeva sounded the conchshells named Sughosa and Manipuspaka respectively.

17, 18) O lord of the earth, the expert bowman Kasiraja, the great warrior Sikhandi, Dhrstadyumna, King Virata, the unconquerable Satyaki, King Drupada, the sons of Draupadi and the mighty son of Subhadra, Abhimanyu all sounded their respective conchshells.

19) The tremendous sound of those conchshells, resounding throughout the land and heavens, pierced the hearts of the sons of Dhrtarastra.

20) O King, at that time, Dhananjaya (Arjuna), mounted on a chariot decorated with the flag of Hanuman, was ready to release his weapons. Seeing Duryodhana and his company poised for battle, he picked up his bow and spoke to Sri Krsna as follows:

21–23) Arjuna said: O Krsna, please place my chariot between the two armies, so I may observe the warriors with whom I must contend on this battlefield, and who have come to fight for the satisfaction of the wicked Duryodhana.

24–25) Sanjaya said: O descendant of Bharata, after the vigilant Arjuna spoke these words, Sri Krsna (the Lord of all senses) maneuvered the grand chariot between both armies, in front of Bhishma, Drona, and all the emperors. The Lord then said: O Partha, behold the Kauravas assembled here for battle.

26) There, within both armies, Arjuna could actually see fatherly elders, grandfathers, teachers, maternal uncles, brothers, sons, grandsons, fathers-in-law, friends, and other well-wishers.

27) Thus, seeing his own kinsmen present on the battlefield, the son of Kunti, Arjuna, griefstricken and overwhelmed with great compassion, spoke the following words:

28) Arjuna said: O Krsna! Seeing my own relatives all standing before me eager for warfare, my limbs are being sapped of their strength and my mouth feels parched.

29) My whole body is trembling and bristling. I am losing grip of my bow Gandiva, and my skin is burning.

30) O Kesava! I cannot contain myself any longer. My mind is bewildered, and I see only hostile signs fraught with evil.

31) Nor do I see any good in killing my own relatives in this battle. O Krsna, I have no desire for victory, kingdom, or happiness.

32–34) O Govinda, of what value is our kingdom? What is the purpose of happiness and enjoyment, if those for whom we desire all this – teachers, fatherly elders, sons, grandfathers, maternal uncles, fathers-in-law, grandsons, brothers-in-law, and other relatives have today arrived for battle, ready to sacrifice their very lives and possessions? Therefore, O Madhusudana, even if they want to take my life, I do not wish to kill them.

35) O Janardana, even if we gain sovereignty over the three worlds, not to speak of ruling over the earth, what happiness shall we obtain by killing Duryodhana and company?

36) Only sin will befall us if we slay our teachers and guardians, even if they be our aggressors. We cannot take the lives of our own relatives, the sons of Dhrtarastra. O Madhava, how can we be happy by killing our own kinsmen?

37–38) Although these men, their hearts afflicted by greed, cannot see the grave sin of fighting with friends and killing family members, why, O Janardana, should we not refrain from this heinous act, being in full knowledge of the grave consequences?

39) With the decline of the dynasty, the religious traditions of the family are curtailed. When religious practices are thus disrupted, the entire remaining dynasty is overwhelmed by irreligion.

40) O Krsna, descendant of the Vrsni dynasty, when the family is thus predominated by irreligion, the women of the family become depraved, and from adultery, unwanted and unvirtuous progeny is born.

- 41) Undesirable progeny forces both the family and its destroyers into a hellish condition. The same fate befalls the ancestors of that family, because the regular offerings of food and water to those ancestors are discontinued.
- 42) The heinous acts of such destroyers of the dynasty cause the outbreak of mongrelized progeny. By those acts, ageless family tradition and noble high lineage are utterly devastated.
- 43) O Janardana, we have heard that persons whose familial, social, and religious traditions are disrupted dwell always in hell.
- 44) Alas! What a grave sin we have decided to commit. Driven by our greed for trifling royal happiness, we are about to kill our own kinsmen.
- 45) If unarmed and unresisting, I were to be killed on this battlefield by the armed sons of Dhrtarastra, then that would be much more auspicious for me.
- 46) Sanjaya said: Having thus spoken on the battlefield, Arjuna cast aside his bow and arrows and sat down on the chariot, his heart overwhelmed with lamentation..

Chapter Two

The Constitution of the Soul

Sankhya–yoga

1) Sanjaya said: The Supreme Lord, Madhusudana, then spoke the following words unto griefstricken Arjuna, who was overwhelmed with compassion and whose sorrowful eyes were brimming with tears.

2) The Supreme Lord said: O Arjuna, why has such illusion overcome you at this critical moment? This is unbefitting a noble man (Aryan). It is an obstacle to the attainment of heaven, and a destroyer of good name and fame.

3) O son of Kunti, give up this cowardice, for it does not become you. O great hero, cast off this petty weakness of heart, and arise for battle!

4) Arjuna said: O Madhusudana, killer of the enemy, how can I counterattack, shooting arrows at my grandsire Bhishma and teacher Drona, who are worthy of my worship?

5) It is better to live in this world by begging, without taking the lives of our great, noble elders and teachers. Otherwise, by killing them we shall only live in this world to enjoy their wealth and properties tainted with their blood.

6) We cannot understand which will be better for us victory or defeat because those sons of Dhritarastra, whom if we killed we should not care to live, now stand before us on the battlefield.

7) Now I am bewildered. What is my real duty? Overwhelmed by apprehension for the fall of our dynasty, I am begging You to please tell me clearly which course of action is most beneficial for me. I am Your surrendered disciple. Kindly instruct me..8) Even if we obtain an unrivaled, expanding empire on Earth and supremacy over the kingdom of heaven, I cannot find anything to allay this sadness which is leaving me senseless.

9) Sanjaya said: In this way, the chastiser of the enemy, the intensely alert Arjuna, addressed Krsna who is the Lord of the senses of all beings. Then he declared, "Govinda, I will not fight", and fell silent.

10) O Bharata, thereafter Sri Hrsikesa, in the midst of both armies, smilingly addressed the griefstricken Arjuna as follows:

11) The Lord said: O Arjuna, you are mourning for that which is unworthy of grief, and yet speaking words of wisdom. But the wise lament neither for the living nor the dead.

12) Never was there a time when I, you, or all these kings did not exist. As we are at present, so have we been in the past, and shall continue to be in the future.

13) As the embodied living being gradually passes in this body from childhood to youth to old age, so also that soul attains yet another body at death. The learned are not deluded by such a transformation.

14) O son of Kunti, only the engagement of the senses with their objects gives rise to the sensations for cold, heat, pleasure, and pain. But these effects are temporary they come and go. Therefore, O Bharata, you are to endure them.

15) O noblest of men, a person of steady intelligence, equipoised in pleasure and pain, undisturbed by sensual experiences, is certainly eligible for liberation.

16) Of the changeable, such as the body, there is no everlasting existence; of the everlasting soul, there is no transformation or destruction. Seers of the truth have thus distinguished and analyzed the nature of both eternal reality and temporary illusion..17) Know that the soul who pervades the entire body is imperishable. He is unchangeable and everlasting, and no one can destroy him.

18) Only these physical bodies of the eternal, indestructible, and immeasurable soul are subject to destruction. Therefore, fight, O Bharata, and do not give up your natural religious principles.

19) Those who think that the living being is a slayer, and those who think that he is slain, are both ignorant of the true nature of the soul – the soul neither slays nor is slain.

20) The soul is never born and he never dies, nor does he repeatedly come into being and undergo expansion, because he is unborn and eternal. He is inexhaustible ever–youthful yet ancient. Although the body is subject to birth and death, the soul is never destroyed.

21) O Partha, how can a person who knows the soul to be constant, indestructible, birthless, and inexhaustible, kill anyone or cause anyone to be killed?

22) As a person accepts new dress, rejecting that which is old and worn, so also the soul continues to accept a new body, giving up the old and useless one.

23) Weapons cannot pierce the soul, and fire cannot burn him. He can neither be moistened with water, nor dried by the air.

24–25) The soul is indivisible and cannot be burned, moistened, or dried up. He is everlasting, constant, unchangeable, and ever–existent. Nothing can obstruct his passage. This soul is imperceptible, inconceivable, and unaffected by the sixfold mutations (birth, existence, growth, maturity, diminution, and destruction). Therefore, knowing the soul in this way, you can no longer lament..

26–27) And, O best of warriors, even if you think that the soul is perpetually subject to birth and death, you still have no reason to lament. For one who is born, death is certain, and for one who dies, he must be reborn to undergo the reactions of his past actions. Therefore, you should not lament over the inevitable.

28) O Bharata, when all living entities are unmanifest before birth, manifest between birth and death, and again unmanifest at death, why lament for them? (This conclusion is not corroborated by saintly authorities; but if it is accepted for the sake of argument, your duty is still to fight to uphold your natural religious principles.)

29) Some see the soul as astonishing, some describe him as astonishing, some hear of him as astonishing, while others, even after hearing about him, cannot understand him at all.

30) O Bharata, the soul dwelling within the bodies of all living beings is eternal and cannot be slain. Therefore, you should not lament for anybody.

31) Moreover, considering your svadharma, you have no reason to waver, since no action is more beneficial for a ksatriya than fighting for religious justice.

Commentary: Svadharma, or the natural duty of the living entity, is of two types, according to the condition of either his bondage or liberation. In the liberated state, svadharma is devoid of the superfluous color or impetus which is found in the svadharma of material bondage. Actually, pure sva–dharma, suddha svadharma, is the liberated soul's absorption in engaging his every attempt for the divine pleasure of the Supreme Lord. On the other hand, the soul in material bondage accepts various birth throughout 8,400,000 species of life according to the fruits of his past actions, until by dint of pious or virtuous actions he obtains a human birth; then, according to his particular nature and movements he adopts a position in daiva-varnasrama, the God-centered, graded socio-religious system, as a favorable means of attaining pure svadharma of the liberated state. Thus, the practice of this favorable means is also known as svadharma in a general way. In other words, as smoke-covered fire is still known as fire regardless of its covering, similarly, although the original suddha svadharma of the soul may appear to be slightly covered, it is nonetheless counted as svadharma, within the consideration of the God-centered socio-religious system of varnasrama-dharma.

32) O Partha, such a battle, present of its own accord like the open gates of heaven, can be gained only by the most fortunate warriors.

33) In fact, if you choose not to engage in this war of religious justice, your religious principles will be lost, fame will desert you, and sin will overcome you.

34) People will speak of your infamy for all time to come, and for the renowned, infamy is worse than death.

35) Those great warriors who have highly honored you will ridicule you, considering that you were afraid to fight.

36) Your enemies will scorn your abilities with many insulting words. What could be more painful?

37) O Kaunteya, if you are killed, you will attain heaven, and if you are victorious, you will enjoy the Earth. Therefore, being confident of your success, arise for battle!

38) Knowing pleasure and pain, gain and loss, and victory and defeat to be one and the same – fight. You will be unaffected by sin.

39) I have just explained to you the wisdom of the conception of reality. Now hear of the conception of devotional service, or bhakti-yoga. O Partha, by buddhi-yoga, engaging your intelligence in devotion, you will be able to completely cut the bondage of action.

Commentary: "It will be shown herein that buddhi-yoga is a singular path. When this buddhi-yoga is seen to be limited by the ideal of action, it is known as karma-yoga; when it extends beyond karma up to the utmost limit of knowledge, it is known as jnana-yoga, or sankhya-yoga; and when, transcending the limitations of both jnana and karma, it touches bhakti, or devotion, it is then known as bhakti-yoga, or perfectly pure and complete buddhi-yoga." Srila Bhaktivinoda Thakura

40) Even a small beginning in this devotional service cannot go in vain, nor can any loss be suffered. The most insignificant practice of such devotional service saves one from the all-devouring fear of repeated birth and death in this world.

Commentary: enerally, maha-bhaya is taken as the all-devouring fear of repeated birth and death in this world of exploitation. But maha-bhaya also refers to sayujya-mukti, the liberation of merging into the impersonal nondifferentiated consciousness of Brahmaloka, Viraja, or samadhi. Renunciation leads to sayujya-mukti, the fullstop of birth and death, but not a life in the positive plane. It takes one to a permanent burial in Brahmaloka. The demon of mukti will devour one wholesale, and therefore it is even more dangerous than this ordinary worldly life of action and reaction. Mukti means a strike in the organic system, so it must be avoided. To either abuse duties in a factory or to declare a strike by cessation of duties are both abnormal. Bhukti, exploitation, and mukti, renunciation, are both fearsome ghosts. Therefore, maha-bhaya means the great apprehension fo falling prey to both the ghost of exploitation leading to repeated birth and death, as well as the ghost of committing suicide by merging into the impersonalism of incarceration in Brahmaloka fear of both bhoga-bhumi, the plane of exploitation, and tyaga-bhumi, the plane of renunciation. It is stated in the Bhakti-rasamrta-sindhu:

tavad bhakti-sukhasyatra, katham abhyudayo bhavet*

"As long as the two ghosts of exploitation and renunciation remain haunting the heart, the ecstasy of devotion to Krsna will never awaken there." (B.r.s. 1.2.22)

*anyabhilasita sunyam jnana-karmady anavrtam.
anukulyena krsnanusilanam bhaktir uttama*

"The highest devotion is that which pleases exclusively the Supreme Lord, Krsna, and it is devoid of any desire apart from His service. It is not covered by the action of daily or customary duties (karma), nor by the knowledge that searches for the impersonal nondifferentiated aspect of the Absolute (jnana), nor by the meditational attempt to become one with the Lord (yoga)." (B.r.s. 1.1.9)

Only the Supreme Lord is abhaya, beyond apprehension. Therefore only participation in His service can free one from the ghosts of exploitation and renunciation, bhukti and mukti. If we subtract bhukti and mukti, then only positive bhakti, devotion, is the remainder. Therefore without bhakti everything is maha-bhaya, great danger.

41) O descendant of the Kuru dynasty, intelligence engaged in exclusive devotion unto Me is one-pointed and firmly situated in Me, since I am its only goal. But the intelligence of those who avoid exclusive devotion to Me is splayed and characterized by endless desires because of its absorption in innumerable sense objects.

42–44) O Partha, those lascivious and ignorant persons who have no knowledge that the chief purpose of the Vedas is the attainment of the Supreme Truth, are always concerned with interpretations of its indirect, trivial aspects. They say "There is nothing worth knowing beyond this." Desirous of enjoying the fruits of their actions and seeking the attainment of heaven, those fools are attracted by the apparently enchanting (but ultimately poisonous) words of the karma–kanda section of the Vedas, wherein many processes of sacrifice and other rituals are described which yield wealth, sense enjoyment, good birth, and the fruits of one's actions. Deluded by these flowery words and enamored by worldly pleasures and opulence, the intelligence of such indiscriminate persons does not attain the resolute determination of exclusive and uninterrupted dedication to the Supreme Lord.

45) O Arjuna, when defining nondevotional paths based on action and knowledge, the Vedas deal with the three modes of material nature. Foolish men, whose intelligence is covered by exploitation and renunciation, engage themselves in the cultivation of action and knowledge. Thus, they remain in ignorance of the principal object aimed at by the Vedas, which is transcendence beyond the three modes of material nature. But Arjuna, you be free from duality, live in the association of My eternal devotees, and give up all pursuits for gain and preservation. Then by buddhi–yoga, dedicating your intelligence to Me, reach that plane which is free from material qualities, and situate yourself in that transcendence which is the object of the Vedas. In other words, withdrawing yourself from the cultivation of action and knowledge, engage exclusively in the path of devotion as commanded by the Vedas.

46) All the purposes served by several tiny ponds can at once be served better by a large lake. Similarly, the results obtained by worshiping various demigods through respective Vedic prayers may at once be surpassed by exclusive devotion unto Me. Such devotion is the one and only direction of the Vedas. A self–realized person who is thus in full knowledge of the essence of the Vedas, fulfills all necessities by exclusively worshiping the Supreme Lord in devotion.

47) I shall now describe niskama karma–yoga the path of selfless action. You have a right to perform your natural prescribed duties, but you are not entitled to any fruits of that action. You should neither act with desire to enjoy the fruits of your work, nor, as a result, should you be attached to neglecting your duties.

48) O Dhananjaya, after giving up desire for the fruits of action, situate yourself on the path of devotion (bhakti–yoga). Equally disposed to success and failure, carry out the duties prescribed according to your nature. To remain equipoised in either success or failure of the outcome of action is certainly known as yoga.

49) O Dhananjaya, fruitive action is extremely abominable in comparison to buddhi–yoga, or equilibrium in selfless action. Those who crave the fruits of their actions are misers – they are impoverished, being full of desires. Therefore, take shelter of the intelligence of which selfless action is the aim and objective.

50) A person who is not motivated by desire to enjoy the fruits of his actions rids himself of both good and bad deeds within this very life. Engage, therefore, in the path of selfless action, since such buddhi–yoga, or equilibrium in selfless action, is certainly the art of action.

51) Wise men of steady intelligence liberate themselves from the bondage of birth by renouncing the fruits born of action. Thus, they enter into that state of divine tranquillity which is attainable only by the devotees.

Chapter Three

The Path of Action

Karma–yoga

- 1) Arjuna said: O Janardana, O Kesava, if You consider that resolute and determined spiritual intelligence (vyavasayatmika buddhi) is better than action in goodness and passion, then why do You engage me in the violent activity of warfare?
- 2) My intelligence is confused by Your words. They appear to be ambiguous, sometimes supporting action and sometimes supporting knowledge. So please instruct me which of these two paths is most beneficial for me.
- 3) The Supreme Lord replied: I have already described the two types of faith to be found in this world. I have established that the learned who are aware of the conscious world, and those who are mainly active in the mundane plane, both engage in the (rudimentary) practice of the path of devotion (sadhana bhakti–yoga) by respectively following the path of knowledge and the path of selfless action offered to the Lord. Actually, the staircase leading to the land of dedication is one, while only faith is twofold, according to the steps attained by the aspirants.
- 4) Without performing scripturally enjoined duties, one cannot attain knowledge leading to freedom from action and reaction. How can a person of impure heart obtain perfection by abandoning his prescribed duties?
- 5) No one can remain without acting even for a moment. Everyone is forced to act helplessly, stimulated by the modes of material nature. Therefore, it is improper for a person of impure consciousness to reject the purificatory duties prescribed by the scriptures.
- 6) One who externally restrains his hands, legs, and other senses of action, but whose mind dwells in sense objects, is a fool. Know him as a hypocrite.

7) O Arjuna, one in married life who has controlled his senses by the mind, and who, without attachment, has begun to perform karma–yoga, through his working senses, is far superior to such a hypocrite.

8) Perform your ablutions, worship, and other daily duties. Since even bodily sustenance is not possible without action, it is better for an unqualified person to perform his duty rather than renounce it. By giving up fruitive action and regularly performing your daily obligatory duties, your heart will be gradually purified. Then, surpassing the plane of renunciation, you will attain pure devotion, beyond the mundane plane.

9) Selfless duty performed as an offering to the Supreme Lord is called yajna, or sacrifice. O Arjuna, all action performed for any other purpose is the cause of bondage in this world of repeated birth and death. Therefore, remaining unattached to the fruits of action, perform all your duties in the spirit of such sacrifice. Such action is the means of entering the path of devotion, and with the awakening of true perception of the Lord, it will enable you to attain to pure, unalloyed devotion, free from all material qualities (nirguna–bhakti).

10) In the beginning of creation, Lord Brahma created the populace along with sacrifices for the Supreme Lord Visnu. Brahma instructed thus: "Taking shelter of this religious principle of sacrifice, prosper and flourish. May this sacrifice fulfill all your desires."

11) "Propitiate the demigods by this sacrifice and those gods, thus pleased, may satisfy you by bestowing all your desired success. In this way, through mutual goodwill, you will be the gainer of great auspiciousness.

12) The demigods, who are integral parts of My external manifestation, certainly award all your necessities, being satisfied with the performance of sacrifice. By the grace of the demigods, who are all under My shelter, there is sufficient rain, sunlight, and other elements to provide ample food commodities. He who selfishly enjoys these gifts without offering them to the gods (generally by the five great sacrifices), incurs all the sins of a thief.

13) Virtuous souls are liberated from all sins arising from the five different kinds of violence towards all living entities, by accepting the remnants of foodstuffs from the five great sacrifices offered to the universal demigods. But miscreants who prepare food for their own gratification simply partake of sin.

14) From food, living beings arise, and from rains, food is produced. From the performance of sacrifice, rainfall ensues, and sacrifice is born of action.

15) Action arises from the Vedas, and the Vedas originate in Aksara, the Infallible One. Therefore, the allpervading, infallible Supreme Lord, is eternally situated within the acts of sacrifice offered unto Him.

16) O Arjuna, a man in either the stage of action or knowledge who does not follow this causal cyclic system which is directly established by the Supreme Lord, certainly leads a sinful life. Such a compulsive sense-enjoyer maintains his life in vain.

17) But there is no duty to fulfill for one who delights within the self, rejoices in the self alone, and is fully self-satisfied within. He works only for the bare necessities of bodily sustenance.

18) In this world, a self-realized person who rejoices in the soul does not accrue piety by the performance of actions, nor does he incur sin by abstaining from duties. Amongst all living entities, from the highest life-forms of the planet of Lord Brahma down to the world of immobile organisms, he never depends on anyone for any personal demand whatsoever.

19) Therefore, giving up all attachment to the fruits of action, always perform your prescribed activities as a matter of duty. By the continual performance of action without attachment, a living being attains liberation. And true liberation is the state of exclusive devotion, attained in the ultimate maturity of selfless action.

20) King Janaka and other learned personalities attained to perfection in devotion by performing their prescribed duties. Therefore, it is proper that you perform your duty for the instruction of the masses.

21) The general masses imitate the ways of great men. They follow whatever the great personality accepts as the right conclusion.

22) O Arjuna, I, the Supreme Lord, have no duty whatsoever in the three worlds, since there is nothing unobtained or necessary to be obtained by Me; and yet, personally, I am active.

23) O Arjuna, if I ever avoid activity then all men, following in My footsteps, will give up their duties.

24) If I do not perform duties, then, following My example, all the inhabitants of these worlds will renounce their duties and thereby come to ruination. Thus I will be the cause of social turmoil due to unvirtuous population, and in this way, I will be responsible for spoiling posterity.

25) O Arjuna, as ignorant, attached persons work, the wise must also work, but without attachment, in order to protect the svadharma or religious principles of those who are competent to follow the path of action. The difference is not in the actions of these two classes of men, but in their respective attitudes of attachment and indifference.

26) The scholarly proponents of the path of knowledge must not confuse ignorant, attached men by deviating them with the advice, "Leave aside action, and cultivate knowledge." Rather, controlling their own minds, the learned should perform all the various duties without desiring the results, and in this way, subsequently engage the common section in action.

27) All the various activities are in every way carried out by the (senses activated by the) modes of material nature. But a man deluded by identifying himself with his body and its extensions thinks, "I alone am accomplishing this."

28) However, O mighty-armed Arjuna, one who is in full knowledge of the classification of the material modes of goodness, passion, and ignorance, and their respective functions pertaining to the demigods, the senses, and the sense objects he does not falsely and egotistically assert himself as a performer of action, knowing well that the senses (ear, skin, eye, tongue, and nose) allotted by the controlling deities are simply engaging with their respective desirable sense objects (sound, touch, form, taste, and smell).

29) A person influenced by the modes of material nature is like a man possessed by a ghost. Completely captivated, he is addicted to sensual enjoyment of the various sense objects. One in perfect wisdom should not agitate such ignorant, dull-brained (and unqualified) persons by revealing philosophical truths to them. Rather, they should instruct them in the performance of action devoid of desire for sense enjoyment, because such action nullifies the enchantment of the modes of nature.

30) Surrender all your activities unto Me with this understanding: "All my actions are under the control of the indwelling Lord." In such consciousness, free from all sense of possessiveness and lamentation take recourse to battle (as your svadharma, natural duty).

31) Faithful and unbegrudging men who constantly practice this yoga path of selfless action as favored by Me, attain liberation from the bondage of action – even though they are active.

32) However those, who, out of envy, do not follow these teachings of Mine, are devoid of all good sense. Know such men as completely ignorant and doomed to ruination.

33) Even a learned person tends to act according to his nature, that is, his inherent evil inclinations. Therefore, the result of the living beings' endeavor to act in this way is to become enslaved by such inclinations. Then, they can no longer be disciplined by fear of either scriptural or lawful punishments.

34) Although the senses are inevitably attracted to and repulsed by their various respective objects, do not be subjugated by these whims they are the greatest enemy of the candidate for self-realization. (Devotional attachment and detachment are not indicated herein.)

35) It is better to carry out one's own duties a little imperfectly rather than faultlessly perform another's duties. Know that even death is auspicious in the discharge of one's duties appropriate to his natural position in the ordained socio-religious system, because to pursue another's path is perilous.

Commentary: Pure devotion unto Adhoksaja, the Lord who is beyond sensual purview, is the eternal superexcellent natural function of the soul. Therefore, even if such a function externally appears abominable, it is always far superior to conduct that is good in the estimation of mundane morality, which is always prejudiced by the material modes of goodness, passion, and ignorance. In the company of true saints, the progressive practice of cultivation in such pure devotion is the bestower of the ultimate merit, even if death occurs. Since ignorance-based intuition to perform unpredictable, spurious 'good' practices remains within dvitiyabhinivesa, or absorption in any object other than the Supreme Lord, such practices are bhayavah they simply lead to fear.

*bhayam dvitiyabhinivesatah syad-isad
apetasya viparyayo 'smrtih tan mayayato budha abhajat tam bhaktyaikayesam guru-devatatma
(Bhag. 11.2.37)*

"Because persons who are averse to the devotional service of the Supreme Lord have forgotten their own internal identities (as servants of the Lord) due to the action of maya, the deluding potency of the Lord, they remain within the false ego of considering the body as the self. When the attention is absorbed in mundane objects to the exclusion of the Supreme Lord Sri Krsna, one experiences fear on account of the body, family, friends, possessions, and so on. Therefore, a person of fine intelligence will worship the Lord with exclusive devotion, knowing the genuine guru to be non-different from the Lord as His most beloved servant."

36) Arjuna inquired: O descendant of the Vrsnis, by whom is the living being compelled to commit sinful activities, even against his own will?

37) The Supreme Lord replied: Certainly it is lust, born of the mode of passion, which induces a person to commit sin. Lust is the basis of the desire for sense enjoyment, and in different situations that lust becomes transformed into anger. It is utterly insatiable and extremely malicious. Know this lust alone to be the greatest enemy of the living being in this world.

38) As fire is thinly veiled by smoke, as a mirror is thickly covered with dust, and as the embryo remains completely enclosed within the womb, similarly, this lust covers the consciousness of the living being in three degrees of intensity, according to the three modes of material nature goodness, passion, and ignorance respectively.

39) O Arjuna, this lust with its underlying nescience is the perpetual enemy of the man of knowledge. Like fire which is never satisfied (by offerings of clarified butter), it covers a man's good sense of judgement.

40) It is said that the senses, the mind, and the intelligence are the favorite haunts of this terrible enemy known as lust. Covering the good sense of the living being, lust beguiles him through these channels, and hurls him down into the quagmire of gross materialism.

41) Therefore, O noblest of the Bharatas, by first bringing your own senses under control, openly deal the death blow to this lust, the embodiment of sin which ruins both jnana (discriminative knowledge of the self and non-self, as delineated in the scriptures) and vijñana (subsequent realization in divine consciousness).

42) The learned proclaim that the senses are superior to inert objects, the mind is superior to the senses, and the faculty of resolute intelligence is superior to the mind. And he who is superior to the intelligence is the soul himself.

43) O mighty Arjuna! Knowing the soul to be thus perfectly distinct from the intelligence, steady the mind with resolute intelligence and destroy the indomitable enemy, lust..

Chapter Four

The Path of Divine Knowledge

Jnana–yoga

1) The Supreme Lord said: Previously, I imparted to Surya this changeless path of knowledge, which is achieved by selfless action. Surya, the presiding deity of the sun, delivered it to his son Vaivasvata Manu, exactly as he had heard it from Me. Thereafter, Manu instructed the same knowledge to his son Ikshvaku.

2) O conqueror of the enemy, in this way, the saintly kings such as Nimi, Janaka, and others, learned this path of knowledge through the divine succession. Presently, after the passage of a long period of time, this teaching has been almost completely lost.

3) Now, I shall deliver that eternal teaching to you. Because you are My devotee and friend, this supreme, hidden path is today revealed by Me to you.

4) Arjuna said: Vivasvan, the Sungod, was born in ancient times, and You were born only recently. Therefore, how is it to be believed, that You previously instructed these teachings to him?

5) The Supreme Lord said: O Arjuna, chastiser of the enemy, both you and I have passed through many births previously. Due to My position as the supreme controller, I am able to remember all those births, whereas you, a living being of finite consciousness, cannot.

6) Although My eternal form is transcendental to birth and death, and I am the controller of all beings, I appear within the world in My original form, by My own sweet will, extending My internal potency of yoga–maya.

7) O Bharata, whenever there is a decline of religion and an uprising of irreligion, I personally appear, like a being born in this world.

8) I appear in every age to deliver the saintly devotees, to vanquish sinful miscreants, and to firmly establish true religion.

9) O Arjuna, one who actually perceives My supramundane birth and activities enacted by My sweet will, does not undergo rebirth. After giving up his present body, he attains Me. Having become subservient to My divine pleasure (hladini–sakti) in the form of My revealed divine potency, such a soul achieves eternal devotional service unto Me.

10) Freed from worldly infatuation, fear, and anger, many persons have taken refuge in Me, absorbing their hearts in hearing about Me, singing My divine glories, and remembering Me. Having become thoroughly purified by knowledge of Me and by penance endured for My sake, they attained divine love for Me.

11) As a person takes refuge in Me, I accordingly respond to him. Being the ultimate goal of all philosophies and doctrines, I am the objective to be attained by all. Certainly, O Partha, all men follow My various paths.

12) Worldly persons desiring easy success in material life worship Indra and other demigods. Such worship quickly yields the fruit of its endeavor in this world, such as the attainment of heaven.

13) I alone have created in human society the fourfold divisions of varna (brahmana etc.) according to the appropriate gradation to material qualities (goodness, etc.) and duties (sense control, etc.) In the entire world, there is no other creator apart from Me. Nonetheless, although I am the creator of the natural gradation of human society (varna–dharma), you should know Me as the nondoer since I am aloof, transcendental to the modes of material nature, and unchangeable.

14) I am never implicated by the law of karma which I have created to fulfill the destinies of the living beings, nor do I ever aspire for the results of action. (Since I am the Supreme Lord replete with all six opulences in full, the paltry fruits of worldly actions are totally insignificant to Me.) One who appreciates this conception of My singular independence from the actions of the beings of this world, and who can thus understand My unchangeable existence such a person is never bound by any action. By practicing pure devotional service, he surely comes to Me.

15) Knowing this basic principle, liberationists of previous times renounced all fruitive action, and without provincial interest performed all their activities as an offering unto Me. Likewise, you should adopt this yoga path of selfless action as did the great saintly persons of yore.

16) Even very learned men are baffled in ascertaining the nature of action and inaction. Some cannot comprehend action, while others cannot comprehend inaction. Hence, I shall now teach you about such action and inaction, knowing which you will attain liberation from the evil world.

17) Action prescribed by the Vedas, action prohibited by the scriptures, and the renunciation of action should be understood. The performance of duties is known as action (karma); the performance of prohibited actions is sinful (vikarma); and the nonperformance of action, or renunciation of action, is known as inaction (akarma). It is extremely difficult to realize the internal principle of karma, vikarma, and akarma.

18) One who realizes that the selfless action performed by the man of pure knowledge is never subject to bondage and is therefore in fact inaction whereas the abnegation practiced by renunciate of impure heart is the ill-fated cause of bondage he is, among men, the intelligent yogi and factual executor of all works.

19) One whose every action is devoid of fruitive desire, and who burns all prescribed and prohibited actions in the fire of pure knowledge, is described by the conscientious as a man of true wisdom.

20) Giving up attachment to the fruits of action, fully content in the eternal bliss within, and indifferent to the security of mundane acquisition and preservation such a person does not do anything at all, although he is fully engaged. That is, he is never bound by the fruits of his actions.

21) Having renounced all aspirations for fruitive enjoyment and all excessive endeavors for mundane acquisition, keeping his mind and body subjugated by the (developed) intelligence, if such a person even engages in spurious action for his minimal bodily sustenance, no sinful or pious reaction whatsoever is incurred by him.

22) Content with whatever is readily available, and never overwhelmed by duality based on pleasure and pain or attachment and hatred, such a person wards off envy. He is equipoised, being neither elated nor dejected in success or failure. Therefore, he is never bound by any action.

23) All actions are perfectly dissipated when performed in the spirit of sacrifice by the detached, liberated, and enlightened soul. (The actions of the worker on the path of selfless action do not lead to the consequence of apurva as postulated by the karma-mimamsaka section.)

Commentary: According to their ethical but atheistic ideology, the karma-mimamsaka philosophers (mundane rationalists) claim that pious actions produce an unseen, subtle potency known as apurva, which must fructify at the appropriate time after death. Their conception that this fruit can later be shared by others is meant to show the eternality of karma, or action, but it neglects the presence of the Supreme Autocrat. So the statement of Sri Kṛṣṇa, samagram praviliyate, "All actions are dissipated", should not be misinterpreted to mean that the actions of liberated souls will cause some remote worldly consequence, or apurva. Rather, the Lord clearly points out that the pure actions offered to Him by the pure, selfless karma-yogi do not cause any subsequent reaction to be either enjoyed or suffered by others in this mundane plane..

24) According to the basic principles of sacrifice, the sacrificial spoon, ladle, and other paraphernalia, the various offerings with clarified butter, the sacrificial fire, the priest who performs the sacrifice, and the act of offering the sacrifice and its reward all are of the nature of Brahman, the Absolute. A person who, with this understanding is constantly absorbed in divine action with one-pointed attention, certainly attains to the divine plane of the Absolute.

25) Other karma-yogis perform sacrifice in the worship of demigods such as Indra and Varuna. Other jnana-yogis, simply by vibrating the pranava mantra, Omkara, offer the individual soul (as the sacrificial clarified butter) unto the Supersoul (as the sacrificial fire).

26) Strict celibates offers their senses of hearing, touching, seeing, tasting, and smelling into the sacrificial fire of mental control. Householders engaged in their natural duties (svadharma) offer for sacrifice the sense objects of sound, touch, form, taste, and smell into the fire of the senses.

27) The monist yogis (headed by the Patanjala school) who aspire to attain to the state of withdrawal of the soul from sense objects (pratyagatma), offer all the senses and their functions of hearing, seeing, etc., as well as all ten vital life-currents and their functions into the fire of self-purification ignited by knowledge.

28) Some persons are inclined to perform sacrifice by giving articles in charity, some by strict penances headed by candrayana, some by adopting the eightfold mystic yoga practice, and yet others, through recitation and study of the Vedic scriptures. All of these persons are very diligent in their practices and adopt strict vows.

29) Others practice breath-control. Stopping the right nostril and inhaling through the left, they bring the ascending air into union with the descending; closing the left nostril and exhaling through the right, they similarly offer the descending air into the ascending; and lastly, stopping both nostrils, they check both ascending and descending airs. Yet other aspirants of sense-control offer all the senses into the life-air by reducing their food intake.

30) All these persons know well the principles of sacrifice. Having purified themselves from sins by their performance of sacrifice, they enjoy its remnants in the form of sense pleasure, wealth, and yogic perfections. And in the end they reach the aforementioned eternal plane of the Absolute.

31) O Arjuna, foremost of the Kurus, a person who never performs sacrifice cannot even attain the meager pleasures of this world; how then will it be possible for him to attain to other worlds, such as heaven?

32) All these varieties of sacrifice are mentioned either in the Vedas or allied scriptures. They all arise from vocal, mental, and bodily actions, and therefore their origin is action. When you can conceive of the principle of action (karma) in this way you will be able to attain liberation from its bondage.

33) O Arjuna, subduer of the enemy, of those various sacrifices, the sacrifice of knowledge as mentioned, brahmagnav apare ... is far superior to the sacrifice of various articles, indicated by brahmarpanam brahma havih ..., because all action ultimately culminates in knowledge.

34) You will be able to attain all this knowledge by satisfying the enlightened spiritual master with prostrate obeisances, relevant inquiry, and sincere service. Great souls who are most expert in scriptural knowledge and endowed with direct realization of the Supreme Absolute Truth will teach you that divine knowledge.

35) O Pandava, after receiving that knowledge of the truth as imparted by the guru, you will no longer be deluded. You will be able to realize that all species of life, whether man, bird, or beast, are common in their individual identities of spirit soul, or jivatma. Their comparative mundane gradations are only due to external attributes, and they are all situated within Me as effect, Myself being the supreme cause.

36) Even if you have led the most abominable sinful life, you will cross the ocean of all miseries by boarding the ship of knowledge.

37) As a blazing fire reduces the wood and everything else within it to ashes, O Arjuna, so also does the fire of knowledge burn up all action.

38) Among the aforementioned practices of sacrifice, austerity, and yoga, there is nothing as pure as divine knowledge. After a long time, a person who has achieved perfection in his practice on the path of selfless action realizes such knowledge spontaneously within his heart.

39) After internal purification through nonfruitive action, genuine knowledge arises. Such knowledge is attained by the intelligent, sense-controlled theist who accepts this scriptural purport, and who with sublime faith remains devoted to the path of selfless action. He swiftly attains the profound tranquillity of eradicating the vicious cycle of recurring birth and death.

40) One who is a fool devoid of scriptural knowledge, just like an ignorant animal; or who, in spite of possessing knowledge of the scriptures is devoid of faith in their substance, due to being distracted by many diverse philosophies; or who possesses some faith, yet thinks, "Will I succeed or not?" any person whose heart is seized by doubt in this way can never achieve actual good fortune. Such a doubting soul does not attain happiness either in this life or the next, since the anxiety of uncertainty vanquishes his peace.

41) O Dhananjaya, after renouncing all actions by following the path of selfless action, one who destroys all doubts by following the path of divine knowledge and realizes his internal divine nature, can certainly never be implicated by any action.

42) Therefore, O Bharata, with the sword of divine knowledge, slash to shreds all these doubts in your heart, which are born of ignorance alone. Take refuge in selfless duty, and arise for battle.

Chapter Five

The Path of Divine Harmony

Karma-sannyasa-yoga

- 1) Arjuna said: O Krsna, after instructing me in renunciation of action. You are again advocating the path of selfless action. Therefore, please give me a clear understanding which of the two is most beneficial for me.
- 2) The Supreme Lord said: Both renunciation of action and the path of selfless action are greatly beneficial. Yet, of the two, you will have to understand that the application of selfless action is superior.
- 3) It should be known that one who is free from the duality of attraction and hatred, and who neither desires nor abhors the fruits of action, remains a renunciate even though he engages in activities. Because, O mighty-armed Arjuna, such a person very easily attains liberation from this mundane plane of bondage.
- 4) The learned do not support the opinion of the childishly foolish mundane rationalists (known as karma-mimamsakas) who hold that the path of renunciation (sankhya-yoga) and the path of action (karma-yoga) are separate. One who carefully follows either of these paths will achieve the same result.
- 5) The goal achieved by the renunciation of action is also reached by the performance of selfless action. One who by careful analysis knows both these paths to be one and the same, certainly knows their true meaning.
- 6) O mighty hero, to the exclusion of selfless action, mere renunciation of action is the cause of sorrow. But the wise man who engages in selfless action attains to the Absolute very swiftly.
- 7) Engaged in yoga in this way are three types of learned householders (jnani-grhastha): one of pure intelligence, one of controlled mind, and one of controlled senses. By their comparative practices, the former should be known as superior to the latter. All are the embodiment of goodwill for every living being.

Although fully active, they are never implicated by action.

8–9) Although such a karma–yogi who is a knower of intrinsic truth performs all the activities of seeing, hearing, touching, smelling, eating, moving, sleeping, breathing, speaking, expelling waste matter, accepting things, blinking the eyes, and so on, he realizes: "My sense organs eyes, ears, skin, nose, and tongue are engaged with their respective objects of form, sound, touch, scent, and taste." In this way he constantly perceives, "I do not perform any action at all."

10) As a lotus leaf is not moistened although it remains on the water, one who selflessly offers all his actions to the Supreme Lord, remains unaffected by sinful or pious reactions.

11) For the sake of purification of the mind, karma–yogis give up all attachment to the fruits of action and perform their activities with body, mind, and intelligence. Otherwise, they may act through their senses only, with an attitude of disinterest.

12) The pure, materially unmotivated (niskama) karma–yogi, giving up attachment to the fruits of his action, attains constant peace, or liberation from reactionary work. But the ambitious (sakama) karmi, the fruit–hunter, is obsessed with the result of his action, and he becomes implicated by his endeavors.

13) Mentally renouncing all actions in the aforesaid manner, the sense–controlled soul resides happily within the bodily abode of nine gates free from the false ego of considering himself a doer, although he externally performs all activities and free from the false ego of considering himself an inaugurator of action, although he engages others.

14) Due to their tendency towards ignorance since immeasurable time, the living beings act, considering themselves the doers or inaugurators of action. The Supreme Lord does not generate their misconception of considering themselves doers, nor does He generate their actions or their attachment to the fruits of those actions.

15) The fully self–satisfied Supreme Lord accepts neither the sin nor piety of anyone. Cognizance is the intrinsic nature of the living beings, but they are infatuated by the material body, thinking it to be themselves, on account of their original nature being enveloped by the deluding potency of the Lord.

16) Knowledge is of two types prakṛta, mundane, and aprakṛta, divine. Mundane knowledge is concerned with material nature, and is only the nescience of the living beings, whereas divine knowledge is genuine science. For persons whose divine knowledge has awakened, the mundane conception is vanquished and their supreme knowledge, like a mighty risen sun, reveals the Supreme Reality.

17) Those whose illusion has been previously dispelled by knowledge begin to relish within their hearts the hearing and singing of My unending glories, having devoted their thoughts to Me, meditated on Me, and developed continuous devotion for Me, the Supreme Lord. Then they completely transcend this world.

18) The intelligent souls who have attained divine qualities and abandoned all mundane prejudice, perceive the absolute transcendence within all living beings the humble and learned brahmaa, the cow, the elephant, the dog, or the outcast eater of dog–flesh. Therefore, they are known as 'pannita' men of true wisdom.

19) Those whose minds are equipoised have conquered this world while present within it, because by their spiritual equilibrium they are free from attraction and repulsion. Therefore, although remaining in this world, they are eternally situated in transcendence.

20) Fully situated in transcendence, endowed with steady intelligence, and free from the delusion of thinking of his body and associated paraphernalia as 'me' and 'mine', the knower of the Absolute neither becomes elated by obtaining something desirable nor dejected by obtaining something objectionable.

21) Such a knower of the Absolute Truth, his mind detached from sensual pleasure, initially attains the happiness of self–realization. Thereafter, linking himself with the Absolute, he attains inexhaustible joy.

22) O son of Kunti, all pleasures that arise from the contact of the senses with their objects are the sole cause of distress, and they are subject to creation and destruction they are all temporary. A judicious person is never fond of such pleasures.

23) Know that one who, as long as he lives in this body, is able, by means of the yoga path of selfless action, to check the urges of desire and anger at the root such a person is actually situated in union with the Supreme, and he knows true happiness.

24) Such a follower of the yoga path of selfless action, who enjoys internal bliss, whose mind is constantly absorbed within, and who experiences self–realization attaining perception of his pure identity, he gains entry into the plane of the Absolute.

25) Sinless, free from doubt of controlled mind, and always engaged in activities for the welfare of all living beings, the seers of truth attain such liberation..26) Those persons of renounced order who are free from desire and anger, and who have achieved knowledge of the original nature of the soul, unconditionally attain liberation in either life or death. Such liberation occurs when one's mentally–incited subtle body expires.

27–28) Expelling from the mind all external sense objects of sound, touch, form, taste, and smell, locking the eyesight at the point midway between the eyebrows, and practicing the discipline of equilibrium by suspending inhalation and exhalation, subjugating the senses, mind, and intelligence, one dedicates himself to liberation. Having overcome desire, fear, and anger, such a contemplative seeker of the soul is always liberated, even before the death of the body.

29) I am the enjoyer of the results of sacrifice performed by the fruit–hunter, as well as the results of austerity performed by the liberation–seeker I am their only worshipable object; I am Narayana, the indwelling monitor of all planes of life, and the Supreme Worshipable Personality who awards liberation. And I am the well–wisher of all I am Krsna, the devotees' most adorable friend. The soul who thus knows My true identity attains the ecstasy of knowing his own original divine identity.

Chapter Six

The Path of Meditation

Dhyana–yoga

1) The Supreme Lord said: Know a genuine sannyasi and genuine yogi as the person who performs obligatory duties as enjoined in the scriptures, without expecting the fruits of his actions. One is not a sannyasi merely by renouncing the performance of the fire sacrifice and other prescribed duties, and one is not a yogi merely by becoming physically inactive..

2) O Arjuna, you should know the path of selfless action, lauded by the learned as abnegation, to be nondifferent from the eightfold path of yoga meditation. This is because without the renunciation of fruitive desire and sensual craving (which is the essential characteristic of the path of selfless action), one can never be accepted as either a yogi on the path of wisdom or a yogi on the eightfold path of mystic meditation.

3) Initially, action alone is said to be the cause of elevation for the sage desirous of attaining unflickering yoga meditation. When he has achieved continuous meditation, renunciation of all activity is delineated as the cause of his perfect trance in yoga.

4) When the yoga practitioner is no longer addicted to the enjoyable sense objects of sound, touch, form, taste, and smell, and when he is no longer attached to any action in pursuance of enjoying them, having achieved complete renunciation of all plans of such action, then only can he be acclaimed as one who has truly attained to yoga.

5) The living being must be delivered from the dark well of material life by means of the mind detached from sense objects, and he must never in any way be flung down into the material world by the mind enchanted by sense objects because the mind is sometimes his friend, and in another situation the very same mind is rather the enemy.

6) For the soul who has conquered his mind, his mind is his friend and well–wisher.

For a person unable to control it, his own mind remains constantly engaged in his disservice, like an enemy.

7) Free from attraction and aversion in the event of cold and heat, happiness and unhappiness, or honor and insult, the yogi who has mastered his mind remains deeply absorbed in yogic trance.

8) One who is always internally satisfied by dint of scriptural wisdom as well as by direct realization, who is always situated in divine consciousness, who is sense-controlled, and who has the vision of equality for a lump of earth, a rock, or gold, is known as a yogi qualified for self-realization.

9) And know that superior to one with equal vision for earth, rocks, and gold, is the yogi who is capable of viewing with equipoised intelligence all living beings a natural well-wisher, an affectionate well-wisher, an enemy, an indifferent person, a mediator, one detestable, a friend, a saint, and a sinner.

10) A person beginning yoga practice should always reside alone at a solitary place, and controlling his mind and body, free from desire and sensual engagement, he should engage his mind in meditational trance.

11–12) At a pure place, not too high and not too low, the yogi should establish a secure seat of kusa-straw, deer-skin, and cloth. Then, sitting on that seat, subjugating all mental and sensual activity, and locking his mind at one point, he should practice meditational trance in order to purify his heart.

13–14) Soberly keeping his torso, head, and neck straight and upright, poised, the yogi should fix his gaze at the top of his nose without casting a glance in any other direction. Tranquil, fearless, and reposed in the vow of celibacy, he should then meditate on My four-armed Visnu form, and absorbing himself in devotion unto Me, he should practice yoga.

15) In this way, constantly absorbing his mind in the yoga of meditation (dhyana-yoga), the yogi whose heart has been purged of sensual desires achieves emancipation from mundanity by attaining to the nondifferentiated Brahman, the effulgence that emanates from My person. He attains liberation from the course of worldly existence.

16) O Arjuna, yoga practice is impossible for anyone who overeats, undereats, oversleeps, or undersleeps.

17) For a person who eats, relaxes, and exerts himself in all duties in a regulated way, and who keeps regular hours in proper measure, the practice of yoga gradually becomes the source of dispelling all worldly suffering.

18) When a yogi, having checked all mental tendencies of worldliness situates his mind unwaveringly in soul-conception, then, devoid of mundane desires, he is said to be actually situated in yoga, or linked with the Absolute.

19) Know it surely that just as a lamp-flame situated in a windless place never wavers, similarly, the mind of the yogi absorbed in soul-conception never flickers in its concentration.

20–23) The state of perfect samadhi, or trance, is that in which the disciplined mind of the yogi gains detachment from even the slightest thought of mundane connotation. The yogi remains satisfied in the Lord alone, having directly seen the Supersoul by dint of his purified heart, and he experiences that happiness which is eternal, perceptible by the divine intelligence of the soul, and devoid of contact with the senses or sense objects; he never deviates from the intrinsic nature of the soul. By attaining to this state, he never considers any mundane acquisition as superior, and in the face of unbearable tribulation his heart never wavers. Therefore, by the very contact of distress, its absence is accomplished. Know certainly that such a state of perfect trance is defined as yoga. Such yoga should be practiced with perseverance and an untiring heart.

24) Utterly abandoning all mental desires along with their mental images, in full awareness of the futility of mundane prospect, one must withdraw the senses from all material objects and engage himself in the aforementioned yoga practice.

25) With the help of intelligence controlled by dharana (the limb of the eightfold yoga in which the seat of intellect is brought into concentration), one should completely steady the mind within the soul. Then, by gradual practice, with-drawing the mind from external objects, one should enter the trance of samadhi, and should not think of anything but the soul for even a second.

26) The naturally fickle and unsteady mind should be carefully withdrawn from whatever objects it pursues, and brought back under the control of the self.

27) Devoid of passionate agitation, peaceful-hearted, free from the blemishes of attachment, fear, and anger, and endowed with the conception of the Absolute, such a yogi is blessed with the joy of realizing the divine nature of the soul.

28) In this way, through constant realization of his internal divine nature, the sinless yogi easily attains the profound ecstasy of Supersoul realization. (At this point the yoga practice mentioned herein is in accordance with the path of devotion [bhakti].)

29) His heart united with the infinite consciousness, that master of yoga perceives consciousness in all beings. He sees the Supreme Soul within everyone, and everyone within the Supreme.

30) For one who sees Me in everything and sees the whole creation in Me alone, I am never unseen for him, and he is never unwitnessed by Me he never fails in thinking of Me.

31) Although one, I am separately situated within the heart of every living being as the Supersoul, in My four-armed form measuring one pradesa (the distance between one's thumb and forefinger). Realizing Me, Syamasundara, as nondifferent from the Supersoul, the yogi who surrenders unto Me and worships Me in devotion beginning with hearing, chanting and remembering irrespective of performing scripturally prescribed duties or not, he resides in Me eternally.

32) I consider highest of all masters of yoga the one who sees, as in his own case, the happiness and unhappiness of all beings to be equal he knows the joy and sorrow of others as his own.

33) Arjuna said: O Madhusudana, due to the fickle nature of the mind, I cannot visualize the infinite stability of such a state of equilibrium in yoga as described by You.

34) O Krsna, the mind is by its very nature fickle, the source of disturbing one's judgement and agitating the senses and body. It is unconquerable and extremely obstinate. Therefore, I consider control of the mind by eightfold yoga practice to be practically unapproachable, just as by mere breath-control, one cannot control the wind blowing through the skies.

35) The Supreme Lord said: O heroic Arjuna, undoubtedly the mind is fickle and extremely difficult to control. However, O son of Kunti, it is subjugated by repeatedly practicing the yoga of meditation on the Supersoul as taught by a bona fide spiritual master and abandoning mundane sense enjoyment.

36) In My consideration, no doubt the yoga described by Me for controlling the mental faculty is difficult for the person of unrestrained mind. But one who zealously subjugates the mind by the authentic practice is definitely successful in yoga.

37) Arjuna said: O Krsna, a mediocre person may, due to his faith in scripture, engage in yoga practice. However, lacking proper practice and abnegation, he subsequently deviates due to mundane propensities. It seems that he will surely be unsuccessful in yoga. What, then, is his destination?

38) O mighty hero, O Krsna, having deviated from the yoga path of attaining the Absolute, shelterless and fallen from the paths of both action and meditation, is not such a person utterly lost like a fragmented cloud?

39) O Krsna! No one but You can dispel this doubt of mine. Please mercifully slash it at the root.

40) The Supreme Lord said: O Arjuna, son of Kunti, the unsuccessful yogi does not suffer ruination either in this life or the next. He is not deprived of the pleasures of the heavenly planetary systems in this universe, nor is he denied the chance to personally see the Supersoul in the divine realm. This is so, O dear one, because a person who performs virtuous actions never becomes ill-fated.

41) After residing for many years in all those heavenly planets that are attainable by the performers of great sacrifices such as the Asvamedha, the unsuccessful yogi takes the supreme goal.

42) On the other hand, if a person falls from his attempt in yoga after a considerably long period of practice, then certainly he takes birth in the home or lineage of teachers of yoga who are absorbed in yoga practice. Know that birth in such a location is very rarely attained.

43) O son of Kuru, within one of the births I have just described to you, that unsuccessful yogi revives, from the practices of his previous life, his intelligence centered in the worship of the Supersoul. Thereafter, with renewed vigor, he again endeavors for the perfection of seeing Him.

44) Although undesirous due to some obstacle, he again becomes attracted to yoga, by dint of the practice he applied in his last life. And though he may be a practitioner still striving for perfection, he surpasses the path of fruitive action mentioned in the Vedas, and achieves a far superior fruit.

45) With more arduous endeavor than previously, the yogi who fully purifies his consciousness by rejecting the filth of all worldly desires and mental images, finally achieves the fruit of many lifetimes of yoga practice. Thereafter, he reaches the supreme goal.

46) The yogi who is a worshiper of the Supersoul is superior to persons engrossed in severe austerities such as the candrayana, superior to the worshipers of Brahman, and superior to the fruitive workers. Know this certainly to be My conclusion. Therefore, O Arjuna, be a yogi..

47) Among all types of yogis, the most elevated of all is the devotee who has full faith in the authoritative pure devotional scriptures, and who adores Me with all his heart by hearing and singing My divine glories, rendering all services unto Me. Certainly this is My opinion.

Chapter Seven

Relative and Absolute Conceptions of the Supreme

Jnana–vijnana–yoga

- 1) The Lord said: O Partha, hear from Me how, with your heart devoted to Me, the Supreme Lord, abandoning all non–devotional pursuits based on action and knowledge, taking refuge in Me and gradually achieving My association, you will doubtlessly be able to know Me, My holy abode, My opulences, and My associates.
- 2) Now I shall fully describe to you, with the taste of the flavor of My divine sweetness, this knowledge of My grand majestic splendor and opulences. After knowing all this, absolutely nothing will remain for you to know, being situated on this beautiful, joyful, and victorious path.
- 3) Out of countless souls, some have reached the human form, and among many thousands of human beings, some endeavor for perception of the individual soul and the Supersoul; and among many thousands of such endeavorers who have attained to seeing the soul and the Supersoul, only a few receive actual perception of Me, Syamasundara.
- 4) My deluding potency in this world is divided in eight ways: earth, water, fire, air, ether, mind, intelligence, and false ego.

Commentary: In this verse, the purport being expressed is that jnana, or knowledge, in the true sense of the word and in accordance of the precepts of devotion is actually bhagavad–aisvarya– jnana, or knowledge of the almighty, majestic lordship of the Supreme. In the opinion of the scholars who are generally known as jnani, knowledge is knowledge of the soul as distinct from the body and other mundane elements but this is not actual knowledge. Therefore, in order to confirm the conception of His personal almighty majesty, the Lord is revealing His various intrinsic personal forms and potencies as well as their characteristics.

"My different aspects are Brahman, Paramatma, and Bhagavan. Of these, Brahman is a nondifferentiated, formless aspect of My potency. Paramatma, the Supersoul, is also a manifestation of My potency (as a fundamental factor in relation to the universe), and this aspect of Mine is not eternally manifest. Therefore only My form of Bhagavan, the Supreme Lord, is eternally manifest, and within this form My three eternal potencies are also present: antaranga– or cichakti the internal divine potency; bahiranga– or maya–sakti the external deluding potency, and tatastha– or jiva–sakti the marginal potency, comprising the innumerable living beings." In verse 4, the Lord has described His maya–sakti, or His external deluding potency.

5) O mighty hero, Arjuna, this worldly nature known as external, is inferior. But distinct from this nature, you should know My marginal potency, comprised of the individual souls, to be superior. This world is accepted by this superior conscious potency as an object of exploitation for sense enjoyment, by the agency of each individual's fruit–hunting actions and reactions. The divine world emanates from My internal potency and the mundane world from My external potency. The potency of the living beings is known as marginal, on account of their medial adaptability they may choose to reside either in the mundane plane or the divine.

6) Know it that all species, either moving or stationary, are produced from these two elemental natures, as the sphere of action and the knower of that sphere. And I alone am the cause of generation of the whole world, and the cause of its dissolution as well.

7) O Arjuna, there is nothing superior to Me. Like gems strung on a thread, this entire creation depends on Me..8) O son of Kunti, by the potency of the primordial element of taste, I am situated as the basis of the flavor of water; and by the opulence of effulgence, I am present in the sun and moon. I am present in the Vedas as their primeval sound vibration, the letter Om; I am present in the atmosphere as the primordial element of sound; and as the Supreme Male, I am present in all men.

9) I dwell in the pure fragrance of the earth, and in the radiance of fire. In all beings, I am present as the lifespan, and in ascetics, I am the power to endure duality such as cold and heat.

10) O Partha, know Me as the eternal primordial cause of all life–forms. Of the intelligent, I am present as intelligence personified, and of the valiant, I am there as prowess personified.

11) O Arjuna, of the powerful, I am present as strength that is devoid of selfish interest and mundane attachment; and among all species of life, I am present as that sexual union which is in accordance with the principles of religion.

12) Furthermore, you should know that all objects that be of the nature of goodness, passion, and ignorance are born of Me alone. Nevertheless, I am not in them. They, being subordinate to Me, exist in Me.

13) The entire world of living beings is completely deluded by this creation of the nature of three material modes. Therefore, no one can know Me, the Supreme Lord, who am superior to this whole creation, transcendental to these modes, and immutable.

14) This 'trimodal', supernatural, (alluring) deluding energy of Mine is practically insurmountable. However, those who fully surrender exclusively unto Me can certainly surpass this formidable fantasy.

15) These four types of evil-doers do not surrender unto Me: fruitive workers, who are just like animals; fallen persons who embrace the highest path, devotion, but later reject it, considering it inadequate or worthless; those whose knowledge is nullified by the deluding potency, maya, despite their scriptural knowledge, and who think that only the form of Lord Narayana is worshipable, whereas Lord Krsna, Lord Rama, and other authentic forms are merely human; and those who possess the nature of demons the impersonalists, who 'dismember' My form by their 'arrows' of false and blasphemous arguments, and who are just like the demon Jarasandha and others.

16) O Arjuna, best of the Bharatas, four types of persons worship Me: the afflicted, the seeker of knowledge, the seeker of worldly or other-worldly enjoyment, and the pure-hearted seer of the soul. After attaining sufficient devotional merit (sukrti), they engage in My pure devotional service.

17) Among these four types of devotees, the enlightened soul, who is My exclusive devotee and whose consciousness is fully absorbed in Me, is the best of all. Because I in My form of Syamasundara am very dear to this sage, he also is dear to Me.

18) Since their hearts are free from the nasty selfishness of addiction to sensual pleasures, all these persons are certainly dear to Me. But due to his divine self-realization, the pure-hearted sage becomes inseparable from Me, and is therefore very dear to Me. This is certainly My opinion, since he, having offered Me his own heart, has ascertained that I, Syamasundara, am the supreme goal of life.

19) After many, many birds, the knowledgeable person (who happens to attain the association of such a pure devotee) finally comes to understand that the whole universe of moving and stationary being is of the nature of Vasudeva alone, inasmuch as all are subordinate to Vasudeva. Having grasped this conception, he surrenders unto Me. Know such a great soul to be extremely rare.

20) Persons whose good intelligence has been spoiled by illicit desires for exploitation and renunciation or other duplicitous.pursuits, worship other godly personalities such as the Sun–god and the many demigods. Being enslaved by their instinct, they adopt the corresponding rules and regulations of fasting and other tenets accordingly.

21) According to whichever demigod representing a form of Me a particular devotee desires to worship faithfully, I, as the Supersoul dwelling within his heart, make his faith strong for the deity of his choice.

22) After being endowed with this firm faith by Me, such a devotee goes on worshipping the deity of that demigod, and gains all his desired objects from that deity. Certainly this is enacted by My sanction alone, since I am the Supersoul situated within the heart of the demigod also.

23) But the fruit obtained by those provincially interested worshipers of the various demigods is temporary. They reach their respective gods, but My devotees obtain Me.

24) My eternal superexcellent nature, form, qualities, activities, pastimes, and associated paraphernalia are all transcendental to illusion. But unintelligent men, unable to know this reality, think of Me thus: 'Oh, the supra–mundane, formless impersonal Brahman has recently accepted birth in an illusory form in Vasudeva's chamber.'

25) By My own sweet will, remaining concealed by an illusory image, I am not manifest to anyone and everyone. Therefore, non of these foolish persons can ever really know Me as the son of Vasudeva, who am independent of mundane birth and ever–existent in My divine personal Syamasundara form of beautiful feature like a blackish rain–cloud.

26) O Arjuna, I alone know everything and everyone, moving or stationary, of the past, present, and future. But on account of their perception being obscured either by My external deluding energy or by the internal potency of My sweet will, certainly there is no.one whether a human of this world or anyone beyond it who can know Me as I am.

27) O Arjuna, chastiser of the enemy, from the very beginning of the universal creation, all forms of life are overwhelmed by ignorance born of duality based on happiness and unhappiness, which has its origin in desire and abhorrence of sensual predilection.

28) But on the other hand, the performers of virtuous deeds who have had the opportunity to associate with a pure devotee of Mine are purified of all sin. Free from the delusion born of duality based on happiness and unhappiness, and firmly established in continuous engagement in My service they enter into My pure devotion.

29) Desiring liberation from the miserable worldly current of all-devouring birth and death, those who take shelter of Me engage in My devotional service can know Brahman, the individual souls, and the many types of karma or exploitative action for which the souls are repeatedly bound within this unhappy worldly plane.

30) And those who know Me, as the basis of the universal principles of phenomenon, governance, and dispensation such persons, their hearts absorbed in Me, can know Me even at the time of death. Afflicted in the face of fearful death they do not forget Me.

Chapter Eight

The Path of Absolute Freedom

Taraka–brahma–yoga

1–2) Arjuna inquired: O Purusottama, what is Brahman, and what is the soul? What is karma, and what is considered to be phenomenal? Further, who is known as the universal presiding.governance? O Madhusudana, who is the Lord of sacrifice within this body, and how is He situated therein? And can you tell me, how do the selfcontrolled know You at the time of death?

3) The Supreme Lord said: Certainly Brahman is the instructible, unchangeable Absolute Truth, and the pure spirit soul is the genuine personality of the living being. The word 'karma' denotes abnegation for the sake of a demigod, which produces the bodies of humans and other species, created by the agency of gross and subtle material elements; this abnegation refers to the performance of charity, sacrifice, austerity, and all duties rendered for the propitiation of that god.

4) O most elevated of souls, Arjuna, perishable objects such as the material body are known as phenomenal; the universal governance refers to the aggregate universal form which encompasses and governs all the demigods, headed by the solar gods; and I alone am known as the Lord of all sacrifice the Supersoul situated within the bodies of all living beings and the impetus and rewarder of their actions of sacrifice, charity, and austerity.

5) One who continues to think of Me even at the time of death, and having left the body, departs from this world, surely attains to My nature. Of this there is no doubt.

6) O son of Kunti, at the time of leaving the body, whatever object a person meditates upon will be attained by him, due to his constant contemplation on that object.

7) Therefore remember Me at all times, and perform your natural duty to engage in battle. Dedicating your mind and intelligence to Me, you will attain My shelter by fulfilling your duty. Of this there is no doubt.

8) O Partha, with mind undeviatingly engaged in meditation, constantly thinking of the effulgent Supreme Person, the true yogi certainly reaches that Supreme Lord..9–10) He, the Supreme Lord, is all-knowing, beginningless, and the merciful bestower of the teachings of devotion unto Him. In spite of being more subtle than the atom, He is enormous, since He is the support of everything. His form is divine, that is, medium-sized, and yet, like the sun, His characteristic nature is self-illuminating and all-illuminating. He is completely transcendental to illusion. Being fully engaged in continuous devotional remembrance of this Supreme Person by means of an unflickering mind strengthened by yoga practice, one who at the time of death establishes his vital life–air between the eyebrows (at the ajna–akra) and meditates upon Him, surely reaches that effulgent Supreme Lord.

11) Along with the method of approaching it, I shall describe to you that attainable reality which is designated by the learned knowers of the Vedas as the monosyllable Om, the sound representation of the Absolute; within which all the desireless ascetics enter; and out of desire for reaching which the devout transcendentalists maintain the vow of celibacy.

12–13) Checking all the sensual gateways from accepting sense objects, holding the mind steadily within the heart, establishing the vital life–air between the eyebrows, and maintaining yogic trance centered in the soul while vibrating this monosyllable, Om, the sound representation of the Absolute one who continuously remembers Me upon leaving his body, attains to residence in My holy abode.

14) O Partha, having emptied his consciousness of all aspirations to attempt nondevotional pursuits motivated by exploitation or renunciation for the attainment of their respective goals of heaven or liberation, one who constantly remembers Me within, remaining indifferent to consideration of sanctity of time, place, or circumstances, and who constantly aspires for a divine relationship with Me in servitude, friendship, parenthood, or consorhood – surely, for such a devotee, I am happily attainable..

15) The great devotees who attain to the status of participating in My divine pastimes, once having reached Me, never again accept a transitory birth which is the dwelling–house of agony.

16) O Arjuna, from the planet of Lord Brahma downwards, the residents of all planets are naturally subjected to repeated birth and death. But, O Kaunteya, upon reaching Me, there is no rebirth.

17) A day of Lord Brahma lasts for one thousand catur–yugas and his night is of the same duration. Persons who know this have the true conception of day and night.

One yuga (age) in the time calculation of the demigods = the four yugas or one caturyuga in the time calculation of mankind, or 4.320.000 years.

18) With the approach of his day, all progeny along with their respective bodies, senses, enjoyable objects, provincial locations and associated paraphernalia are born from Lord Brahma, who has arisen from his slumber. And again at nightfall, they are absorbed within that same Lord Brahma, who is known as 'unmanifest'.

19) O Partha, this multitude of life-forms, subject to the law of karma, are repeatedly born at the dawn of the day of Lord Brahma and dissolved at his nightfall. And again they are born with the dawn of another day.

20) But far superior to that 'unmanifest' Lord Brahma (who is known as Hirayagarbha since he is born within the golden egg, the universe), there is another element which is eternal and imperceptible to the senses of the living being. Although all life-forms up to Hiranyagarbha Brahma are annihilated, that truth remains unaffected.

21) That which is described as the 'unmanifest invincible' is proclaimed the supreme goal (by the scriptures known as Vedanta), and having reached that, one does not return again to this material world. You should know that supreme destination to be My holy abode.

22) O Partha, I, the Supreme Person, within whom all beings are situated, and by whom this whole universe is pervaded, am attainable only by exclusive devotion devoid of a touch of exploitation, renunciation, mystic yoga, and other empiric or theoretical methods.

23) O Bharatarsabha, now I shall describe to you the routes, determined by time calculation, on which the yogis or fruitive workers who traverse them attain liberation or rebirth respectively.

24) The followers of the path of knowledge who are in knowledge of the Absolute attain the Absolute by expiring at a time of day illuminated by fire, sun, and associated elements, within a fortnight of the bright moon during the sun's six-month northern orbit.

25) If he expires on a dark night within a fortnight of the dark moon, during the sun's six-month southern orbit, the fruitive worker on the path of action reaches the heavenly plane, but subsequently has to undergo rebirth.

26) These two paths of the residents of this world who are apt to follow the methods of renunciation and exploitation are known respectively as the bright and dark paths, and they are universally accepted as eternal. By the bright path one attains liberation, and by the dark path one takes rebirth in this material world.

27) O Partha, learning about these paths of brightness and darkness, a devotee (bhakti-yogi) is never deluded. Therefore, O Arjuna, always engage in exclusive devotion, (ananya bhakti-yoga), which is transcendental to both.

28) Coming to know about My preeminence and the superexcellence of devotion unto Me, the devoted soul surpasses all the scripturally cited fruits of piety achieved from studying and reciting the Vedas, performing sacrifice, practicing austerity, and donating assets in charity. Then he attains My supreme holy abode My dhama.

Chapter Nine

The Hidden Treasure

Raja-guhya-yoga

1) The Supreme Lord said: Now I shall bestow upon you, who are devoid of jealousy and malice, this most hidden treasure in the form of pure devotion beginning with singing or narrating My transcendental glories, and the performance of related divine services up to the point of direct divine perception of Me. By finding this hidden treasure, you will attain freedom from the mundane plane freedom from all evils opposed to devotion.

2) Know this knowledge as the supreme wisdom and the supreme hidden treasure. It is perfectly pure, and although beyond the purview of sense perception, it is the object of direct perception (by those senses which are eagerly disposed towards devotional service [bhakti]). It is the efficacy of all religion, joyfully accessible, and completely devoid of mundane nature.

3) O conqueror of the enemy, men who have no faith in this hidden treasure of sublime pure love for Me are unable to reach Me, and thus they remain meandering in this deathly mundane plane.

4) In an unmanifest manner, I pervade this entire universe, and everything conceivable is situated within Me and yet, I am not situated within that total entity.

5) And again, that is also not situated in Me. Just behold My inconceivable simultaneous one and different (acintya-bhedabheda) nature as the perfect, omnipotent, omniscient originator and Lord of the universe! Although My very Self is the mainstay and guardian of all beings, I am not implicated by them.

6) Air, although massively expansive by nature, is always situated within the jurisdiction of space, and yet, air and space remain distinct from one another. Similarly, know that all beings are situated within Me.

7) O son of Kunti, at the universal cataclysm, the multitude of beings are merged in

My illusory nature, known as maya. And with the beginning of a new millenium, I create all the distinct species again.

8) By the agency of My potency of illusory material nature, I repeatedly create all life-forms according to the nature they acquire, which is determined by the results of their fruitive actions and aspirations of ancient bygone ages.

9) Thoroughly detached and situated indifferently within this exploitative plane of generation, sustenance, and decay, I, O conqueror of wealth, cannot be implicated by the entire universal operation of creation, maintenance, and annihilation.

10) O Kaunteya, My deluding potency, under My direction gives birth to this universe of moving and stationary beings. And for this reason, that is, since only a created object is subject to destruction, the universe is created again and again.

11) Unable to comprehend My superexcellent divine form of human features, ignorant men blaspheme Me the Supreme Lord of all beings by considering Me a mere human being.

12) Those fools are full of vain hopes and dreams in their futile fruit-hunting schemes and fruitless knowledge-seeking. Bereft of all good sense, they acquire the ignorant and passionate nature of godless fiends, which is the source of the darkness of delusion.

13) But, O Partha, the great souls take refuge in the divine and godly nature. With unalloyed hearts, they render loving service.exclusively unto Me Krsna, of human features knowing Me, in this eternal form, to be the primeval cause of all beings.

14) Disregarding the purity or impurity of time, place, and circumstances, those great souls are constantly absorbed in singing or narrating the glories of My holy name, form, qualities, pastimes, and paraphernalia. They are attentive to the irrevocable and conclusive definition of My nature, personality, and expansions, and they strictly follow the rules and regulations for taking the holy name and observing holy days such as Ekadasi. Following all the practices of devotion beginning with offering obeisances unto Me, the devotees, earnestly longing for their eternal relationship with Me in the future, worship Me by the path of engaging in My transcendental devotional service.

15) And of those who are worshipers on the path of knowledge, some are conscious of their own oneness with Me, others are conscious of the various demigods' oneness with Me, and still others are conscious of the oneness of My diverse universal opulence with Me. In so many ways they worhsip Me alone.

16) I am the Vedic Jyotistoma sacrifice and the five sacrifices to the Visva–deva demigods and others as enjoined in the Smṛti scriptures. I am the oblation to the ancestors, the auspicious offering of the autumnal crop, and the mantra. I am the sacrificial ingredients such as ghee, I am the consecrated fire, and I alone am the act of offering the sacrifice.

17) I am the father of this universe, the mother, the bestower of the fruits of all actions, the forefather, and the object of all knowledge. The purifying agent Om, the Rg, Sama, and Yajur–vedas certainly I am all these.

18) And certainly I am everyone's goal, maintainer, controller, witness, refuge, guardian, and unconditional well–wisher. I am creation, dissolution, and sustenance. I am the reservoir and the seed, as the eternal Supreme Person..

19) O Arjuna, I, as the sun, bestow heat during summer, and during the rainy season I send forth the rains and sometimes withdraw them. Undoubtedly, I am liberation and death, and everything gross or subtle.

20) Person who perform the fruitive ritualistic sacrifices prescribed in three of the Vedas worship Lord Indra and other demigods. Factually, they worship Me alone, but in an indirect way. They drink the sacrificial remnants of Soma beverage, purify themselves of sin, and pray to attain to the heavenly plane. As the result of their piety, they reach heaven and enjoy celestial pleasures.

21) After enjoying that great heavenly delight, upon the depletion of their pious merits, they accept birth in this mortal world. In this way, lustful persons who follow the Vedic rules for demigod worship come and go they are born and they die over and over again in this material world.

22) I personally assume the whole responsibility of acquiring and protecting the necessities of My full dependent devotees who are always absorbed in thought of Me alone, and who worship Me exclusively in all respects.

23) O Kaunteya, persons who have alternately developed faith in the demigods and devoutly worship them certainly also worship Me, but improperly.

24) Because I alone am the enjoyer and rewarder of all sacrifices. But since they cannot know Me in this way, they again undergo birth, disease, infirmity, and death.

25) The demigod worshipers reach the appropriate demigod, the forefather worshipers go to the plane of their ancestors, and the worshipers of the ghostly section transfer to the ghostly plane. However, those who worship Me, undoubtedly come to Me.

26) Certainly, if he offers Me with devotion a leaf, flower, fruit, and water, I partake of that whole offering from such a purehearted and affectionate devotee of Mine. With heartfelt love, I graciously accept.

27) O Kaunteya, whatever your action whether general or scriptural, whatever you eat, what you offer in sacrifice, whatever you donate in charity, and any vow you keep do everything as an offering unto Me.

28) In this way, although performing either general or scriptural duties, you will be liberated from the bondage of auspicious and inauspicious results of action. And due to remaining internally indifferent to the fruits of your every action, you will attain distinction among even the liberated souls, and proceed directly to Me.

29) I am equally disposed to all souls, therefore no one is My enemy or friend. Yet, for those who render devotional service unto Me with love, as they are bound by affection for Me, I am similarly bound by the tie of affection for them.

30) If even a person of extremely abominable practices, abandoning all nondevotional pursuits of exploitation and renunciation engages in My exclusive and uninterrupted devotional service, he is venerable as a true saint because he has embraced the revolutionary plane of life.

31) That most degraded person very swiftly becomes adorned with virtuous practices and attains to eternal tranquillity. O son of Kunti, declare it proclaim it My devotee is never vanquished!
or

31) O Arjuna, promise to the public that My exclusively devoted servitors will never come to ruin. He who declares this swiftly becomes virtuous, and truly attains eternal divine grace. Commentary:

The second interpretation of this verse was revealed to Srila Bhaktivinoda Thakura in a dream. In the Srimad Bhagavatam (11.11.32)

Lord Krsna says:

ajnayaivam gunan dosan, mayadistan api svakan dharman samtyajya yah sarvan, mam bhajet sa ca sattamah

"The best of honest persons are those who have left behind the forms of duties that I Myself have recommended in the scriptures, for the general public. Although it is My direction, they cross it and come to render loving service to Me. They are the real honest men."

In society, one must obey the law, but there is also the situation of crossing law to show faithfulness to the king. If one risks his life and reputation, and crossing the general law, enters into the royal chamber to combat an assassin, then he will be considered the best and most loyal servitor. Similarly, the Lord is saying, "I have already given some direction for the general public. Do this, don't do that, don't cross these laws, etc. But if for My interest anyone takes the risk of committing sin, then he should be considered the best among all My devotees. So, Arjuna, you go and declare it, promise it to the public that the ananya-bhak (9.30), the exclusively devoted persons, will never come to ruin. Then you will get the benefit. You will become dharmatma, religious, and attain eternal divine happiness. The ananya-bhak, the exclusive devotees, have already crossed the threshold of dharma, the standard of dutifulness, and taken the risk to throw themselves fully into My service. Sarva dharman parityajya mam ekam saranam vraja (18.66). There is no question of them again becoming virtuous or religious. They surpassed dharma long before, and took the risk and entered into prema-dharma, My loving service, rejecting both piety and sinfulness."

32) O son of Prtha, low-born persons of degraded lineage, women, merchants, or laborers they also attain the supreme destination by taking full refuge in Me.

33) So who can doubt that the pure devotee brahmanas and ksatriyas will achieve that supreme goal? Therefore, surely engage in My devotional service, since you have attained this temporary and miserable human body after wandering throughout many births..34) Give Me your heart, be dedicated to Me in devotional service, and be absorbed in My worship. Offer prostrate obeisances unto Me alone. In this way, with mind and body dedicated in My service, taking full r/efuge in Me, you will certainly reach Me.

Chapter Ten

The Great Treasure

Vibhuti–yoga

- 1) The Supreme Lord said: O mighty–armed Arjuna, hear My divine exposition once again. Only desiring the ultimate benefit for you, who are very dear to Me, shall I speak.
- 2) Neither the demigods nor the great sages can understand My unique, superexcellent, divine birth in this world, because in all respects I am the primeval origin of all those celestial beings and great sages.
- 3) One who knows Me, the son of Devaki, as birthless, the origin of everything, and the Supreme Lord of all beings, is undeluded among men, and liberated from all sins.
- 4, 5) Intelligence, knowledge, peacefulness, forbearance, truthfulness, external sense–control, internal sense–control, happiness, unhappiness, birth, death, fear, courage, non–violence, equanimity, satisfaction, austerity, charity, fame, and infamy all these various attributes of the living beings are born from Me alone.
- 6) The seven great sages headed by Marici, and preceding them, the four brahminical sages headed by Sanaka, and also the fourteen Manus or progenitors headed by Svayambhuva all are empowered by Me and are born of My mental expansion, Lord Brahma who is known as Hiranyagarbha. The entire population of the universe whether brahmana, ksatriya, vaisya or sudra descends from these patriarchs.
- 7) One who is factually in knowledge of My almighty supremacy and devotional service, engages in My service, due to his resolute, absolute conception. Of this there is no doubt.
- 8) I am Krsna, the Sweet Absolute, I am the root cause of the all–comprehensive aspect of the Absolute, the all–permeating aspect of the Absolute, and also the personal aspect of the Absolute the Master of all potencies, who commands the respect of everyone Lord Narayana of Vaikuntha. The universe of mundane and divine flow, every attempt and movement, the Vedas and allied scriptures which guide everyone's worship all are initiated by Me alone. Realizing this hidden treasure, the virtuous souls who are blessed with fine theistic intellect surpass the standards of duty and nonduty, and embrace the paramount path of love divine, raga-marga, and adore Me forever.

Commentary: Verses 8–11) are the four principal verses of the Srimad Bhagavad-gita. The ontological substance of the book is contained within these four essential verses, beginning ahaṁ sarvasya prabhavo "Everything emanates from Me." In the Srimad Bhagavatam (1.2.11), the three main conceptions of the Absolute are given as Brahman, Paramatma, and Bhagavan. Brahman is the all-comprehensive aspect of the Absolute, Paramatma is the all-permeating aspect of the Absolute, and Bhagavan is the personal conception of the Absolute. The general definition of the word Bhagavan is given,

jnana-vairagyayos caiva, sannam bhaga itingana* (Visnu Purana 6.5.47)

Bhagavan, the Supreme Lord, is thus defined as 'He who is inseparably replete with the six inconceivable qualities of wealth, power fame, beauty, knowledge, and renunciation.' The characteristic of Bhagavan, as Lord Narayana, is that all kinds of potencies are personally controlled by Him.

However, Srila Jiva Goswami has given a special and particularly fine interpretation: Bhagavan means bhajaniya guna-visis_a. His nature is such that whoever comes into contact with Him cannot resist serving Him. No one can resist feeling moved to worship and adore His charming personality. As Lord Krsna, He attracts the love of everyone.

Therefore by the word sarvasya, Lord Krsna indicates, "I am svayam Bhagavan, the Supreme Lord Himself. I am the origin of not only Brahman, the all-comprehensive aspect, and Paramatma, the all-permeating aspect. I am also the origin of the Master of all potencies, who commands the respect of everyone Lord Narayana of Vaikuntha." Matta sarva pravartate "Every attempt and movement begins from Me, including the methods by which everyone worships and serves Me in devotion."

nayam atma pravacanena labhyo na medhaya na bahuna srutena yam evaisa vrnute tena labhyas tasyaisa atma vivrnute tanum svam
(Kathopanisd 1.2.23)

"The Lord cannot be known by copious logic, intelligence, or deep study of the scriptures. But He reveals Himself personally to the soul who, having become eager to engage in His devotional service, prays to Him for His mercy."

In this way, matta^a sarvaṃ pravartate "I am the first to reveal to the public, 'Worship Me in this way.' I appear as guru, and through him, I worship Myself."

In the Srimad Bhagavatam, the guru is described by the Lord as His own direct manifestation.

acaryam mam vijaniyan, navamanyeta karhicit na martya buddhyasuyeta, sarva deva-mayo guruh
(Bhag. 11.17.27)

(Lord Kṛṣṇa said to His devotee, Uddhava:) "You should know the bona fide spiritual master as My very Self. Never dishonor him. The nature of gurudeva is everything that is godly, and he should never be envied by ascribing one's mundane conception of place, time, and circumstances upon him."

Furthermore, the Lord's finest potency is Srimatī Rādhārāṇī. Of course, there are many other eternal associates, but the highest order of devotional service is represented in Srimatī Rādhārāṇī. The Lord is therefore saying, "My worship is shown by Me. I, as My finest potency, worship Myself. Iti matva bhajante mam understanding this conception, the devotee will come to worship Me, always under the direction of My best worshiper My finest potency and representation Rādhārāṇī, or gurudeva. Crossing Her, the highest and most desirable form of service to Me is not possible."

Rādhā-dāsyam, the servitorship of Srimatī Rādhārāṇī, is indicated here. Only those who are blessed with divine intelligence will be able to appreciate this, and not persons with self-acquired intelligence from this māyika quarter, the world of misconception. In this verse the word budhah refers to sumedhasah as described in the Srimad Bhagavatam (11.5.32): persons of fine theistic intelligence arising from direct connection with the transcendental plane. The inner guidance and direction they receive is the outcome of sukṛti, divine merit acquired by the association of pure devotees. Bhava-samanvitah means raga-samanvitah – anuraga – love and attraction which is affinity not by strictly following scriptural rules, or drawn from any plane of loss and gain, but from bhava, inner divine inspiration. Devotion of this high type is completely noncalculative (jñāna-sūnya bhakti), as described by Śrīla Rūpa Goswāmī in Śrī Bhakti-rasamṛta-sindhu:

*anyabhīlāsita sunyam, jñāna-karmādy anāvṛtam
anukūlyeṇa kṛṣṇānūsīlanam bhaktir uttama*
(B.r.s. 1.1.9)

"The highest devotion pleases the transcendental desires of Lord.Krsna, and is free from the external coverings of any pursuits based on action or knowledge."

The most rare and elevated stage of devotion is the line of spontaneous devotion, known as raga–marga. In that line, guided by the qualified guru, an elevated pure devotee may gradually come to render service to a leader of one of the groups of Krsna's personal associates, who serve the Lord in His pastimes in friendship (sakhya–rasa), parenthood (vatsalya–rasa), or consorhood (madhura–rasa). In Vrndavana, the Lord is being served in spontaneous devotion by His friends such as Subala Sakha, and by His parents, Nanda Maharaja and mother Yasoda. Gopis such as Lalita and Visakha serve Him in conjugal love. But amongst all His associates, and amongst all the gopis, the highest order of divine loving service is rendered to the Lord by Srimati Radharani. Therefore the acme of raga–marga is to render service unto Radharani (Radha–dasyam). This is the highest goal of the Rupanuga Gaudiya Sampradaya, the followers of pure devotion as taught by Srila Rupa Goswami Prabhupada, in the line of Lord Sri Chaitanya Mahaprabhu.

9) Those surrendered devotees take Me as their life and soul, and go on discussing My ambrosial narrations among one another exchanging the ecstasies of devotion unto Me. They constantly relish the nectar of their realized divine relationships with Me in their respective internal natures of servitorship, friendship, parenthood, or consorhood.

Commentary: The Supreme Lord Krsna is speaking about His pure devotees:

mac–citta mad–gata–prana

"I am in their heart of hearts, in their every thought. Their entire energy their whole life is dedicated to My satisfaction. In private life they converse about Me to mutually enlighten one another, and in public life also, they always love to talk about Me, and nothing else. For every time, place, and circumstance, I am the only subject of their discussion."

Tu,yantica "They find very much satisfaction." Up to the divine relationship of parenthood (vatsalya– rasa) there is a feeling of satisfacton. Futhermore, ramanti ca "Just as a wife enjoys conjugal relationship with her husband, the devotees similarly feel such ecstasy in My intimate company when speaking about Me." This has also been explained by Srila Baladeva Vidyabhusana, and Srila Bhaktivinoda Thakura.

10) To those devotees who are constantly dedicated to Me, and who engage in My service out of their love for Me, I bestow the internal divine inspiration by which they can approach Me and render various intimate services unto Me.

Commentary: In this verse, the Lord says, "The highest group of My servitors (whose sentiment was described in the previous verse by the word ramanti) are those who are constantly engaged (sataka-yukta) in My service in consorhood (madhura-rasa) with heartfelt love (bhajatam priti-purvakam). Then He says that He will give them further inspiration or inner instruction "by which they can come to Him" (yena mam upayanti te). When already in this and the previous verse the devotees' service to the Lord has been described as eternal (by the words nityam and satata-yukta), Lord Krsna's statement that He will give them further inspiration by which they can come to Him appears to be redundant. Therefore, in the expression mam upayanti te ("They will come to Me"), the word upayanti must be defined as parakiya-bhavana-upapati. Pati means husband, and upapati means paramour:

"For those who have already come into divine relationship with Me as My wife (ramanti), I give them the special inspiration to come to Me as a paramour (upapati)."

In Vrndavana, Lord Krsna is not considered a lawful husband, but He is the Lord of the heart, transcendental to even the husband (parakiya-rasa). Deceiving their husbands, the gopis of Vrndavana unite with Krsna. They do not allow a second party to come between them and Krsna. They cannot allow the interception of even scriptural regulation and social law, because Krsna's position is absolute, and such a relationship is more relishable to Him. This is Vrndavana bhajana, and this is the meaning of upapati.

vikriditam vraja-vadhubhir idam ca visnoh sraddhanvito 'nusrnuyad atha varnayed yah bhaktim param bhagavati pratilabhya kamam hrd-rogam asv apahinoty acirena dhirah.
(Bhag. 10.33.39)

"A self-controlled, sense-controlled person who, having become endowed with sublime faith in the divine pastimes transcendently enjoyed by Lord Krsna with the gopis (Rasa-lila), and who, having heard those divine pastimes from the lotus mouth of the bona fide guru, continuously sings or narrates their glories such a person swiftly achieves the most elevated form of pure devotion for the Lord, and is promptly able to ward off the heart disease of lust."

In his writings, Srila Jiva Goswami has laid stress on the word dhira, meaning 'self-controlled'. To hear these elevated subjects, one must enter into the culture of sense-control, otherwise he will be destroyed.

naitat samacarej jatu, manasapi hy anisvarah vinasyaty acaran maudhyad, yatharudro 'bdhi-jam visam
(Bhag. 10.33.30)

"No one should ever even think of imitating this behavior of the Supreme Lord and the gopis. If out of gross foolishness anyone tries to imitate the pastimes of the Lord, he will be utterly destroyed, just as if he tried to imitate Lord Siva by drinking the poison which arose from the ocean." (It is described elsewhere in the Srimad Bhagavatam that once the demigods and the demons jointly engaged in churning the ocean. As a result of that churning, both nectar and poison were produced.)

"My relationship with them is independent of everything conceivable. It crosses law, society, scripture everything. It is most innate and natural, and it does not require any social or scriptural sanction. I say to them, 'You may show formal respect to all these restrictions and live in the society. But from the heart of your heart, you are Mine.' This is the special inspiration and insight I give to those devotees (yena mam upayanti te)."

"Externally there are social and scriptural demands, but My position is over and above them. Veda is My instruction for the benefit of the masses, who have deviated from Me, and the society is also under the jurisdiction of those general instructions given to the public by Me. But My divine relationship with everything is intrinsic and independent. It does not require recognition from anyone. Such a relationship is the highest. It is the constant. It supercedes all law and society which are guided by the Vedas; rather all the Vedas are searching for such a thing." .Srutibhir vimrgyam (Bhag. 10.47.61).

Visesa-mrgya the Vedas are searching after this ideal divine position. In the section of the Srimad Bhagavatam which deals with Rasa-lila, the Vedas are begging forgiveness:

"We are generally supposed to give tidings of You, but we could not describe You as we now experience You here. Now we understand that we have committed an offense, because we could not distribute this Rasa-lila, this Vraja-lila, to the people." Like signposts, all the revealed scriptures are only showing the direction; but where, how? "We don't know." Only, "In this direction He may be available."

Anywhere and everywhere, everything belongs to Him. For one who knows this, all possibilities of sensual pleasure and exploitation are uprooted. For example, an unmarried woman may have the possibility of being approached by many but there is less possibility for those who are married, because they are possessed by someone. Similarly, when we are able to know that everything is only for the satisfaction of Krsna, then we shall realize that all our exploiting tendencies have vanished forever. Nothing will remain to be utilized for the pleasure of our sensual experience. It will be very deeply felt in our hearts that everything has its existence only for His satisfaction, and there is no room for any other exploitation. And we are also included there our existence is also only for His satisfaction. Everything is meant for His divine pastimes (lila), and there is no possibility for any others' pastimes. All are included in that one lila. Encroachment will disappear when we learn the proper utility of everything. He is the owner, and His ownership is absolute. The scriptures, society, and law designate, "This is yours, that is another's, or that belongs to third party." This is something like a temporary lease, but the permanent ownership is in all respects with Him. All others possessor and property, master and servant are all relative, and only sanctioned by Him for the time being. The Absolute Owner, Possessor, and Enjoyer is He alone. When we arrive at such a conclusion, only then is complete purification of our hearts possible. Everyone is thinking of themselves as many masters of many things, but this is all heart disease (hrd–rogam). This is all conceived in a diseased state of consciousness. In a healthy state, when the heart is quite wholesome, we can see the Supreme whole, and we can see that everything is meant only for His satisfaction..

11) Out of compassion for them, I, situated within the hearts of all living beings, dispel the darkness of ignorance with the radiance of knowledge.

or

11) Being conquered by the love of those devotees who, in the most elevated position of noncalculative loving devotion (jnana–sunya prema–bhakti), are afflicted by all–devouring darkness born of the pangs of separation from Me, their Lord I, granting them the internal illumination of meeting Me personally, destroy the darkness of their agony of separation.

Commentary: The general interpretation is always given for this verse:

"Out of compassion for them, I, situated within their hearts, dispel the darkness of ignorance with the radiance of knowledge."

But if we appreciate pure, noncalculative devotion (jnana–sunya bhakti), the Lord's statement here may again appear redundant and inconsistent. When those high devotees are already admitted to be performing continuous and unadulterated service, and even above that, they are situated in the plane of pure love, spontaneous and automatic (raga–marga), how can it be harmonized that the Lord will now in the last stage destroy their ignorance (tamah) which is born from misunderstanding (ajnana–jam), by giving them knowledge (jnana)? Jnana is only a cover a futile, finite conception of the Infinite Absolute (jnana–karmady anavrtam ... bhaktir uttama). When they have achieved devotion devoid of the covering of knowledge (jnana–sunya bhakti), how will they again have to return to that knowledge (jnana)? In his commentary, Srila Visvanatha Cakravarti Thakura has mentioned that this knowledge is extraordinary (vilaksanam), but he did not enter into specific detail. To clarify this point, we have given the following explanation:

Lamentation and delusion are generally known to be symptoms of the mode of ignorance (tamo–guna). In jnana–sunya bhakti, the elevated devotees who take Krsna not as the Supreme God, but as a friend, son, husband, or lover, will come to experience lamentation and delusion, but this is only an outward appearance of ignorance. In fact, it is the pain of divine separation. They lament, "Where have You gone?" In this verse, the Lord's statement, tesam evanukampa–artham generally means 'Fortunately for them', or, 'To favor them (I dispel their darkness, etc.)'. But it may also be interpreted, 'I want their favor. I aspire for the favor of those devotees of the highest order.' The Lord also says in the Srimad Bhagavatam:

*mayi bhaktir hi bhutanam, amrtatvaya kalpate
distya yad asin mat–sneho, bhavatinam mad–apanah*
(Bhag. 10.82.44)

"Devotion to Me is the only means for the living beings to attain eternal life. O Gopis, by your fortune, your love and affection for Me is the only reason for your getting My association."

This is the general meaning. However, in Sri Caitanya–caritamṛta, Srila Kṛṣṇadāsa Kaviraja Goswami has drawn out the inner meaning, which is just the opposite:

"Through devotion, everyone wants Me to help them attain the highest position of eternal benefit, and if they have a connection with Me, they consider themselves fortunate. But I consider Myself fortunate because I have come in touch with the valuable affection that I found in your hearts. By My fortune, I got your association."

Therefore here in Sri Gita, the Lord is saying, "Tesam evanukampartham being conquered by the love of those devotees, when I cannot tolerate their pain of separation, I at once come running to satisfy them, and I reveal to them with special light, special consciousness, 'I have returned to you see Me now.' With powerful brilliance (jñāna–dīpena) I show them My presence when they are very much in need of Me, and I relieve their pain of separation."

Ātma–bhava–sthah: He reveals Himself according to His devotee's divine relationship with Him (rasa): to a friend, as a friend; to a mother, as a child; to a wife, as a husband; and to the sweethearts, as a paramour.

After Sri Caitanya Mahāprabhu left home and accepted the renounced order of life, sannyāsa, mother Sacī could not tolerate the deep separation, and she began to cry. Sacīdevī was preparing excellent dishes, offering them to the Deity, and weeping, "Where is my Nimai? He's very fond of these curries. His favorite dishes, and Nimai is not here." Suddenly, Lord Caitanya came and began to eat. Sacīdevī exclaimed, "Oh, Nimai is eating!" and for the time being her separation was relieved. Moments later, she reconsidered, "Did I see Nimai eating? But He is now a sannyāsī in Jagannātha Puri, so how could He have come here? Did I serve Him? There must be a mistake." Then she examined the pots again to see if there was food there. Finding them empty, she began to conjecture whether even a dog or some other animal had come and eaten it. But during that moment, Nimai had actually come, and mother Saci saw Him in broad daylight. That illumination is transcendental, and not the 'knowledge' (jnana) that is generally known in our vocabulary.

The acme of theism is parakiya-rasa. Parakiya means 'another's'. In every divine relationship (rasa), the Lord captures all. In the whole of Vrndavana, where everyone follows the path of love (raga-marga), this parakiya-rasa is infused. The friends of Krsna sometimes say, "Some people say that Krsna is a resident of Mathura. They say He's the son of Vasudeva, and He will soon go to Mathura. They say He is not our friend! Will we really lose His company? Then how will we be able to live in this jungle and drive the cows?" They experience this apprehension "We may lose Him at any time." This intensifies their friendly service to Him.

Similarly, mother Yasoda says, "Some say that Krsna is not my son, He's Devaki's son. What is this? I won't admit this. He's my child!" This idea enhances Yasoda's affection for Krsna: "I may lose Him? Then how shall I live?" Therefore, the parakiya-rasa stresses the rarity of Krsna's relationship, because the possibility of losing His company is always in the background. But the highest intensity of service is to be found in the madhura-rasa (conjugal) camp. In the other rasas, there is the idea of suspense that He may 'go away', but in the conjugal relationship in the divine abode of Vrndavana, the consorts cross the direction of the scriptures and the society, which guide everyone to remain as husband and wife (svakiya). Parakiya ('another's') has been accepted in the science of devotion as the highest conception above svakiya ('belonging'), because social and scriptural sanction is generally a stale conception. Parakiya or paramour relationship is necessary to deceive those who claim ownership over another, such as a husband over the wife, or a parent over a child. In the normally accepted connection (svakiya) the relationship is very cheap, but to cross the jurisdiction of the scriptures and society, as paramour, means a greater risk as if to commit sin. Thus, this relationship is very rare, and rarity enhances its intensity and value. The idea of deceiving the 'possessor' to favor the 'nonpossessor' is a beautiful ornamental conception. Actually in Krsna's case there cannot be any state of paramourship, because in truth He is the owner of everything. However the divine arrangement is fashioned in this way to enhance the devotee's internal devotion for the Lord, just as food appears more tasteful when hunger is present.

In the planets known as Vaikuntha, the nature of worship of the Lord Visnu is gorgeous, majestic, reverential, and awe-inspiring. But above that, the highest conception of Godhead is just like a human form and nature. It is stated in Sri Caitanya-caritamṛta in the teachings to Sanatana Goswami:

krsnera yateka khela sarvottama nara-lila nara-vapu tahara svarupa

gopa-vesa veukara nava-kisora na_ava nara-lila haya anurupa krsnera madhura-rupa suna sanatana ye ruperaka kaa dubaya saba tribhuvana sarva-prani kare akarsana

"The most supreme form of Godhead is Krsna, who plays in His eternal divine pastimes just like a human being. An ever-youthful cowherd boy of Vrndavana, He enacts His pastimes, always playing His flute. His beauty is so charming and sweet, that the whole universe is flooded by an atom of it, and all beings are drawn irresistibly to Him."

He is approachable by all. We can find God nearest of all in a human feature. It has been explained how Krsna's nature of human feature is the highest nature of the Absolute, according to the calculation of ecstasy (rasa), which is the common standard of measurement of the whole scope of the Infinite. By the development of santa-, dasya-, sakhya-, vatsalya-, and madhura-rasa, and then parakiya (peacefulness, servitude, friendship, parenthood, and consortherhood, and the paramour relationship), this is scientifically proved, without whimsical or blind faith. If we follow the line of Rupanuga-bhajana (devotion following the standard of Srila Rupa Goswami) which originates from Sri Caitanyadeva, the scientific basis can be appreciated. The previous acaryas have left for us, step by step, how we can follow, conceive, and attain all these things.

12-13) Arjuna said: O Lord, You are the Supreme Absolute Truth, the supreme shelter, and the supreme saviour. All the prominent sages as Devarsi Narada, Asita, Devala and Vyasa have described You as the self-illuminating, self-manifest eternal Supreme Person, the foundation of almighty majesty, and the origin from whose divine play everything emanates and now You are personally declaring this to be true.

14) O Kesava, I totally accept as factual all that You have told me, beginning from Your statement, 'na me viduh' "They do not know Me." O Lord, now it is confirmed that no one among either the demigods or the demons know your identity in full.

15) O Supreme Person, universal father, O Lord of all beings, Lord of all gods, Lord of the universe! By your own divine cognizant potency, only You can know Yourself.

16) Please kindly describe to me in full those supernatural, personal opulences by which You pervade all these worlds.

17) O Almighty Lord of the creation, please tell me how I can meditate on You constantly and in all respects. What are the elements, qualities, situations, and forms by which I am to contemplate on You in devotion?

18) O Janardana, please once again describe Your majestic opulences and the process of devotion unto You, this time in an elaborate way, since I never become satiated by hearing Your ambrosial words and instructions.

19) The Supreme Lord said: O Arjuna, best of the Kurus, I shall describe to you simply the prominent, manifest, transcendental almighty opulences of Mine which arise from My divine conscious potency since My extensive glories are unlimited.

20) O Gudakesa, I am the Supersoul situated as the controller within the hearts of all souls, and I am the single cause of the birth, sustenance, and annihilation of all beings.

21) Of the twelve Adityas, I am Visnu, of the luminaries I am the great radiant sun; of the Vayus I am Marici, and of the stars I am the moon.

22) Of the Vedas, I am Sama-veda; of the demigods I am Lord Indra; of the senses I am the mind, and I am cognizance in all beings.

23) Of the eleven Rudras I am Sankara, and of the Yaksa and Raksasa races I am Kubera. Of the eight Vasus I am Agni, and of mountains I am Sumeru.

24) O Partha, you should know Me as the chief of priests, Brhaspati; among generals I am Kartikeya, and of reservoirs I am the ocean.

25) Of sages, I am Bhrgu; of sound vibrations, Om; of all sacrifices, the repetition of the holy names; and of the immovable, the Himalayas.

26) I am the Asvattha among trees, Narada of godly sages, Citraratha of heavenly singers, and Kapila Muni of perfected beings.

27) Among horses know Me as Uccaihsrava, who was born at the time of churning of the ocean of nectar; know Me as Airavata among elephants, and the king among men.

28) Of weapons I am the thunderbolt, and of cows I am the heavenly desire-fulfilling cow. Of cupids I am he who ensures progeny, and among the single-headed venomous snakes I am Vasuki, the king of all snakes.

29) Of the multi-headed nonpoisonous serpents I am the Ananta-naga, and of aquatics I am Varunadeva. Of the deified ancestors I am Aryama, and of law-enforcers I am Yamaraja, the lord of punishment.

30) Of the Daityas (descendants of Diti) I am Prahlada Maharaja, and of subjugators I am time. Among all the animals I am the lion, and of the birds I am Garuda.

31) Of sanctifiers, or of the rapid, I am the wind; of weapon–wielding heroes I am Lord Parasurama; among fish I am the shark, and of rivers I am the Ganges.

32) O Arjuna, of created objects, beginning with the sky, I alone am the creation, dissolution, and sustenance. Of all wisdom I am the knowledge of the soul, and of the logicians' or philosophers' debate and criticism I am the demonstrated conclusion.

33) Of the primary letters of the alphabet I am the letter 'a', and of compound words I am the dual. I alone am the endless flow of time, and of creators I am the four–headed Lord Brahma.

34) Of plunderers I am death, the vanquisher of all recollection; and of the predestined six transformations of the living beings I am birth, the foremost. Of ladies, I am the seven qualities of a good wife grace, beauty, perfect speech, remembrance, intelligence, patience, and forgiveness.

35) Of all the mantras in the Sama–veda I am the Brhatsama mantra which is uttered in prayer to Lord Indra, and of mantras in perfect prosody I am the holy Gayatri mantra. Of the months I am the foremost, Agrahayana, and of the seasons I am spring.

36) I am the dice–throwing of mutual cheaters, and influence of the influential. I am victory for the victorious, perseverance of the enterprising, and the strength of the mighty.

37) Of the Yadavas I am Vasudeva, of the Pandavas I am Arjuna, of the sages, I am Vyasadeva, and of the scholarly knowers of the scriptures I am Sukracarya.

38) I am the punishment meted out by chastisers, and the diplomatic policy of victory–seekers I am the silence of all secrets, and the wisdom of the wise.

39) O Arjuna, whatever has been considered the origin of all beings I am certainly that. No stationary or moving being, object or soul, can exist separately from Me.

40) O conqueror of the enemy, there is no end to My superexcellent opulences. Only for your edification have I described a few of them.

41) Know for certain that whatever is sublime, beautiful, and magnificent is born from a mere fraction of My potency..42) But Arjuna, what is the need of your understanding this elaborate knowledge of My almighty grandeur? By My fractional expansion as the Supreme Soul of material nature, Maha–Visnu (Karanarnavasayi Visnu), I remain supporting this entire universe of moving and stationary beings.

Chapter Eleven

The Vision of the Universal Form

Visva-rupa-darsana-yoga

- 1) Arjuna said: Only by Your mercy has Your hidden treasure been revealed to me. My ignorance of Your supreme nature has now been completely dispelled.
- 2) O beautiful lotus-eyed Lord, now I have heard Your elaborate and conclusive description of the Truth concerning the creation and dissolution of the living beings, and I have also heard of Your eternal, inexhaustible glories.
- 3) O Lord, the manner in which You have described to me Your absolute supremacy is certainly as it is. Yet I long to actually see, O Purusottama, that almighty form of Yours.
- 4) O Lord of all mystic power, I implore Thee, please exhibit Your almighty, imperishable form, if You think that I shall be able to behold it.
- 5) The Supreme Lord said: O Partha, you will behold My hundreds of thousands of variegated, multi-colored, and multiform divine expansions.
- 6) O Bharata, you will see all the forms of Aditya, Vasu, Rudra, the Asvini-kumara twins, the forty-nine forms of Vayu, and many others. You will also see all the many wondrous forms which are hitherto unseen..
- 7) O vigilant Arjuna, the whole universe of moving and stationary beings, your future prospect of victory or defeat, or whatever you desire to see you will behold simultaneously in this singular form of Mine.
- 8) You will not be able to see Me through your present eyes, and therefore I give you supernatural vision by which to behold My almighty, supreme absolute power
- 9) Sanjaya said: O King Dhrtarastra, thus speaking to Arjuna, the Almighty Omnipotent Lord Sri Hari exhibited His form of supreme universal Lordship.

10–11) The Supreme Lord exhibited His universal form of unlimited faces and eyes, and endless miraculous revelations. Many dazzling ornaments adorned His body, and He was armed with many gleaming weapons. Superbly dressed in fine garments, resplendently garlanded, and anointed with celestial fragrant substances, His astounding effulgence and presence pervaded all around.

12) The radiance of a thousand rising sun might resemble something of the effulgence of that universal form of the Supreme Lord.

13) At that moment, there on the battlefield, Arjuna could see the whole universe reposed in a single place, yet divided into many facets, all within the form of Lord Sri Krsna, the Supreme God of gods.

14) Seeing that amazing form, wonderstruck Arjuna, his whole body tingling in ecstasy, bowed his head in obeisance to Lord Krsna, the Supreme God of all gods. His hands folded in prayer, Arjuna began to speak. .

15) Arjuna said: O Lord of magnificent form, in Your body I can see the demigods, all species of life, transcendental sages and serpents, as well as Mahadeva, and Lord Brahma who is seated on the lotus flower.

16) O Lord of the universe! O universal form! In all directions I see Your unlimited body of many arms, bellies, eyes and faces yet I cannot catch a glimpse of Your beginning, middle, or end.

17) Resplendent with crowns, wielding clubs and disc weapons everywhere! do I see Your all-illuminating, effulgent image, radiant as blazing fire and sun, therefore very difficult to behold and completely beyond imagination.

18) You are the personification of the Supreme Absolute Truth, which is knowable by the Vedas, You are the exclusive reservoir of this universe, and You are the imperishable preserver of the eternal religion mentioned in the Vedas. You are certainly the eternal Supreme Personality, and this is my firm conviction.

19) Without beginning, middle, and end, unlimitedly powerful and possessing countless arms, with eyes like the sun and moon, and a countenance like blazing fire I see You searing the universe by Your intense radiance.

20) You alone pervade all directions and all space between heaven and Earth. O universal form, seeing this astonishing and ghastly form of Yours, all the residents of the three worlds are greatly fearful.

21) All these demigods are entering into You, some fearfully offering You prayers with cupped palms. The great sages and perfected beings are offering choice, worshipful prayers unto You, saying, "Let all auspiciousness be upon the universe."

22) The demigods known as Rudra, Aditya, Vasu, Sadhya, Visvadeva, the Asvini-kumara twins, deities of the air, deities of the forefathers, the Gandharva, Yaksha, Asura, and Siddha races indeed, they all behold You in amazement.

23) O Almighty One, seeing Your colossal form of many faces, eyes, arms, legs, feet, and bellies, ghastly with its many teeth all beings, including myself, are terrified.

24) O universal form! Seeing Your sky-touching, glowing form of myriad colors, of gaping mouth and gigantic glaring eyes, my heart is overwhelmed with fear and I cannot in any way remain composed or calm.

25) Just seeing Your faces resembling the fire of universal annihilation, ghastly with all their terrible teeth, I can no longer distinguish one direction from another, nor can I find peace of mind. O Supreme Lord of all the gods, O shelter of the universe,.please be merciful to me.

26-27) The sons of Dhrtarastra along with their kings, and Bhishma, Drona, that Karna together with our chief warriors all are rushing forward to enter into Your dreadful mouths which are ghastly with their teeth. And some are seen with crushed heads trapped between Your teeth.

28) As the many currents of rivers flow towards the ocean and finally enter into it, so these heroes of the world are entering the blazing cavity of Your mouths.

29) As moths irresistibly rush to their death into a blazing fire, similarly, all these persons are madly rushing to certain death, entering into Your mouths.

30) O Almighty Personality, poised to swallow all these victims, You are voraciously devouring everything with Your flaming mouths. The entire universe is being seared by Your all-pervading, personal glaring effulgence.

31) O fearsome one, please tell me who You are. O Lord of lords, I offer my obeisances unto You; please be merciful upon me. I wish to know more about You, the Original Person, since it is difficult for me to comprehend the underlying intention of Your actions.

32) The Supreme Lord said: I am time, the mighty force that vanquishes everyone, and My mission is to devour all who reside in this world. Of all fighters in the enemy party, even if not slain by you, not one will be spared.

33) Therefore take your stand for battle, take the glory, conquer all the enemies, and enjoy a flourishing kingdom. Actually, all these warriors have long before been killed by Me. O Savyasacin, you simply take all the credit.

34) Slay (again) Dronacarya, Bhishma, Jayadratha, Kara, and the many warriors, all of who have been already killed by Me. Do not hesitate fight! Without any doubt, you will be able to conquer the enemies.

35) Sanjaya said: After hearing all these things spoken by Lord Kesava, Arjuna, his body trembling, offered Him respects with folded hands. With a fearful heart, again bowing down to the Lord, he began to speak with faltering words.

36) Arjuna said: O Hrsikesa, the entire universe feels great ecstasy in singing Your glories, and all achieve love for You. Being afraid, the demons flee in all directions, but the perfected beings offer respectful obeisances unto You. Certainly this is the proper order of things.

37) O mighty personality, O limitless one, O God of gods, O abode of the universe! Why, indeed, should all not offer respects unto You, who are the worshipable father of even Lord Brahma? You are also superior to Your impersonal aspect, which is the (general) cause and effect of everything (in the mundane plane).

38) You are the eternal origin of all the demigods, and the only refuge of this universe. You alone are the knower and the knowable, and the embodiment of transcendence. O unlimited one, this whole universe is pervaded by You.

39) You are the presiding demigods of the air, death, fire, the ocean, and the moon. You are Brahma, who is the grand-father of all beings, and You are his father as well. Obeisances unto You thousands and thousands of times, again and yet again.

40) O embodiment of all, my obeisances unto You from the front, from behind, and from all sides. O endless almighty, You are everything, because by unlimited potency You are pervading the entire universe.

41–42) Due to delusion and affection I have rashly addressed You as 'Krsna', 'Yadava', or 'friend', not knowing Your glories and this mighty universal form of Yours. O infallible one, I have also disrespected You in jest while sporting, resting, sitting or eating and so on, either alone with You or before other companions. Therefore, I am begging You, who are inconceivable powerful, to kindly forgive me for all these offenses.

43) O almighty without a second, You are the father of the whole world of moving and stationary beings, the object of worship, the preceptor and You are superior to all these as well. Therefore within these three worlds no one can be Your equal, not to speak of Your superior.

44) O Lord, like a stick fallen on the ground I prostrate my body before You, praying for Your mercy, since You are my worshipable master. As a father, friend, or lover forgives the offenses of his son, companion, or beloved, please be merciful and similarly forgive my offenses to You.

45) O Lord, although I have become gladdened to behold this universal form of Yours which I have never seen before, my mind is distraught with fear. Therefore, O God of gods, please reveal Your previous four-armed form. O Jagannivasa! May You be gracious upon me.

46) I wish to see You as I have seen you before, with a crown on Your head, Your hands bearing a club and disc. O Lord of a thousand arms, O universal form, may You graciously appear in that four-armed form.

47) The Supreme Lord said: O Arjuna, being pleased with you, I have today revealed this effulgent, all-pervading, unlimited, and primeval form, by My divine potency. This foremost universal form has never been seen by anyone else before.

48) O Arjuna, best of the Kauravas, in this world no one but you can see this universal form of Mine, which cannot be perceived either by the performance of Vedic sacrifice, charity, study, rituals, or severe austerities..49) Let not your fear and bewilderment remain, which has arisen from the vision of My ghastly universal form. With a peaceful, contented heart, perfectly see My four-armed form once again.

50) Sanjaya said: Having thus spoken to Arjuna, Krsna exhibited His form (of four-armed feature, in order to fulfil Arjuna's prayer). Thereafter, the Lord once again revealed His sweet personality the most merciful Lord, Sri Krsna (of charming human features, wearing yellow cloth and recognizable by His feature of divine beauty), thus reassuring the fearful Arjuna.

51) Arjuna said: O Janardana, my heart is fulfilled upon seeing Your charming form of human features. My fear is dispelled, and my inner peace has returned.

52) The Supreme Lord said: O Arjuna, the chance to see Me as you are now seeing Me before you, is very, very rarely attained. Even the gods constantly aspire for a glimpse of this humanlike form of truth, consciousness, and beauty.

53) Neither by study of the Vedas, nor by austerity, charity, or sacrifice, can anyone behold My eternal humanlike form of Supreme Absolute Truth (Para–brahman) which you are now seeing before you.

54) Arjuna, conqueror of the enemy, although in this form of Mine I am practically impossible to be seen by all other methods, the pure devotees, by their exclusive devotion unto Me, are capable of actually knowing Me, seeing Me, and entering into My divine pastimes.

55) O Arjuna, one who performs duties only for My service, accepts Me as the supreme shelter, engages in the devotional practices, remains detached from the mundane plane and free from enmity toward all beings such a person surely reaches Me..

Chapter Twelve

The Path of Devotion

1) Arjuna inquired: You have now described the devotees who engage in Your exclusive devotional service and worship You (as Syamasundara, Your original humanlike form). You have also mentioned others who concentrate upon the impersonal aspect of the Absolute. Please tell me, which of the two is the superior?

2) The Supreme Lord said: Those who, with unalloyed faith, fully absorb their consciousness in thought of this divine Syamasundara form of Mine, and worship Me constantly by the path of exclusive devotion, are definitely the most superior knowers of divine unity (yoga). Indeed, this is My opinion.

3–4) However, those who fully control their senses, adopt the vision of equality towards everything, engage in deeds for the welfare of all beings, and engage in the worship of the indefinable, formless, attributeless, neverincreasing, neverdecreasing, all–pervading, and eternal impersonal aspect of the Absolute they can also approach Me. That is, they attain to My personal dazzling Brahman effulgence.

Commentary: The Lord's statement, "The worshipers of impersonal Brahman certainly also reach Me", must not be misconstrued to mean that the impersonalists (Mayavadis) are on an equal footing with the devotees (Vaisnavas). The clue to how the impersonalists can also reach Krsna has been given by Srila Bhaktivinoda Thakur in his commentary on Sri Gita:

"A person attains liberation from the mundane plane by following the path of selfless action up to the stage of meditation, as described in the first six chapters of the Gita. Then he may undergo great difficulty in searching for the Lord on the path of impersonalism. But when he progresses to the stage of dedicating himself to perform welfare work for others (sarva–bhuta–hite ratah), he may get the chance to render service to a pure devotee."

For example, if one engages in the general public welfare work of opening or running a hospital, if some service is even unknowingly rendered to a Vaisnava, one's devotional merit begins (ajnata-sukrti). By the association with a devotee (sadhu-sanga), one develops faith in the original, divine personal form of the Lord, and automatically abandons the attempt of attaining to the impersonal Brahman. Having become faithful to the path of devotion, one takes shelter of a bona fide guru, engages in the devotional practices based on hearing and chanting the glories of the Lord, and progressing on the path back to home, back to Godhead. Thus Lord Krsna is saying:

"I am the ultimate goal, and the Brahman is only a relative position. It is not the final absolute, because the absolute position is Mine. Only if the Mayavadis serve others and thereby get the chance to serve a Vaisnava, can they actually come to Me because the only way to come to Me is through a Vaisnava."

*rahuganaitat tapasa na yati na cejyaya nirvapanad grhad va na cchandasa naiva jalagni-suryair vina mahat-pada-rajo 'bhisekam
(Bhag. 5.12.12)*

(The sage Jada Bharata said to King Rahugana:) "O Rahugana, without bathing the soul in the dust of the holy feet of the pure devotees (mahabhagavata vaisnavas), one cannot know the Supreme Lord by adopting the religious life of brahmacarya, grhastha, vanaprastha, or sannyasa, or by worshiping the gods of water, fire, and sun, etc."

*naisam matis tavad urukramanghrim sprsaty anarthapagamo yad arthah mahiyasam pada-rajo 'bhisekam niskincananam na vrnita yavat
(Bhag. 7.5.32)*

(Prahlada Maharaj said:) "As long as one has not been bathed by the dust of the feet of Lord Krsna's sold-out devotee, he cannot touch Krsna's lotus feet, which are the destroyer of all evils."

To consider that the Lord has taken the personal and impersonal aspects to be equal is a mistake very commonly committed. In reply to Arjuna's doubt in this respect, the Lord has clearly replied that the personalists are superior to the impersonalists yet, the impersonalists are also given a chance to reach Him, because without Him, no ultimate goal exists. Without coming to the path of devotion, the worshipers of impersonal Brahman will reach that Brahman, which is the dazzling effulgence of the divine form of Lord Sri Krsna. .

5) Persons whose minds are attached to the impersonal Brahman undergo excessive tribulation, because for embodied souls, the means and end of impersonalism is attained in an unhappy way.

6–7) But those who offer their every action unto Me, take refuge in Me alone, think of Me constantly in pure devotion unadulterated by exploitation or renunciation, and who thus worship and adore Me O Partha, I swiftly deliver those devoted souls from the deathly ocean of material suffering.

8) Therefore, steady your mind exclusively upon Me Syamasundara and remember Me constantly. When your intelligence has thus become reposed in Me, you will definitely reside with Me after death. Of this there is no doubt.

9) O Dhananjaya, and if you cannot establish your mind in Me with firm faith, then try to reach Me by the repeated practice of remembering Me.

10) If you are ineffective in that practice as well, then engage devoutly in actions related to Me. You will surely attain to perfection even when engaged in actions, as long as they are conducted for My satisfaction and based on devotionally hearing and chanting My glories.

11) And if you cannot even do that, then perform your every action as an offering unto Me. With a controlled mind, taking shelter of such conviction, give up all consideration of the fruits of your actions.

12) Divine realization of Me is better than the attempt of self-exertion, and full absorption of the heart in pure devotional meditation on Me is better than that realization. From meditation, desire for heavenly happiness or liberation is dispelled, and when one finally becomes desireless, the peacefulness arising from indifference to mundane enjoyment becomes manifest.

13–14) That devotee of Mine who is devoid of violence toward all living beings, but rather, friendly toward them, who is compassionate toward the needy, free from undue attachment for son, wife, family and associated objects, free from the egoistic pride of bodily identification, equipoised in both happiness and unhappiness, forbearing, always content with due gain, engaged in devotional service, endowed with fortitude, fully resolved in exclusive devotion, and whose mind and intelligence are dedicated in Me certainly such a personality is My beloved.

15) One on whose account no one is ever disturbed, who is never disturbed by anyone, and who is liberated from mundane happiness, anger, fear, and agitation certainly he is very dear to Me.

16) My devotee who is free from expectations in his general dealings, who is detached, externally and internally pure, expert, undisturbed, and free from all kinds of exploitative endeavors certainly he is very dear to Me.

17) One who is neither elated by mundane gain nor disgusted by the contact of undesirable things, who neither laments over the loss of any material valuables nor yearns for any unattained objects, and who remains detached from both pious and sinful actions a truly devoted personality of that nature is near and dear to Me.

18–19) A person who sees equally enemies and friends, honor and dishonor; who maintains equilibrium in the presence of cold, heat, pleasure, and pain; who is completely free from obsession; who considers equally abuse and praise; whose speech is controlled; who is content in gain without endeavor; who is unattached to hearth and home; whose intelligence is steady in the divine, and who is a true devotee certainly he is My beloved.

20) And those devotees who take refuge in Me with sublime faith and worship this ambrosial path of devotion, are adored by Me as My very own.

Chapter Thirteen

The Predominated and the Predominator

Prakṛti–puruṣa–viveka–yoga

- 1) Arjuna said: O Kesava, I would like to know the principles of the predominated, the predominator, the sphere of action, the knower of that sphere, knowledge, and the knowable.
- 2) The Supreme Lord said: O Arjuna, this (gross and subtle or physical and mental) body is known as the sphere of action, or ksetra. The conscious entity (the soul) who experiences the existence of this body is described by seers of the truth as the knower of the sphere of action, or ksetra–jña.
- 3) O Bharata, you should also know Me as the knower of all spheres of action (as the Supersoul situated within the heart of all living beings). Such fundamental and essential knowledge of the sphere of action and the knowers of that sphere (knowledge of the mundane, the soul, and the Supersoul) is considered by Me to be actual knowledge.
- 4) Now hear from Me a summary of the substance and nature of this sphere of action, and in which way it is produced. Also hear of the fundamental form and potency of the knower of the sphere of action.
- 5) That fundamental principle of the sphere of action and its knower has been variously described in many, many ways by the Rsis, the different Vedic aphorisms, as well as the aphorisms of the Vedānta–sūtra scripture, which is replete with sound logic and irrefutable conclusions.
- 6–7) The five major elements (earth, water, fire, air, and ether), the personality component of ego, the element of intellect, the primordial element of material nature, the five perceptual senses (eye, tongue, tactile sense, nose, and ear), the five senses of action (voice, hands, legs, anus, and genital), the internal sense (mind), the five acceptable objects of the senses (form, taste, touch, smell, and sound), desire, hatred, happiness, unhappiness, the body, the perceptual faculty of the mind, patience, and the six material transformations of birth, sustenance, growth, maturity, decline, and destruction summarily, all these are known as k,etra, the sphere of action.

8–12) Humility, pridelessness, nonviolence, tolerance, honesty, service to the guru, purity, stability, self–control, detachment from sensual delights, absence of egotism, an objective view of the miserable defects of material life, that is, birth, death, the infirmity of old age, disease, etc., freedom from infatuation with wife, son, home, etc., nonabsorption in the happiness and unhappiness of others, constant equal–mindedness in the contact of desirable or undesirable objects, unfaltering and unadulterated devotion to Me, preference for solitude, indifference to mundane socializing, perception of the eternality of self–knowledge, and realization of the goal of divine knowledge certainly all these have been declared as actual knowledge, and everything apart from this is ignorance.

13) Now I shall describe jneya, the knowable, knowing which the ambrosial taste of internal self–satisfaction can be realized. That element principle is delineated as Brahman. It is beginningless and eternal. Subordinate to Me, it is indescribable in terms of mundane cause and effect.

14) That superior principle presides over all directions, and pervades everything in the universe with His hands, legs, eyes, heads, faces, and ears everywhere (as Paramatma, the Supersoul).

15) Although that supreme principle is the illuminator of all the senses and their objects, He is devoid of material senses; although completely aloof, He is the maintainer of all (in the form of Lord Visnu); and although transcendental to the three modes of material nature, He is servable by that modal nature.

16) Present within and without all beings, the supreme principle is the entirety of moving and stationary beings (as energetic transformation). Imperceptible to material science due to being subtle to the extreme, He is the most intimate, yet the most distant.

17) Although one indivisible element, He is situated as divided among all living beings. Although situated as an individual personality along with each and every soul, He is the indwelling monitor of all beings the singular, indivisible, omnipresent, aggregate Supreme Lord. He (in the form of Lord Narayana) is known as the maintainer, annihilator, and creator of all beings.

18) He is known as the illuminator of even the luminaries. He is known as the unmanifest, beyond even the darkness. He alone is the fundamental principle of knowledge and the knowable, and He is knowable by the aforementioned practices defined as knowledge. He remains situated within everyone's heart as the Supersoul, Paramatma.

19 Thus, the principles of the sphere of action, knowledge, and the knowable (ksetra, jnana, and jneya) have been summarily described by Me. (The knowable has been delineated as Brahman, Paramatma, and Bhagavan.) Thoroughly understanding these truths, My devotees attain to bhavamaya–bhajana they adore Me with all their hearts (having become freed from the color of all designations).

20) You should certainly know material nature and the soul as beginningless; and all bodily, sensual, mental, intellectual, or egoistic transformations, as well as the consequences of the action of the material modes based on happiness, unhappiness, lamentation, and delusion to be born of material nature.

21) Material nature has been delineated as responsible for the cause as the domineering force of the senses, and the effect as the material body; and the (conditioned) soul himself is known to be responsible for his accrued happiness and unhappiness.

22) Only due to being bewitched by material nature (prakṛti) does the person (puruṣa) accrue the various joys and sorrows of that nature. His infatuation with material qualities is the sole cause of his taking repeated births in the wombs of higher and lower species of life.

23) Within this same body (distinct from the soul) the Supreme Person or Parama Puruṣa is present as the soul's intimate witness, sanctioner, supporter, guardian, and Lord. He is known as the Supersoul.

24) One who thus understands these truths regarding the modal material nature, the predominated soul, and the predominating Supersoul such a person will not take birth again, regardless of his material situation.

25–26) Some persons directly perceive the Supersoul situated within their hearts by dint of their perfect, pure divine realization. Some perceive Him by discrimination of spirit and matter, and some by meditational yoga or by the yoga path of selfless action. Further, there are those who, not knowing any of these methods, engage in worship after hearing instruction from authorities. When their faith has deepened, by that hearing they certainly surpass this material world of deathly suffering.

27) O Arjuna, best of the Bharatas, whatever is born in the world, whether moving or stationary, know it to be born from the combination of the sphere of action and its knower.

28) One who sees the Supreme Lord (in the form of the Supersoul) situated equally within all species from Lord Brahma down to the immobile life-forms, and who sees the Lord's imperishable nature remaining within the perishable such a person actually sees.

29) One who thus perceives the impartial and full-fledged, almighty dominion does not degrade himself with wickedness he progresses toward the supreme destination.

30) One who sees that all action is performed by material nature (in the form of body, senses, and allied paraphernalia), actually sees himself, pure spirit soul, as the nondoer. He perceives that the pure spirit soul has no mundane nature or practice whatsoever.

31) When a truly perceptive person can understand that the differentiation of the various species of life occurs only within material nature (or bodily distinction), and that all are again expanded from the same nature (at the time of universal creation) then he experiences Brahman realization by seeing equally all knowers of the sphere of action (within the relativity of nature).

32) O Arjuna, since the Supersoul is by nature beginningless, transcendental, and eternally perfect, although He is situated in the body (along with the soul), He neither performs any action nor does He become implicated by the nature of the sphere of action (as the conditioned soul does).

33) As ether is situated everywhere (such as in mud) and yet due to its subtle nature does not mix with anything, similarly, although pervading the entire body, the discriminating soul does not mingle with the nature of the body.

34) O Bharata, as one sun illuminates the entire universe so does the knower of the sphere of action, the Supersoul, illuminate the whole universe (and the souls within it); and so does the knower of the sphere of action, the soul, illuminate the entire body.

35) Those who, by the vision of knowledge, can distinguish between the sphere of action and its two knowers, and who can thus know the path of liberation of the soul from matter such persons attain to the transcendental atmosphere.

Chapter Fourteen

The Three Modes of Material Nature

Gunatraya–vibhaga–yoga

- 1) The Supreme Lord said: I shall now again describe to you that supreme wisdom, knowing which all the sages attained the supreme perfection beyond this mundane plane.
- 2) By taking refuge in this knowledge, the soul attains a nature (predominantly) similar to Mine. Then he is neither born at the time of universal creation, nor does he experience the pangs of death at the time of universal annihilation.
- 3) O Bharata, material nature, known as pradhana, is the womb into which I cast the seed (in the form of the individual soul which is born of the marginal potency). From that place, all beings headed by Lord Brahma are generated.
- 4) O Kaunteya, Brahman personified as mother nature is the progenitress of all the various bodies born within all species of life, headed by demigods and humans and I (as the causal consciousness) am the seed–giving father.
- 5) O mighty hero, Arjuna, these three material modes of nature goodness, passion, and ignorance which are manifest from material nature, cause the unchangable, embodied spirit soul to be enslaved by mundane sentiments based on happiness, unhappiness, and delusion.
- 6) O sinless one, due to its comparatively purer nature among these three material modes, the mode of goodness is an illuminator of the nature of things and is of a peaceful nature. It enslaves the spirit by attachment to happiness and knowledge.
- 7) O son of Kunti, you should know the mode of passion to be the embodiment of obsessions for sensual enjoyment. The origin of covetousness and infatuation, it enslaves the soul by attachment to action.
- 8) And, O Bharata, you should know that the mode of ignorance is born from darkness, and is the deluder of all beings. That mode of ignorance captivates the embodied by carelessness, laziness, and slumber.

9) O Arjuna, goodness conditions the soul to happiness, and passion conditions him to action. But the mode of ignorance, covering the living being's knowledge, conditions him to indolence, slothfulness, and slumber.

10) O Bharata, goodness overcomes passion and ignorance, passion overcomes goodness and ignorance, and ignorance overcomes goodness and passion. Each mode in turn conquers the others in an unending battle for supremacy.

11) When cognizance of the factual nature of the sense objects abundantly appears within the perceptual senses of this body, you should surely know this to be the characteristic development of the mode of goodness. This will be recognized by the aforementioned symptom of happiness.

12) O Arjuna, most noble of the Bharata dynasty, know that greed, overexertion, ambitious attempts, incessant sensual pleasure, and desire are born when the mode of passion develops in a person.

13) O Kurunandana, with the influence of the mode of ignorance, all the symptoms of injudiciousness, despondency, indolence, and falsehood become manifest.

14) If any soul succumbs to the jaws of death at a time when predominantly the mode of goodness influences him, he goes to the pure planets of the worshipers of Hiranyagarbha (Brahma) and other gods.

15) When a person dies in the mode of passion, he takes birth in the karmi society of men addicted to fruitive work. If one dies in the mode of ignorance, he takes birth amongst the animal or other grossly ignorant species.

16) It is proclaimed by the learned that good works bestow a result of peace and happiness, passionate works result in misery, and ignorant works result in darkness or deathliness.

17) From the mode of goodness, knowledge arises; from the mode of passion, greed arises; and from the mode of ignorance, insanity, delusion, and foolishness ensue.

18) Persons in the mode of goodness ascend (up to Satyaloka), those in the mode of passion remain in the middle (in human society), and abominable fellows of ignorant nature fall down to the lower planes (of hellish suffering).

19) When a person perceives that apart from the three modes of nature there is no other cause of action in this modal world, and when he can know the Lord of the three modes, who is transcendental to them, he becomes divinely inspired with love for Me.

20) When the soul transcends these three modes of material nature from which the body is produced, and becomes absolutely liberated from birth, death, old age, and misery, he then tastes the ambrosia of divine love unalloyed by the modes of nature.

21) Arjuna said: O Lord, (1) by which symptoms can a person transcendental to these three modes of material nature be identified? (2) How does he behave, and (3) how does he transcend the modes?

22–25) The Supreme Lord replied: O Pandava, (1) one who neither resents the appearance of revelation (the effect of the mode of goodness), activation (the effect of the mode of passion), and stupefaction (the effect of the mode of ignorance), nor hankers for their cessation; (2) who remains perfectly poised, being situated indifferently and unperturbed by the modal effects (based on happiness and unhappiness), remembering, 'The modes are engaging (with their respective objects)'; who is equally disposed to joy and sorrow; who is situated in continuous self-perception; who sees a lump of earth, a rock, or a piece of gold with the vision of equality; who is equipoised upon receiving either desirable or undesirable things; who is intelligent, and remains situated in equilibrium in the face of abuse or praise, honor or dishonor; who sees alike both friend and foe; and who is completely aloof to all causes of obsession and abnegation certainly such a person is to be known as having transcended the three modes of material nature.

26) (3) A person who renders service exclusively unto Me (in My form of Syamasundara) by the path of pure devotion (unadulterated by all spurious attempts based on exploitation or renunciation), absolutely transcends these three modes of material nature. He thus becomes qualified for the cognizance of his internal divine identity.

27) I alone am the original mainstay of the undivided divine vitality, the inexhaustible nectar, the timeless pastimes, and the sweetness of the ambrosia of profound love divine.

Chapter Fifteen

The Supreme Person

Purusottama–yoga

1) The Supreme Lord said: The holy scriptures proclaim that this material world is like an unchangeable Banyan tree with its roots facing upwards and its branches down, known as an Asvattha (transitory) tree. Its nutriments are the Vedic aphorisms, which are represented by its leaves. Whoever knows this tree in this way is a genuine knower of the Vedas.

Commentary: The purport of the statement that the tree of this mundane world has its roots facing upwards, is that the root cause of the creation is to be found in the supreme, uppermost holy abode. Thus, it emanates from and subsequently away from the Supreme Lord. The statement that its branches face downwards indicates that due to the reactions of exploitative actions, progressively lower and lower births from the animals down to the most degraded species branch out from this tree. Therefore, the Banyan tree of this temporal world is known as 'Asvattha', which means 'ephemeral', or 'that which does not remain until tomorrow'. However, it is eternal in the sense that it constantly appears by virtue of the flow of causal and effectual current. That the leaves of the tree represent the world–sustaining section of the Vedas known as karma–kanda, means that inasmuch as the leaves of a tree nourish and beautify it, this section of the Vedas similarly nourishes the world, causing it to expand and flourish. In conclusion, although this mundane world evolves from the eternal deluding potency of the Lord (maya), it is perishable; and although it is nourished by the fruitive section of the Vedas (karma–kanda), it is enlightened by means of the indirect, veiled statements (paroksa–vada) of the Vedas. One who knows the purport of the Vedas in this way is a genuine knower of their essence.

It is stated in the Srimad Bhagavatam (11.3.43–46)

karmakarma vikarmeti, veda–vado na laukikah vedasya cesvaratmatvat, tatra muhyanti surayah

parosa–vado vedo 'yam, balanam anusasanam karma—moksay karmani, vidhatte hy agadam yatha

nacared yas tu vedoktaṃ, svayam ajno 'jitendriyah vikarmana hy adharmena, mrtyor mrtyum upaiti sah vedoktam eva kurvano, nihsango 'rpitam isvare naiskarmam labhate siddhim, rocanartha phala srutih

"The conceptions of action, inaction, and prohibited action are delineated in the Vedas. Because the Vedas are the embodiment of the Supreme Lord, even great scholars are bewildered in determining their purport. The Vedic purport is presented in an indirect, veiled manner, in order to instruct undisciplined, childish, foolish persons. As a father entices a sick child to take medicine by displaying sweetmeats, the scriptures similarly display the heavenly fruits of pious action, with the underlying purpose of effecting cessation of mundane action."

2) Some of its branches extend upwards (in the planets of the demigods and celestial beings), some of the branches extend downwards (in the planets of the humans, animals, and lower species), and its mature (three modes of) nature and aim and object (of sound, smell, touch, taste, and form) are its fresh, young shoots. Some aerial roots also extend downwards, to take root in the land of exploitation, within the human plane.

Commentary: Within the overall manifestation of this 'perishable yet constant' material world, some of the living beings, nourished by the modes of goodness, are wandering throughout the upper planetary system, having become enveloped by the egoistic conception of gods and celestial beings. Others, influenced by the modes of passion and ignorance, are wandering throughout the planets of the humans, animals, trees, and other lower species, having become enveloped by the egoistic conceptions of such species. The sense objects sound, smell, touch, taste, and form are represented by the new shoots of the branches of the tree of this material world, since they are merely transformations of the five unmixed primary elements (pancatanmatra) which evolve from the egoistic conception of the living beings of this plane.

Furthermore, although the principal root is situated upwards (inverted, and in aversion to the Supreme Lord), some of the subsequent down-going aerial roots of the Banyan tree remain rooted in the soil of the human plane of the land of exploitation. This indicates that the attempt to enjoy the fruits of one's action within human life the exploitative mentality of separate interest is supplying the nourishing sap in the form of a separate, secondary cause of the tree of this material world.

3–4) In the human plane, that inverted form of the Banyan tree representing this material world cannot be known, and its origin, end, and foundation cannot be perceived (except by the means of Vedic knowledge). From the association of true saints, one acquires the sharp axe of intense detachment from the mundane. Using this weapon to chop down that illusory Banyan tree (of one's own mundane existence) which is stubbornly rooted in aversion to the Supreme Lord, one attains to the plane of no return, which is none other than the lotus–feet of the Lord. Then, by the method of exclusive, uninterrupted devotion, one should approach for shelter the holy lotus feet of the Supreme Lord Visnu, and pray, "I am now surrendering unto that Original Person, the Supreme Lord of all, from whose deluding potency (maya) this perpetual tree of the material world has emanated and expanded."

5) Devoid of vanity and delusion, aloof to unholy company, dedicated to realization of the eternal self, free from lusty desire, liberated from the joys and sorrows of duality, and liberated from ignorance, those surrendered souls reach the supreme destination.

6) My supreme holy abode is that place which the surrendered souls reach, never to return again. Neither sun, nor moon, nor fire nothing can illuminate that all–illuminating supreme abode.

7) The soul is a part of Me (as My separate fragmental particle or potency). Although he is eternal, he acquires the mind and five perceptual senses, which are parts of material nature (as creations of maya, My deluding potency).

8) The soul (jiva) is the proprietor of the body and its paraphernalia. When he departs from the body, he carries all these senses to enter into another body, just as the air carries the fragrance of a flower.

9) Adopting the fleshy ear, eye, skin, tongue, and nose, and also accepting the subtle mind, this soul exploits the sense objects sound, form, touch, taste, and smell.

10) Foolish men cannot perceive anything of the soul's departure from the body, residence within the body, or his exploitation of sensual objects. However, those endowed with eyes of wisdom are able to observe the entire operation.

11) Even some assiduous yogis can actually see the soul present within the body. But foolish persons of impure heart can never see the soul, despite their endeavors..12) That effulgence which emanated from the sun and illuminates the whole universe, and which is present within the moon and within fire you should surely know that to arise from My personal effulgence.

13) Appearing within the soil of the Earth, I maintain all beings by My potency; and in the form of the nectarean moon, I nourish all the crops (such as rice and barley).

14) Entering into the body of the living being as the power of digestion, I digest the four types of eatables (chewed, sucked, licked, and drunk), by the agency of the ascending and descending vital airs.

15) I am situated (as the Supersoul) within the heart of all souls, and from Me arises the soul's remembrance, knowledge, and the dissipation of both (according to his karma, or action in the mundane plane). I am the exclusive knowable (ecstatic) principle of all the Vedas. I am the author of the Vedanta Vedavyasa, the expounder of the knowable meaning of the Vedas. And certainly I am the knower of the purport of the Vedas.

16) In this world, there are two kinds of souls: the fallible and the infallible. All being from Lord Brahma down to the lowest stationary life-forms are known as fallible (as they have deviated from their intrinsic nature). But the personalities who are eternally situated in their divine nature are known as infallible (personal associates of the Lord).

17) But totally distinct from both these types of souls, there is a Supreme Person who is known as Paramatma, the Supersoul. He is the Supreme Lord. Entering into the three worlds in His eternal form, He maintains all beings in the universe.

18) Because I am transcendental to the fallible souls and also superior to My infallible eternal associates, My glories are sung in the world and in the scriptures as Purusottama, the Supreme Person.

19) O Bharata, one who unmistakably knows Me in My eternal, all-conscious, ecstatic form as that Supreme Person, is the perfect knower of full-fledged theism, and he worships Me in all respects (in the devotional flavors of peacefulness, servitorship, friendship, parenthood, and consorthood).

20) O purehearted Arjuna, I have thus explained to you this most hidden treasure of all the scriptures. O Bharata, embracing this nectar in the core of their hearts, the virtuous souls revel in the perfection of supreme success.

Chapter Sixteen

The Godly and Ungodly Temperaments

Daivasura-sampad-vibhaga-yoga

1–3) The Supreme Lord said: O Bharata, all these qualities appear in a man endowed with a virtuous and godly nature fearlessness, gracious-heartedness, absorption in self-knowledge, charity, control of the external senses, sacrifice, study of the Vedas, austerity, sincerity, nonviolence, truthfulness, freedom from anger, detachment from the mundane, tranquillity, disinclination to see other's faults, compassion for others, freedom from greed, gentleness, modesty, steadfastness, vigor, forgiveness, patience, cleanliness, nonenviousness, and freedom from egotism.

4) O Partha, these perverted qualities are found in a man of demoniac mentality: pride, conceit, egotism, anger, mercilessness, and injudiciousness.

5) The godly and virtuous qualities have been described as the cause of liberation, and the demoniac qualities have been described as the cause of certain bondage. O Pandava, you need not worry, for your nature is godly and virtuous from birth.

6) O Partha, the living beings in this world are seen to be of two natures godly and demoniac. I have already elaborately described the godly nature to you, so now hear from Me about the demoniac nature.

7) The demoniac nature cannot understand religious inclination or irreligious disinclination. Not a trace of purity, good practices, or truthfulness can be found in them.

8) The persons of demoniac nature say that the universe is nothing more than imaginary, baseless, godless, and born of their mutual cohabitation. They conclude that the whole world was created simply for lust.

9) Supporting such a conception, the demons, who are less intelligent bereft of self-knowledge, and the embodiment of ghastly deeds and inauspiciousness, become powerful simply for the purpose of world annihilation.

10) Resorting to insatiable lusty desires, totally infatuated and preoccupied in sensual pursuits, such demons, in a mad frenzy of arrogance and pride engage in ghastly malpractices.

11–12) Up until their last breath they remain stricken with unlimited fears and anxieties. They are convinced that gratification of their lust is the ultimate pursuit. Ensnared by hundreds of multifarious desires and overcome with lust and anger, they go on trying to amass wealth unlawfully just for the purpose of sense gratification.

13) The demoniac persons say, "Today I got what I wanted, and tomorrow I will get what I want. This is all my wealth, and in the future, more and more will be mine."

14) "I have killed one enemy, and I will kill others. I am the lord of all I survey, I am the enjoyer, I am successful, powerful and happy."

15–16) "What can match my wealth and aristocracy? I shall perform sacrifice and give charity to the needy, and I shall thereby enjoy." Deluded by ignorance, filled with anxiety, victimized by allurements, and addicted to sense enjoyment, those demoniac persons are doomed to detestable hells such as Vaitarani.

17) Always conceited, impertinent, and intoxicated by wealth and grandeur, all these demons (make a great show to) perform non–scriptural pseudo–sacrifices.

18) Steeped in egotism, mad with power, and carried away by lust and anger, utterly despising Me who am situated in their own and others' bodies as the Supersoul, they ascribe faults to all the good qualities (of the true saints).

19) Because those demons are envious, cruel, evil, and decadent, I continually cast them asunder to revolve in the cycle of birth and death, in the wombs of despicable demoniac species.

20) O Kaunteya, repeatedly taking birth in the demoniac species, these fools cannot come to Me, the embodiment of the Divinity. Thus, they descend lower and lower to the most vile and degraded condition of life.

21) The three suicidal gates leading to hell are lust, anger, and greed. Therefore, they must be completely abandoned.

22) O Kaunteya, one who is actually liberated from these three gateways to hell, acts for his best self–interest. Thus, he attains to the supreme destination.

23) A person who transgresses the injunctions of the scriptures and behaves whimsically can never attain perfection, happiness, or the supreme destination.

24) Therefore, the scriptural injunctions concerning duty and nonduty are your only precedent. Having understood the scriptural command in this plane of action that is, to act exclusively for the Lord's pleasure it behooves you to now apply these teachings practically.

Chapter Seventeen

The Threefold Division of Faith

Sraddhatraya–vibhag–yoga

- 1) Arjuna inquired: O Krsna, what is the position of those who perform worship with faith, but neglect the injunctions of the scriptures? Is that considered to be in goodness, passion, or ignorance?
- 2) The Supreme Lord said: Such faith is of three types, according to an embodied soul's previously developed tendencies good, passionate, or ignorant. Now please hear about this from Me.
- 3) O Bharata, all men have a particular type of faith according to their individual mentalities. The very nature of the living being is based on faith their internal and external nature is modeled according to their faith. Therefore, their nature may be discerned according to the manner of worship or reverence in which they have faith.
- 4) Persons endowed with the nature of goodness worship the good–natured demigods; persons of passionate nature worship the passionate Yaksa demigods and cannibalistic Raksasa demons, while those of ignorant faith worship the ghosts and the dead, in the plane of darkness.
- 5–6) Proud and pretentious fools cause the derangement of the body's natural elements and torment the indwelling soul, which is My fragmental spiritual particle. Motivated by intense craving to display their mental and bodily prowess, they perform excruciating non–scriptural austerities. You should know them as first–class confirmed demons.
- 7) According to the three modes of material nature, there are also three preferences of food. In the same way, there are three kinds of sacrifice, three kinds of austerity, and three kinds of charity. Now hear of all these.
- 8) Edible or offerable foods which increase longevity, zeal, strength, health, happiness and satisfaction, and which are succulent, milky, wholesome, and attractive these are dear to persons of the nature of goodness.

9) Edibles dear to persons of passionate nature are too bitter (nimba, etc.), too sour, too salty, too hot, too pungent (chili pepper, etc.) too dry (dry-roasted chick-peas, etc.), and too heating (mustard seed, etc.). Such foods cause unhappiness, distress, and disease.

10) Such food is dear to the ignorant: food which is cold, due to being cooked more than three hours before; food which is tasteless, exudes a bad odor, or was cooked the day before; the remnants of others (with the exception of remnants left by one's guru); and impure foodstuffs (such as meat, wine, and onions).

11) Sacrifice of the nature of goodness is in accordance with scriptural injunctions, and performed with a resolute sense of duty by a person devoid of fruitive desire.

12) But, O Bharata, know that sacrifice which is performed in fruitive expectation and merely as a display of pomp and grandeur, to be sacrifice of the nature of passion.

13) And that sacrifice which ignores the injunctions of the scriptures, which is performed without the distribution of gifts such as foodstuffs, without uttering the appropriate mantras, without presentations to the guru, and without faith, is known as sacrifice in ignorance.

14) Worship of the deity, the brahmanas, the spiritual master, and the enlightened soul, as well as cleanliness, simplicity, celibacy, and nonviolence these all constitute austerity of the body.

15) Speech which does not disturb others, which is truthful, pleasing yet beneficial, as well as regular recitation of the Vedas all these are known as verbal austerity.

16) Self-satisfaction, graceful gravity, firmness, self-control, and purification of consciousness are all known as mental austerity.

17) When performed by a desireless, devout soul with sublime faith in the Supreme Lord, this threefold austerity is of the nature of goodness.

18) That unending and uncertain austerity which is proudly performed just for the sake of gain, worship, and name and fame, is known as austerity of the nature of passion.

19) That austerity which is performed with foolish and injudicious preoccupation, causing self-torture or meant to harm others, is known as austerity of the nature of ignorance.

20) Charity given without expectation of return, as a matter of duty, with due consideration of place, time, and recipient, is considered to be of the nature of goodness.

21) Otherwise, charity given with an agitated mentality, in anticipation of receiving something in return, or with a desire of gaining entry into the heavenly plane, is known as charity of the nature of passion.

22) Charity given disrespectfully and scornfully to an unworthy recipient at an improper place and time is known as charity of the nature of ignorance.

23) The phrase 'Om Tat Sat' is mentioned in the scriptures as indicative of Parabrahman, the Supreme Spirit. At the time of universal creation, the brahmaas, the Vedas, and sacrifices were ordained by this threefold combination.

24) For this reason, the followers of the Vedas always begin the performance of their scripturally enjoined duties based on sacrifice, charity, and austerity, by uttering the vibration 'Om', which represents Brahman, the Absolute.

25) Vibrating the word 'Tat', which also represents Brahman, the Absolute, and rejecting the desire for the fruits of their actions, the liberation-seekers conduct the performance of different kinds of sacrifices and austerities, and execute the duty of giving charity.

26) O Partha, the word 'Sat' indicates the truth, as well as persons who are dedicated servants of truth. It is also applied in the performance of auspicious activities.

27) The word 'Sat' is employed to indicate both the eternality of the object of sacrifice, austerity, and charity, as well as duty performed for the satisfaction of the Supreme Lord.

28) O Partha, sacrifice, charity, and austerity, or any duty performed without faith in the supreme objective, is known as 'asat', or depraved. Such works can never bestow an auspicious result, either in this world or the next.

Chapter Eighteen

The Supreme Goal of Divine Freedom

Moksa–yoga

- 1) Arjuna said: O Mahabaho, Hrsikesa, Kesinisudana, I wish to know the distinction between the principle of renunciation of action and the principle of renunciation of the fruits of action.
- 2) The Supreme Lord said: According to the learned, the abandonment of all materially desirable actions is called renunciation (sannyasa), and the abandonment of the fruits of all kinds of action (whether daily, incidental, or based on material desire) is called detachment (tyaga).
- 3) Some scholars (of the Sankhya school) hold that action (on account of its faults such as violence) should be renounced. Others (of the Mimamsaka school) hold that (scripturally enjoined) duties based on sacrifice, charity, and austerity should never be abandoned.
- 4) O Best of the Bharatas, now hear My perfect conclusion regarding renunciation. O foremost among men, it has been clearly defined that renunciation is of three types.
- 5) Duties based on sacrifice, charity, and austerity should never be abandoned. Such duties must be performed, because they serve to purify the hearts of the intelligent.
- 6) Moreover, O Partha, all these actions are to be performed as a matter of duty, abandoning attachment and fruitive desire. Know this to be My irrevocable, perfect, supreme conclusion.
- 7) Renunciation of one's daily duties is never desirable. To abandon routine duties out of delusion is false renunciation, or renunciation of the nature of ignorance.
- 8) One who abandon his routine duties out of fear of bodily discomfort, considering them a cause of inconvenience, performs renunciation of the nature of passion.

Thus, he does not attain (knowledge, which is) the fruit of genuine detachment.

9) O Arjuna, one who performs routine works as a matter of duty, and abandons attachment and fruitive desire such a person performs renunciation of the nature of goodness. This is My opinion.

10) A sharply intelligent, renounced person who is endowed with the nature of goodness, and who is free from all doubts, neither resents troublesome duties, nor is he attached to those works which bestow happiness.

11) Actually, it is impossible for the embodied soul to utterly renounce all action. Therefore, one who is truly renounced is he who renounces the fruits of his actions.

12) Persons who aspire for the fruits of their actions acquire three types of rewards after death good, bad, and mixed. But a true renunciate (sannyasi) never touches such fruits of action.

13) O mighty hero, in the scripture known as Sankhya, or Vedanta, these five causes of the accomplishment of all actions have been described, and you may now learn of these from Me.

14) (With the help of these five factors, all actions are effected:) The body, ego (in the form of the knot of spirit and matter), the separate senses, the different endeavors, and destiny, or the intervention of the Supreme Universal Controller.

15) Whatever lawful or unlawful action a man performs with his body, mind, or speech, is caused by these five elements.

16) Therefore, a wicked fellow who considers himself to be the only performer of action can never perceive the actual situation, due to his irrational conception.

17) He who is free from egotism (arising from aversion to the Absolute), and whose intelligence is not implicated (in worldly activities) even if he kills every living being in the whole world, he does not kill at all, and neither does he suffer a murderer's consequences.

18) Knowledge, the knowable, and the knower these three are the impetus for action. The attempt, the work, and the performer these three form the basis of action..19) In the Sankhya scripture, knowledge, action, and the performer have each been classified according to their (good, passionate, or ignorant) natures. Now hear of these categories from Me.

20) That knowledge by which one imperishable and undivided divine principle (My superior divine potency) is seen to be present in all the diverse living beings, is known as knowledge of the nature of goodness.

21) In the world of the living beings, that knowledge by which one experiences multifarious separate attempts (of conflicting nature, due to individual separate interests) and many separate (independent) conceptions of the truth such knowledge is known to be of the nature of passion.

22) And that knowledge by which one becomes attracted to trivialities (insignificant matters), considering them to be all in all (ultimate), and which is irrational, devoid of scriptural deliberation, and bigoted (like an animal's) that knowledge is known to be of the nature of ignorance.

23) That action which is constantly executed by a detached person who is indifferent to obsession and repulsion, is certainly action of the nature of goodness.

24) And that action which is performed with tremendous endeavor by an ambitious or egotistical person, is known as action of the nature of passion.

25) And action of the nature of ignorance is that which, out of illusion, is undertaken without consideration of its consequences, its injurious effects, mischievousness, and one's capability to perform it.

26) A worker of the nature of goodness is one who is fully detached, non-egotistic yet patient and enthusiastic, and unaffected in the face of success or failure..27) A worker of the nature of passion is said to be one obsessed, a fruit-hunter, greedy, violent, engaged in unscriptural or abominable practices, and dominated by elation and lamentation.

28) A worker of the nature of ignorance is one who is fickle-minded, of gross mentality, pretentious, fraudulent, given to insulting others, lazy, morose, and a procrastinator.

29) O Dhananjaya, hear Me attentively, I shall clearly describe the three different types of intelligence and de-termination, classified according to the modes of nature.

30) O Partha, good intelligence is that by which the intrinsic nature of (religious) inclination and (irreligious) disinclination, duty and nonduty, fear and courage, as well as bondage and liberty (and all such distinctions) can be perceived in reality.

31) O Partha, passionate intelligence is that by which the intrinsic nature of religion, irreligion, duty, and nonduty can only be partly ascertained.

32) Intelligence spoiled by ignorance is that deluded perception by which irreligion is taken as religion, and everything is taken as its opposite.

33) O Partha, determination of the nature of goodness is that one–pointed determination which continuously controls the mind, the vital life forces, the senses, and all their activities.

34) O Partha, O Arjuna, determination of the nature of passion is that which, out of fruitive desire, always resorts to ritualistic religion for the purpose of amassing wealth in the attempt to fulfill mundane desires.

35) Determination of the nature of ignorance is that by which an unintelligent person does not give up sleep, fear, lamentation, dejection, and pride.

36–37) O Bharatarsabha, now hear from Me about three kinds of happiness. That which by cultivation gives birth to delight while causing the death of all miseries, which in the beginning troubles one like poison but subsequently pleases one like nectar, and which arises from pure self–knowledge that happiness is said to be of the nature of goodness.

38) Happiness of the nature of passion is said to be that which is born from the contact of the senses with their objects, and which in the beginning is perceived as nectar, but subsequently realized to be just like poison.

39) Happiness of the nature of ignorance is that which from beginning to end produces delusion of the soul, and arises from sleep, laziness, and negligence.

40) Either on Earth (among all life–forms, headed by the humans) or in the heavenly plane among the celestial gods, no one and nothing is liberated from these three modes which are born of material nature.

41) O Parantapa, according to the modes (of goodness, passion, and ignorance) which are born of their natures, all the duties of the brahmana, ksatriya, vaisya, and sudra sections are divided in a projected manner (in graded classification).

42) Internal and external sense control, austerity, purity, forbearance, straightforwardness, knowledge, realization, and theism certainly these are all the natural duties of the brahmana section.

43) Valor, zeal, endurance, expertise, courage in battle, charitable disposition, and leadership certainly these are all the characteristic actions of the ksatriya section.

44) Agriculture, tending to the cows, and trade are the natural work for the vaisya section; and natural to the sudras is the rendering of service to the brahmana, ksatriya, and vaisya sections (giving assistance to their various works).

45) Self-knowledge is attained by a person who dedicates himself to the appropriate action prescribed for his natural qualification. Now hear from Me how he attains perfection in this way.

46) A man achieves perfection by the performance of the appropriate duties prescribed for him according to his qualification. By the execution of his duties, he worships the Supreme Lord from whom the generation and impetus of all beings arises, and who permeates and pervades this entire universe (exercising His Supreme qualification of Lordship over one and all).

47) Although there may be imperfections in their execution, it is better to remain faithful to one's natural prescribed duties than to perform another's duties immaculately. Sin is never incurred by a man conforming to his natural duties.

48) O Kaunteya, despite imperfections in their execution, duties prescribed according to one's nature should not be abandoned. Verily, all action (karma) is (more or less) covered by imperfections, as fire is covered by smoke.

49) His intelligence detached from all mundane objects, the self-controlled and desireless person attains to the ultimate perfection of cessation of reactionary work by abandoning the fruits of all his actions.

50) O Kaunteya, now hear from Me in brief how the person who has attained the perfection of cessation of all reactionary work attains to the divine plane of the Absolute, the attainment of which is the supreme goal of (divine self-perceptive) knowledge.

51-53) Endowed with intelligence of the nature of goodness, mentally controlled with determination of the nature of goodness, detached from the sense objects of sound, touch, form, taste, and smell, free from obsession and repulsion, aloof to the association of materialistic persons, a temperate eater, a controller of the body, mind, and speech, constantly absorbed in thought of the Supreme Lord, thoroughly detached from the mundane world; non-egotistic, devoid of despotism, vanity, lust, anger, and the acceptance of service from others such a person, devoid of all sense of possessiveness and absorbed in divine tranquillity, is certainly qualified to achieve divine self-perception.

54) The spotlessly purehearted and self-satisfied soul who has attained to his conscious divine nature neither grieves nor craves for anything. Seeing all beings equally (in the conception of My supreme energy), he gradually achieves supreme devotion (prema–bhakti) unto Me.

55) By the potency of that supreme devotion, he is able to completely know My nature of Almighty Lordship and majesty (aisvaryamaya–svarupa). Thereafter, acquiring the perception of his divine relationship with Me, he enters into a group of My intimate personal associates, whose nature is nondifferent from Mine.

56) Although always active in the performance of all kinds of duties, those who have taken exclusive refuge in Me attain to the eternal plane of flourishing service, by My grace.

57) By the art of service connection, offering all your actions unto Me with the understanding that I alone am the supreme goal, take refuge in linking your intelligence with Me (becoming detached from general duties) and thus be loyally devoted to Me always.

58) When you have devoted your heart to Me, you will be able to surpass all kinds of formidable obstacles and adversities by My grace. And if out of pride you do not hear My words, you will surely reap ruination.

59) Out of pride you are thinking, 'I shall not fight', but such a decision will surely be in vain because your nature (befitting a.ksatriya) will certainly compel you to engage in battle.

60) O Kaunteya, being compelled by the tendency of your nature, that very duty which out of delusion you are now avoiding will be (soon) inevitably executed by you.

61) O Arjuna, the indwelling Supreme Lord, by the potency of His deluding energy, causes the living beings to wander hither and thither (in many postures), as though each were merely a puppet on strings, riding on a carousel. Verily, that Lord is dwelling within the heart of all living beings.

62) O Bharata, surrender unto Him in all respects. By His grace you will attain the supreme peace and the eternal abode.

63) I have now disclosed more and more hidden treasures to you. Remember all this, and then do as you wish.

64) Now again hear My supreme teaching, the most hidden of all hidden treasures. You are extremely dear to Me, and really, this is why I am explaining this for your true benefit. Commentary

65) Think of Me, serve Me, worship Me, offer your very self unto Me, and surely you will reach Me. Sincerely, this is My promise to you because you are My dear friend.

66) Totally abandoning all kinds of religion, surrender exclusively unto Me. I will liberate you from all kinds of sins, so do not despair. Commentary

67) You should never disclose this hidden treasure to the ease-lover, the faithless, those who are averse to My service, or those malicious persons who are envious of Me.

68) One who recounts the glories of this most hidden of all hidden treasures to My devotees such a person, attaining supreme devotion for Me, will reach Me without a doubt..69) In human society there is no one who pleases Me by his actions as does he (who preaches the glories of this Bhagavad-gita: the Hidden Treasure of the Sweet Absolute), and (in the future) there will never be one more dear to Me in the whole world than he.

70) And one who regularly reads, contemplates, or sings with a devoted heart this holy conversation between us, will thereby effect My worship through the sacrifice of wisdom. Certainly this is My opinion.

71) And the faithful and devout who simply hear this without jealousy will become liberated, and will attain to the auspicious abodes befitting those endowed with the merit of supreme virtue (sukrti).

72) O Partha, have you heard all this with singular alertness? O Dhananjaya, has your darkness of delusion been dispelled?

73) Arjuna said: O infallible one, by Your grace my delusion has been dispelled. I can now remember who I am, all my doubts have gone, and I have become reposed in surrender unto You. Now I shall follow Your order.

74) Sanjaya said: In this way I heard this amazing, ecstatic conversation between the Supreme Soul Vasudeva and Arjuna.

75) By the mercy of Srila Vyasadeva I heard this most hidden treasure which emanated directly from the holy lotus mouth of the Supreme Lord of all mystic power, Lord Sri Krsna Himself.

76) O King, repeatedly remembering this incredible divine conversation of Lord Sri Krsna and Arjuna, my heart rejoices, over and over again.

77) O King, and now I repeatedly remember I marvel at that amazing, tremendous universal form of the Supreme Lord Hari, and my whole being thrills with emotion..78) Wherever there is the Supreme Lord of all mystic power, Lord Sri Krsna Himself, and wherever there is the conqueror of wealth who carries the bow, Arjuna himself at that very place the goddess of good fortune, at that very place the goddess of victory, at that very place flourishing prosperity, and at that very place supreme virtue prevails. Certainly that is my firm resolution.

Quotes

"The glory of Indian wisdom belongs to the oldest traditions in history. When people talk about the sources of philosophy, they make reference not only to the Orient at all, but especially towards India."

Georg Wilhelm Friedrich Hegel

"The wonderful thing about the Bhagavad–gita is that, in it, a unscholared, experienced wisdom is revealed as helping goodness. This beautiful revelation, this wisdom of life, this philosophy, blossomed to religion, is what we are looking for and what we need ..."

SYNONYMS

narayani — Narayani; caitanyera — of Lord Caitanya Mahaprabhu; ucchishta-bhajana — eater of the remnants of food; tanra — of her; garbhe — in the womb; janmila — took birth; sri-dasa- vrindavana — Srila Vrindavana dasa Thakura.

TRANSLATION

Narayani eternally eats the remnants of the food of Caitanya Mahaprabhu. Srila Vrindavana dasa Thakura was born of her womb.

PURPORT

In text 43 of the Gaura-ganoddesa-dipika, a book written by Kavi-karnapura that describes all the associates of Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu and who they previously were, there is the following statement regarding Narayani:

ambikayah svasa yasin namna srila-kilimbika krishnocchishtam prabhunjana seyam narayani mata

When Lord Krishna was a child, He was nursed by a woman named Ambika, who had a younger sister named Kilimbika. During the time of Lord Caitanya's incarnation, the same Kilimbika used to eat the remnants of food left by Lord Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu. That Kilimbika was Narayani, who was a niece of Srivasa Thakura's. Later on, when she grew up and married, Srila Vrindavana dasa Thakura was born from her womb. A devotee of Lord Sri Krishna is celebrated in terms of devotional service rendered to the Lord; thus we know Srila Vrindavana dasa Thakura as the son of Narayani. Srila Bhaktisiddhanta Sarasvati Thakura notes in this connection that there is no reference to his paternal ancestry because there is no need to understand it.

—Bhaktivedanta Srila Prabhupada—

Srila Vrindavana dasa Thakura was an incarnation of Vedavyasa and also a friendly cowherd boy named Kusumapida in krsna-lila.

In other words, the author of Sri Caitanya-bhagavata, Srila Vrindavana dasa Thakura, the son of Srivasa Thakura's niece Narayani, was a combined incarnation of Vedavyasa and the cowherd boy Kusumapida.

Adi Lila

Chapter 1

I worship their Lordships Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu and Sri Nityananda Prabhu, whose long arms extend down to their knees, whose beautiful complexions are the radiant yellow of molten gold and whose elongated eyes are like red lotuses. They are the topmost of the brahmanas, the guardians of religious principles for this age, the munificent benefactors of all living entities, and the most compassionate incarnations of Godhead. They initiated the congregational chanting of the names of Lord Krsna.

O Lord! You are the eternal truth – past, present, and future – and You appeared as the son of Sri Jagannatha Misra. I offer my repeated obeisances unto You along with Your inseparable servitors, Your unalloyed devotees, Your sons (referring to His renounced Gosvami disciples, or the devotional process of chanting the holy name of Lord Krishna), and Your relatives (Bhudevi as Sri Vishnu Priya, Sridevi as Sri Laksmi Priya, and Lila, Nila or Durga as Navadvipa Dhama). According to devotional tastes there are the two Gadadharas, Damodara, Narahari, Ramananda, Jagadananda etc. One is Sri Gadadhara Pandita – the expansion of Srimati Radharani and Sri Gadadhara Bhatta from South India who is Rangadevi.

I worship the two brothers, Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu and Sri Nityananda Prabhu, who are the embodiment of magnanimity. By Their inconceivable potency They are the transcendental, eternal supreme controllers of all. Now They have descended to the material world.

All glories to Sri Gaurasundara, the supremely powerful Lord of pure transcendence. He has an aura of molten gold, with lotus petal eyes, and His long graceful arms extend to His knees. While He sings the glories of the Lord, He dances in various pleasing postures, His heart inundated by the ecstatic emotions of devotional mellows.

All glories, all glories to the moonlike Sri Krishna Caitanya. He is the fully independent Supreme Person, always engaged in transcendental pastimes. He is the Lord of the universe, the supreme controller of all controllers, and the personification of transcendence. All glories, all glories to the devotees of Sri Gauracandra. All glories, all glories to the ecstatic dancing of the Lord's intimate associates.

In the beginning I offer my humble obeisances to the feet of the loving, confidential devotees of Lord Sri Caitanya. I then offer my obeisances to the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Sri Krishna Caitanya. He incarnated in Navadvipa, and He is known as Visvambhara.

That same Supreme Personality of Godhead has declared in the Vedas and Bhagavat, "Worship of My devotees is superior to worship of Me." Lord Krishna said to Uddhava, "O Uddhava, serving My devotees is many times better than worshipping Me." (SB 11:19:21). Therefore, I offer my worshipful prayers unto the devotees of the Lord before I begin to write this book. By this act may my present endeavor be successful.

I offer my respectful obeisances to my worshipable Lord and spiritual master, Sri Nityananda Raya, by whose mercy the transcendental pastimes of Lord Sri Caitanya become spontaneously manifest. With a thousand tongues we should incessantly glorify the Supreme Lord Balarama, because His thousand mouths as Ananta Sesa constantly glorify Lord Krishna. Just as priceless gems are kept in secure custody, so also the invaluable jewel of knowledge about Krsna's pastimes is kept safely in the mouth of Anantadeva. Therefore the tongue which initially glorifies Balarama will automatically be qualified to vibrate the transcendental pastime of Sri Caitanya.

The Supreme Lord Haladhara holds His thousand hoods like snakes. He is a gigantic figure and the source of all inspiration. As Nityananda He is fully transcendental and eternally existent, intoxicated by the nectar of Sri Caitanya. Whoever sings or hears about Nityananda's supramundane character is offered the supreme shelter of Lord Caitanya.

Mahesa and his consort Parvatidevi take great pleasure in eulogizing the object of their love – Sankarsana, Nityananda Prabhu. In the midst of a million fresh young maidens, the pure devotee, Sri Siva, and his consort pour out nectarean devotional hymns to Lord Sankarsana.

All this is revealed in the Fifth Canto of the Srimad Bhagavatam. Balarama is worshiped by the entire Vaisnava world with songs of praise. Balarama danced with His gopis in Vrndavana, and their rasa dance is the pinnacle of sublimity. The Puranas describe that Balarama performed His rasa dance during the two months of spring, Madhava and Madhu. The Srimad Bhagavatam verses narrating this subject were spoken by Sukadeva Gosvami to Maharaja Pariksit.

Balarama spent the moonlit nights of the months of Vaisaka and Caitra with the cowherd damsels in the supramundane abode of Vrndavana. The place was set aglow with the rays of the moon. The lotus and kadamba flowers bloomed freely under the influence of the moon's rays, and a soft breeze circulated their scent. In the groves on the bank of the Jamuna, Balarama danced with the gopis, increasing their conjugal mood. The Supreme Lord Balarama, like a exquisite gem decorated by the cluster of gopis, performed His pleasurable pastimes. He behaved like Indra's elephant Airavata – the controller of many she–elephants. The Gandharvas observed the rasa dance and offered their prayers.

The sound of kettle drums rose from the heavens, the demigods joyously showered flowers upon Them, and the Gandharvas and sages worshiped the Supreme Lord Balarama with verses praising His activities. The sages unequivocally denounce association with women, yet they sung hymns in praise of Balarama's rasa dance with His cowherd damsels. The demigods attended Balarama's rasa dance to shower flower petals. They knew that there was no difference between Lord Krsna and Lord Balarama, Haladhara. The transcendental qualities of Balarama are obscure in the four Vedas, but the Puranas describe them boldly.

What power do I have to describe them? Out of ignorance, some people disregard the Puranas and reject Balarama's rasa dance as inauthentic.

The two brothers, Lord Krsna and Balarama, performed the rasa dance with the gopis in the same place in Vrndavana. On the radiant full moon night of holi, at the end of sivaratri vrata, Lord Krsna and Lord Balarama, accompanied by Their cowherd boy friends, enjoyed Themselves in the midst of the beautiful maidens of Vrndavana. They were both pleasingly decorated with the finest jewelry, sandalwood pulp, wildflower garlands and exquisite clothes. The fortunate gopis sang sweetly, their hearts enraptured by love for Krishna and Balarama.

Evening had not set in; the moon and the stars appeared. The fragrance of Arabian jasmine intoxicated the bumblebees, and a light breeze carried the aromas of white lilies and lotus flowers. Considering that very moment to be appropriate, Krsna and Balarama began Their pleasurable dalliances. They sang together for the pleasure of all living entities, Their voices rising and falling melodiously.

If a person, after reading Srimad Bhagavatam, is not affectionately inclined towards Lord Balarama, then he is rejected by the Supreme Lord Vishnu and His devotees. In the words of Srimad Bhagavatam, a non–believer is a yavana (a barbarian). He is destined to suffer in hell, birth after birth.

There are others who, like eunuchs, make emotional gesticulations, challenging, "Which scripture describes the rasa dance of Balarama?" Who is so sinful that even after reading the scriptures, he can not accept the truth, but misinterprets the real meaning and gives his own distorted understanding?

Lord Balarama is the abode of Lord Caitanya's deep affection. Offense at Balarama's lotus feet destroys all possibilities for salvation. In His incarnation as Lakshmana the younger brother of Lord Ramacandra, Balarama enacted the role of the Lord's servitor. Yet in His manifestation as the Supreme Lord, Balarama serves Himself in every respect – as a friend and a brother, by fanning Him, putting Him to sleep, glorifying Him with Vedic invocations and expanding Himself as His house, umbrella, attire, jewelry and seat. "O Lord ! Your direct, partial expansion, Ananta Sesa, is the source of all the various ingredients for Your service in the transcendental realm of Vaikuntha. Ananta Sesa is famous because He is manifest as Your residence, bed, throne, shoes, clothes, jewelry, etc. When shall I see you with Laksmidevi seated on the throne of Ananta Sesa?

Ananta Sesa's partial expansion is the mighty Sri Garuda whose satisfaction is derived from acting as the Lord's carrier in every pastime. Ananta's devotees include Brahma, Siva, the four Kumaras, Srila Vyasadeva, Sukadeva Gosvami, Narada Muni and others. His glorious qualities are unlimited and are not fully understood by anyone. He is the original personality, the greatest mystic, the Supreme Lord, and the greatest devotee of the Vaisnavas.

Thus far you have heard about the wonderful services performed by Ananta Sesa; now hear about His great opulence. He is enthroned in the lower planetary system of patala as his own source and repose. He is worshiped by all as His thousand mouths continually taste the full nectar of love of Godhead. In the court of Brahma, Narada Muni plays on his vina, and with well-composed verses he sings the wonderful glories of Ananta. Is it humanly possible to know the supramundane nature of Anantadeva?

Just by His glance, He sets in motion the three modes of material nature which are the cause of this world's creation, maintenance, and annihilation. Although He is one, He supports the entire variegated material cosmic manifestation Himself (within the pores of His person). He is beginningless and eternal.

Other than Lord Sankarsana, who can offer shelter to persons devoid of all material aspirations? He is the support on which the material world manifests and acts. That Supreme Lord, the cause of all causes, has appeared in His sublime spiritual form. He is the most powerful; in comparison, the power of a lion is insignificant. He performs pure transcendental pastimes to capture the hearts of His dear devotees, and He destroys countless sins by manifesting His transcendental form. What more is there to say than this? One becomes purified by hearing or calling out the name of Lord Anantadeva, either respectfully or accidentally. Even a degraded person is purified when he tauntingly utters the name of Sri Ananta.

Anantadeva's mighty potency is beyond measure. That Supreme Lord carries on just one of His thousand heads the entire universe with all its living entities, mountains, and rivers, and that universe appears to be only a minute, atomic speck. Even if a person acquires a thousand tongues, how can he describe the power of the omnipotent Supreme Lord? Anantadeva is His own shelter and source, filled with unlimited power and strength. While residing in the lower planetary system of rasatala, He holds this gigantic cosmic manifestation with ease born of detachment. This material world's creation, maintenance, and annihilation, as well as the three modes of material nature, are activated by His glance. Who can fathom Anantadeva's non-dual, transcendental, eternal and unborn existence?

Out of mercy toward the living entities the Lord manifests His supramundane spiritual form while He performs His variegated pastimes. All living entities reside within that transcendental form. The mighty Lord Nrsimhadeva represents but a wave in the ocean of the Lord's unlimited pastimes which satisfy the hearts of His devotees. Anantadeva's unlimited names, when heard or chanted by anyone in any manner, immediately sever the noose of innumerable births and deaths. Thus the Vaisnava devotees of the Lord always appreciated those who glorify Him. Ananta Sesa is the supreme destination of the entire universe; His holy name is the only means for the living entities's redemption. The Lord holds on His head the unlimited material nature – along with its mountains and oceans – simply for its protection and maintenance. The entire universe is a speck on one of His thousand hoods, and because of His unlimited strength, He does not feel the burden.

Lord Anantadeva, the original Supreme Personality and maintainer of the entire cosmic manifestation, incessantly sings in glorification of Lord Krsna. He continuously describes every aspect of the Lord's divine attributes. Lord Krsna is eternal and His attributes are unending, therefore He can never be fully described or glorified. But Ananta is also eternal and His ability to glorify the Lord is unending. In Their divine relationship, neither is ever victorious. Even today Ananta Sesa's thousand mouths continuously sing the glories of the Supreme Lord Krsna Caitanya. How wonderfully Lord Krsna and Lord Balarama compete with each other! Brahma, Siva, other demigods and the perfected sages look on, feeling great exhilaration. The eulogies of Anantadeva pursue the ever-expanding, elusive shores of Lord Krsna's ocean of qualities.

O Narada, I Brahma, and your elders, Sanaka and other sages cannot even fathom the extent of this material nature, what to speak of knowing the Supreme Lord's spiritual potencies. Anantadeva, the origin of all demigods, is unable to exhaustively glorify the Supreme Lord's transcendental opulence and potencies with His thousand mouths. Therefore how is it possible for ordinary mortals to understand these divine potencies? Anantadeva is Himself the master of unlimited attributes, and He resides in rasatala simply to support the vast material creation.

In the court of Brahma, Narada Muni plays His vina and sings about these very same transcendental qualities of the Supreme Lord. Brahma and others are stunned in ecstasy upon hearing about the supramundane qualities of the Supreme Lord, and Narada Muni is worshiped by all because he sings about those qualities. I have also been moved to write a few phrases in praise of the unlimited potencies of Lord Nityananda, Anantadeva, so I humbly request all of you to develop a loving devotional mood toward the Lord. Those who desire to cross over the dangerous ocean of material existence, yet drown in the ocean of devotional ecstasy, may take shelter of Lord Nityananda.

I pray to the merciful Vaisnava devotees of the Lord to fulfill my hearts yearning, that I may serve my Lord Balarama birth after birth. Just as dvija, vipra, and brahma are different names for the same person, similarly Nityananda, Ananta and Balarama are different names for the same Supreme Personality. My Lord Nityananda Prabhu appeared within my heart and instructed me to narrate the transcendental qualities of Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu in this book.

The pastimes of Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu are revealed by Nityananda's mercy only, because His personal expansion, Ananta Sesa, is the storehouse of information about Lord Caitanya and Lord Krsna's pastimes. Although Sri Ananta Sesa is the embodiment of Krsna kirtana, I have been able to offer only a humble prayer in His honor.

Hearing Lord Caitanya's qualities and pastimes can clean away all material contaminations. Know for certain that such pastimes are revealed only through a pure devotee's grace. For who can know the nature and pastimes of Lord Caitanya? It is a hidden mystery even in the Vedas. Therefore, I have compiled only first-hand accounts taken directly from the lips of the associates of the Lord.

I see no beginning or end to Lord Caitanya's pastimes. They are eternal and unlimited, and only the Lord's grace gives me the potency to compose them.

I am simply Lord Caitanya's mouthpiece, repeating as He desires, just like a doll moved by some unseen hand. I throw myself at the feet of all pure Vaisnava devotees so they may cleanse me of all offenses.

O my brothers! Please listen very attentively to the transcendental pastimes Lord Caitanya performed with His devotee associates. The ecstatic pastimes of Lord Caitanya have been divided into three periods – early, intermediate and later (Adi, Madhya and Antya). The early period includes a description of the Lord's education, and the intermediate portion reveals Mahaprabhu's pastimes of congregational chanting. The concluding portion describes the Lord's pastimes as a sannyasi in Nilacala, Orissa. He had allocated to Nityananda the mission of preaching in Bengal.

The pious Sri Jagannatha Misra, Caitanya's father, lived in Navadvipa. Like Vasudeva, he conscientiously performed his spiritual duties. His devout and faithful wife Srimati Sacidevi was a second Devaki – the beloved mother of everyone. The Supreme Personality of Godhead Lord Narayana appeared in the womb of Srimati Sacidevi, and as Sri Krsna Caitanya, He became the most precious possession of everyone's heart.

The Adi Khanda begins by describing the appearance of Lord Caitanya on an auspicious full moon evening in the month of Phalguna when the moon went into eclipse. The tumultuous chanting of Lord Hari's holy name filled all directions, inspiring everyone to sing together. The Supreme Lord Caitanya was born amidst the chanting.

The Adi Khanda also describes the Lord's numerous childhood pastimes. Lord Caitanya revealed to His parents His otherwise unmanifest place of residence, the holy dhama. And as they stared in wonder, He showed them the physical signs of divinity on His feet.

This portion of the book describes how one day thieves kidnaped baby Nimai from his house, but He tricked them into bringing Him back home. Another story narrated here is how the Lord ate all the food offered to Vishnu in the house of Jagadisa and Hiranya on ekadasi day. Yet another story describes how the Lord once sat on a pile of contaminated cooking pots and used the situation to instruct His mother in philosophy. He also acted like a crying baby, using His tears as a ploy to make everyone chant the holy names of God.

The Adi Khanda discusses the Lord as a child playing with His friends as if He were Krsna in Gokula. It describes how He began His education and with little effort mastered all the scriptures. It narrates Sri Jagannatha Misra's disappearance and Visvarupa's acceptance of sannyasa and how these two disasters afflicted Mother Saci. Then it describes the Lord's wonderful pastimes as a student. He was pride personified before the other student scholars. Caitanya's travels through eastern Bengal are also described here, elaborating on how the land became a place of pilgrimage by the touch of His lotus feet. Caitanya was the master of all different scriptures. There was no one in the three worlds to challenge His erudition.

The Adi Khanda describes the Lord sporting with His fellow students and their water pastimes in the waves of the Ganga. Then came the Lord's first marriage and the glorious disappearance of His first wife. He duly accepted a second wife, the daughter of a royal scholar. Once He pretended to be sick from a wind disorder. He took that opportunity to reveal symptoms of love of Godhead. While the Lord roamed about as a great scholar, He empowered all the devotees who surrendered to Him.

The narration of the early life of Sri Caitanya includes a description of the immense joy on Mother Saci's face when she looked at the moon-like, blissful face and the graceful clothes of the Lord. Then there is the story of how Nimai Pandita piqued the pride of a scholar who was renowned as Digvijaya, the world conqueror. Ultimately the Lord slashed the scholar's material bonds. The Lord put everyone – even His devotees – into illusion about His real identity, and He roamed the streets of Navadvipa deceiving all. There is also a description of the Lord's pilgrimage to Gaya dhama and how He showered causeless mercy on Isvara Puri by accepting him as His spiritual master.

Adi Khanda is a reservoir of the Lord's never-ending pleasurable pastimes. In the future Srila Vyasadeva, the greatest of sages, will describe other pastimes. But herein I reveal the early pastimes of the Lord up to the time He returns from His visit to Gaya dhama.

In Madhya Khanda the Lord's omnipotence becomes known, and gradually His devotees are identified as they collect around His lotus feet like bees. Caitanya reveals His absolute identity as Lord Narayana by sitting on the altar of Vishnu in the houses of Sri Advaita and Srivasa Pandita. Sri Caitanya meets Nityananda Prabhu and together the brothers make wonderful Krsna kirtana. Then Nityananda's vision of the transcendental six-handed form of Caitanya Mahaprabhu is described. Later the Lord exhibited His universal form to Advaita Acarya Prabhu.

Nityananda's vyasapuja has been described in Madhya Khanda along with a story of how He was slandered by some faithless atheists. Thereafter comes the description of Lord Caitanya's manifestation as Balarama when Nityananda gave Him His plough and club. The wonderful redemption of the two reprobates Jagai and Madhai – who were later to become quite famous – is told in detail.

Mother Saci's vision of Sri Caitanya in a blackish complexion and Sri Nityananda in a whitish complexion is also discussed.

Lord Caitanya once showed His unlimitedly opulent maha prakash form for several hours, and that story is told in Madhya Khanda. On that occasion He revealed the transcendental truth about Himself and the real identity of all His devotees. Thereafter comes a description of the occasion when Lord Caitanya, who is Narayana the Lord of Vaikuntha and the supreme absolute reality, danced and chanted as He narrated the truth about Himself.

In Madhya Khanda the Lord breaks Canda Kazi's pride, and manifesting His own spiritual potency, He engages in continuous congregational chanting. Canda Kazi accepted devotional service by the Lord's grace. Immersed in ecstatic bliss, Sri Caitanya thereafter moved from village to village performing kirtana. He declared the truth about Himself as He exhibited His Varaharupa – a four-armed form – while riding around the courtyard on the back of His devotee, Murari Gupta. The Lord also ate some rice which Suklambara had collected by begging, and performed many wonderful pastimes in His manifestation of Lord Narayana.

In Madhya Khanda Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu appears before the devotees in the guise of Mahalaksmi or Rukminidevi, the Universal Mother who breast-fed all the devotees who were Her dependent sons. The Lord once chastised Mukunda for keeping bad company and later, when He was satisfied with Mukunda's obedience, He favored him with grace. Then there is a narration of the ecstatic all-night kirtanas in Navadvipa which were held regularly for a complete year.

Madhya Khanda describes the mock verbal fights between Nityananda Prabhu and Sri Advaita Acarya. Only a foolish person thinks that these were actual disagreements. Then the Lord instructed His mother and simultaneously warned the whole world about the grievous consequences of offending the Vaisnava devotees. Satisfied by the prayers of His devotees, the Lord gave individual benedictions to each of them. Srila Haridasa Thakura received Mahaprabhu's mercy and the Lord showed compassion toward Sridhara by drinking water from his pot.

Sri Caitanya blissfully performed daily pastimes in the waters of the Ganga with all his devotees. Once He and Nityananda Prabhu visited the house of Advaita Acarya for a specific reason. It is described that the Lord severely chastised Advaita Acarya, but at last He showed immeasurable grace on him. Then the Madhya Khanda describes how the extremely fortunate Sri Murari Gupta became enlightened about the true identity of Lord Caitanya as Krsna and Nityananda as Balarama. Those two Supreme Personalities danced in ecstasy in the house of Srivasa.

In Madhya Khanda the Lord explains the entire philosophical truth about human life, using Srivasa's expired son as the speaker. In this way He alleviated everyone's suffering. News of this incident spread far, and by the Lord's grace Srivasa could overcome the shock of his son's death. In another story narrated in Madhya Khanda the Lord threw Himself into the Ganga, and Nityananda Prabhu and Srila Haridasa Thakura lifted Him out. Then Srimati Narayani received a treasure desired even by the demigods and Brahma; she received the remnants of the Lord's foodstuffs. The final story in the Madhya Khanda is the pastime of the Lord leaving home and accepting the renounced order of life for the salvation of every living entity. There are uncountable pastimes of the Lord in the Madhya Khanda; whatever remains untouched will be described later by Srila Vyasadeva.

As the Sesa Khanda opens, Visvambhara is in the sannyasa order of life, and He has accepted the name Sri Krsna Caitanya. He has shaven his head clean, thereby plunging Advaita Acarya Prabhu into deep despondency. Mother Saci's suffering is unbearable, yet she is sustained by the Lord's mercy. Nityananda, the manifestation of Balarama, smashed Caitanya's sannyasa danda, and thereafter the Lord concealed His real identity and went to Nilacala Puri.

Caitanya playfully taunted Sarvabhauma Bhattacarya when they first meet, but later He exhibited His six-handed form to him. The Lord mercifully graced King Prataparudra with devotional service and lived thereafter in the house of Kasi Misra. During Caitanya's stay in Puri, both Svarupa Damodara and Paramananda Puri became eligible to serve the Lord in confidential relationships.

Sesa Khanda also describes Caitanya's trip through Bengal on His way to Mathura and Vrndavana. He stayed in Vidya Vacaspati's residence before moving on to the village of Kulia in Bengal. Millions of people gathered to see the Lord on His return to Bengal, and all who saw Him were liberated. Caitanya attempted to continue on His trip to Mathura, but after a short distance He turned back to Bengal.

When the Lord returned to Nilacala, He engaged in continuous kirtana with His associates. He sent Nityananda to preach in Bengal, while He Himself remained in Nilacala with a handful of devotees. The Lord and all His devotees danced ecstatically before Lord Jagannatha's chariot.

Caitanya's travels to Ramesvaram in South India and His journey to Mathura through the Jharakhanda forest are also described in Sesa Khanda. Later the Lord showered grace on Raya Ramananda and revealed other divine pastimes He had previously performed in Mathura. The magnanimous Caitanya Mahaprabhu also graced Dabir Khas by revealing His identity to him. He liberated Dabir Khas and his brother and renamed them both. They became the famous Rupa Gosvami and Sanatana Gosvami.

In Sesa Khanda the Lord's travels to Varanasi are described. The sannyasis of Varanasi could not recognize the Supreme Lord because they were too critical of the Vaisnavas. Caitanya Mahaprabhu thereafter returned to Nilacala and became engrossed in congregational Hari kirtana throughout the day and night.

Nityananda traveled throughout India as a wandering mendicant. His pilgrimage is described in Sesa Khanda. Who can understand Nityananda's unfathomable transcendental character? He roamed about Mathura with ankle bells on His feet. On Sri Caitanya's request He went to Panihati and distributed devotional service – love of God – to everyone. Through His causeless mercy He saved Nahamalla Raya and other merchants of that locality.

In Sesa Khanda, Caitanya Mahaprabhu's remaining eighteen years in Nilacala are described. Although numerous pastimes are related about Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu, Srila Vedavyasa will later tell them all in detail. Nityananda finds endless joy in glorifying Lord Caitanya, and He is an unmatched expert in that art.

O Lord Caitanya, please bless me so that I may receive the transcendental service of Nityananda's lotus feet. He is the Lord of the entire universe. I have narrated in brief the contents of this book at the very outset. All of you please hear with undivided attention the pastimes of Sri Krsna Caitanya.

Lord Caitanya and Lord Nityananda are my life and soul.

I, Vrndavana dasa, offer my humble song at Their lotus feet.

Adi Lila

Chapter 2

All glories, all glories to the beatific Caitanya Mahaprabhu who is Sri Jagannatha Misra's son and the Supreme Lord of all. All glories to Lord Caitanya, the life and soul of Sri Nityananda Prabhu and Sri Gadadhara Pandita. All glories, all glories to the shelter of Sri Advaita Acarya and the other devotees.

All glories to Lord Sri Gauranga and His associates. One receives loving devotion to the Supreme simply by hearing transcendental topics about Lord Caitanya. Again I offer my obeisances at the Lord's lotus feet and at the lotus feet of all His associates so that the pastimes of the Lord may appear on my tongue. All glories, all glories to Lord Caitanya, the ocean of compassion; and all glories, all glories to Lord Nityananda, the embodiment of loving devotional service.

The spiritual identities of Lord Caitanya and Lord Nityananda as brothers and as servitors of the Supreme Lord are unknown, yet by Their causeless mercy Their absolute identities were revealed. Lord Brahma was enlightened about the Absolute Truth by Lord Krsna's mercy. Srimad Bhagavatam and all Vedic scriptures describe this. May the Lord, Who in the beginning of creation amplified the potent knowledge of Brahma from within his heart and inspired him with full knowledge of creation and of his own self, and who appeared to be generated from the mouth of Brahma, be pleased with me.

In the beginning Lord Brahma did not have the power to see anything although he had been born on a lotus from the Lord's navel. But when he completely surrendered himself to the Supreme Lord, the Lord by His causeless mercy appeared before him. That same mercy enlightened Lord Brahma with absolute knowledge of the Supreme Lord, the origin of all incarnations. Thereafter, spontaneous pure glorification of Him sprang from Brahma's mouth.

Without Lord Krsna's causeless mercy, it is impossible to know the truth about His incarnation. His supramundane pastimes are inconceivable and inaccessible. Lord Brahma described them in the Bhagavata Purana.

O Lord of the Universe, O Supreme Person, O Supreme soul, O Lord of the mystics, how marvelous you are! Who within the three worlds can know when, where, why and how you expand your internal spiritual potency "Yogamaya" and perform your transcendental pastimes? Who can fathom the ontological reason for Your advent in this world?

Therefore, I can only submit the conclusions of Bhagavad Gita and Bhagavata Purana as reasons for Your appearance.

"Whenever and wherever there is a decline in religious practice, O descendent of Bharata, and a predominant rise of irreligion, at that time I descend myself. In order to deliver the pious and annihilate the miscreants, as well as to re-establish the principles of religion, I advent Myself millennium after millennium."

Whenever religious practice becomes weak, irreligion gradually increases.

Therefore, Lord Brahma and others humbly requested the Lord to appear and protect the pious and destroy the demons. In order to re-establish the religious process of the age, the Supreme Lord descended on the earth with His eternal associates. The religion for Kali Yuga is congregational chanting of the Lord's holy name and in order to propagate this religious process Lord Caitanya appeared as the son of Mother Saci. It is confirmed in the Srimad Bhagavatam that the Supreme Absolute Truth, Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu, incarnated solely to propagate the congregational chanting of Krsna's holy name.

"O King Nimi, devotees always offer prayers to the Supreme Lord Hari, but now I will explain how the devotees in the Kali Yuga offer the choicest prayers accompanied by various rituals and regulations for the satisfaction of the Supreme Lord. In this age of Kali, people who are endowed with sufficient intelligence will worship the Lord, Who is accompanied by His associates, by performance of sankirtana yajna."

The Supreme Personality of Godhead, Lord Caitanya, propagated the essence of all religion for the age of Kali – congregational chanting of Lord Hari's holy name. Accompanied by His associates, He appeared in Kali Yuga simply to establish the religious practice of congregational chanting.

According to His desire, His eternal associates appeared before Him, taking birth as humans. Ananta Sesa, Siva, Brahma, the sages and other associates of the Lord all took birth as highly elevated, pure Vaisnava devotees – Bhagavatas. Lord Caitanya, Krsna, knew everyone's position and identity. Most of them took birth in Navadvipa, yet some were born in Cattogram, Radhadesh or Srihatta (Bengal) and still others in Orissa. All these associates appeared in different places, but everyone met in Navadvipa.

Srivasa Pandita, Sri Rama Pandita and Sri Candrasekhar are personalities worshiped in all three worlds. Sri Murari Gupta can cure the disease of material entanglement. Vaisnavas of this caliber appeared in Srihatta. Pundarika Vidyanidhi (the foremost Vaisnava devotee), Caitanya Vallabha, (who was very dear to Lord Caitanya) and Vasudeva Datta all appeared in Cattogram. Haridas Thakura appeared in Budhan.

The village Ekacakra is in the Radhadesa district of Bengal. The Supreme Lord Nityananda made His appearance there. Lord Nityananda is factually the Supreme Father of all living entities, but to show mercy on Hadai Pandita, a brahmin and pure devotee, He took birth as His son. Lord Nityananda is an ocean of mercy, the shelter of all Vaisnava devotees and the giver of devotion. He appeared in the district of Radhadesa. Expressing their happiness at the appearance of Lord Nityananda, the demigods made joyous sounds and showered flowers. All this was performed, unseen by ordinary mundane eyes. From the time of Nityananda's appearance Radhadesa district grew more and more prosperous each day.

Sri Paramananda Puri, who was Lord Caitanya's close associate in Nilacala, appeared in Trihut, in Mithila, Bihar.

When the land on the banks of Mother Ganga are places of pilgrimage, why did the Vaisnava devotees appear in impious lands? Caitanya Himself descended on the banks of Mother Ganga, so why did His eternal associates appear in far away places? In their travels the Pandavas avoided countries devoid of the sound of the holy name of the Lord and the waters of Mother Ganga.

Lord Krsna Caitanya, being compassionate on the unfortunate souls born in those lands, arranged for the pure Vaisnava devotees to appear there. His own appearance was required simply to redeem the material world. In order to accomplish this, He arranged for His pure devotees to take birth in impious lands and in impious families. Wherever and in whichever family the pure Vaisnava devotee appeared, he was able to purify everyone in the vicinity by his pure spiritual potency. The birthplace of a pure Vaisnava becomes a place of pilgrimage. Therefore the Supreme Lord Caitanya arranged that His associates take birth in many different places. And although they were all born in different places, they met, as if by accident, in Navadvipa.

Lord Caitanya's birthplace was Navadvipa, hence Navadvipa was the meeting place of all the devotees. The glory of Navadvipa can not be compared to any other place in the world. Knowing about Lord Caitanya's descent in Navadvipa, Providence made it a prosperous and flourishing town to receive the Lord. Who is capable of describing Navadvipa's opulence? Hundreds of thousands crowded to bathe on the banks of the Ganga. By Goddess Sarasvati's grace residents of Navadvipa of all different ages were learned exponents of the scriptures. The people were proud of their material knowledge; even young boys argued logic with senior scholars. Students came from different parts of the country to study in Navadvipa, because there they could get a taste for scholastics. The number of students in Navadvipa was incalculable, and the exact count of professors was also undetermined.

The residents were content, favored by the favorable glances of Rama (Laksmi, the Goddess of wealth), but they wasted their time spending money for sense pleasures and other worldly affairs. As they grew prouder and more materialistic, people's tastes for devotional service to the Supreme Lord had decreased alarmingly, and the beginning of Kali Yuga had ushered in immoral activities.

The only religious or devotional activities they knew were invocations to the demigods and demigoddesses – especially Durga devi – and prayers for temporary material benedictions.

Some arrogantly worshiped Manasa the Goddess of snakes; others wasted huge amounts of wealth worshipping dolls.

They squandered large sums on the marriages of their sons and daughters, and in this way they wasted their human life.

Even the so called learned high priests – Bhattacharya, Cakravarti and Misra, etc. – did not know the purpose of the scriptures.

Though they taught the scriptures, their activities were contrary to scriptural injunction, so along with their students they drowned in the deluge of iniquity.

Nobody was engaged in explaining the imports of congregational chanting of Lord Krsna's holy name – the religion of Kali Yuga; they spent their time simply finding faults in others.

As for the superstitious so-called renunciates and hermits not a single name of God ever escaped their mouths.

Those considered most pious in society were heard repeating the Lord's name Govinda or Pundarikaksa only once at the time of daily abduction.

Devotional perspectives were invariably absent in explaining transcendental literatures like Bhagavat Gita and Srimad Bhagavatam.

The Vaisnava devotees of the Lord became distressed seeing the mass engrossed in material existence under the external energy of the Lord.

How can all these living entities be liberated? They are completely mesmerized by the myth of sense pleasures.

Although people were requested to chant God's holy name, they refused and instead they foolishly busied themselves acquiring fruitless material knowledge.

The elevated Vaisnava devotees continued their devotional activities by worshiping Krsna, taking bath in the Ganga and discussing Krsna conscious topics.

The Vaisnavas became moved to benedict humanity, and prayed that Lord Krsna would quickly shower His mercy upon them.

Foremost of the great Vaisnavas in Navadvipa was Advaita Acarya who was glorified throughout the world.

The preeminent spiritual preceptor was the exponent on knowledge of the absolute science of devotion and renunciation; His delineation of Krsna conscious topics equaled Lord Siva's.

His explanations on all existing scriptures arrived at the same conclusion – the essence of everything is devotion to Lord Krsna's lotus feet.

He constantly worshiped Lord Krsna with great devotion, offering Him Tulasi blossoms and Ganga water.

His intense attachment for Lord Krsna made him resound loudly in exaltation and the sound penetrated the coverings of the material world, passed the abode of Lord Brahma and entered in Vaikuntha.

Captured by the booming, ecstatic sound of Advaita Acarya's love, Lord Krsna appeared before his devotee.

Advaita Acarya Prabhu was the leader of Vaisnavas; his devotional service was the most glorious in Lord Brahma's planetary system.

In that manner Advaita Acarya spent His days in Navadvipa; he suffered acute pain at the sight of persons bereft of devotional service.

The people were all mad after mundane sense pleasures; no one was keen to worship or serve Lord Krsna.

Some worshiped Vasuti (a female deity identified with Candi) with many gifts, while others worshiped the Yaksas with flesh and wine. They drowned in the endless tumult of singing, dancing and music, their ears deaf to the nectarine call of the auspicious name of Lord Krsna.

The demigods are not satisfied with worship from humans which is ultimately not pleasing to Lord Krsna. Advaita Acarya in particular was extremely unhappy about such worship.

Advaita Acarya Prabhu had a very compassionate nature; he was always thinking of how to liberate the conditioned souls.

"If my Lord descends then He can liberate everyone.

"I can boast of being an incarnation of Lord Maha Vishnu only if I can convince the Lord of Vaikuntha, Krsna, to appear in this world.

"And when that Lord of Vaikuntha descends in person, I shall sing and dance in joy and liberate all the conditioned souls."

Considering matters in this way, He constantly worshiped the lotus feet of Krsna with undeviating resolve.

Lord Caitanya made his appearance because of Advaita Acarya Prabhu's sincere plea. The Lord Himself often repeated this fact.

Srivasa Pandita and his three brothers were residents of Navadvipa. They always chanted Lord Krsna's name, bathed in the Ganga and worshiped Krsna thrice a day. Later Lord Caitanya performed many pastimes in Srivasa's house.

On the instruction of Lord Caitanya, many of His eternal associates like Sri Candrasekhar, Sri Jagadisa, Sri Gopinatha, Sriman, Sri Murari, Sri Garuda and Sri Gangadasa appeared before the Lord.

In connection with these various incidents I mention only those personalities known personally to me. Otherwise, to mention every individual would make this book bulky.

Each one of the magnanimous devotees executed his spiritual duties and was concerned only with devotional services to Krsna.

Each was unaware of the others' spiritual identities (svarupa) yet they mixed intimately as confidential friends.

Wherever they looked they saw a world devoid of devotion and their hearts were seared with sorrow.

They found no one with any taste for the nectar of Lord Kṛṣṇa's pastimes, so they simply glorified the Lord amongst themselves.

They often spent several hours together in Śrī Advaita Acārya's residence discussing topics of Lord Kṛṣṇa, and in this manner they dispelled all discontent.

The devotees saw the world burning in the flames of material existence, and they found no occasion to inspire the people to an awareness of God. This caused them great sorrow.

Śrī Advaita Acārya joined the community of Vaiṣṇavas in an attempt to make the people conscious of God, but not a soul understood them.

Stricken with grief due to people's suffering, Śrī Advaita Acārya began fasting; all the Vaiṣṇavas sighed deeply at the situation.

Why sing and dance for Kṛṣṇa? What is the meaning of congregational chanting of the Lord's holy name? Who are the Vaiṣṇavas? Gross materialistic people running after wealth and family do not comprehend any of these things. Indeed such atheists only taunt and laugh at the Vaiṣṇavas.

As evening descended Śrīvāsa Thākura and His three brothers would vociferously sing the Lord's name in their house. The atheistic neighbors vilified Śrīvāsa Thākura, pronouncing him mad. They declared that the entire village would be destroyed because of him.

The tyrannical Muslim rulers would tear the village apart if they heard people loudly chanting God's name.

Some envious neighbors said they would break down Śrīvāsa Thākura's house and float it down the river in order to get rid of him.

"When Śrīvāsa Thākura leaves, then only will the village be peaceful again. Otherwise the Muslim rulers will torture us "

When the saintly Vaiṣṇavas heard such threats from the atheists they simply wept, telling their sorrows to Lord Kṛṣṇa.

Śrī Advaita Acārya burned with rage on hearing this news, and unconcerned with his state of undress he addressed the Vaiṣṇavas.

"Listen Śrīvāsa Thākura, Śrī Gangādaśa and Suklambārā, I shall make Lord Kṛṣṇa appear before everyone's eyes.

"Lord Krsna will come personally and liberate everyone , and along with all you Vaisnavas the Lord will teach the atheists love of Godhead.

"And if I fail to keep my promise, I shall manifest my four handed form and take up the disc.

"I shall sever the heads of all the atheists. Only then will I accept that Lord Krsna is my Lord and master and I am His proper servitor".

Sri Advaita Acarya spoke extensively, and then resolving Himself He worshiped the lotus feet of Lord krsna.

The collective devotees also worshiped Lord krsna's lotus feet with great attention and continuous tears. As the devotees went about their duties in Navadvipa town, nowhere did they find any discussion about God or devotion.

This shocked the devotees with grief; some contemplated leaving their bodies, while others sobbed Krsna's name, letting out deep long sighs.

So severe was their pain at the sight of the futile endeavors of a godless society that they lost all appetite.

At last they renounced all material comfort whereupon the Supreme Lord made preparations to descend to the material world.

By the Supreme Lord's desire, Lord Nityananda, the origin of Lord Ananta Sesa, descended before Him in the land called Radha.

Lord Nityananda made his appearance in the world of Srimati Padmavati devi on the auspicious thirteenth day of the waxing moon in a village called Ekacakra.

Although He is the original Supreme Father of everyone, Nityananda allowed Sri Hadai Pandita, a pure and elevated brahman, to play the role of his father.

The Supreme Lord Sri Balarama is an ocean of mercy and is the giver of pure devotional service to Krsna; He has again appeared, this time with the name Nityananda.

The denizens of heavenly planets secretly celebrated this occasion, showering flower confetti with tumultuous sounds of joy and praise.

Lord Nityananda's appearance in the land of Radhadesa gradually increased that district's good fortune in every respect.

The Supreme Personality, who appeared to liberate the fallen souls, took the dress of a mendicant and traveled everywhere.

In this manner Lord Ananta made his advent. Now hear descriptions of Lord Kṛṣṇa's advent.

Sri Jagannātha Mīśra, the great transcendental personality, resided in Navadvīpa. He was like Vasudeva (Lord Kṛṣṇa's father), always engaged in spiritual activities.

He was magnanimous and possessed the best of all brahminical qualities; his qualities had no comparison in this world.

Sri Jagannātha Mīśra was of the same spiritual category as Kāśyapa, Dāśaratha, Vasudeva, or Nanda.

His dedicated wife Śrīmatī Sacīdevī was the embodiment of devotion to the Supreme Lord. She was the Universal Mother.

All her eight daughters passed away and she was left with one greatly fortunate son, Viśvarūpa.

Sri Viśvarūpa was as beautiful and charming as Cupid and the source of joy for his parents.

From birth Sri Viśvarūpa was materially renounced, and as a child he mastered the different scriptures.

The godlessness seen in the beginning of Kali Yuga was indicative of what the future had in store; the whole society would become bereft of devotional service.

The Supreme Lord descends when religious principles decline and He feels that his devotees are suffering.

Thus the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Sri Caitanya Mahāprabhu, entered into the bodies of Śrīmatī Sacīdevī and Sri Jagannātha Mīśra.

Lord Ananta sang hymns praising the Lord; Sri Jagannātha Mīśra and Sacīdevī heard everything as if in a dream.

Both husband and wife shone bright with spiritual radiance, yet ordinary eyes could not see.

Lord Siva, Brahma and other demigods, understanding that the Supreme Lord was going to appear, came and offered prayers.

These mystical pastimes of the Lord are all recorded, even in the great Vedic scriptures.

The eulogies of Lord Brahma and others are most confidential knowledge, and hearing them will result in deep attachment for Krsna.

All glories! All glories to the Supreme Lord Caitanya, the maintainer of all.

You have appeared to inaugurate the congregational chanting of the holy name.

All glories! All glories to Lord Caitanya, the protector of Vedic religion, saintly devotees and pious brahmanas; You are the destroyer of non-devotees and death personified for the atheists.

All glories! All glories to Lord Caitanya. Your transcendental form is absolute, eternal and full of bliss; You are the Supreme Lord of lords Whose desires cannot be obstructed.

You are unmanifest in millions and millions of universes, Yet you manifest Yourself in the womb of Srimati Sacidevi.

Who can understand the activities of Your sweet will? Creation, maintenance and annihilation of the universes are just aspects of Your wonderful pastimes.

Your might – ignited only by Your desire – can destroy the entire cosmic manifestation. Is it not possible then for You to kill demons like Ravana and Kamsa with mere words?

In spite of Your ability You appeared in the houses of King Dasaratha and Sri Vasudeva to kill these demons.

Who can unravel the mystery behind Your activities? Only you know Your own sweet will.

Simply by Your desire any one of Your servitors can liberate all the innumerable universes.

In spite of it, You descend Yourself to teach religious principles to the people of the world and thus benedict them.

In Satya Yuga You appeared with a whitish complexion to teach the path of austerity and meditation by performing austerity Yourself.

To establish religious principles You took the role of a celibate brahmin with matted hair, carrying an antelope skin, mendicants staff and water pot.

In Treta Yuga You appeared in a beautiful reddish complexion as the Lord of Sacrifices to teach the religious practice of sacrifice.

With sruk and sruva in hand, You Yourself conducted the sacrificial rituals.

In Dvapara Yuga You came with the transcendently beautiful dark complexion of a monsoon cloud and established deity worship in every house.

Wearing a yellow cloth and decorated with the Srivatsa sign which is exclusively Yours, You performed opulent deity worship.

In Kali Yuga You appeared as a learned brahman with a golden Yellow complexion to disseminate the most confidential religious practice of congregational chanting of the Lord's holy name.

You accept unlimited incarnations. Who has the power to count them?

In Your incarnation as the transcendental fish, Matsya, You came with the waters of annihilation; and as Kurma the tortoise You were the support of all living beings (holding the Mandara mountain).

As Hayagriva You preserved the Vedas and killed the two demons Madhu and Kaitatha.

As Varaha, the boar incarnation, You rescued the earth; and as Lord Nrsimhadeva You pierced and killed the demon Hiranyakasipu.

As the dwarf incarnation Lord Varaha You outwitted the demon King Bali; as Parasurama you rid the world of ksatriyas – the fighting class.

As Lord Ramacandra You destroyed the demon Ravana; and as Lord Balarama, who holds the plough, you expanded unlimitedly.

As Lord Buddha you preached the religion of compassion and non–violence; and as Lord Kalki You destroyed the degraded mlecchas (those who do not follow the Vedic injunctions).

As Lord Dhanvantari You distributed the nectar of immortality, Amrta; and as Lord Hamsa, the swan incarnation, You spoke the knowledge of the Absolute to Lord Brahma and others.

As Narada Muni You held the vina and sang sweetly; and as Srila Vyasadeva You explained the Truth about Yourself.

Lord Krsna is above all the incarnations and their beautiful eternal pastimes; He eternally resides in Gokula with many variegated pleasure—pastimes.

In this present incarnation you appeared as a pure unalloyed devotee; You disseminated the knowledge devotional service and chanted the holy name.

The nectar of congregational chanting of the holy name drowned the entire universe in waves of bliss and every house knew the process of love of Godhead.

How can we describe the universal ecstasy aroused when you danced with all your devotees and servitors.

Just by constant remembrance of Your lotus feet Your pure devotees freed this world of all ills and inauspiciousness.

The touch of their feet dispelled the dark omens of the world, and a mere glance from them purified all directions.

O Lord Caitanya, so glorious are Your servitors that when they dance wonderfully with their arms raised they remove all disturbances in the heavenly planets.

"O King, when Lord Krsna's devotees dance (accompanying the chanting of the Lord's name) the touch of their feet on the earth purifies the whole world, their glance purifies all directions and their upraised arms purify the higher planetary systems."

O Lord Caitanya, You are that self same Supreme Personality, incarnated in person to perform congregational chanting and distribute love of Godhead with Your devotees.

O Lord, who possesses the words to describe your wonderful potency to freely bestow the most confidential and hidden knowledge of the Vedas?

O Lord, we ardently desire and pray for that sublime love of Godhead which you keep as a great mystery, offering liberation instead to spiritual aspirants.

You are the spiritual master of the entire creation and You distribute priceless wealth because of Your magnanimity.

The chanting of your holy name is the fulfillment of all religious rituals and sacrifices, yet You have personally appeared in Navadvipa.

O Lord, be kind upon us, so that we may be fortunate enough to see your wonderful activities in Navadvipa.

O Lord, You have fulfilled the innermost desire of Ganga devi by sporting in her waters.

Your exquisite transcendental form, which mystics and yogis envision in their meditations, has become manifest in Navadvipa.

I offer obeisances to the holy Navadvipa dhama and the house of Sri Jagannatha Misra and Srimati Sacidevi where You made Your divine appearance.

In this manner Lord Brahma and other demigods remained unseen while daily offering choicest prayers to the Supreme Lord.

The Supreme Proprietor of the entire creation remained in the womb of Srimati Sacidevi, and on the full moon night in the month of Phalgun He appeared.

That full moon night was the summum bonum of all the auspicious holy occasions of the cosmic manifestation combined.

The Supreme Personality descended, accompanied by the process of congregational chanting of the holy name. He propagated this process by practicing it Himself.

Who is able to know the wonderful pastimes of the Supreme Lord? He arranged a lunar eclipse at the time of His birth.

Upon seeing the lunar eclipse the residents of Navadvipa began to loudly chant the Lord's holy name and make other auspicious sounds.

Endless teeming millions convulsed on the Ganges for holy ablutions and rent the air with loud chanting of the Lord's name.

The tumultuous sound of their chanting penetrated the coverings of this material universe and traveled beyond Brahmaloaka.

All the saintly persons marveled at this wonderful chanting and prayed for a perennial eclipse.

All the devotees experienced deep exhilaration and exclaimed, "Such great joy! Maybe the Supreme Lord Krsna is making His appearance."

The devotees went to the Ganges for their ablutions followed by the roar of chanting from all directions.

Women, children, aged, pious, and impious – everyone loudly chanted Lord Hari's holy name during the lunar eclipse.

The only sound within the universe was the all-prevailing chanting of "Hari! Hari!"

The demigods showered flower confetti everywhere and proclaimed victory as they beat clamorously on their dundubhi drums.

Amidst the resounding adulations, the Lord and the very soul of the universe appeared as the son of Srimati Sacidevi.

The moon was eclipsed by Rahu; the ocean of the holy name inundated Navadvipa, drowning and subduing the darkness of Kali Yuga. The Supreme Lord was manifest! All the fourteen worlds resounded with the profound news. The moon-like Lord Caitanya, Gauranga, had arisen; the residents of Nadia were freed from all sorrows just seeing the Lord. Their happiness and prosperity increased day by day.

The roll of the dundubhi drums, the trumpeting of thousand conch shells, the shrill of flutes and horns, accompanied Vrndavana dasa' songs of praise to their Lordships Sri Caitanya and Sri Nityananda Prabhu.

His beautifully brilliant luster overshadowed the sun's shining rays and dazzled my eyes. His drawn out, slightly drooping eyes defied description.

The air was surcharged with joy; Lord Caitanya had descended to the material world! One roaring sound of Lord Hari's name reverberated throughout the universe, beyond Brahmaloaka carrying the tidings of Lord Caitanya's birth.

His exquisite complexion was the color of sandalwood paste. His expansive breast was decorated with a gently swaying wildflower garland and His iridescent, moon-like face is pleasing, cooling and comforting. His elongated arms reached down to His knees.

Sounds of victory and praise permeated all directions and the earth felt especially blessed at the advent of Lord Caitanya. Some sang in great joy while others danced in ecstasy. But for Kali it was a calamity in the midst of spiritual revelry.

The crown jewels of all Vedic conclusions are the Supreme Lords Caitanya and Nityananda Prabhus. Their causeless mercy made no discrimination between the ignorant or the derelict.

I, Vrndavana dasa, offer this song to them.

The Golden moon, Lord Caitanya, had arisen as sounds of great joy filled the air. His beauty humbled a million cupids, and He smiled at His own dancing and singing.

His lovely face and charming eyes added to the list of other marks of divinity on His transcendental person; His feet were marked with the signs of flag, lightning etc. His entire exquisite form was decorated to enchant the minds of everyone.

All fear and despondency was dissipated and the world was showered with immense fortunes.

I, Vrndavana dasa, offer this song to my very life and soul, Lord Caitanya and Lord Nityananda.

The demigods became overjoyed and sang in praise of Lord Caitanya's appearance. A mere glance at the Lord's beatific, moon-like face was enough to extirpate all miseries. This was a glorious and happy occasion.

Lord Ananta Sesa, Lord Brahma, Lord Siva and other demigods all took up their new forms and, using the lunar eclipse as an excuse, continuously sang Lord Hari's name. I cannot fully describe their exultation.

Milling crowds poured into Nadia with shouts of "Hari, Hari". Navadvipa was in the grips of unbounded bliss. The Supreme Lord, the demigods and the human beings had all come together to frolic with one another.

The demigods came to the Srimati Sacidevi's house in the darkness of the eclipse and, unseen by humans, fell to the ground and offered obeisances to Lord Caitanya. Who can describe these abstruse pastimes of the Lord.

Some broke out in types of glorification, some held the umbrella and some fanned the Lord with a camara, while others showered flowers in ecstasy and still others sang and danced exuberantly.

Lord Caitanya appeared with all His pure devotees and the atheist will never understand it.

I, Vrndavana dasa sing the nectarine glories of Lord Caitanya and Lord Nityananda.

The rumble of Dundubhi drums, hymns, prayers and sweet music mingled and resounded in the air. Today, without delay, we can meet that Supreme Personality who is a mystery even in the Vedas.

The demigods in Indrapura were tumultuously happy; busily decorating themselves, they felt extremely fortunate that they could receive Lord Caitanya's blessed association in Navadvipa.

They embraced and kissed each other without shame in exultation that the Lord of Navadvipa, Lord Caitanya, had taken his birth. There was no distinction of friend or foe.

In great curiosity the demigods came to Navadvipa amidst loud chanting of God's name. Infected by the transcendental mellow of Lord Caitanya they became almost unconscious in ecstasy and joined in singing the glories of Lord Caitanya.

They saw the beautiful form of Lord Caitanya. He was more exquisite than a thousand rising full moons. He accepted the human form and made everyone loudly chant the Lord's holy name, using the eclipse as a good excuse.

The Lord descended with all his energies and expansions; this is incomprehensible to the atheists.

Let me, Vrndavana dasa, sing in adulation about my life and soul, Lord Sri Caitanya and Sri Nityananda Prabhu.

Chapter 3

Even before He took his birth, the Lord propagated the chanting of His holy name.

Streams of people went for their bath in the Ganga at the time of the eclipse and all the way they chanted the Lord's name.

Some, who from their birth never once uttered the Lord's name, now chanted that name on their way to the Ganga.

The sound of chanting emanated from every direction and the Supreme Lord, the best of the brahmins, smiled to Himself as He made His appearance.

Sri Jagannatha Misra and Srimati Sacidevi glanced at their child's beautiful face and were overcome with unbounded joy.

Ladies stood around the child not knowing what to do; fussily they ululated in jubilation.

Relatives and friends hurried to see the new born child; Sri Jagannatha Misra's house was a scene of great exultation.

Srimati Sacidevi's father, Sri Nilambara Cakravarti, found esoteric and wonderful signs in every house of the child's astrological chart.

Sri Cakravarti was astounded by the baby's beauty and saw all divine symbols on His person.

A much accepted prophesy in Bengal was that someday a king would be born in Bengal as a brahmin's son, so Sri Cakravarti thought that only the future would prove whether this was the child.

In the presence of all, Sri Nilambara Cakravarti, an expert astrologer, began explaining the ramifications of different astrological signs in the Lord's chart.

The further he delved into the child's exalted chart, the more difficulty he found in describing the Lord's position.

The child will conquer Brhaspati (the sign for learning and education) and be a scholar; He will be a natural repository of all divine qualities.

Present in that gathering was a great saint in the guise of a brahman who made predictions on the Lord's future.

The brahman said, "This child is the Supreme Lord Narayana Himself. He will establish the essence of all religion.

"He will initiate a wonderful preaching movement and deliver the whole world.

"He will give everyone that which is forever desirable even by Lord Brahma, Lord Siva or Srila Sukadeva Gosvami.

"Upon seeing Him people will feel compassion for all living entities and become callous toward material pains and joys. This will be the great benediction for the whole world.

"Not to mention ordinary men, even hard-core atheists will worship the child's lotus feet.

"He will be glorified throughout the entire creation and people from all orders of life will come to worship Him.

"He is the personification of pure Bhagavat religion (eternal religion), the benefactor of brahmanas, cows and devotees and the affectionate, devoted son of His parents.

"This child has come to accomplish great works, just as the Supreme Lord Narayana incarnated to re-establish religious principles

"Who can explain the imports of this child's exalted astrological and esoteric symptoms?

"How fortunate you are, Sri Jagannatha Misra, a leader amongst men. I offer my obeisances to you, the illustrious father of this child.

"I feel greatly fortunate that I could calculate his astrological chart. His name accordingly will be Sri Visvambhara.

"He will be known to all as Navadvipa-candra (the moon of Navadvipa). He is spiritual bliss personified."

The brahmin did not speak further about Lord Caitanya's pastime of accepting the renounced order of sannyasa since that would disturb the loving emotion of His parents.

Sri Jagannatha Misra was enthralled with ecstasy over the descriptions of his son. He immediately wanted to offer gifts to the brahmin.

He was a poor man with few possessions, yet feeling great jubilation Sri Misra fell at the brahmin's feet and cried.

The brahman also caught Sri Misra's feet, and everyone present shouted "Hari, Hari" in great joy.

The relatives and friends were all praise for the child, and they blessed Him as they heard the super-natural predictions about His future.

Soon the musicians arrived playing their respective instruments – clay drums, flutes and shanhai (a reed instrument) – and filled the air with wonderful music.

Ladies from the higher planets mingled freely yet unnoticed with the ladies from earth in this wonderful gathering.

The mother of the demigods (Aditi) smiled and placed her right hand holding auspicious grass and paddy on the child's head to bless him saying, "Long life".

"Please remain eternally in this material world and manifest Your pastimes". This explained the expression "Long life".

Srimati Sacidevi and the others noticed the extraordinary beauty of these ladies but they hesitated to inquire about their identity.

The demigods respectfully took the dust from Sacidevi's feet, and she lost her speech in extreme exultation.

Neither the Vedas nor Lord Ananta Sesa could describe the waves of jubilation that drowned Sri Jagannatha Misra's house. Entire Nadia seemed to be present at Sacidevi's house to experience that undescribable joy.

Wherever the people were – in their houses, or on the banks of the Ganga, or on the streets, – they all loudly chanted the Lord's name.

Everyone jubilantly celebrated the Lord's birth, unknowingly thinking the festivity was actually for the lunar eclipse.

Lord Caitanya appeared on the full moon night of the month of Phalguna; this day is the most worshipable by Lord Brahma and other great personalities.

This day of the Lord's appearance is the holiest of holy occasions; this day is devotion personified.

Lord Caitanya appeared on the full moon night of Phalguna and Lord Nityananda appeared on the 13th night of the waxing moon. Both these days are all auspicious and transcendental occasions.

If one properly follows these two holy occasions he develops love of Godhead and cuts asunder the knots of material illusion.

The appearance days of pure Vaisnava devotees like the appearance day of the Supreme Lord, are also all–auspicious and transcendental.

Whosoever hears the narrations of Lord Caitanya's birth is freed from all miseries in life and in death.

Anyone who hears Lord Caitanya's pastimes immediately gets love of God and becomes his eternal servitor; he comes with the Lord each time He advents in this material world.

The Adi Khanda text is wonderful to hear because it contains descriptions of Lord Caitanya's appearance.

The Vedic literature describes these pastimes of the Lord as eternal, although He sometimes appears and sometimes disappears.

Lord Caitanya's pastimes have no beginning and no end; I write them down by the mercy of the Lord.

I offer my humble obeisances at the Lord's feet and at the feet of all His devotees. I pray that I may be excused from all offenses.

I, Vrndavana dasa, offer this song to the lotus feet of my life and soul, Lord Sri Krsna Caitanya and Lord Sri Nityananda Prabhu.

Adi Lila

Chapter 4

All glories, all glories to the lotus feet-eyed, moon-like Lord Caitanya; all glories, all glories to all Your loving devotees.

O Lord, look upon me mercifully so that my delusion is dispelled and I may be able to serve and worship You day and night.

The wonderful appearance of the Lord increased the happiness of everyone in Srimati Sacidevi's house. Both Sri Jagannatha Misra's and Srimati Sacidevi's hearts heaved joyous waves while looking at the Lord's beautiful face.

Sri Visvarupa would pick up his brother in his arms and smile gleefully at the Supreme Lord, the abode of all transcendental joys.

Friends and relatives lingered, surrounding the Lord affectionately all the time.

Some chanted mantras of enchantments in the Lord's room for His protection. The Vishnu Raksa mantra (invoking Lord Vishnu's protection) or Devi mantra (invoking Durga devi's protection) were chanted while some people circumambulated the Lord's house.

And when the Lord would cry, shedding tears from His lotus eyes, only the sound of the holy name of Krsna would pacify Him.

Finally everyone understood the secret message and whenever the Lord cried, they immediately chanted Lord Hari's name.

The demigods were in a jovial mood and decided to play some practical jokes on the people who always surrounded Nimai.

A demigod in a spiritual body stole quietly about the house, unseen by human eyes. When the people saw a shadowy figure slither past they exclaimed, "There goes a thief!"

Terror-stricken, some of them loudly chanted "Nrsimha! Nrsimha!", while others murmured the Aparajita Stotra (prayers to Parvati devi, wife of Lord Siva) for protection.

While many persons were going around the house chanting all different mantras and prayers, a great commotion was heard from inside Srimati Sacidevi's house.

The demigods had assembled to see the Lord, but the people outside thought that thieves were entering.

Some shouted, "Catch the thief! Thief!", while others continuously chanted, "Nrsimha, Nrsimha".

A brahmin priest endowed with powers of exorcising ghosts threatened the invisible demigods, "You're lucky you got away today, but you do not know the tremendous power of Lord Nrsimhadeva."

Unseen by anyone, the demigods laughed to themselves. In this way a month passed.

Completing her one month of confinement, the period of contamination after child birth, Srimati Sacidevi went for a bath in the Ganga with the other ladies.

Amongst singing and joyous clamor Sacidevi bathed in the Ganga. She worshiped Ganga devi and thereafter she worshiped a village goddess called Sasthi.

After worshiping different demigods in accordance with proper rites, Sacidevi returned with the satisfied ladies.

According to the social custom, Sacidevi respectfully offered all the ladies roasted paddy, bananas, oil, vermilion powder betel nuts and betel leaf.

The ladies in turn blessed the child and offered respects to Sacidevi before they returned to their respective homes.

In this way the Supreme Lord Caitanya performed His childhood pastimes. Without the Lord's mercy these pastimes are incomprehensible.

The Lord as a child cried frequently. His real intention in crying was to induce everyone to chant the Lord's holy name.

The ladies tried one way or another to pacify Him, but He cried all the more.

As soon as they chanted "Hari, Hari", a beaming smile spread across the Lord's exquisite moon-like face.

Discovering that this pleased the Lord, everyone got together and repeated Lord Hari's name while clapping their hands.

Happily everyone performed congregational chanting and Saci devi's house resounded with the Lord's name.

Unknown to all, Lord Caitanya's childhood pastimes in Sri Jagannatha Misra's house were a facsimile to Gopala Kṛṣṇa's childhood pastimes.

When no one was present in a room, He would intentionally scatter things around after pouring milk, butter or oil on the floor.

Forewarned that mother Saci devi was approaching, He would quickly lay down and start crying.

Mother Saci devi would pacify Him by repeating Lord Hari's name until she noticed the different substances spread all over the floor.

"Who has scattered the rice, wheat and dahl? Why are these broken pots of curd and milk on the floor?"

No one could understand who had done this. There was only the four month old baby in the house.

Curiosity drew everyone to that room, but they could not find any trace of the culprit.

Some conjectured, "A demon or ghost must have come, but due to the effect of the mantras it could not harm the baby. Angry that it could do nothing to the child, it threw everything around and escaped".

This incident left Sri Jagannatha Misra quite perplexed, but thinking it a providential interference, he did not comment.

In spite of the extensive damage, both Sri Jagannatha Misra and Sacidevi felt their sorrows soothed by just looking at the child's face.

Days passed wrapped in mystery until the day of the name giving ceremony arrived.

Sri Nilambara Cakravarti and other learned scholars and friends assembled there.

Respectable, chaste ladies who looked as fresh and glowing as Laksmi devi, the goddess of fortune, attended the ceremony in beautiful saris.

Everyone discussed which name the child would have. Some ladies made one suggestion while other ladies made another.

"This child will have no younger brother or sisters, so being the last child of the family, he should be named Nimai", said one lady.

After considering all points the scholars said there was one name appropriate for the child.

As soon as He was born, famine ended in the land and the farmers were blessed with the long-awaited rain.

Happy and healthy conditions returned to the land at His birth. It was similar to the ancient story of Lord Narayana protecting and upholding the universe during devastation.

Hence, His name should be Sri Visvambhara (sustainer of the world). This is confirmed in His horoscope, for He is the brightest torch-bearer of His family.

The name Nimai that the respected ladies gave will be His second name.

The name was given at a auspicious moment when all the planetary indications were right and amidst readings of Bhagavad Gita, Srimad Bhagavatam, and the Vedas, etc. by the brahmins.

The demigods and humans assembled together on this occasion and offered benedictions. They chanted Lord Hari's all-auspicious holy names while blowing conch shells and ringing bells.

Rice, paddy, books, roasted paddy, coins, gold and silver were placed for the child to hold (testing the child's tendency).

Sri Jagannatha encouraged his son, "My dear Visvambhara, take whatever your heart desires".

Sacidevi's son, the Supreme Lord, ignored all items and picked up the Srimad Bhagavatam and embraced it.

The ladies loudly glorified the Lord. Everyone was impressed and said, "He will be a great scholar".

Some commented that the child would turn out to be an elevated Vaisnava devotee with the extraordinary capacity to easily grasp the imports of the scriptures.

Whoever saw Lord Visvambhara's enchanting smile became drenched in showers of bliss.

Once the ladies had the child on their laps, they would not put Him down. This child, the Supreme Lord, is almost unapproachable even by demigods.

And whenever the Lord started crying the ladies clapped their hands and chanted Lord Hari's name.

Hearing the chanting the Lord swayed blissfully as though He were dancing on their laps. This excited the ladies who in turn increased their chanting.

The Supreme Lord, by His desire, had everyone constantly chanting the Lord's name, on any available pretext.

The Vedas, Srimad Bhagavatam and other scriptures conclude that no undertaking reaches success without the Supreme Lord's desire.

Sacidevi's son, the Supreme Lord Caitanya, grew day by day, motivating everyone to chant His own holy name.

When the Lord began to crawl on His knees He looked most charming. The small ankle bells on His feet were pleasing to hear.

The Lord fearlessly moved around everywhere, catching anything he saw – fire, snakes, anything.

One day a snake slithered through the courtyard and the Lord caught hold of him simply to enact another pastime.

The Lord lay down on the coils of the snake.

When the residents of the house saw Him they screamed in alarm, but the Lord calmly smiled and remained in that relaxed position.

The people shouted, "Garuda! Garuda!" while Nimai's parents waited in anxiety.

The snake, who was really Lord Ananta Sesa, started to slither away when he heard all the crying and commotion, but little Nimai tried to stop him.

The ladies rushed over and grabbed up the Lord in their arms, each one blessing Him that he might have a long life.

Some relatives tied a talisman on Nimai for his protection, while some chanted benediction hymns and others poured Ganga water on different parts of His body.

Some of them thought that the child had got a new life while others realized that the snake was Ananta Sesa.

The Supreme Lord Caitanya who was radiant like the moon, tried repeatedly to go back to the snake, but everyone stopped Him.

These pastimes are not revealed even in the Vedas, and anyone who hears them is free from the bite of the serpent of material illusion.

Lord Caitanya, the pleasure of Sacidevi soon toddled about the house.

Lord Caitanya's extraordinary beauty eclipsed the beauty of millions of cupids: even the radiant moon longed to behold the Lord's beauty.

Curly locks decorated His exquisitely formed head and with lotus-shaped eyes He looked like Gopala Krsna.

His long arms stretched to His knees. He had an expansive chest and reddish pink lips. All His limbs were beautifully formed.

His brilliant sun-red complexion was always attractive and His fingers, hands and feet were like blooming lotuses.

The Lord's reddish complexion sometimes caused Sacimata anxiety; as the child ran about she kept thinking she could see red, gaping wounds.

Sacidevi and Sri Jagannatha Misra were always struck with great wonder at the Lord's beauty. Although they were needy, their son was a source of unending joy for them.

Together in seclusion they whispered to each other, "I wonder what great personality has come as our son.

"An elevated and distinguished personality has taken birth in our house; perhaps this will terminate all our material miseries.

"I have never heard of any other child as wonderful as ours. He smiles and dances without stopping when he hears the chanting of Lord Hari's name.

"When He cries no amount of consoling will calm Him, but when He hears loud chanting of Lord Hari's name He stops crying and listens.

"From early morning the ladies surrounded the Lord and loudly sing Lord Hari's name; they clap their hands in rhythm and the Lord dances gleefully."

The Lord playfully rolled in the dust, then laughing he would jump into his mother's lap.

The Lord danced, moving His body in such a manner that no one can contain his laughter.

Nobody could understand how the Lord through his childish pranks motivated everyone to chant the holy name.

The Lord was so vivacious and restless, fleeting in and out of the house, that no one could catch Him.

Venturing out on His own, Nimai wanted to taste whatever he saw – roasted rice, banana, sandesh, etc.

The Lord was so extremely attractive that strangers gave him whatever he requested.

Strangers gave Him sandesh or banana, and pleased with His gifts the Lord returned home. He then distributed the food to those ladies who sang Lord Hari's name.

Everyone merrily applauded the child's ingenuity and continuously sang Lord Hari's name.

The Lord wandered freely in and out of the house, whether morning, noon, evening or night.

Daily He went to a friendly neighbor's house and mysteriously stole from him.

In some houses He drank all the milk and in others He ate all the rice. Wherever He found nothing to eat He was satisfied to break all the earthen pots.

If He found a small child in any house He would tease him to tears, but when He was observed He fled.

But if by chance some one caught Him, Nimai would catch the person's feet and plead.

"Please let me go this one last time; I shall never come back again. I will never steal anymore. Please be merciful."

Astounded by the boy's sharp intelligence, no one could remain angry with Him. Ultimately everyone was affectionate towards Him.

People were naturally captivated just by seeing Him, and parents loved Him more than they loved their own children.

The Lord of Vaikuntha, Lord Caitanya, passed His childhood in this manner, moving and mischievous.

One day two thieves saw the Lord roaming about the streets alone. Seeing His fine ornaments, they conspired to steal them.

One of the thieves picked Him up saying "Oh dear! Oh dear!", while the other joined him saying, "Where have you been for so long?"

"Come quickly home, dear", the thieves said. The lord smiled and replied, "Yes, let us go home."

Busily the two thieves sped away with the Lord in their arms while the street onlookers ignorantly thought that the rightful guardians had taken their child.

Teeming thousands of people were on the streets, but all were strangers to each other. The thieves were happy with themselves and with the ornaments on the child.

Overtaken by greed the thieves were trying to eat the imaginary pie-in-the-sky, thinking they would surely steal the golden bangles.

They carried Him on their shoulders toward their hideout while the Lord rode along chuckling to Himself.

One thief passed a sandesh into the Lord's hand, while the other said comfortingly, "We have almost reached home".

The thieves had kidnaped the Lord and run far away when the Lord's relatives began to search for Him.

"Visvambhara! Come home, Nimai!" they shouted .
Everyone grew frantic and restless like fish out of water.

In distress they remembered Lord Govinda, while far away the thieves carried Nimai toward their house.

Deluded by the Supreme Lord's illusory potency, "maya", the thieves mistook the way to their hideout; they arrived instead at the residence of Sri Jagannatha Misra.

The bewildered thieves thought they were in their own house, so they busied themselves trying to remove the Lord's ornaments.

"Get down now. We are home." said the thieves, and the Lord replied, "Yes, yes put me down."

Inside Sri Jagannatha Misra's house everyone sat around with their heads in their hands in utter despair.

The beguiled thieves took the Lord down from their shoulders, thinking the house to be their own.

As soon as Nimai was on the ground He ran straight to his father. A joyous uproar shook the house as the relatives loudly chanted, "Hari, Hari".

An understandable transformation overwhelmed the people as if life had returned to their bodies.

The thieves realized that the house was not their own, but they could not recognize where they were.

Taking advantage of the commotion, the fearful thieves stealthily left the place without being noticed by anyone.

Reflecting on the strange and wonderful incident, the thieves thought, "Who is playing tricks with us?"

"Candidevi (goddess Durga) certainly saved us today," they said after regaining their composure. Then they embraced each other.

The thieves actually gained immeasurable piety and good fortune because they carried the Supreme Personality of Godhead on their shoulders.

In Sri Jagannatha Misra's house the happy relatives asked, "Who brought the child back? We should offer him nice gifts and tie a turban on his head."

Some one said, "I saw two persons come with the child, put him down and leave, but I do not know which direction they went after that."

Everyone was surprised that whoever brought the child back did not stay to be acknowledged.

They turned to Nimai and asked, "Our dear child, tell us who brought you back. We are puzzled."

The Lord replied, "I went to the banks of the Ganga but I lost my way home and was roaming about in the town. Two persons took me in their arms and brought me home".

"The words of the scriptures are never wrong, The unseen hand of God always protects children, old persons and the helpless," they all said.

Being bewildered by the Lord's illusory energy, "maya", the relatives conjectured in many ways.

The Supreme Lord performed His wonderful pastimes in this manner; no one can understand them without the Lord's direct mercy.

Whoever hears these narrations – which are a mystery even in the Vedas – can easily get undeviating devotion at Lord Caitanya's lotus feet.

I, Vrndavana dasa, offer my humble song at the lotus feet of Sri Krsna Caitanya and Sri Nityananda Prabhu, who are my life and soul.

Chapter 5

All glories, all glories to the Supreme Personality Sri Visvambhara, Lord Caitanya; He is the Supreme Lord of lord's and His feet are decorated by the marks of a flag, lightning, goad, etc.

The Supreme Lord performed various transcendental pastimes while residing in Jagannatha Misra's house.

One day Sri Jagannatha Misra called his dear son Visvambhara and told Him, "Bring my book."

Nimai hastened to the house when He heard His father's call, and the ankle bells on His feet jingled loudly as He moved.

Sri Jagannatha Misra enquired, "Where is the tinkling of ankle-bells coming from?" Both he and his wife Srimati Sacidevi searched all around.

"My son does not wear ankle-bells on His feet. Where does this sweet sound of ankle-bells come from?"

"How extraordinary!" The father and mother considered the incident but remained speechless with surprise.

After bringing the book, the Lord ran off to play. The parents saw another wonder when they entered their house.

All over the house they saw wonderful footprints with different symbols like the flag, lightning, goad, festoons, etc.

Both were thrilled with great delight and their eyes brimmed with tears as they examined the footprints.

They offered obeisances to the lotus footprints and said, "We will be liberated; no more births."

Sri Jagannatha Misra requested his wife, "Please listen, mother of Visvarupa (Lord Caitanya's elder brother), cook a nice sweet rice preparation with ghee.

"In the morning I shall bathe our house deity, Sri Damodara Sila, with panca-gavya (the five substances cow-milk, yogurt, ghee, cow urine and cow-dung.)

I believe that the sound of ankle-bells actually came from the feet of the deity as He secretly moved around the house."

Jagannatha Misra and Sacimata felt great happiness as they worshiped the Salagrama Sila, and Lord Caitanya smiled within His mind.

Hear once again another wonderful pastime of Lord Caitanya, the son of Sri Jagannatha Misra.

A very pious brahmin was visiting different places of pilgrimages to satisfy the Supreme Lord Krsna.

He worshiped Lord Krishna by chanting the Gopala-mantra consisting of six syllables, and he did not eat anything other than the remanent of food offered to Lord Gopala.

After visiting many pilgrimage sites the fortunate brahmin at last came to the house of Lord Caitanya.

As a person of incomparable purity, he was enveloped in a great spiritual effulgence. He carried Lord Gopala and Salagrama Sila around his neck as his most wonderful decorations.

With half-closed eyes the brahmin constantly chanted Krishna, Krsna and deep in his heart he tasted the nectar of love of God.

Seeing this shining personality, Jagannatha Misra stood up out of respect and then offered his obeisances.

The most respectable Sri Jagannatha Misra did everything to properly look after his esteemed guest.

He personally washed the guests feet and offered him a fine elevated seat.

Once the brahmin was seated comfortably, Sri Jagannatha Misra enquired, "Where is your place of residence?"

The brahmin replied, "I am disinterested in worldly affairs so I travel throughout different countries; it is only because of my restless mind that I roam".

Sri Jagannatha Misra said respectfully, "It is the good fortune of the world that you travel everywhere.

"I especially feel most fortunate today, so please permit me to cook for you."

The brahmin replied, "Dear Misra, do as you please." Happily Sri Misra made extraordinary and wonderful arrangements.

Sri Misra had the kitchen thoroughly cleaned and then arranged for all the ingredients for cooking to be brought.

The brahmin himself cooked to his full satisfaction and sat down to offer all the foodstuff to Lord Krsna.

Sri Sacinandana Caitanya is the supersoul within everyone's heart; He decided to show Himself to the brahmin.

The brahmin had just begun his meditation when the Supreme Lord, Sri Gaurasundara, appeared in his presence.

He stood there naked, His entire form covered with dust. He was the color of the sun with beautiful hands and feet.

Smiling, He took a handful of food from the brahmin's offering and ate it while the brahmin looked on.

Although favored by good fortune, the brahmin called out, "Alas! alas! This restless boy has stolen the food meant for offering."

When Sri Jagannatha Misra came he saw that the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Sri Gaurasundara was happily smiling and eating rice.

Intending to beat the Lord, an angry Misra chased after Him, but the brahmin stood up fearfully and caught hold of Misra's hand.

The brahmin said, "My dear Misra, you are a respectable and knowledgeable person, but what knowledge does this little boy have? What will beating him accomplish? It is one thing to beat a person who can reason right from wrong, but I forbid you to beat this boy."

Feeling miserable, Sri Misra sat down holding his head. He did not speak a word nor did he lift his head.

"Do not feel sad, dear Misra," said the brahmin. "The Supreme Lord certainly knows everything that happens at all times.

"Please bring whatever fruits or vegetables you have in the house. I shall simply eat that today."

Sri Misra said, "If you kindly consider me your servant, then let me arrange for you to cook again.

"I shall only be satisfied when you cook once again. I have all the necessary ingredients for cooking in the house."

The other friends and relatives in the house also implored him to cook again.

"Since you all desire it," agreed the brahmin, "I shall cook every preparation again."

Everyone was satisfied that he had agreed and they cleaned the cooking place for him.

They quickly gathered the cooking ingredients and the brahmin began to cook.

Some people warned the brahmin that the restless child might spoil the offering again.

"Take the child to another house and keep Him there until the brahmin has completed his cooking and eating," they told Sacimata.

Mother Saci carried her child to a neighbor's house.

The young ladies all teased "Hey Nimai! Is this the way you should act, stealing the brahmin's food?"

With a smile on his exquisite moon-like face Lord Caitanya replied, "What is my fault? The brahmin called Me."

But they objected. "Oh Nimai, will you do more mischief now that you have lost your caste? Who knows this brahmin, where he comes from, or who his family is ? How can you maintain your caste after having eaten food cooked by him?"

Smiling, Lord Caitanya replied, "I belong to the cow tenders caste! I accept food prepared by a brahmin all the time. How does a cow tender loose his caste by eating a brahmin's food?" Saying this the Lord looked at everyone with a smile.

The Supreme Lord, Sri Caitanya, used this trick to explain to them the truth about Himself, but His illusory potency is so perfect that no one could understand Him.

As they carried Him around, the various residents of the neighboring houses enjoyed the child's arguments.

The Lord went joyfully from arms to arms, and whoever held him floated in an ocean of bliss.

In the meantime, the brahmin cooked once again and sat down to make offering to Lord Balagopala.

While offering, the brahmin thought of Lord Balagopala, but Lord Gauracandra, the supersoul, knew everything.

Lord Caitanya charmed everyone and then left their presence completely unnoticed. Smiling all the while, He went to the spot where the brahmin was offering his food.

Stealthily Lord Caitanya put a handful of rice into His mouth and left. The brahmin, caught by surprise, looked on in disbelief.

The brahmin raised a loud alarm, "Alas! Alas!" The child ate his rice and sprinted off.

Sri Misra angrily grabbed a stick and chased after young Nimai.

Lord Nimai fled in dread and hid Himself in a room, but Sri Misra came after him, roaring in fury.

Sri Misra said, "You shall see today! Act in this mischievous manner will you? Although I am cultured and knowledgeable you think I am a great fool."

Sri Misra continued, "In whose house can you find as big a thief as this?" With rising indignation he chased after Nimai.

The people in the house caught hold of Sri Misra to dissuade him, but the angry father insisted. "Leave me! Today I shall beat him."

They tried to reason with him, "Dear Misra, you are known to be liberal. What superior intelligence will you display by beating Him?"

His sense of discrimination between good and bad is still undeveloped due to His tender age, and only a very foolish person would beat such a small child. By nature children are restless; it is not true that one can teach them by beating them."

The pilgrim hurriedly rushed to the scene and caught hold of Sri Misra's hand.

"Respected Sir, please hear me. The young boy is not at fault; whatever is destined to occur on a certain day must happen.

I am not destined to have Lord Krsna's rice offerings today. What I am saying is the confidential truth in this matter."

Sri Jagannatha Misra hung his head in dejection, and because of his perturbed mind he could not look at anyone.

At that moment, Visvarupa, the Supreme Personality of Godhead and the abode of spiritual effulgence, arrived on the scene.

His entire form was so charming that no beauty in all the fourteen worlds could match it. He stood there, an embodiment of all spiritual potencies, a brahmin's thread across His shoulders. He appeared as the identical expansion of Lord Nityananda Himself.

Visvarupa was always engaged in explaining the prime essence of all scriptures, devotional service to the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Lord Krsna.

Enchanted by His exquisite form the pilgrim brahmin stared at Him with a gaping mouth.

"Who is the father of this extraordinary personality"? asked the brahmin. "He is the son of Sri Misra," came the reply.

The brahmin embraced Visvarupa in extreme joy saying, "Virtuous are the parents of such a son."

Sri Visvarupa sat down after offering obeisances to the brahmin, and began speaking nectarine words which flowed like a stream.

"The day turned auspicious and the house was blessed with great fortune when you came as a guest," said Visvarupa.

"You are constant and happy within yourself; you travel everywhere simply to sanctify the earth.

"It is my immense fortune that I have a guest like your good self, but at the same time I feel very unfortunate that you have to go without eating.

"If a guest in a house must fast, then that house will inevitably fall victim to aspersions and inauspiciousness.

"I received immense pleasure on seeing you, but it pained me greatly to hear about all that occurred here."

The brahmin said, "Please do not feel sorry. I shall eat some fruits and vegetables."

"I am a forest dweller. I cannot get rice or cooked food in the forest, so I live mostly on fruits, roots and vegetables.

"I seldom eat rice – only if it comes my way without my endeavoring for it.

"I feel I have eaten a million times over simply from the pleasure of seeing you.

"Please go and bring whatever you have in the house – fruits, vegetables or offerings – and I will eat them now."

An extremely depressed Sri Jagannatha Misra sat holding his head between his hand, not replying to anyone.

Sri Visvarupa said, "Sir you are a magnanimous ocean of mercy, yet I feel hesitant to ask you something.

Saintly persons by nature feel distressed at others' suffering and are always ready to expand others' feelings of joy.

With a little endeavor you can cook a nice offering for Lord Kṛṣṇa.

This will dispel all the miseries of my family today, and I will feel maximum pleasure and happiness."

The brahmin said, "I already cooked twice, yet Lord Kṛṣṇa did not allow me to eat.

"So I can understand I am destined not to eat today. This is Lord Kṛṣṇa's desire, so why should I make such an endeavor?

"One may have unlimited food stuff in the house but he can eat only if Lord Kṛṣṇa allows.

"One may endlessly try for something, but if Lord Kṛṣṇa does not desire it, he will be unsuccessful.

"It is now past one—thirty in the night, going on two o'clock. Is it appropriate to start cooking this late?

"Therefore please do not make any arrangements for cooking. I will simply eat some fruits and vegetables."

Sri Viṣvarūpa replied, "There is nothing wrong with the time. Everyone will be pleased if you cook."

Sri Viṣvarūpa then caught hold of the brahmin's feet and everyone in the house entreated him to cook again.

The brahmin was charmed by Sri Viṣvarūpa, and he agreed to cook.

Everyone uttered Sri Hari's name in joy and cleaned the place for cooking.

They cleaned quickly and meanwhile the necessary ingredients for cooking were brought.

The respected brahmin then proceeded to cook, and everyone kept the child at a secure distance.

Sri Miśra posted himself at the doorway of Naimi's room.

"Tie the doors to the room from the outside so that He cannot escape," suggested someone.

"Good, good," agreed Sri Miśra. "That is a good plan. Tie the doors from the outside and we will remain out here."

The ladies inside Naimi's room said, "Don't worry, Naimi is fast asleep, there is nothing more He can do."

The child was kept away in this manner and in a short while the brahmin finished cooking.

That pious brahmin then prepared an offering plate filled with the things he cooked and he sat down to offer everything to Lord Kṛṣṇa through his meditation.

Naimi, the son of Mother Saci, knew everything because he is the supersoul with everyone's heart. He desired to appear before the brahmin and reveal Himself.

By the Supreme Lord's will, Nimai enchanted everyone and they slept effortlessly.

Sri Sacinandana appeared in the place where the brahmin was offering his rice to the Lord.

When the brahmin saw the young boy Nimai he raised an alarm, but no one heard him because they were all in deep sleep.

Nimai, the Supreme Lord said, "O brahmin, you are known to be a magnanimous soul. You called for Me so I came. Why should I be blamed for it?

"You chanted mantras to invoke Me; you beckoned Me. So I came to you. How could I resist?

"You incessantly meditate on Me, so I decided to appear before you."

At that moment the brahmin saw a wonderful sight. The Supreme Lord stood before him in His eight-handed form holding in four of His hands the four symbols – conch shell, disc, mace and lotus.

With two other hands He held butter and ate it and with the last two hands he played the flute.

He saw the Lord's entire form decorated with gem-studded ornaments; His breast was marked with Laksmi devi's sign of srivatsa, and the priceless Kaustubha jewel hung brilliantly with other precious gems in a necklace.

His head was decorated with fresh forest flowers that circled His peacock feather. His rubicund lips, like the rising sun, set off His softly glowing moon-like face. His pink lotus petal pair of eyes smiled sweetly as His knee-length Vaijayanti flower garland and His exquisite shark-shaped earrings swayed delicately. His feet were like blossoming lotus flowers, decorated with gently tinkling gem-studded ankle-bells. The luster from His delicate pearl-like nails dissipated the darkness.

The brahmin saw the place transformed immediately into Vrndavana dhama. The wonderful kadamba trees became clamorous with the chirping of birds. Cowherd boys and girls roamed about on their own and everything was exactly as he had seen it in his meditation.

Overcome with ecstasy at seeing such extraordinary display of opulence, the pious brahmin fell unconscious.

The Supreme Personality of Godhead, Sri Gaurasundara, Who is an ocean of mercy, placed His transcendental hand on the brahmin's body.

He regained consciousness by the Lord's touch, but the brahmin was still speechless and inert with overwhelming joy. Again and again he fell swooning to the ground. Sometimes getting up and sometimes falling, he moved by great upsurges of spiritual emotion. Overcome by shivering, perspiration and horripilation, he was unable to remain still. Tears flowed as freely as Mother Ganga.

The brahmin caught hold of the Lord's lotus feet and cried loudly for some time.

Acknowledging the brahmin's eagerness, the Supreme Lord Sri Gaurasundara spoke a few words with His enchanting smile.

The Supreme Lord said, "O learned brahmin, please listen. In many past lives you were my servitor.

"You have always meditated on Me, therefore I came to show Myself to you.

"In My previous incarnation I appeared to you in the house of Maharaja Nanda in this self-same form, but you have forgotten.

"In My previous incarnation (as Krsna) I appeared in Gokula dhama, and in that lifetime you were making pilgrimages to holy sites with sincere spiritual fervor. By divine arrangement you came as a guest to Nanda Maharaja's house and offered Me your foodstuff. In that encounter we also exchanged affections just as we are now. I ate your offering then as I have done tonight.

"You are My servant birth after birth, therefore I have appeared before you.

"No one other than My servants can see Me as I am.

"I am entrusting these confidential topics to you; do not reveal them to anybody. As long as My present incarnation remains on this earth, if you reveal My identity, I shall destroy you.

"I made my appearance where the congregational chanting of Lord Krsna's holy name has already begun, and I will initiate the propagation of that chanting throughout the world.

"I will freely distribute to every house the process of loving devotional service to the Supreme Lord which is so fervently desired even by Lord Brahma and other elevated personalities.

"Remain with us for some time to come and you will see many things. But you are strictly forbidden to describe them to anyone."

The Supreme Lord Gaurasundara went back to His room after He showered His mercy on the brahmin by giving him all assurance.

He lay down like a child in His previous sleeping posture. no one was aware of anything because of the deep slumber caused by the Lord's mystic potency.

The pious brahmin was filled with great exhilaration after seeing the extraordinary pastimes of the Lord.

He smeared that transcendental rice over his entire body and then ate it while crying incessantly in ecstasy.

He danced, sang, laughed and made loud roaring sounds while continuously shouting, "All glories to Lord Balagopala!"

The brahmin's loud roaring awakened the residents of the house, so he quickly restrained himself from further outbursts of spiritual emotions and cleaned his body.

The brahmin ate without worry and everyone was immensely pleased by this.

The brahmin considered telling everyone what he knew. "Let them know that the Supreme Lord is amongst them; that way they can all be liberated," he thought.

"The Supreme Personality of Godhead – Who is desired by and offered prayers by Lord Siva and Lord Brahma – has now appeared in the family of a brahmin."

But the brahmin remembered the Lord's instruction not to reveal anything to anybody. Afraid to disobey Him, he did not speak to anyone.

The brahmin knew the Lord's real identity but others were unaware that the brahmin had this extraordinary knowledge. Happily the brahmin remained near the Lord.

He begged alms from many different places but each day he returned to see the Supreme Lord.

Such wonderful pastimes of the Lord are revealed in the Vedic literatures; if one hears these topics he receives the complete shelter of Lord Sri Krsna.

The Adi Khanda is full of nectarine topics. It describes how the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Narayana, performed playful pastimes acting as though He were a mere child.

The Supreme Lord Gaurasundara is the crest jewel of the fourteen worlds and the Supreme Lord of the Vaikuntha planets that lie beyond this material world.

He is Lord Narayana, the husband of Laksmi devi. He is also Lord Ramacandra, the husband of Sita devi.

In Treta Yuga Gaurasundara appeared as Lord Rama with His younger brother Sri Laksman (Lord Nityananda). He performed various extraordinary pastimes and killed the great demon King Ravana.

In Dvapara Yuga He appeared as Lord Krsna with Sankarsana, Balarama. Performing many wonderful pastimes, they alleviated the weight of sin in the world.

I, Vrndavana dasa, offer this humble song at the lotus feet of Sri Krsna Caitanya and Sri Nityananda Candra Prabhu, Who are my life and soul.

The Vedas always glorify two Supreme Personalities Lord Mukunda (Krsna) and Lord Ananta Sesa (Balarama). Know for certain that these two Supreme Personalities have now appeared as Lord Caitanya and Lord Nityananda.

Adi Lila

Chapter 6

Lord Gauranga, like the child Gopala Krsna, performed His playful pastimes in various ways. The time for His formal education approached.

Fixing an auspicious day and an auspicious moment, Sri Misra, the most elevated brahmin, formally placed the writing chalk in the hand of his son.

After a few days the Sri Cudakarna ceremony (when young brahmin boys shave their heads leaving only a sikha) was performed amidst all of Nimai's friends.

The Karnabedha ceremony which marked the beginning of Nimai's Vedic studies was also observed.

Everyone was amazed that Nimai could write down all the alphabet letters immediately on seeing them.

Within two or three days Nimai had learned all the conjunct letters, and he spent His time writing many different names of Supreme Lord Krsna, like Rama, Krsna, Murari, Banamali, etc. He studied eagerly and wrote day and night.

Narayana, the Lord of the Vaikuntha planets, took the guise of the child Nimai and studied with the other children in Nadia. Only the most fortunate souls could see His wonderful pastime.

The living entities became enraptured just hearing Nimai's sweet recitation of the Bengali alphabet.

Whenever or wherever Lord Gaurasundar performed His extraordinary pastimes, they remained incomprehensible.

If Nimai could not catch the bird He saw flying in the sky, then He wept bitterly and rolled in the dust.

Sometimes He cried for the moon and stars in the heaven and thrashed His arms and legs violently if He could not have them.

At such times everyone tried to pacify the child. Jagannatha Misra would take Him in his arms but the child would refuse to be pacified. "Give! Give!" He would cry.

The only remedy for Nimai's crying was kirtana of the names of Lord Hari.

Everyone would clap their hands and chant, "Hari, Hari"; only then would Nimai forget His distress and become calm.

The frequent chanting of Lord Hari's names for the pleasure of Nimai turned Sri Jagannatha Misra's house into the transcendental abode of Vaikuntha.

One day the Lord continued to cry in spite of the loud chanting of Hari's name.

Someone said, "My dear Nimai, come and dance nicely. We are singing Lord Hari's name".

But Nimai continued to cry, not listening to anyone. "Speak, dear child. Why are you crying so much?" they asked him.

"Dear child, tell us what you want. We will bring you whatever you like; simply stop your crying."

The Lord replied, "If you want to save my life, then quickly go to the houses of the two brahmins Jagadisa Pandita and Hiranya Pandita.

"I am very attracted to the homes of these two pure devotees, and if I could eat their offerings I would become healthy and calm and I could behave normally."

Nimai's request was impossible. What He wanted was neither practiced among men nor sanctioned in the scriptures. Mother Saci felt distressed.

Everyone smiled at His childish words and promised, "We will give you whatever you want child, but now stop crying."

Jagadisa Pandita and Hiranya Pandita were topmost Vaisnava devotees and inseparable friends of Sri Jagannatha Misra.

When they heard Nimai's request they were filled with joy.

The two brahmin Vaisnavas said, "This is a very extraordinary story. We have never seen such an intelligent child. How could He know that today was Ekadasi and that a large variety of food had been offered to the Lord?"

"Now we understand the child's exquisite beauty; Lord Gopala Krsna must be residing in Him.

"The Supreme Lord Narayana acts through this boy. Sitting in His heart, the Lord prompts Nimai to speak in amazing ways."

The two Vaisnava brahmins decided to give all the offerings to Nimai and they took everything to His house with great delight.

"Eat these offerings we made to the Lord," they told Nimai. "Our desire to satisfy Lord Krsna will thus be fulfilled."

Only by Krsna's mercy can one develop the spiritual intelligence to perform devotional service; other than the Lord's servant, no one possesses such intelligence.

Only through devotional service can the Supreme Lord, Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu, be known as He is. The entire cosmic manifestation has emanated from the pores of the hair of His body.

The Lord's eternal servants, Jagadisa and Hiranya Pandita, saw to their full satisfaction how the Supreme Lord as a brahmin child perform His transcendently playful pastimes.

The Lord happily received all the offerings from His devotees, and He tasted a little something from every preparation.

Smiling with pleasure Lord Nimai ate Krsna's offering and all of His unusual whims were appeased.

Everyone in the house sang, "Hari, Hari" and the Lord ate and danced to the chanting of His own name.

Nimai dropped some of the food on the ground and some got smeared on the other family members. In this way the Lord of the universe, the Controller of the threefold miseries, performed His transcendental pastimes.

The Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is described in all the Vedas and Puranas, played like a child in Mother Sacidevi's courtyard.

As He grew, Nimai became totally absorbed in the restless mood of a young boy with the other restless young sons of the Navadvipa brahmins.

No one could restrain Him and He wandered freely with His friends.

Upon meeting another young boy, Nimai would poke fun at him and the boy would return the taunts until a quarrel broke out.

Nimai and His friends always won such quarrels because Nimai was more powerful; the opponents inevitably went away defeated.

How enchanting Nimai looked with His body covered in grayish dust and speckled with drops of black writing ink.

After finishing their studies each day at noon, Nimai and His friends went to bathe in the Ganga, amusing themselves all the while.

Diving in the waters of the Ganga, Nimai and His friends challenged one another by splashing.

Who can describe Nadia's opulence in those days? Hundreds of people gathered in one bathing place on the river.

It was impossible to keep track of the number of different people who came to the bathing place. Renunciates in saffron robes, householders, peaceful gentlemen, children, etc., came there to bathe.

The Lord performed wonderful water sports with His friends, sometimes floating with the currents of the Ganga.

Using the excuse of water sports, Nimai splashed water from His divine lotus feet on whoever was near Him, thus showering His grace upon them.

People warned Nimai not to be so mischievous but He paid no heed. Nor could anyone catch Him as He was the swiftest swimmer.

Nimai forced everyone to bathe several times by contaminating them, by touching them after their bath or sometimes by spitting on them.

Unable to catch Nimai to rebuke Him, the enraged brahmins stormed off to His father.

"Dear Misra, my good friend", one gentleman said. "Please listen well. I have come to complain about your son's misconduct. He does not allow us to perform our daily ablutions in the Ganga properly." Another man complained, "He splashes water on us and disturbs our meditation."

"Furthermore, Nimai says, 'Who are you meditating on? Just look at Me. In this Kali Yuga I am directly Lord Narayana Himself'."

They all came with different complaints. One man said, "He stole my Siva linga deity." Another said, "He ran away with my outer clothes." Still another reported, "I prepared for Lord Vishnu's worship and collected in one place different ingredients like flowers, durva grass, sandalwood and a seat for Lord Vishnu. When I went for my bath, Nimai sat on Lord Vishnu's seat, ate the offering and threw the other ingredients away."

"Then Nimai said, 'Why do you feel so sad? The Lord of your worship has Himself eaten your offering'."

The people continued to complain. One brahmin said, "I stepped into the water to recite my Gayatri mantra and from nowhere Nimai came under the water and pulled me away by my feet." Another said, "My clothes and flowers are invariably taken away." Yet another said, "He steals my Bhagavad Gita scripture." Another exasperated voice added, "My son is very young. Nimai puts water in his ears and makes him weep miserably." Someone else complained, "He sneaks around to my back and climbs onto my shoulders shouting, 'I am Mahesh!' and then jumps down." Another complained, "He sits on my seat of worship and eats all my offerings; then He performs worship of Lord Vishnu. He throws sand at anyone who has finished bathing and all the other restless, mischievous boys join Him. One of His worst tricks is that while the women and men are bathing He mixes up their clothes and when they want to dress they become quite disturbed."

"Dear Jagannatha Misra, you are a generous and friendly gentleman, but I tell you your son Nimai does this sort of mischief every single day. He remains in the water well past two in the afternoon teasing everyone that comes for their bath. How do you expect Him to maintain His health."

In the meantime many angry young girls from the neighborhood approached Sacidevi.

They arrested Sacidevi with serious complaints, "Please hear from us, respected mother, about your son's misdeeds. He steals our clothes and uses awfully abusive language with us. When we try to correct His speech, He splashes water on us and starts quarreling. We bring fruits and flowers to the Ganga to follow our religious observances, but He scatters and spoils everything. He waits for us to finish our ablution and then throws sand on us. Your son Nimai stealthily comes from behind us and suddenly shouts loudly into our ears, mortifying us." "Nimai spat a mouthful of water right into my face, and threw these okada seeds in my hair. They do not come off so easily." Yet another voice complained, "Nimai says He wants to marry me."

"Everyday He behaves in this manner; do you think your son is a prince?" they inquired.

"Everything your son Nimai does is exactly what Nanda Maharaja's son Gopala Krsna did a long time ago. We have heard stories of Krsna.

"If we report all these complaints to our parents they will surely quarrel with you.

"You should immediately correct your young son; His conduct is certainly not well received in a town like Nadia."

With a smiling face, Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu's mother embraced each girl and spoke comforting words to them all.

"When Nimai returns home today I will beat Him and bind Him up so that He can never again go out and tyrannize anyone."

All of them respectfully took the dust from Sacidevi's feet on their heads and proceeded to the Ganga to take their baths again.

Regardless of how everyone suffered due to Nimai's mischief, each person felt great satisfaction in His presence.

The Supreme Controller of everyone and everything, Sri Gauranga, knew that Sri Misra was looking for Him in a state of rage.

Lord Sri Gaurasundar continued to perform His wonderful water sports. Amongst all the boys, He was the most charming.

The young maidens took pity on Nimai and said, "Listen Visvambhara, your angry father is coming in this direction. Right now escape".

Sri Misra searched for Nimai playing amongst His friends while all the brahmin maidens ran away in fear.

Nimai had already instructed His friends that when His father enquired about His whereabouts they should say, "Your son did not come for His bath with us. He went back home after class. In fact we ourselves are waiting for him."

Nimai returned to His house by another road and Sri Misra arrived at that bathing place on the Ganga.

Sri Misra looked everywhere but could not find Nimai amongst the group of boys.

"Where did Visvambhara go?" enquired Jagannatha Misra angrily. The young boys replied, "Today He never came for His bath. He returned home on His usual road after class. We are all waiting for Him.

Sri Misra continued to search for Nimai, but unable to find Him, he stood fuming with rage.

Those brahmins who had earlier made complaints against Nimai just for some fun, now came to Sri Misra and said, "Visvambhara ran home out of fear. We will accompany you home, lest you do anything to Him that will later be regretted.

"If Nimai does this sort of mischief again then we ourselves will catch Him and bring Him to you.

"All those complaints we made about Nimai at your residence were simply out of fun. Actually your good fortune is unmatched in all the three worlds.

"Nimai is such a pleasing son that the members of His family are never touched by hunger, thirst, sorrow or other material sufferings.

"Your son is the supreme eternal Lord; you are truly very fortunate to be able to serve His lotus feet.

"We will always keep Visvambhara's memory in our hearts, even if He commits countless offenses."

The personalities of Nadia were eternal devotees and associates of the Supreme Personality of Godhead Sri Krsna. For this reason they were endowed with the superior intelligence required to render transcendental devotional service to the Lord.

The Supreme Lord performed various transcendental pastimes with His intimate servitors; a mundane person cannot understand such activities of the Lord.

Sri Misra said, "Nimai is a son to all of you. If you should take difference to His offense, then I am bound to you by oath. I beg your forgiveness."

Sri Misra warmly embraced everyone and returned home feeling greatly satisfied.

The Supreme Personality of Godhead Lord Visvambhara had gone home by another road. Shining brightly like the moon, He carried beautiful books in His hands.

Blotches of writing ink on different parts of Nimai's body appeared like decorations on His golden complexion. It looked as though a sweet smelling golden champaka flower had attracted a swarm of black bumblebees.

Lord Nimai called out "Mother, give me oil, I want to go for my bath."

Mother Saci's heart gladdened. She could not detect any sign that Nimai had taken a bath.

Giving Nimai the oil, Sacidevi thought, "What did the brahmins and the young maidens say about Nimai?"

"His whole body is spotted with ink blotches. He has the same clothes on that He wore to school."

Jagannatha Misra arrived home at that moment and Visvambhara climbed on his lap.

Sri Misra lost all external, mundane perceptions in the Lord's loving embrace; he bubbled over with happiness at the sight of his son.

Sri Misra saw that Nimai was covered with dust and there were no signs of His having taken a bath. Sri Misra was truly amazed.

Sri Misra said, "Visvambhara, what sort of intelligent boy are you that you do not allow people to take their baths in peace?"

"Why do you steal and disturb the arrangements people make for worshiping Lord Vishnu? You know who Lord Vishnu is, so why do you act like this without any fear?"

"But today I have not yet gone for my bath; all my friends have gone ahead of Me," replied Nimai.

"All these people are behaving improperly towards Me. Although I have not been near them, they falsely accuse Me of being at fault.

"If they continue to find fault and falsely accuse me, then I will actually misbehave and create trouble for them."

The Lord smiled and left for the Ganga where He met again with all His friends.

Nimai's friends embraced Him and laughed merrily when they heard His witty story. They all praised Him saying, "You were very clever, Nimai. You nicely saved yourself from a good beating today."

Nimai was once again engrossed in water sports with His friends while back in the house Mother Sacidevi and Sri Misra seriously considered certain points.

All the complaints brought against Nimai were certainly not lies, yet there was no indication that Nimai had taken a bath.

Everything was just as it should be. His body was covered with dust, He was dressed in the same clothes and they were dry. His hair was also dry and he had His books.

"I think our Visvambhara is not an ordinary person," said Sri Misra. "Perhaps the Supreme Personality of Godhead Krsna, by His internal potency, has appeared in our house as our son.

"Or perhaps Nimai is some great saintly personality. I am at a loss to know." Sri Misra, the jewel-like brahmin, pondered the matter seriously.

Sri Jagannatha Misra and Mother Sacidevi felt so happy to see their son that all their cogitations vanished. Their hearts filled with tender affection for Nimai and nothing else mattered to them.

Both of them felt their son's absence intensely. Nimai's two hours of study seemed like two yugas to His parents.

If the Vedas were to describe the great fortunes of Mother Sacidevi and Sri Misra in a countless variety of ways and with innumerable mouths, that fortune would still remain inconceivable.

I offer countless obeisances at the lotus feet of Mother Sacidevi and Sri Misra who received the Supreme Lord and controller of the limitless cosmic manifestation as their son.

The Lord of Vaikuntha, Lord Visvambhara, performed wonderful pastimes in a pleasing manner. No one could perceive these transcendental activities because of the influence of the Supreme Lord's spiritual energy.

I, Vrndavana dasa, offer this humble song at the lotus feet of Sri Krsna Caitanya and Sri Nityananda Candra Prabhu, who are my life and soul.

Chapter 7

All glories, all glories to Lord Gauracandra Who is the Supreme Lord of lords. All glories, all glories to Sri Visvambhara and His dear most devotees.

All glories to the illustrious son of Sri Jagannatha Misra and Mother Sacidevi. He is the life and soul of all surrendered devotees. O Lord Visvambhara, please glance upon us mercifully and deliver us all.

Using the pretext of mirthful childish pastimes, Lord Gaurasundara expanded His unlimited spiritual forms and His transcendental devotional service in Navadvipa dhama.

The restless Nimai, tirelessly created mischief with everyone. Though His mother tried to correct Him with sweet advice, He paid not the slightest attention.

In the presence of good instruction He created twice as much mischief. Whatever He could reach in the house, He would gleefully smash.

Out of apprehension, the parents at last refrained from giving any further instructions. The unrestrained Nimai played at will, displaying His wonderful pastimes.

The descriptions of Nimai in Adi Khanda are like nectar to the ears. The wonderful childhood pastimes of the Supreme Lord Narayana are described there.

The Lord feared no one – not His father nor mother. But in the presence of His elder brother Visvarupa, He became soft and humble.

Sri Visvarupa, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, was the treasure house of all divine qualities and a renunciate from His very birth.

Visvarupa explained that the essence of all scriptures was the path of devotional service to the Supreme Lord. No one has ever had the power to refute His explanations.

He was totally absorbed in Lord Kṛṣṇa and by engaging His hearing, speech, mind and all other senses in the service of the Lord, He grew disinterested in anything else.

While contemplating Nitya's unusual behavior, Visvarupa was filled with wonder.

"This young boy is not an ordinary mundane personality. His beautiful form and extraordinary behavior makes me think He is Lord Balagopala.

"I have seen Him perform continuous superhuman activities, but I personally believe it is actually the Supreme Lord Kṛṣṇa who enacts these pastimes in the body of this child."

The magnanimous Visvarupa pondered this matter for some time but did not reveal His realization to anyone, preferring to remain engrossed in His own service.

Visvarupa was always found in the association of pure Vaisnava devotees discussing topics about Kṛṣṇa, engaging in Kṛṣṇa's service or worshiping the Lord in devotion.

People of the world have always been mad after mundane life, wealth, children, education, etc. When the materialistic people of Nadia would see the Vaisnava devotees – who are naturally disgusted with material life – they would taunt them.

The materialists composed verses and recited them whenever they saw a Vaisnava. "The renounced sannyasis, the chaste ladies and the yogis performing austerity will all have to die. Then why their futile endeavor?"

"By our standard a fortunate person has the means to ride on a horse or be carried on a palanquin with ten to twenty persons running in front and behind him.

"You drench yourselves with tears of spiritual emotions while singing to your Lord, yet we do not see any sign of your poverty and misery being alleviated.

"Your Lord will surely become angry if you continue to call out 'Hari Hari' so loudly and so often!"

The Lord's pure devotees felt sorry for the atheistic people who were devoid of devotion and therefore spoke in an offensive manner.

In every direction the devotees saw people burning in the fire of material existence. Nowhere could they hear the kirtana of Lord Hari's names.

Sri Visvarupa in particular felt great anguish over the absence of kirtana of the name of His beloved Krsna Candra.

If ever Bhagavat Gita and Srimad Bhagavatam discourses were held, the speaker could never explain the privileges of devotional service to Lord Krsna which was the real essence of those scriptures.

The teachers destroyed themselves by perverting the meaning of the scriptures and speculating on the conclusion. Devotional service is unknown to such a materialistic society.

Sri Advaita Acarya Prabhu and the other Vaisnava devotees were overcome with pity and sorrow for the unfortunate living entities who were afflicted by perverted conceptions of life.

Sri Visvarupa was depressed by the environment and said to Himself, "I do not like to see the sinful faces of the people of this materialistic society. I will go live in the forest."

Each day at dawn, after a bath in the Ganga, Sri Visvarupa would visit the house of Sri Advaita Acarya Prabhu.

Sri Acarya Prabhu used to roar in delight when He heard Sri Visvarupa explain that the essence of all scriptures was the process of devotional service to Lord Krsna.

He would leave aside His regular worship just to hear Sri Visvarupa's discourses. and the assembled Vaisnavas would exclaim, "Hari! Hari!" in appreciation of the discussion.

The devotees roared like lions in the ecstasy of Krsna consciousness and felt the heavy burden of gloom lift from their hearts.

On such days no one wanted to leave Visvarupa's association, nor could He separate Himself from the devotees.

One day when Mother Saci had completed her cooking she told Sri Visvambhara to bring His elder brother home to eat.

Bearing that instruction Lord Visvambhara ran to Sri Advaita Acarya's residence to retrieve His brother.

At the Acarya's house He saw the assembly of Vaisnavas discussing the most auspicious topics of Krsna lila.

Sri Gaurasundara, who is Lord Krsna Himself, felt satisfied to hear the devotees glorify Him, and He captivated them with His glances.

Every line of the Lord's transcendental form seemed to defy the extremities of delicate beauty; the radiance of millions upon millions of moons lost their luster when compared to the effulgence of even one of the Lord's finger nails.

Bare-chested and covered with dust, Visvambhara smiled and addressed His elder brother.

"Brother, come to eat. Mother is calling you." He caught hold of Visvarupa's dhoti and together They walked home.

Sri Visvambhara's enchanting beauty held the devotees in a trance. They stared at Him in wonder, unable to move.

The devotees entered into meditation, experiencing the ecstasy of love of Godhead. Even the discussions on Krsna could not be continued.

The materialistic person is unable to comprehend the Lord's transcendental activities of attracting and alluring the hearts of His devotees.

This mystery was revealed in the Srimad Bhagavatam where the matchless message of Sukadeva Gosvami was given to Maharaja Parikṣita.

In a previous millennium, this Sri Gaurasundara appeared in Gokula as Krsna. He roamed about in different houses enacting His childhood pastimes in the company of other children.

The cowherd ladies of Gokula were more fond of baby Krsna than of their own sons.

Although the Gopis did not understand that Lord Krsna was the Supreme Lord, they naturally felt more affection for Him than for their own sons.

King Parikṣita was amazed by Sukadeva Gosvami's unequivocal answers to his questions and he listened in rapt ecstasy.

"O Sukadeva Gosvami, what you have revealed to me has never before been heard in the entire universe. It is certainly the most extraordinary topic.

"Just see how they loved Krsna, the child of another woman, more than their own sons."

Srila Sukadeva Gosvami replied, "O King Pariksit, the Supreme Personality is perceived as the supersoul existent in the hearts of every living entity. He is the most beloved Lord of the heart.

"When the soul leaves the body of the son, wife, friend or relative, the family members have the body taken away from the house in a matter of moments.

"Therefore, it is the supersoul which is the life of every living entity. That supersoul is none other than Sri Nanda–nandana, Krsna.

"Because of the inherent characteristics of the supersoul, Lord Krsna is able to attract the affection of the Gopis.

"This fact is applicable only to the devotees for a non–devotee can never feel affection for the Lord.

"Lord Krsna resided within the heart of Kamsa and other demons, so why were they envious and inimical towards Him? The reason was that these demons had committed grievous offenses in their previous lives.

"Everyone agrees that the sweetness of sugar is easily discernible; only a diseased person will find its taste bitter.

"The tongue is diseased; it is not the fault of the sugar. The Supreme Personality of Godhead, Lord Caitanya is the sweetest of all."

Everyone saw the Lord in Navadvipa, yet no one besides the devotees recognized Him.

Wherever He wandered in Navadvipa, Nimai captivated the hearts of the devotees while performing His wonderful pastimes.

On the day that Visvambhara came to call His brother home, He enchanted the hearts of the Vaisnavas.

The magnanimous Advaita Mahasaya thought, "This young boy is certainly not an ordinary mundane personality."

"I cannot determine what substance this boy is made of," said Advaita to the assembled devotees.

The devotees simultaneously glorified His extraordinary beauty.

Sri Visvarupa returned home briefly and then went straight back to Sri Advaita Acarya's house.

Enjoyments of material life had no attraction for Sri Visvarupa. He experienced joy only in singing the glories of Lord Krsna.

In His own house Sri Visvarupa spent all His time in the Visnu grha, a room set aside for Salagrama sila. He was unfamiliar with the ways of familial dealing.

His parents were eager to have Him married, but when He heard their plans He grew morose.

He was consumed by only one thought, "I will leave My family and go to the forest."

The Supreme Lord alone is able to know His own inner inclinations, thus Sri Visvarupa, the Supreme Lord, took the renounced order of sannyasa within a few days of that time.

With the name Sri Sankararanya which would become famous throughout the universe, that foremost Vaisnava set out on the eternal path.

Sri Visvarupa's disappearance left the hearts of Mother Saci and Sri Misra in intense grief.

With the other family members and friends, the parents wailed in lamentation. Sri Visvambhara was unable to bear the separation of His brother and He fell unconscious.

I am unable to depict the scene of intense grief and lamentation which struck the house of Sri Misra.

Sri Advaita Acarya Prabhu and all the other devotees shed profuse tears in the unbearable separation from Sri Visvarupa.

People from all classes of Nadia society were moved with grief when they heard the news of the boy's sannyasa.

Their hearts broken with sorrow, Mother Saci and Sri Misra continuously called out, "Visvarupa, Visvarupa."

Sri Jagannatha was overwhelmed with the throbbing pains of separation from his son, and his friends and relatives tried to console him.

"Dear Misra, please compose yourself. Do not feel sad; this magnanimous personality has delivered your entire family.

"If any member in the family takes the sannyasa order of life, then innumerable generations become eligible to live in the transcendental abode of Vaikuntha.

"The course of action your son adopted is certainly the perfection of all education.

"We should express our great happiness for you," they said as they held the feet and hands of the afflicted parents.

"Think about Visvambhara. He is the glory of your family. This son of yours will be the scion of the entire family line.

"He will eliminate all your sufferings. What is the need to have countless millions of sons when you have a son like this one?"

Friends and relatives tried to make Sri Misra understand his fortunate position. They offered good counsel but failed to mitigate his misery.

Misra Mahasaya tried to control his emotion, but as soon as he remembered the wonderful qualities of Sri Visvarupa, he again lost himself in bereavement.

"I could never know for certain whether this son would stay with me or not," said Sri Misra.

"The Supreme Lord Krsna gave me the child and He Himself took Him back. Whatever Lord Krsna desires must certainly occur.

"The infinitesimal living entities possess but insignificant power over life's phenomena. I therefore surrender my body, senses and everything to You Lord Krsna, the Supreme omnipotent Lord. You are my shelter."

Exerting true wisdom and established in knowledge of the absolute, Misra Mahasaya gradually composed his disturbed mind.

In this way Sri Visvarupa enacted the pastime of leaving His house and accepting sannyasa. He is the non-different, direct expansion of Lord Nityananda, the original Sankarsana.

Whoever hears the pastime of Sri Visvarupa accepting the sannyasa order of life is freed from the noose of karma and attains devotional service to Lord Krsna.

The devotees experienced mixed feelings over Sri Visvarupa's sannyasa. They were caught between elation and depression.

"Lord Krsna has taken from us the only saintly Vaisnava association we had.

"With Sri Visvarupa we discussed topics of Krsna consciousness, but now He is gone.

"We should also leave everything and go to the forest where we no longer have to see the faces of this sinful society.

"The entire population is engrossed in reprobate activities. How long is one supposed to tolerate insults inflicted by the vile words of atheists?

"Nowhere is the holy name of Lord Krsna uttered. The entire world is inviting its doom, drowning itself in illusory, sense gratifying activities.

"And when the unequivocal process of devotional service to Lord Krsna is explained to the atheists, they reject it and ridicule us.

"`What happiness have you gained by worshiping Krsna?' they demand. `You live in an improvised condition, you beg even for your food, and your misery continuously increases'."

The devotees uttered long sighs and agreed that they were no longer capable of living in that degraded society. They wanted to go off to the forest.

Advaita Mahasaya consoled each devotee saying, "You will certainly meet with the highest of bliss.

"I feel a great exhilaration in My heart as though Lord Krsnacandra has made His divine appearance.

"Go and happily sing Lord Krsna's holy name. In a few days you will see our beloved Lord Krsna right here.

"Lord Krsna will perform many pleasurable pastimes assisted by all of you.

"Only then will I, Advaita, become an unalloyed servitor of Lord Krsna.

"That rare mercy which is seldom experienced by Srila Sukadeva Gosvami or Prahlada Maharaja will be received by all of you."

Inspired by the nectarine words of Srila Advaita Acarya Prabhu the devotees sang the name of Hari jubilantly.

As the devotees roared with the repetition of Lord Hari's name, their hearts became filled with happiness.

Lord Gaurasundara was busy playing with His friends when the sound of Lord Hari's name reached His house.

When he arrived in the midst of the devotees they enquired, "What brings you here dear child?" And Nimai replied, "Why did you call for Me?"

With His troupe of young friends Nimai then took off at a run. No one could grasp Lord Visvambhara's real identity due to the influence of His transcendental illusory potency.

From the day Sri Visvarupa left the house to become a sannyasi, Lord Visvambhara minimized His restless and mischievous behavior.

Nimai stayed by the side of His mother and father to mitigate their grief in separation from Visvarupa.

He restrained Himself from playing and while studying He would not leave His books for a moment.

After studying any aphorism once, Nimai mastered it so well that when questioned on it, He bettered everyone else.

Because of Nimai's extraordinary intelligence, people praised His parents saying, "Sri Misra and Sacimata are truly blessed."

And to Jagannatha Misra they said, "Dear Misra, you are truly successful to have such an illustrious son.

"There is not another child in all the three worlds to match Nimai's superior wisdom. He will excel even Sri Brhaspati in erudition.

"He can present His own spontaneous explanations on any point, but no one is able to defeat His deceptive arguments."

Mother Saci was happy to hear about her son's wonderful attributes, but Sri Misra felt morose once again.

"This son of ours will never remain involved in household life," Sri Misra told Sacimata.

"Visvarupa studied the scriptures just as Nimai is doing now. He understood that there isn't a shred of reality in material existence.

"Knowing the essence of all scriptures, our wise Visvarupa rejected transient material life and went away.

"If Nimai also learns all the scriptures He will certainly follow the same path.

"Nimai is all that is left to us; He is our very life. If we lose Him we will certainly leave our bodies.

"Therefore He should no longer study. He can be an illiterate child and remain in the house".

Mother Saci argued, "How will He maintain His life if He remains illiterate? Moreover no one will give their daughter in marriage to an illiterate person."

But Sri Misra replied, "Surely you must be the naive daughter of a brahmin; you should know that Lord Krsna, who is everyone's protector, has created everything. He will give and take whatever is required.

"The entire material creation is maintained by the Lord of the universe, Krsna. Who has misinformed you that mere materialistic knowledge can help maintain anything?

"Lord Krsna is in complete control of everything; He even designs the results of the matching of brides and grooms. Both the learned groom as well as the illiterate groom are given brides.

"Lord Krsna is omnipotent and He maintains everyone. Whatever you see as lineage or formal education, etc., are simply semblances of reality.

"Why don't you take me as an example standing right here in front of you? I possess sufficient learning, yet there is insufficient food in my house?

"There are persons who cannot even pronounce the alphabets properly, yet see for yourself the thousands of scholars who crowd their doorsteps.

"Hence, it is not formal education or other material qualifications that maintain us, rather it is Lord Krsna who keeps and maintains everyone.

"When one has never worshiped the lotus feet of Lord Govinda, how is it possible for Him to live in comfortable opulence and meet death in a blissful state? By rendering devotional service to Lord Krsna we suffer from the pangs of poverty, but we embrace death in a happy state. This is not the case for one who depends on his material knowledge and wealth.

"A person may possess sufficient learning, high birth and enormous wealth but without the mercy of Lord Kṛṣṇa he can never be delivered from the misery of material life.

"A person may live amidst fine sense enjoyment and opulence, but Lord Kṛṣṇa may also allot him some incurable disease, causing him much misery.

"Such a person cannot really revel in sense pleasure. He burns with frustration, and I would say he is more miserable than a penniless derelict.

"Take note from this: all is but naught. In spite of his having great material wealth, one's future is determined entirely by Lord Kṛṣṇa's desire.

"Do not bother yourself thinking about your son's maintenance. I can assure you that Lord Kṛṣṇa will look after Him.

"As long as there remains life in my body, Nitya will not feel even the slightest sign of suffering.

"We all have Lord Kṛṣṇa as our only shelter. Why should you worry when you are a good mother and a chaste and dedicated wife?

"I impress upon you that there is no need for Nitya's studies. Let my son remain in the house as an illiterate."

Having made his decision, Sri Misra called his son and announced, "Nitya, I promise You that from today You are relieved of all studies. You may do as you like.

"Whatever you desire, my son, I am ready to provide. Just stay in the house and be fully satisfied."

Sri Misra left to attend to other business, and the Supreme Lord Viṣvambhara could understand that His studies had been discontinued.

As the spring of eternal religious principles, Sri Gaurāṅga was obedient to His father's instruction and did not attend school.

But the Lord was disappointed and once again took to His restless, impetuous ways with other young boys His age.

Both in His own house and in the neighbor's houses Nitya smashed or squandered away whatever he found within reach.

Even after dark Nimai remained away from home. The whole evening He performed various pastimes with the other young boys.

Covering themselves with a blanket so they looked like a bull, Nimai and another friend moved around in a most amusing manner.

During the day they had seen a small backyard banana plantation, and at night dressed in their bull costume, they plundered the banana trees.

The owner of the house raised a loud alarm when he saw the bull in his garden, but by the time a crowd was awake to remedy the situation, Nimai and His friends had already escaped.

Sometimes they tied the neighbor's doors from the outside so that they could not leave the house to use the outdoor lavatory.

When the people inside the house made a commotion, Nimai would run off.

Day and night the Lord of Vaikuntha and His friends performed endless pranks.

There was no limit to Lord Visvambhara's mischievous deeds, yet Sri Misra never corrected Him.

One day Sri Misra was called away on some duty and Nimai felt angry because He was not allowed to study.

The pots used for cooking Lord Vishnu's offerings were kept outside in a pile for cleaning. Nimai decided to sit on top of those contaminated pots.

Kindly listen with undivided attention to this confidential incident. Devotional service to Lord Krsna is perfected by sincerely hearing this story.

Sitting on the pile of contaminated pots as if it was a royal throne, Sri Gaurasundara glanced around with a smile playing on His lips.

His golden complexion was spotted by the black soot from the contaminated pots. He looked like a golden doll smeared by dark sweet-smelling sandalwood and aguru paste.

Several friends went to Mother Saci and informed her, "Nimai is sitting on top of the contaminated pots."

Mother Saci was shocked when she saw Him. "My dear child, this is not a proper place to sit," she scolded.

"Can you not judge between clean and unclean things after all these years?"

"Don't you know that one must bathe after touching unclean pots?"

Lord Nimai retorted, "You do not allow me to study, how do you expect me to know the differences between clean and unclean? I am just an illiterate brahmin.

"I am an uneducated fool with no idea of what is clean or unclean. I see oneness in everything; my vision is non-dual."

After His speech Nimai smiled from atop His seat of unclean pots. At that moment He manifested the mood of Lord Dattatreya, Krsna's incarnation as the son of Atri.

His mother replied, "Now that You have sat in a dirty place, how are You going to clean yourself?"

But Lord Visvambhara replied, "Mother, you have an extremely childlike mentality. I am never situated in a contaminated place.

"Wherever I am, that place becomes most sanctified. Ganga devi and all other places of pilgrimage naturally reside there.

"Clean and unclean are imaginary. It is a conditioned way of thinking. What can be the fault of the Creator or His creation?"

"Let us assume something is contaminated according to social etiquettes and Vedic ritualistic opinions. If I, the Supreme Absolute purity, touch it, then what contamination can remain?"

"In reality, these pots are not in the least contaminated because you have cooked for Lord Vishnu in them.

"Lord Vishnu's cooking utensils can never be contaminated. On the contrary they can purify everything and every place simply by their touch.

"Similarly, I do not reside in a degraded place nor on a materialistic plane; everyone is purified by My contact."

After speaking the absolute non-dual truth just as a child would speak on ordinary topics, Nimai smiled. By the influence of His illusory potency, no one could fathom his words.

Nevertheless they all smiled condescendingly at small Nimai's speech while Sacimata insisted He come for a bath.

Nimai would not leave the pots so Sacimata coaxed, "Come quickly before your father comes home and learns about all of this."

But Nimai was adamant. "If you do not permit Me to study, then I will not move from this spot. I am telling you clearly."

The neighbors turned to Nimai's mother and enquired, "Why do you forbid Nimai to continue His education?"

"Many persons tutor their sons with painstaking care. How fortunate for you that this young boy desires to study of His own accord."

"Which of your enemies has advised you to keep your son in the house as an illiterate fool?"

"Nimai is not to be blamed in the least for this situation." Turning to Nimai they said, "Come child, if from today You are not allowed to study then you should continue Your work of destruction properly."

Sitting atop the pots, Nimai smiled sweetly and the fortunate souls who saw Him floated in an ocean of absolute bliss.

The mother herself had to bring the child down. All the while Lord Gauracandra, looking like a beautiful blue sapphire, continued to smile sweetly.

Nimai spoke the non-dual absolute truth in the mood of His previous incarnation Lord Dattatreya, but none could grasp the import due to the influence of Lord Vishnu's illusory potency.

The pious Mother Saci took Nimai for a bath and meanwhile Sri Misra returned.

Mother Saci told the entire story to Sri Misra and lamented, "Our son is sorry that He is not allowed to study."

Some neighbor's petitioned Nimai's father, "Dear Misra, we know you are a high-minded soul. On whose advice did you forbid your son to continue His education?"

"Whatever Lord Krsna desires will always come true, therefore discard all your worries and allow your son to study without anxiety."

"You are truly fortunate that your son wants to learn of His own volition. Therefore choose an auspicious day, initiate your son with the sacred brahmin's thread and begin His studies again properly."

Sri Misra replied, "You are all my dearest friends; whatever you decide I must consent to."

Young Nimai's activities were all superhuman and although everyone saw them with utter amazement, they could never understand their deep mystery.

Occasionally pious and fortunate people came to visit Sri Misra and informed him of the superhuman qualities of his child.

"This child must never be considered an ordinary boy," they would advise. "Keep Him close to your heart with utmost care."

The supreme actor of Vaikuntha, Nimai, frolicked mischievously in His own courtyard.

Then with His father's permission, Sri Caitanya joyfully resumed His studies.

Adi Lila

Chapter 8

All glories to Sri Gauracandra Who is an ocean of mercy. All glories to the radiant moon Who has risen in the house of Sri Misra and Sacidevi.

All glories to the life and soul of Lord Nityananda. All glories to the treasure house of congregational chanting, the religion of this age.

All glories to Lord Gauranga, His devotees and His associates. Just by hearing the pastimes of Lord Caitanya, devotional service to the Supreme Lord is immediately achieved.

While Lord Caitanya lived in Sri Jagannatha Misra's house, His true identity was wrapped in complete secrecy and no one could recognize Him.

As many games as there are for boys in this world, young Nimai played them all. Who knows the names of all these games?

The wonderful pastimes of Lord Caitanya have been revealed in all the Vedas and Puranas; within a short time all fortunate and pious souls will hear about them.

Totally absorbed in the mood of a child, Lord Gauranga passed many years. At last the time arrived for Him to accept the sacred brahmana's thread.

When Sri Misra decided to initiate his son with the sacred brahmana's thread, he called his friends to his house for the occasion. They arrived in great delight and took up different duties to assist with the ceremony.

The ladies ululated in glorification and sang about the extraordinary qualities of Lord Krsna while the musicians played on different instruments – mrdangas, sanai and flute.

The brahmanas chanted Vedic hymns and the orators offered verses in glorification. Sacidevi's house was flooded with great joy – as if joy personified had made its appearance there.

At the time Lord Gaurasundara was to accept the sacred thread, all the planets were favorably positioned.

The month, the day and the moment were all auspicious when Lord Gauranga, Who is Sri Hari, accepted the sacred thread.

The sacred thread adorning the beautiful form of the Lord was an enchanting sight; certainly Ananta Sesa must have assumed a thread form to circle the body of His beloved Lord.

The Supreme Lord Gauracandra then manifest His Vamana form. Whoever saw that wonderful pastime felt unbounded joy.

People saw a wonderful spiritual aura emanating from the Lord and they immediately discarded their anthropomorphic vision.

With a stick in His hand and a cloth bag hanging from His shoulder, Sri Gaurasundara went begging to the houses of His devotees.

Each man according to his ability placed alms in Nimai's bag and felt great satisfaction. The ladies also smiled with pleasure as they dropped their alms in His bag.

Sri Sarasvati devi, Sri Parvati devi, and the chaste and dedicated wives of other great sages appeared on the scene. Taking the position of brahmanas' wives, they gave alms to the beautiful brahmana boy, Nimai.

Seeing Nimai's radiant Vamana form, everyone smiled with satisfaction and gave Him alms.

He enacted the transcendental pastimes of Lord Vamana simply for the redemption of all conditioned souls.

All glories to Lord Gauracandra's beautiful form. Please place those lotus feet in the throne of my heart.

Anyone who hears the narration of Lord Visvambhara accepting the sacred thread attains the supreme shelter of Sri Caitanya— candra's lotus feet.

Nimai, the Supreme Lord of Vaikuntha, performed various other pastimes while residing in the house of Sacimata. These pastimes seem obscure in the Vedas.

Nimai already understood the essence of all the scriptures even while studying at home, but still He desired to study in the company of others.

Sri Gangadasa Pandita, a resident of Navadvipa, was a crown jewel amongst teachers. He was none other than Sandipani Muni (the teacher of Lord Balarama and Lord Krsna).

He was extremely knowledgeable in grammar and Nimai expressed a strong desire to study under him.

Sri Misra correctly interpreted his son's indications and went with him to the house of the learned brahmana, Sri Gangadasa.

Sri Gangadasa Pandita stood up respectfully on seeing Sri Misra and went forward to meet him. After embracing him warmly, Sri Gangadasa offered him a seat.

"I give my son to you," said Sri Misra. "Please let Him read and hear from you and personally teach Him everything."

Sri Gangadasa Pandita replied, "I feel immensely fortunate because of this offer. I will teach Him to the best of my ability."

Sri Gangadasa was extremely pleased to have Nimai as a student and kept Him always by his side like a son.

Simply by hearing Sri Gangadasa's explanations only once, Nimai was able to grasp their meaning.

He could refute His teachers explanations and then re-establish those same arguments.

Gangadasa Pandita had hundreds of students but none could engage in debate with Nimai.

The teacher was extremely pleased with Nimai's extraordinary intelligence and declared him to be the best student.

In the presence of Nimai's arguments the other students in the school danced like puppets.

Amongst Nimai's associates, Sri Murari Gupta, Sri Kamla Kanta, Sri Krsnananda and others like them were prominent.

Nimai defeated everyone by posing tricky arguments on sophism. The older students, considering Him to be young, simply smiled without offering any rebuttals.

Each day after completing His studies, Nimai went with the boys His own age to bathe in the Ganga.

There were countless other students in Navadvipa who also went to bathe in the Ganga after their classes each day at noon.

There were many teachers in Navadvipa and each had many students. The students of one teacher would continuously challenge students of other teachers.

Although Nimai was only in His early boyhood, He had a mischievous nature and continually started quarrels with other students.

One student might say, "What intelligence does your teacher have?" Another would say, "Look whose student I am."

In this way they would begin by being a little abusive towards each other. Then they would splash water at each other and end up throwing sand.

Fights would break out and boys would beat whoever they could catch. Someone might throw mud on another and then jump on him and beat him as well.

After falsely swearing in the name of the King, some boys would catch other boys and after beating them soundly, swim to safety on the other side of the Ganga.

The water of the Ganga became muddy by the wild wrestling and scuffling of the students.

The women could not fill their water containers nor could the brahmanas and other respectable people take a bath.

Displaying His extremely restless nature, Visvambhara Raya went from one bathing ghat to another, finding in each place an audience of students – an arena in which to debate and dispute. At one ghat He played the stick game with friends.

The advanced students banded together and challenged, "Why do you always quarrel with everyone? Let us see how intelligent you are. Let's us hear you give the purport to the explanation of the astrological treatise in the almanac."

Nimai said, "That is very good indeed. I accept your challenge. Whoever wants can question Me?"

One irritated student said, "Why are you so conceited?" But Nimai replied, "You may question me as you like."

The student said, "Explain the laws of verbal roots." Nimai replied, "I shall explain them but you must listen attentively."

Nimai, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, was the source of all potencies.

Naturally His explanations of the grammatical rules were very authorized.

The challenging student praised Nimai for His explanation. Then Nimai said, "But now hear Me refute My own arguments."

Nimai picked out the discrepancies in His own explanations, and said, "Who amongst you has the power to establish any point over and above My arguments?"

The students were all amazed by Nimai's original arguments as well as the arguments he used to defeat himself, so no one dared say anything. "Alright," he said, "I shall have to establish the new argument which defeats the other two."

Sri Gauracandra gave His new explanation which was as beautiful and poetic as the first two.

The students were all truly impressed and embraced Nimai sincerely.

The students said, "Go home today, but come back tomorrow and we will have fresh questions for you."

Playing the part of a student enrapt in learning, Nimai, the Lord of Vaikuntha, frolicked in the water of the Jahnavi (Ganga).

Nimai's erudition was so profound that in the presence of the other students of Navadvipa, He looked like Brhaspati himself surrounded by his disciples.

While performing their daily water sports, Nimai and His friends occasionally swam across the river to the far bank.

Since the time that Lord Krsna sported in the water of the Jamuna River, the Ganga had nursed an intense desire to have that same good fortune.

Although the Ganga is worshiped by the prayers of such great personalities as Lord Brahma and Lord Siva, she nevertheless aspired to achieve the elevated position of the Jamuna.

The Supreme Lord Gaurasundara was a desire tree which continuously fulfilled that longing of Jahnavi (Ganga).

After a day of sports and fun, Sri Gaurasundara returned home, worshiped Lord Vishnu in the prescribed manner, offered water to the tulasi tree and sat down to eat.

Immediately after His meal Nimai would take his books and search for a quiet place to study.

In that lonely place the gem of all Lords absorbed Himself in study, making annotations on different aphorisms.

Seeing his son's studious mood, Sri Misra floated on the waves of happiness but never revealed his pleasure to anyone.

In intense parental devotion he reveled in the unparalleled beauty of his son, and in that mood he gained liberation.

But Sri Misra considered the happiness of liberation to be quite insignificant. For the pure devotee there is no joy from either liberation or gross and subtle sense gratification.

I offer my countless obeisances at the feet of Sri Jagannatha Misra whose son is the Supreme Lord of the unlimited material creation.

Sri Misra continually floated in an ocean of bliss simply by seeing his charming son, Nimai.

Cupid's beauty bows in defeat before the Lord's blossoming freshness. His every exquisite limb exudes incomparable charm.

In parental anxiety Sri Misra once thought, "I hope no witch or spirit ever casts a spell on Nimai."

Imagining the worst, he immediately prayed that Lord Krsna would always give his son shelter. Nimai overheard his father's prayers and smiled to Himself.

Sri Misra prayed, "O Lord Krsna, You are the protector of all. Please look upon my son graciously.

"Impediments of any sort never appear in the life of any person who remembers your lotus feet, my Lord.

Those sinful places where you are not remembered become infested with witches, ghosts and evil spirits.

"O Lord, I am Your servant, so whatever is mine is automatically Yours. Kindly receive them within Your shelter.

"Therefore I pray that no obstacles or difficulties will befall my son at anytime."

Sri Misra continued to pray with unflinching faith. Lifting both his hands, he begged for the Lord's mercy.

One day by divine arrangement Sri Misra had a dream which caused him both intense delight and extreme grief.

He bowed down on the ground and prayed, "O Lord Govinda, allow Nimai to remain in my house. O Lord Krsna, this is the only benediction I beg of you: let Nimai be a householder and live at home."

In surprise Mother Saci enquired, "Why have you all of the sudden prayed for benedictions from the Lord?"

"Today I had a dream," answered Sri Misra. "In the dream I saw that Nimai had shaved off his sikha."

Dressed in indescribably beautiful sannyasi robes, He simultaneously laughed, danced, wept and chanted Krsna's name.

"Advaita Acarya Prabhu and all the other devotees encircled Nimai and joined in the chanting.

I saw Nimai sit on Ananta Sesa (Lord Vishnu's couch), and place His foot on everyone's head.

"Lord Brahma, Lord Siva and Sri Ananta Sesa chanted, 'Jai Sacinandana'.

"Although everyone around was jubilantly chanting praises, I alone stood silent in fear.

"In a flash I saw Nimai, followed by millions and millions of people, roaming from town to town, dancing.

"Countless millions followed Him chanting Lord Hari's name in unison. That sound touched the very coverings of the material universe."

"While I listened to the glorification of Nimai flowing from every direction, I saw devotees who followed Him to Nilacala, Puri.

This dream caused me such anxiety! I am afraid our son will become disgusted with household affairs and leave home as a sannyasi.

"What you saw was just a dream," pacified mother Saci. "O learned husband, do not worry. Nimai won't leave us.

"Nimai knows nothing but His books and He thinks that learning is all in all."

Because of their parental affection, those two extremely noble souls continued to discuss topics related to their son's future.

However, after a few days Sri Jagannatha Misra disappeared from this mortal world in his pure form.

Nimai wept bitterly over His father's disappearance, as had Lord Ramacandra when His father King Dasaratha left his body.

Mother Saci survived only because of Nimai's irresistible attractiveness.

As it deepens my grief to discuss this subject, I have described the incidents very briefly.

Nimai stayed close to his bereaved mother and concealed His own grief well.

Mother Saci cared for her fatherless son without a thought of any other work.

If Mother Saci lost sight of Nimai for a moment she swooned and both eyes lost their vision.

Nimai also reciprocated. Allowing His love and affection to flow continuously to His mother, he consoled her with calming, hopeful words.

"Mother please do not despair. As long as I am with you nothing shall harm you," He assured her.

"Soon I shall bring you that gift which is unobtainable even by demigods like Lord Brahma and Lord Siva."

Mother Saci simply beheld the kind and beautiful face of Nimai and forgot her own misery. How could she feel discouraged in his presence.

The Supreme Personality of Godhead was living as the son of Mother Saci. Simply by remembering Him, one's every desire could be fulfilled.

How could despair touch mother Saci? Nimai uplifted her spirits, and she attained an eternal blissful form.

The Lord of Vaikuntha was present in Navadvipa as a young brahmana boy, enjoying the bliss derived from His own supremely opulent self.

Poverty in their house was only an external feature. Nimai's commands were expressions from an autocratic all-opulent Lord of Lords.

Whatever Nimai demanded he had to get without considering its availability.

If His demands were not supplied, there was no escaping His wrath.

He would break and smash everything in sight, not thinking that the loss was His own.

In spite of this, Mother Saci gave her son whatever He wanted only because of her deep affection for Him.

One day when Nimai was going to bathe in the Ganga, He asked His mother for oil, amalaki and other ingredients.

"I want to bathe in the Ganga and also offer her worship," He said. "So please give me a nice garland and aromatic sandalwood for this purpose."

"Please wait a few minutes my dear son," said mother Saci. "I will have to go and get a garland."

Nimai went into a fit of rage like Lord Rudra when He heard the words "I am going to get it."

"You want to go now to bring a garland?" He raged as He stormed into the house.

In the fury He smashed all the pots of Ganga water. Then with a stick He smashed every pot or container He could find. As the Supreme, independent Lord, He did whatever He pleased. Husked rice, cotton, grains, and salt from the broken vessels ran in rivets created by spilled oil, ghee and milk. Mother Saci saved dried foodstuffs in cloth bags which hung from the ceiling, but Nimai pulled down every bag. He scattered their contents, and in His rage He even tore up the cloth bags. When nothing in the house remained whole, Nimai directed His wrath on the residents themselves.

Taking up His stick again, Nimai began to beat the walls. Not a soul dared to reproach Him.

After the walls He smashed the windows and doors, and then He attacked a tree in the courtyard with the stick fixed in both hands.

And without a moment of remorse over the tirade, He at last struck the ground with His stick and lost His sense entirely.

In fear for her life Mother Saci hid in one end of the building.

Lord Gaurasundara, propagator of religious principles, came to establish eternal religion or Sanatana dharma. He would never raise His hand against His mother.

Although his anger still boiled visibly, He refrained from beating His mother.

Having demolished everything in sight, Nimai fumed as He rolled in the dust of the courtyard.

His beautiful golden form was covered with dust. His glory was truly indescribable for even in that condition He was utterly charming.

At last He grew calm and lay quite still in the dust of the courtyard.

That Lord of Vaikuntha called for His internal "Yoga maya" potency with simply a glance and entered into a "yoga nidra" sleep as He lay on the hard earth.

The transcendental form of Lord Ananta Sesa is Nimai's resting place, and Sri Laksmi devi eternally serves His lotus feet.

That Supreme Personality, Who is sought after by the four Vedas, lay asleep in Mother Saci's courtyard. The endless cosmic manifestation emanates from the pores of His body. His servants perform the act of creation, maintenance and annihilation. Lord Brahma, Lord Siva and other elevated personages become overwhelmed while meditating on His transcendental attributes. But that Supreme Lord Nimai was resting peacefully in Saci's courtyard.

Lord Caitanya Mahaprabhu tasted the mellow of self perception and then fell asleep as the demigods looked on with joyous tears.

Mother Saci brought a garland for the worship of Ganga devi and placed it directly in front of Nimai.

She wiped the sand and dust from His transcendental body and lifted Him up.

"Wake up, dear child," she said softly. "Take your garland and go worship Ganga devi as you desired."

"What has happened is good, my son. I hope that all dangers and difficulties were driven out with the broken pieces."

Sri Gaurasundara was ashamed, but He rose and went to take His bath.

Mother Saci cleaned the house and prepared to cook.

She felt no unhappiness although so much had been wasted by Nimai's tirade.

Mother Yasoda in Gokula also endured the restless moods and activities of Lord Krsna.

As the Universal Mother, Sacidevi also endured the restless behavior of Sri Gaurasundara.

Just as Nimai angrily smashed everything in Mother Saci's house, there were many other restless pastimes He performed. I could narrate many of them.

Mother Saci endured everything with body, mind and words as though she were Mother Earth in person.

After some time Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Who is full of wonderful pastimes, returned home from His bath in the Ganga.

He worshiped Lord Vishnu, offered water to tulasi and sat down to eat.

Satisfied with His meal, Nimai washed Himself and chewed on betel leaf.

After sometime Mother Saci broke the silence. "My son what was the purpose of so much destruction and waste?"

"This house, the furniture, all the food grains – everything belongs to You, and the loss is Yours. I am not responsible."

"You insist that You want to go to study this very moment, but I have run out of resources in the house. What will you eat tomorrow?"

Nimai smiled at His mother's words. "Lord Krsna is the maintainer. He will take care of us," replied Nimai.

With that, the Lord of Sarasvati took His books in hand and went to study.

For sometime He remained in the mellow of learning, and in the evening He walked to the banks of the Ganga.

From there he returned home.

Calling His mother aside in secrecy, Nimai gave her two tolas of shining gold.

"You see Mother, Lord Krsna has given Me a treasure. Exchange it for money and spend it as you need."

Nimai went off to bed, leaving poor dazed Sacidevi to try to resolve the mystery of her son's behavior.

"From where does He bring gold," she pondered. "I'm afraid some danger will befall us because of this.

"As soon as there is a shortage of our necessary supplies. He brings gold, not just once but again and again.

"Does He borrow the gold, or create it by mystic powers? From where or whom does He get it?"

Noble Mother Saci was an innocent and honest woman. She was apprehensive even while exchanging the gold for money.

Mother Saci instructed the people, "First show the gold in several different places, then exchange it."

Thus Nimai, the clandestine Supreme Controller of all mystic powers, lived in Navadvipa.

Always seen clutching His books in His graceful hands, Nimai looked like Cupid personified as He studied in the midst of His classmates. An Urdhva tilak mark adorned His forehead, and the beauty of his shining curly hair could rob anyone of His mind. He was the embodiment of transcendental effulgence and round His shoulder hung the sacred brahmin thread. His ever-smiling enchanting face was delightful, showing off a set of twinkling teeth. How wonderful were his lotus eyes, and how wonderful was the charming manner in which He tucks his bright dhoti thrice in the waistband.

Whoever beheld Nimai's beauty gazed at Him with unblinking eyes. No one could pass by Him without an adulatory comment like, "What extraordinary beauty!"

Nimai Thakura could give such a marvelous explanation of anything that even His teacher felt immeasurable pleasure when hearing it.

Sri Gangadasa Pandita personally honored Nimai by appointing Him foremost of all the students.

The teacher said, "My boy please continue to study attentively and I am very sure you will soon be a great scholar and teacher Yourself."

Nimai said, "Sir, once you have blessed someone, what can keep him from attaining the Bhattacharya title?"

There was not a student who could answer any of Nimai's questions.

He Himself would establish a law of principle, but in the end He could refute His conclusions.

And if someone could not explain a principle, Nimai would explain it perfectly.

While bathing, while eating, while walking or while performing any other activity, Nimai thought only of scriptural conclusions.

In this way Nimai remained absorbed in the mellow of learning and education without revealing Himself to the world, a world spiritually blind and full of offenses.

The entire society had become devoid of devotional service to Supreme Lord Hari and the people were preoccupied.

Grand festivals were held in honor of sons and relatives. Nothing in society found expression except the pursuit of bodily maintenance, household welfare and other mundane activities.

The people in general sought happiness through false aspirations, and the society of Vaisnavas lamented over the condition.

The Vaisnavas chanted Krsna's names and lamented in their prayers, "Oh Supreme Lord Narayana, please be merciful to these unfortunate living entities."

And to the whole society they said, "You have not developed any attraction for the all attractive Lord Krsna, in spite of receiving this rare human birth. How much longer do you want to enjoy such adversity?"

"This rare human birth that even demigods desire is being wasted by you in false pleasures.

"Nobody follows the festivals that glorify and honor Lord Kṛṣṇa, rather they perform ritualistic ceremonies like marriages to enjoy themselves as they march towards the jaws of death."

And again to the Lord they prayed, "These living entities belong to You, O Lord. You are the Protector. What power do we have to speak? You are the supreme father of everyone."

In this way the devotees considered the benefit of all living entities and then sang the glories of Lord Kṛṣṇacandra.

Chapter 9

All glories to Sri Krsna Caitanya, the unlimited ocean of mercy. All glories to Lord Nityananda, the dearest friend of the distressed.

All glories to Lord Caitanya, the life's treasure and soul of Sri Advaita Acarya, and the priceless treasure house of Sri Gadadhara Pandita. All glories to Lord Visvambhara, the son of Sri Jagannatha Misra and Mother Saci. All glories to all the devotees who are such dear associates of the Lord.

Lord Ananta Sesa appeared in the Radha district on an order given previously by Sri Caitanya. He remained in the material world according to Mahaprabhu's transcendental desire.

Sri Nityananda Prabhu, the Lord of the Gaudiya Vaisnavas, appeared in the village of Ekacakra. His father was a brahmana named Hadai Pandita and his mother was Srimati Padmavati devi.

From His early childhood Sri Nityananda Prabhu had a serene disposition and was highly intelligent. He was a reservoir of excellences. His charming beauty overshadowed the attractiveness of millions upon millions of Cupids.

From the time of Nityananda's birth, everything became auspicious in the district of Radha. Famine, poverty and all kinds of disturbances were totally dispelled.

On the day of Lord Caitanya's appearance in Navadvipa, Sri Nityananda, who was still in Radha, roared with jubilation.

The sound of that roar filled the universe and robbed everyone of their senses.

Some people speculated, "It must be a thunderclap." Others thought it was the sound of some impending disaster. Still others said, "We know the reason for this sound. Lord Nityananda, the Lord of the Gaudiya Vaisnavas, is roaring in ecstasy."

People offered different opinions on this subject, but no one actually knew Lord Nityananda in truth due to his illusory potency.

Lord Nityananda concealed his identity and played gleefully with the other young children of His age.

The various games Lord Nityananda played with His young friends were actually manifestations of different pastimes of Lord Krsna.

The children got together and formed a divine council where some of them took the role of Mother Earth and submitted a petition.

Those children were accompanied by many others when they went to the bank of the milk ocean and offered their choicest prayers to Lord Krsna.

A certain young boy unseen by anyone called out in a loud voice, "I shall appear in Gokula, Mathura."

On some evenings, Lord Nityananda gathered His young friends and enacted the marriage of Sri Vasudeva with Devaki devi.

Closing all the doors and windows to the room to create a dungeon, Lord Nityananda enacted the birth of Lord Krsna which took place deep in the night while the rest of the world slept.

Then they carried baby Lord Krishna to their imaginary Gokula dhama and exchanged Him for the baby girl Mahamaya, the external potency of the Lord. Thus they tricked the wicked King Kamsa.

Chapter 10

All glories to Lord Caitanya, Sri Gauracandra. He is the supreme controller of all other isvaras and the most cherished Love of Lord Nityananda. He possesses an eternal transcendental form. O Lord, mercifully look upon the conditioned living souls. All glories to You, for You are the best of the brahmanas, the son of Sri Jagannatha Misra. All glories to Your devotees, the most elevated souls. You are an ocean of compassion, and Your beautiful eyes are like lotus petals. Be so kind, O Lord, as to grant me this prayer: may I remain constantly absorbed in Your magnanimous character.

Please read in this chapter about Lord Caitanya's pleasurable pastimes as a young scholar. He totally absorbed Himself in scholarly pursuits not finding time for anything else. After completing His daily brahminical duties early each morning, the Lord of the Universe, Sri Nimai Pandita, went to the house of Sri Gangadasa Pandita. He was accompanied by students who respected Him as an authoritative scholar and considered themselves His disciples. At Gangadasa's place He conducted debates. Many students who were not in His group for the debate and who did not submit to His tutorship were affronted or slighted by Nimai and His followers. After establishing His arguments in the debate, Nimai would discuss the different points He had made with His group, just as the other groups would do. Murari Gupta was not amongst Nimai Pandita's group, so Nimai confronted him and refuted his arguments.

Nimai wore His dhoti neatly wrapped around His slim, elegant frame, and sat amidst the students in the mood of a valiant prince. The sandalwood paste tilak decorating His forehead shone with a soft golden glow, and His exquisite and regular set of teeth were so effulgent that brilliant white pearls looked old and lackluster in comparison. At age sixteen, Nimai's youth blossomed like spring. He was beauty personified and even Cupid fell captive to His charm.

The erudition He exhibited in His pastimes as a scholar far superseded the knowledge and learning of Brhaspati. If any of the students tried to learn the scriptures on his own, Nimai was quick to taunt him.

The Lord would challenge, "Who is here? Such a great scholar to refute my arguments? Without even knowing the rules of proper conjugation some persons try to understand grammar by themselves and fool themselves into complacency. Yet in spite of their vanity, because of their ignorance they cannot answer My arguments properly. They cannot even debate the arguments properly."

Murari Gupta heard these provocative and boastful words of the Lord but remained silent and continued to do his work. Still Nimai would not leave him alone. He taunted Murari Gupta at every opportunity, but seeing the calm reaction of His dear servant, the Lord was actually very satisfied.

Once Nimai said to Murari Gupta, "You are a Vedic doctor. Why do you study grammar here? Go to your leaves and herbs and make a compound so you can cure the sick. Grammar is extremely difficult to learn. Here there is no mention of mucus, bile or indigestion. How do you want to accomplish anything in learning grammar just by studying on your own? Rather, go home and try to cure the sick."

Sri Murari Gupta was the partial expansion of Rudra, Lord Siva, and had a volatile temper. Yet Lord Visvambhara could not see a single trace of anger in him.

In reply Murari Gupta said, "O learned Brahmin, please tell me one thing: I see that You taunt everyone. Why are You so arrogant? On what subjects did You not receive a proper answer from me? Whether the discussion was on verb rules, astrology with its different purports, or other philological questions, I answered them all. Without asking and waiting for a reply You flaunt me. What do You really know? You are a learned brahmin, so why do You act like this? What more can I say?"

"Alright, discuss and analyze what you have read today," said Nimai. Murari Gupta began his explanations and the Lord immediately refuted them. Murari Gupta explained in a certain way but the Lord would explain the same subject in another way. At last the Master, not His servant, accepted defeat.

By the Lord's influence Murari exhibited great erudition and Nimai was extremely pleased by Murari's explanation. The Lord placed his soft lotus hands on Murari Gupta, and upon receiving that sublime touch, Murari experienced indescribable bliss.

"This Nimai cannot be an ordinary person," thought Murari to himself. "How would it be possible for an ordinary person to possess such vast learning? My body felt such spiritual excitement just by the touch of His hands. I think that I should not be ashamed to learn under his tutorship. There is no one as intelligent or learned in all of Navadvipa."

Then Murari Gupta, the Ayurvedic doctor, submitted to the Lord, "O Visvambhara, I will learn under your tutorship." In this affectionate manner the Master and His servant interacted. The Lord then took all His friends to the Ganga for a bath. The divine pastimes of Sri Caitanya as a scholar were enacted in this mood.

Chapter 11

All glories to Sri Gauracandra, the Supreme Lord of all lords. His youthful pastimes as a scholar revealed His attraction for learning. He stayed in Navadvipa, but He concealed His true identity. The best of the brahmanas, Gauracandra, spent all His younger days pursuing His studies. His handsome youthfulness could defeat the beauty of millions upon millions of cupids. Every limb of His transcendental body was a perfection of beauty. His arms extended down to the knees and His exquisite eyes were like lotus petals. His attractive lips were red as if from chewing betel, and He was always dressed in fine, majestic clothes.

Ever in a happy mood, He walked amidst His colleagues and disciples, entertaining them with His sparkling wit. He was their unquestioned leader on the strength of His superior intelligence and learning. He roamed all over Navadvipa carrying His books as if holding Sarasvati devi, the Goddess of Learning, within His palm, for He is the Supreme Lord of the entire cosmic manifestation. No scholar in Navadvipa dared to find faults in His dissertations. Only the brahmana Gangadasa Pandita, a very pious and fortunate soul, was capable of discussing with the Lord.

The different categories of people in Navadvipa saw Mahaprabhu in their own way. The materialistic fruitive workers who were attached to family and home saw Him as the Lord and experienced an inexplicable wonder. "How remarkable that every house He graces should always have prosperity," they exclaimed. The ladies saw Him as the most attractive Cupid. But in the hearts of the atheists He struck fear as the God of death. The scholars were convinced that Brhaspati, the most learned priest of the demigods, had taken birth on earth.

But the Vaisnavas were seriously concerned about Gauranga and His behavior.

"He is endowed with such sublime physical beauty," they sadly commented, "yet He shows no attraction for Lord Krsna. What will all His learning and erudition bring Him except years of wasted time." The Vaisnavas spoke in this manner because they were bewildered by the internal potency of the Lord. Although they saw the Supreme Lord in person before them, they could not recognize Him.

Once a Vaisnava met the Lord and enquired, "What is the use of wasting your time in pursuit of material knowledge."

The Lord smiled at the concern of His devotee and replied, "Truly it is my great fortune that you are instructing me to accept the path of devotional service."

These are some of the exchanges of mellows between the Supreme Lord and His devotees. Yet even the devotees – what to speak of ordinary men – could not recognize the Lord as He unfolded His pastimes in the mood of a scholar.

Navadvipa was the seat of learning in those days and students and scholars came there from all over. There were many pure Vaisnava devotees amongst them, especially from Chattagrama, who had come to live near the bank of the Ganga. By the Lord's desire all those Vaisnava devotees had appeared in Navadvipa. Abandoning all physical and material pleasures, they were fully attached to the lotus feet of Lord Krsna. They met daily, studied together and in solitude – away from the bustle of materialistic life – they discussed pastimes of Lord Govinda's.

Sri Mukunda was especially loved by all the other Vaisnavas because he could melt anyone's heart with his beautiful singing. Towards evening, the devotees would gather in Sri Acarya's house and when Mukunda would sing devotional songs to Lord Krsna, the devotees would lose their composure. Some would cry; others would laugh loudly and still others would dance. Some lost control of themselves and their clothes and would roll on the ground, feeling great ecstasy. Some chanted loudly as if roaring like lions, and others clapped the devotees loudly on their backs. Still others simply touched the feet of Sri Mukunda. The whole place became transformed into a most blissful scene, and all the Vaisnavas forgot their previous sufferings.

The Supreme Lord Gaurasundara was always pleased with Mukunda. Whenever he saw Mukunda He would hurry forward to meet him. Nimai would present Mukunda with problems, and Mukunda would earnestly try to explain them. But the Lord would immediately reply that Mukunda's arguments were all wrong, and inevitably an argument would ensue. Mukunda had become a respected scholar by such meetings with the Lord, and he would argue with the Lord, presenting pros and cons to establish his arguments. Of course the Supreme Lord recognized His devotees and enjoyed such exchanges.

Caitanya also harassed Srivasa in the same manner whenever He saw him, so most of the Vaisnavas tried to avoid meeting the Lord which simply wasted their time in useless sophistry and argument. The Vaisnavas were fully detached from material pleasures, being totally immersed in love of Krsna. Hence, they found no interest in any topics other than Krsna conscious topics.

They were not inspired to argue with the Lord on logic or other such material topics. In any case, the interactions invariably ended with the Lord making fun of them. Therefore when any of them spotted the Lord, he would change his direction and keep his distance. They enjoyed only Krsna conscious topics, yet whenever the Lord met them He would only ask questions on logic and other material subjects.

One day Caitanya was walking down the main street with some other students.

Mukunda happened to be coming that way at the same time, going for his daily bath in the river. Seeing the Lord from a distance, Mukunda quickly turned away. The Lord saw Mukunda sneak away and He asked His servant Govinda, "Why did this fellow run away on seeing me?"

"Dear learned brahmana, I don't know why he has gone away," said Govinda. "Maybe he has some other work."

"I know why he ran away," said Gauranga. "He does not like to talk about mundane subject matters. This fellow only studies devotional scriptures while I juggle with astrology, theology, verb rules and grammar. Because I do not talk about Krsna he has avoided me." Using harsh terms He pretended to slander Mukunda but He was actually very pleased with him. In this way He simultaneously revealed His own Supreme identity.

Chapter 12

All glories to the Supreme Personality of Godhead Sri Gaurasundara and all glories to the servant followers of the Supreme Lord.

Nimai was fully engaged in performing His transcendental pastimes as a scholar in Navadvipa. Always with a book in hand, He went about Navadvipa challenging all the scholars and teachers to debate on practically any subject matter, but no one could meet His challenge. The Lord was supposed to have studied only grammar. Yet He regarded acclaimed and titled scholars with disdain. He was a self-satisfied scholar and went about Navadvipa with His disciples and student who were very fortunate due to His association.

One day He quite unexpectedly met Mukunda on the road. Catching him by the hand, the Lord demanded, "What is your reason for avoiding Me or turning away when you see Me? Today let Me see how you escape without answering My questions."

"How am I going to defeat Him today?" thought Mukunda. "I know that He is well versed in grammar, so I shall question Him on 'alankar' (figures of speech) and defeat Him so thoroughly that He will never boast to me again." The debate began and they plied each other with questions. The Lord defeated each of Mukunda's explanations. Then Mukunda suggested, "Grammar is for small children. Only young students discuss these subjects. We should rather discuss figures of speech."

"Whatever you wish," replied Nimai. Mukunda quoted difficult and lofty slokas one after the other, asking questions on different aspects of the figures of speech. The omnipotent Supreme Lord pointed out mistakes in every one of his compositions and smashed all his arguments. Mukunda was unable to establish any new points.

"Today, return to your house and please study your books properly," said the Lord smiling. "Tomorrow, if you want, I will put you to the test again." Mukunda took the dust from the Lord's lotus feet and left thinking about this wonderful incident. "It is not possible for a human being to possess such knowledge," thought Mukunda. "He is well versed in all the scriptures and subjects. There is not one thing He does not know. He is such a genius. If only He were a devotee of Lord Kṛṣṇa then I would never leave His company for a moment."

The Lord of Vaikuntha enjoyed the mood of a scholar while roaming about Navadvipa. On another occasion He met Gadadhara Pandita. The Lord grasped both of Gadadhara's hands and said, "I heard you study logic. You must answer My questions before you leave." Gadadhara Pandita agreed and the Lord began, "Tell me the symptoms of liberation."

Gadadhara replied according to knowledge he had gained from the books, but the Lord said, "Your explanations are not up to standard."

Gadadhara insisted, "According to the scriptures liberation comes only after the extirpation of extreme suffering."

Nimai Pandita, the Lord of Sarasvatī Devī, the Goddess of Learning, pointed out discrepancies in various angles of Gadadhara Pandita's explanation. There was no one who could defeat the Lord, no one who could win in a debate with Him.

"Gadadhara, you should go home today, but tomorrow we shall meet again and you will have another chance," said Nimai. But Gadadhara could only think of escaping Nimai's association. He offered due respect to Nimai and left as quickly as possible. Nimai continued to roam about Navadvipa with His students.

Everyone now recognized Nimai as an erudite scholar and people in general were very respectful towards Him. In the late afternoon the Lord would sit in the midst of His students on the bank of the Ganga. Nothing in the cosmic creation could compare with His charm for He was continually worshiped by Lakṣmī Devī, the Goddess of Wealth.

Srī Sacinandana explained the scriptures and all His students sat around Him listening. Around evening time the Vaiṣṇavas came and sat at a distance from the Lord listening to his explanations with mixed feelings of elation and depression.

"What is the benefit of possessing so much beauty and such vast learning if one does not worship Kṛṣṇa?" commented one devotee.

"I have to run away when I see Him, lest He catch me and defeat me with His tricky questions," said another.

"If He catches you, you cannot escape. He forces you to stay as though He had the authority of some government official," complained another.

"But His strength is so extraordinary," concluded one devotee, "that I think He must be some great personality. Although He harasses us with tricky questions, somehow I feel very pleased each time I see Him. I have yet to meet anyone with His erudition. The only thing that disheartens me is that He does not worship Lord Krsna."

The devotees sincerely prayed that Nimai would develop some attachment for the lotus feet of Lord Krsna. They prostrated themselves on the bank of the Ganga and petitioned the Lord on Nimai's behalf.

"O Lord Krsna, please allow the son of Sri Jagannatha Misra to be always absorbed in You, leaving aside His other pursuits," they prayed. "Allow Him to worship You always in loving devotion and then we can all associate with Him." Nimai received the blessings of the pure Vaisnava devotees. As the Supreme Personality of Godhead residing in everyone's heart, He knew the mentality of the devotees.

Whenever He saw Srivasa and other elevated devotees He would always offer them respect. He accepted the blessings of the Vaisnavas, knowing that only through such blessings could love of Krsna be achieved.

Often devotees questioned Him, "Why do You waste Your time pursuing material knowledge? What will You gain?"

Others would advise, "You should begin to worship the Supreme Lord Krsna immediately. What is the ultimate aim of education? It is only to know the Supreme Lord, and if You miss this point then what is the use of all Your erudition?"

The Lord affectionately replied, "I am truly very fortunate that all of you are so intent about teaching Me the path of devotional service to Krsna. Within My heart I know that whoever receives your blessings is most fortunate.

"I have always thought that I would take shelter of a pure Vaisnava devotee but only after I have studied a little longer."

The Lord conversed affectionately with His devotees in this manner and yet remained undetected by anyone through the influence of His internal potency, Maya. The Lord charmed everyone and stole their hearts. There was no one who did not wait eagerly to meet the Lord again. The citizens of Navadvipa were equally happy to meet Sri Gauracandra and whenever they saw him they offered respect.

Each of the townspeople saw the Lord according to his own mentality. The ladies thought, "O, here is Cupid."

The scholars offered Him great respect thinking He was Brhaspati, the priest of the demigods.

The mystic yogis considered Him to be a perfected being, while the evil-minded atheists and sinners beheld Him with fear.

Nimai's charm was irresistible. Whoever conversed with Him became captivated as though bound by the ropes of love. Although He acted like a braggart, flouncing His erudition, still people heard Him with affection. Even the Muslims and others felt affection for the Lord. That was only natural because the Lord's nature was magnanimous.

The Supreme Lord of all the spiritual planets was teaching many students in front of Mukunda and Sanjaya's house. Never tiring from debate on any point, the Lord Visvambhara, Sri Sacinandana, exhibited His pastimes as a scholar. None of the fortunate souls who had contact with Gaurasundara including Mukunda and Sanjaya could understand the reason for their exhilaration in the Lord's company. The Lord of Vaikuntha had mastered all the branches of education, and He exhibited this transcendental pastime in the mood of a erudite scholar for the pleasure of everyone.

One day the Lord pretended He was sick from a certain kind of disorder and used this to reveal ecstatic symptoms of devotional service. Suddenly He uttered some thing mystical and indecipherable. Falling to the ground He rolled around breaking everything within reach. He roared like thunder – like a challenging wrestler – and struck whoever came near Him.

At one moment His body would be paralyzed and in the next moment He would fall unconscious. Those who witnessed the malady were frightened. News spread that He was suffering from a wind disorder and all His friends rushed in to try to help. Buddhimanta Khan, Mukunda and Sanjaya came quickly to His house with the entire group. They applied different medicated herbal oils on His head to bring Him back to a normal condition. In actuality Nimai was pretending to be sick, so no one could cure Him from His condition. His whole body quivered uncontrollably and He alternately sighed and roared, making everyone fearful.

"I am the Lord of the entire universe," said Nimai. "I am the maintainer and holder of the Universe and My name is Visvambhara. I am that same Supreme Personality who is the Lord of all the spiritual planets, but none of you know Me." In His madness He rushed out to catch someone. Although Nimai revealed His real identity during His illness still no one recognized Him because of the Lord's internal potency.

"Some demon must have possessed Him," commented one person. And another immediately questioned, "Is this how a witch works?"

"He is speaking constantly, therefore He must have some sort of wind disorder," suggested another person.

In this way each one offered his own opinion, but none of them could understand the Lord in truth because of the influence of His illusory potency, the internal potency of the Supreme Lord Vishnu.

People continued to try to cure the Lord by applying a variety of oils over His head and body. He dripped with oil, yet kept on laughing as if to substantiate the existence of a wind disorder that was affecting His mind. After some time the Lord became normal again of His own accord. Such are the wonderful pastimes of the Supreme Lord.

Everyone was relieved and jubilantly chanted Lord Hari's name. Their relief was so great that they began to give gifts and receive gifts from others without knowing to whom they gave or from whom they took. They all blessed the Lord with a long life. Who can comprehend these transcendental activities of the Lord of Vaikuntha if He Himself does not mercifully reveal it?

The Vaisnavas, who were accustomed to give good advice to the Lord whenever they saw Him, now advised, "Dear Sir, please worship the lotus feet of Lord Krsna. Time is short and the body is temporary. But what can we teach you, for after all You are the most learned person?"

The Lord smiled in acquiescence, offered the Vaisnavas respect, and left to teach His students in the house of the pious Mukunda and Sanjaya. His hair still smelling sweet from the medicated oils, Lord Gaurasundara sat amongst His disciples and began to teach. In that gathering, the Lord looked like a gem surrounded by many precious jewels. It is impossible to give proper analogy. It could have been Lord Narayana in Badarikasram sitting in the midst of His devotees like Sanaka and others. There is no doubt that Sacinandana is that same Lord Narayana, the Supreme Personality. Thus He enacted His scholarly pastimes with His students and devotees.

After holding class for several hours, Gaurasundara and His students would break at midday for their bath in the Ganga. After that the Lord would return home for His daily worship of Lord Vishnu.

He offered water to Tulasi Devi, circumambulated her, and then sat down to eat His meal while chanting the name of Lord Hari. Laksmi Devi served the prasada to her Lord while mother Saci looked on, drinking in the Lord's beauty to her full satisfaction. After eating the Lord chewed some betel leaf and lay down while Laksmi massaged His lotus feet. For a while He would rest in a transcendental sleep, and upon rising He would again take His books in His hand and leave the house. Out in the street, Gaurasundara gave and received great pleasure in talking with anyone He met. No one knew He was in fact the Supreme Lord, yet everyone offered Him respect. The Supreme Personality of Godhead Sri Sacinandana walked casually throughout the town where everyone could see Him although He was unapproachable even by demigods.

One day Nimai came to a weaver's house. The weaver received His guest with reverence. "Bring Me a fine piece of cloth," said the Lord, and the weaver immediately produced a very good piece.

"How much will you take for this?" asked Nimai.

"Whatever You want to give," replied the weaver.

Nimai estimated the price and said, "I have no coins today."

"My dear respected brahmana," asserted the weaver, "You can give it to me in ten or fifteen days. Take this cloth and wear it. If you are satisfied, You can pay me later." The Supreme Lord cast His merciful glance on the weaver and left his place.

At the house of the milkman Nimai took advantage of His position as a brahmana. "Bring Me some milk and yogurt," said Gaurasundara. "Today I shall accept some charity from you." To the milkmen Nimai looked like Cupid personified because of His brilliant beauty. Carefully and with great reverence they seated Him comfortably and began joking with Him. Affectionately they called Him Uncle.

"Come Uncle, come to my house and take some rice," said one milkman grasping Nimai's arm as though He would take Him physically. "No, come to my house for rice. Don't You remember when You ate in my house previously?" said another jokingly.

Actually Nimai had never visited their houses except in His previous incarnation as Sri Krsna. The milkman could not know the depth of his joke, nor did Nimai reveal it. He was satisfied with His secret. The milkmen brought milk, clarified butter, yogurt, cream and curd and offered it to the Lord. The Lord was pleased with the milkmen and after blessing them He left for the house of the perfumer.

The perfume maker received the Lord with great respect and offered prayers at His lotus feet. "Dear brother, bring Me some good perfumes," said Nimai. The perfumer immediately went inside and came back with his best collection.

"What is the price?" asked Nimai.

"You know everything," replied the perfumer. "Would it be proper for me to ask payment from You? Take this perfume and use it for a few days. If the perfume suits You, You may pay me whatever You like." The perfumer smeared Nimai's body with fragrant oil and received indescribable pleasure from the service. How could he have remained unaffected while serving the beautiful body of the Lord who can attract hearts of all living entities? Nimai blessed the perfumer and went on to the house of the florist.

The florist was wonder struck to see such an extremely charming person. He offered his obeisances to the Lord and with both respect and affection he gave Him a place to sit.

"I would like a very beautiful garland but I do not have any money with Me," said Nimai.

Noticing the signs of divinity on the Lord's person, the florist said, "You do not have to give anything." The florist then brought a beautiful garland and placed it round the Lord's neck. This pleased the Lord who began to laugh along with the disciples and students who had accompanied Him. The Lord blessed the florist and went next to the house of the betel leaf dealer.

The pan dealer saw that he had Cupid in person as a visitor. First touching the lotus feet of the Lord, the merchant then offered Him a seat.

"It is my great fortune that you have visited this humble dwelling of mine." He then spontaneously prepared a betel pan leaf for the Lord and offered it to Him. "Why did you give Me this pan without being paid?" asked the Lord with a sweet smile.

"I simply acted on the prompting of my heart," said the pan merchant. The Lord was pleased with the merchant's simple honesty and was satisfied to chew the betel pan He had been given. The dealer made a packet containing betel leaves with other valuable tasty spices like camphor and offered it to the Lord with faith and respect. In return he received the causeless mercy of the Lord. Nimai continued to visit the people of Navadvipa in this way. Being an exact replica of Mathura, Navadvipa was an opulent town even before the advent of the Lord. Its lakhs of inhabitants busied themselves throughout the town. This was all prearranged by the desire of the Lord. Navadvipa was prepared to receive the incarnation of the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

Just as Lord Krsna had gone through Mathura meeting the various residents, in this incarnation Lord Caitanya had enacted the same wonderful pastime.

The Lord then visited the house of the conch shell dealer. The merchant received the Lord with great respect and offered his obeisances at the Lord's lotus feet.

"Dear brother, please bring Me a beautiful conch shell," said Nimai. The merchant delivered his most beautiful shell and offered his obeisances again, but the Lord asked, "How will I take it with Me as I am not carrying any money?"

"Respected brahmana, please take this conch shell home with You. You can pay me later, or if You do not pay me at all it does not matter." The Lord was satisfied with the conch shell dealer's affection and blessed him.

In this manner the Lord visited many houses in Navadvipa and showered each one with His mercy. Because of their great fortune, even today the residents of Navadvipa receive the shelter of the lotus feet of Sri Gauracandra and Sri Nityananda.

The fully independent Supreme Personality of Godhead, Sri Gauracandra, then went to the house of the astrologer. The astrologer saw a divine personality before him, glowing with spiritual radiance, and he humbly offered his respectful obeisances and a seat.

"I heard that you are a good astrologer," said the Lord. "Tell Me who I was in My previous birth."

The astrologer chanted his Gopala mantra and went into meditation. He saw the four-handed form of Lord Krsna with a complexion of a dark monsoon cloud. The Lord was holding a conch shell, the Sudarsana cakra, a club and a lotus in His hands. He saw the Lord bathed in divine effulgence with the kaustubha jewel around His neck and His breast marked with Srivatsa. He then saw the prison house of Kamsa with Vasudeva and Mother Devaki holding the new born baby in the late night. Then Sri Vasudeva carried the child to Gokula for safety.

Again the astrologer saw the Lord as a charming two-handed little boy without any clothes. The jewelry around His waist tinkled sweetly with each movement and both His hands were filled with creamy butter. The astrologer saw the same divine signs on Sri Caitanya that he had always seen on Gopala, the form of Krsna on which he meditated daily.

Once again the astrologer's vision changed and he saw the curved form of Lord Syamananda Krsna playing His flute while the gopis around Him played on different musical instruments. The wonder-struck astrologer opened his eyes to observe the beautiful form of the Lord on which he continued to meditate.

Then he prayed aloud to his worshipable Lord Sri Gopala. "O Gopala, please reveal to me the real identity of this young brahmana." The astrologer then saw in his meditation the Supreme Lord with the complexion of durba grass holding a bow in one hand while sitting on a kingly throne. Again he saw the Lord as Varaha the boar, balancing the earth between His tusks as He rose magnificently out of the ocean depths. He saw Lord Nrsimhadeva, the terrifying half-human half-lion incarnation who appeared to protect His pure devotees. Then Vamana appeared in the sacrificial arena of Bali Maharaja followed by Matsya the fish saving the Vedic scriptures from destruction in the waters of annihilation.

Within his meditation, the pious astrologer then saw Lord Balarama carrying His divine plough, and after that he saw Jagannatha and Balarama with Subhadra standing between them. All the incarnations of the Lord appeared to the astrologer, yet because of the Lord's illusory energy he could not understand the deeper meaning of his divine vision.

The astrologer was mystified and thought to himself, "Maybe this brahmana is very expert in chanting mantras for incarnations, or maybe He is some demigod in the form of a brahmana trying to amuse Himself and test me. He certainly possesses an extraordinary effulgence. Maybe He has come as an astrologer and clairvoyant to disgrace me."

The Lord interrupted his thoughts and said, "What do you see? Tell Me, who am I. Tell Me everything in detail."

"Please go now," said the confused astrologer. "Later in the afternoon when I have chanted my mantras properly I shall tell You everything." The Lord wished him well and went to the house of His dear friend, Sridhara.

The Lord was always pleased with Sridhara's behavior and He would use any excuse to visit him. They would converse confidentially and joke with each other. In this way several hours a day could be passed very happily. Sridhara offered the Lord obeisances and a seat as soon as He arrived. Sridhara's calm and mild personality stood in obvious contrast to Nimai's stormy character.

"Sridhara you are always chanting Lord Hari's name, so what is the reason for your suffering? You are serving the husband and master of Sri Laksmi Devi, the Goddess of Fortune, so why are you always in want of food and clothes?"

"I am not starving," replied Sridhara, "And as You can see, I have clothes on."

"They are neither fine clothes nor the right size, but my body is covered."

"But Sridhara," argued the Lord, "the clothes are torn in several places and I know you have neither straw nor rice in the house. Look around you. All the citizens worship Goddess Candi (Mother Durga) the destroyer of all enemies, and none of them suffer for want of food, shelter or clothing."

"You have made a good point," replied Sridhara, "but generally speaking, everyone's life is almost the same. The King may live in a palace surrounded by opulence and eat sumptuously while the birds live in the open or in a simple nest in a tree top and gather their own humble food. But basically everyone's approach to life is similar. By the Lord's design each of us must meet the demands of duty and in doing so we behave more or less alike. Personally I prefer to live the life I am leading now."

"I am sure you have immense wealth hidden somewhere," accused the Lord, "and you are relishing opulent food in secret. Soon I will make it known to everyone, and then we will see how you continue to cheat the people."

"Come to my house, dear learned brahmana," invited Sridhara, "and see for Yourself. We should not start an argument here."

"I am not going to let you off so easily," said Nimai, "Tell Me what you are going to feed Me?"

"I make a simple living selling leaf cups," replied Sridhara. "What can I offer to give You from such an income, respected brahmana?"

"I am not going to touch Your hidden wealth now: that I will get later," assured Nimai. "But if you give Me banana root and some banana stalks right now without taking money, then I will not fight with you any more."

Sridhara thought to himself, "He is a very aggressive brahmana. Someday He might even beat me. But even if He does beat me, what can I do? I really cannot afford to give him whatever He wants free each day. But I see He has a godly form; He is not an ordinary personality by any means. If He takes my things by force or by some other tricky means, then He is free to do so. I think this is my good fortune, and in spite of my poverty I will continue to give Him whatever He wants."

Having made his decision, Sridhara answered the Lord, "Dear Brahmana, You do not have to pay me anything at all. I will give You whatever You want with an open and happy heart. Take Your bananas and other vegetables, take the leaf cups that I have, and please do not fight with me anymore."

"Yes that is a very satisfactory agreement," said Nimai. "There should be no further fights, but please see to it that I get good quality bananas, banana stalk and radish." Daily the Lord ate with Sridhara from his leaf cups, relishing his bananas, banana stalks, radishes and Sridhara's cooking in general. When a gourd grew on Sridhara's roof top, the Lord had it cooked into a special preparation made with milk and hot spices.

One day the Lord asked, "Sridhara what do you think of Me? As soon as you tell me that, I shall return to My house."

Sridhara replied, "You are a brahmana, part and parcel of the Supreme Lord Vishnu."

"No, you do not know," said Nimai. "I belong to the community of cowherds and milk men. You see Me as a young brahmin boy, but I consider Myself to be simply a milk man."

Sridhara just smiled at the Lord's comment; he could not recognize his own Lord and master, being deluded by the Lord's internal potency.

"Sridhara, I am going to reveal to you an esoteric truth. You see the river Ganges? I am the source of the Ganga."

"O Nimai Pandita! Have You no fear in disrespecting Ganga devi like this?" asked the disturbed Sridhara. "People usually become grave and serious as they grow older, but Your frivolity seems to have doubled since Your childhood."

After staying with Sridhara for sometime, Nimai Pandita returned home. He entered the temple room of Lord Vishnu and His students took that as an indication that they should also return to their homes.

The rising full moon in the evening stirred wonderful spiritual emotions within Lord Nimai. Memories of the moon-like Vrndavana Candra rose within His heart. Nimai's flute played an extraordinary beautiful melody that only mother Saci could hear. The flute that charms the entire creation stole Mother Saci's consciousness, carrying it away on the wings of ecstasy. Slowly she regained her external awareness and after steadying her mind, she listened to the beautiful melody. The captivating flute seemed to come from Gaurasundara's direction. The music drew Mother Saci from her room to the temple room where she saw Nimai. The sound of the flute stopped completely and on her son's chest she saw the full rising moon and the fathomless firmament. She was overcome by amazement and glanced restively in all directions before returning to her room. She sat down to analyze what she had heard and seen, but she could not find a proper explanation.

Mother Saci was fortunate to see Nimai's endless supernatural phenomenon. Some nights she heard many people singing, dancing and playing instruments as if some festival was in progress. She sometimes noticed the entire house, doors, walls and windows emanating a brilliant light. On some days she saw divinely beautiful ladies – as attractive as Laksmi the Goddess of Fortune – roaming about with lotus flowers in their hands. Occasionally she saw effulgent demigods who would appear and disappear within a moment.

Mother Saci's visions were certainly not imagination. She was the embodiment of devotional service to the Supreme Lord Krsna and all the Vedas glorify her. Merely her glance on any person could purify him so that he could also have the same transcendental visions.

Sri Gaurasundara, the Supreme Lord who is Krsna Himself, lived incognito in Navadvipa, simply relishing His own divine self. Sometimes He revealed His true identity but none of His eternal servants could recognize Him. In His Navadvipa pastimes the Lord liked to be very arrogant, in fact, no one could match that arrogance. Whenever the Supreme Lord performed any pastime, His activities could not be equaled by anyone. When the Lord feels like performing His chivalrous pastimes, then there is no one to challenge His mastery over weapons. And when He wants to reveal His amorous pastimes, then He captivates the hearts of millions of beautiful damsels. When He wants to enjoy opulence, then His opulence and magnificence is unmatched. Now in His pastimes as an erudite scholar there is no one to match His insolent arrogance, and when the same Lord accepts the renounced order of life, then who can excel Him in devotion, dedication and renunciation? Is there anyone in the three worlds to match Him? Yet in all His incarnations and pastimes the zenith of all activities is voluntary loving defeat in the hands of His pure unalloyed devotees.

One day the Lord was walking down the thoroughfare in Navadvipa surrounded by a few of His student disciples. His movement, dress and behavior was that of a king and He wore a golden yellow dhoti exactly like Kṛṣṇa. A face that reflected a million rising full moons had soft red lips. People would look and say, "Is He Cupid in person?" His exquisite forehead held the tilaka mark, His hands clutched His books and as soon as anyone beheld His lotus-petaled eyes they were freed of all sinful thoughts and reactions.

The Lord had a restless nature. As He walked along with his students He swung his arms in a carefree manner. Śrīvāsa Pandita also happened to be walking on this road and as soon he saw the Lord he immediately felt great happiness. The Lord offered His obeisances to Śrīvāsa Pandita as soon as He saw him.

Śrīvāsa Pandita, the magnanimous personality, blessed the Lord saying, "May you live a long life." Then with a laugh he enquired, "Where are you off to now, my dear epitome of vanity? What futile work are you wasting your time on instead of worshipping the Supreme Lord Kṛṣṇa. And why do you spend days and nights nonstop teaching people? And why do you not allow people to educate themselves so that they can get knowledge about Lord Kṛṣṇa and the process of devotional service? What is the use of education and knowledge if devotional service is not the ultimate goal? From now on do not waste even a single moment in futile activities. You have become educated; now utilize your time in worshipping Lord Kṛṣṇa."

"O respected Pandita," replied Nityānanda, "I am sure that by your grace devotional service to Kṛṣṇa is possible even for Me."

Graciously the Lord took leave of Śrīvāsa Pandita and went to the bank of the Ganga. The Lord's beauty was indescribable as He sat in the midst of His students. One might say He looked like the moon surrounded by a starry firmament. But that analogy is inaccurate for the moon is not without flaw. Its waxing and waning diminish its glory, whereas the exhilarating beauty of the Lord was continuous. Therefore such a comparison was inaccurate in describing the Lord's beauty. To compare him with Brhaspati was also inadequate for Brhaspati was the spiritual master of only the demigods whereas the Supreme Lord Gauracandra was the supreme shelter and preceptor of all living entities. To compare him with Cupid is also incorrect, for remembrance of Cupid gives rise to material desire and ultimately grief within the heart, whereas remembrance of the Lord brings purification and freedom from material bondage through which one enjoys blissful eternal life.

It seems that all analogies are inappropriate except the one which is readily accepted by my heart. On the banks of the Jamuna, Sri Nandakumar Krsna sat surrounded by his young cowherd boyfriends. That same Krsnacandra and the same cowherd boys were also sitting on the banks of river Ganga. Whoever beheld the charming face of the Lord at that time experienced inexplicable ecstasy. The Lord's pure effulgent form inspired many opinions from the people who were present there.

One person said, "Such a brilliant effulgence is impossible for a human being." Another conjectured, "This brahmana must be a part or an expansion of Lord Vishnu."

"He has come to fulfill the prophecy that a brahmana would be the king of Bengal. I can see all the marks of royalty on His body," said another.

People continued to give their opinions as far as their intelligence would allow. And Nimai, the cynosure of the residents of Navadvipa, sat amongst His students, criticizing and minimizing the other teachers of Nadia. He would thoroughly defeat any arguments on any subjects, then by His superior intelligence He would again establish the same arguments He had just defeated.

"I will accept that person as a scholar who has the courage to come and argue with me," challenged Nimai. "Who has sufficient intelligence to defeat my arguments?" In this way the Supreme Lord boasted and thus destroyed the false ego of the scholars of Navadvipa.

The Lord had a countless following of students. People would simply come and offer themselves to the Lord. Everyday many young brahmana boys would come and pray at the lotus feet of the Lord, "O great scholar, I want to study under You so that I may learn something. Please be gracious and grant me this wish." The Lord would smile and accept them all, and in this way his students increased by the day.

The most precious gem of the Vaikuntha planets sat amongst His students on the bank of the river Ganga, revealing His wonderful and pleasurable pastimes. The pious people could all see the Lord, and everyone in Navadvipa could feel His spiritual potency. There was no way to gauge the amount of good fortune that those people accumulated and the bliss they experienced just by seeing the Lord. One could become free from material bondage simply by seeing the fortunate souls whose hearts had been touched by the blissful existence of the Supreme Lord.

But alas for me, I have taken a sinful and wretched birth. I could not be born at that time. My life is bereft of that beautiful transcendental sight of Lord Gaurasundara. In spite of all this, O Lord Gauracandra, please grant me the mercy that I may remember this pastime of yours in every birth. Wherever You and my Lord Nityananda perform your transcendental pastimes with your eternal associates, may I also be present there as Your humble and insignificant servant.

Lord Sri Krsna Caitanya and Nityananda Prabhu are my life and soul.

Your insignificant servant Vrndavana Dasa offers this humble song at Your lotus feet.

Adi Lila

Chapter 13

All glories to Lord Gauracandra, the brightest lamp in the brahmana race. All glories to the Lord who inspires the deepest feelings of ecstasy in the hearts of all His devotees. All glories to the Lord and master of Govinda dasa, the door keeper. Please shower your merciful glances on the conditional living entities. All glories to the emperor of the brahmanas and the crest jewel among all teachers. All glories to the society of Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu's devotees.

The Lord of Vaikuntha, Nimai, was immersed in the mellow of an insolent and arrogant scholar. Navadvipa town itself in those days was an institution, housing many scholars and teachers well versed in all branches of the scriptures. Titles like Bhattacharya, Cakravarty, Misra or Acarya were common and the only work of these scholars was teaching. Their sport was debate and in their intolerant and impatient ways they did whatever was required to win an argument. Even if a well-respected superior scholar made valuable points, others would disagree with him.

Lord Nimai's habit was to constantly rebuke the other scholars and refute their arguments right in front of them. There was no teacher in Navadvipa who could confront the Lord's arguments and offer a second opinion. As soon as they saw the Lord, such fear gripped their hearts that they immediately became obsequious. Whoever conversed with the Lord even by chance became His dedicated servant.

The Lord's erudition and intellect from His early childhood was known to everyone. Within their hearts they also knew that Lord Nimai could never be defeated by anyone. The mere sight of the Lord created a feeling of awe and respect amongst the scholars, so they naturally became submissive in His presence. Yet His illusionary energy prevented anyone from knowing Him in truth. Only when the Lord revealed Himself of His own volition could one understand His real identity. Although the Supreme Lord is most munificent in every respect, it is entirely by His personal desire that one is able to perceive His confidential, transcendental pastimes. In Navadvipa Lord Gauracandra performed His transcendental pastimes in the mood of a scholar, deluding everyone about His true identity.

Once a very learned but supercilious scholar holding the title Digvijaya – meaning one who has conquered scholars in all directions – came to Navadvipa. He was a dedicated devotee of the Goddess of Learning, Sarasvati, and he captivated her by chanting her propitiatory mantra. Mother Sarasvati is actually the universal mother; she is non-different from Laksmi Devi, the eternal consort of the Supreme Personality of Godhead Lord Narayana. Laksmi Devi is the embodiment of transcendental loving service to the Supreme Lord, she is the internal potency of the Lord and she is always situated on His breast.

By the brahmana's desire and fortune he received a benediction from her to become a Digvijaya scholar. For her to give such a boon was quite easy, for she is capable of benedicting anyone with even the rare gift of transcendental devotional service to the Supreme Lord Narayana. Having received this benediction directly from Goddess Sarasvati, the brahmana proceeded to travel throughout the country, conquering scholars wherever he went. All the scriptures were on the tip of his tongue. No one in this world could challenge him. Many could not even follow his introduction to the main dissertations, so he went unchecked and unchallenged everywhere.

When Navadvipa's fame as a center for great scholars reached his ears, he went there with great eclats, leading a procession of elephants, horses and men. News spread like wildfire in every house of Navadvipa, creating waves of confusion. After conquering the scholars of every land, the Digvijaya had at last come to Navadvipa. The teachers of Navadvipa were further alarmed when they heard that he was a direct recipient of a boon from Goddess Sarasvati.

In those days Navadvipa was the most famous center of learning in the entire world. If the Digvijaya were to defeat its scholars, Navadvipa's glory would be minimized and the world would hear of its failure. Yet no one had the courage to challenge him for he was the recipient of Mother Sarasvati's special benediction. It was said that Mother Sarasvati herself appeared on his tongue whenever he spoke. How could a mere human defeat him? The hundreds of Bhattacharya scholars residing in Navadvipa were distraught with anxiety and abandoned all activities; Navadvipa bustled with excitement as time for the trial of intellectual strength drew near.

All this was described in detail to Sri Gauranga by His students. "After conquering all other parts of the world, a Digviraja Pandita has come to Navadvipa to challenge our scholars in debate. It is said that he has received the special favor of Goddess Sarasvati and he entered Navadvipa in a great procession of horses, elephants, palanquins and men. He says that if there are no challengers amongst the Navadvipa scholars, he wants a letter of victory issued on his behalf."

Lord Gauracandra heard his students and then with a smile reminded them about the nature of the Absolute. "Listen brothers, and I will tell you the actual situation. The Supreme Lord does not tolerate anyone who indulges in continual insolence. Whenever He finds someone burdened by arrogance over some personal quality, He invariably removes the cause of their pride. A fruit-laden tree and a person endowed with good qualities will inevitably bend down in humility. You must have heard of other great conquerors like Hoi Hoi, Nahusam, Benah, Banah, Narakah Ravana, etc. Did the Supreme Lord neglect to prune their overbearing pride? He never tolerates such ignominious insolence.

"Here in Navadvipa you will witness the end of this supercilious scholar."

The Lord amused Himself with His students in this way. In the evening He went to the bank of the river Ganga, sprinkled some Ganga water on His head, offered His obeisances and then sat in the midst of His students. The Lord lectured on various subjects such as religion and its different scriptural explanations. No one, however, understood that the Lord was simultaneously thinking of the manner in which He could defeat the Digvijaya Pandita.

"This brahmana has become extremely arrogant and he thinks that there is no one in this world to defeat him," thought the Lord. "If I humble him in front of everyone it will be like a shameful death for him. People will dishonor him, he will lose everything and eventually he will die from humiliation. Therefore I must confront him secretly in a solitary place and yet insure his downfall. In that way I can eclipse his vanity without destroying him."

While the Supreme Lord was thinking in that manner the Digvijaya arrived at the Ganga. As dusk faded into night, the river Ganga looked radiant beneath the full moon in the soft, clear sky. The Supreme Lord was effulgent in the midst of His students and His exquisite beauty captivated the entire creation.

A sweet smile decorated the glowing moon-like face of the Lord, and His two beautiful eyes showered transcendently merciful glances. Pearls were lack-luster in comparison with His teeth and His radiant lips were easily mistaken for the rising sun. With His soft and delicate body, He was the personification of compassion. His perfect head was covered with raven black curls; His graceful, lion-like neck rested perfectly on His beautiful broad shoulders. He was dressed in divinely exquisite clothes, His perfectly proportioned body was large and his heart was ruled by His munificent nature. The brahmana's thread hanging loosely across his shoulders was the bow of Ananta Sesa. His long arms extended gracefully to his knees and the Urdhwapurna tilaka decorating His wide forehead enraptured the hearts of everyone.

With His dhoti tied elegantly at His waist, Sri Gauranga sat in the cross-legged posture of a yogi, establishing and refuting various arguments in His usual manner of discourse. Many students had gathered around Mahaprabhu that evening, and the Digvijaya Pandita was astonished to see the wonderful assembly. "Is this Nimai Pandita?" he thought.

Unseen by anyone he stood spellbound by the Lord's extraordinary beauty.

"Who is this person?" he enquired from one of the students.

"This is the famous Nimai Pandita." replied the student.

After offering his obeisances to the Ganga, the Digvijaya moved a little closer to the Lord. On noticing him, Nimai smiled at him and affectionately offered him a seat. Having already conquered all the scholars in the land, the Digvijaya Pandita was naturally fearless, yet in the presence of the Lord he was filled with awe. By the design of the omnipotent Supreme Lord, whoever approaches Him in a challenging mood will feel both awe and fear.

The Lord exchanged a few words with the Pandita and asked him a few questions. "You are an extremely versatile poet," said the Lord. "There is no subject which you cannot perfectly describe. Therefore, please elucidate the wonderful glories of the holy Ganga so that whoever hears it will be freed from sin.

At that very instant the Digvijaya Pandita began to extemporarily compose and recite unparalleled verses in praise of the holy river. Who can imagine the countless ways in which he described Mother Ganga! Verses swiftly passed his lips and his voice resounded like a continuous roll of thunder. It certainly seemed that Mother Sarasvati herself had appeared on the tip of his tongue. Whatever he uttered was precisely appropriate. Was it humanly possible to find a mistake in his eloquent composition? There seemed to be no one present who could even understand them.

Nimai's hundreds of students who had assembled there stared at the Pandit with mouths agape. "O Lord Rama," they said. "How wonderful! Is it possible for a human to compose such eloquent poetry?" His composition was profusely ornamented with the most exceptional figures of speech applied to the most appropriate topics. His word usage perplexed even the scholars who were present. For nearly an hour the Digvijaya composed and recited his unparalleled verses; there seemed to be no end to his brilliant oration.

When at last he finished, the Lord smiled sweetly and said, "Your poetry was so exceptional that no one can understand the meaning unless you yourself explain it. The verses you have composed are certainly appropriate for glorification of the Ganga, but we entreat you to analyze them for us."

The Lord's sweet words affected him like an intoxicating beverage and he began to explain his verses. But as soon as he started to speak, the Lord interrupted him to point out three mistakes – one in the beginning, one in the middle and one towards the end of the Pundit's composition.

The Lord said, "According to grammar, the figures of speech you have used show numerous imperfections. Please tell us in what context you have used them."

The Digvijaya Pandita, foremost of the favorite sons of Mother Sarasvati, lost his intelligence. He tried but failed to offer proper explanations for the mistakes Nimai pointed out. His feeble and confused attempts to defend his composition brought further criticism from the Lord who then elucidated the flaws in the explanations as well as the verses. The Pundit's unparalleled talent seemed to vanish and the situation grew incomprehensible to him. He could not even understand his own identity.

Lord Nimai then said, "Leave this poem aside for now and compose another one." But, alas, the great world-conquering Pundit was unable to compose a single verse. He sat before the Lord in a state of total bewilderment.

Of course, even the Vedas personified have become perplexed in the presence of the Lord. Powerful personalities like Ananta Sesa, Lord Brahma and Lord Siva – who could each create a universe by his mere glance – have also been deluded by the Lord's presence. The bewilderment of the Digvijaya Pandita in front of Nimai is not surprising because even Mother Laksmi, Mother Sarasvati and other internal potencies of the Lord which can delude the entire creation, become themselves deluded by the Supreme Lord and thus remain forever in an inferior position. The reciter of the Vedas, Lord Sesa, and the compiler of the Vedas, Sri Veda Vyasa, are even bewildered in the presence of the Lord, what to speak of a mere Digvijaya Pandita.

It is impossible for any human to match the accomplishments of the Lord, therefore, I say, all of his activities are extraordinary. And whatever the Supreme Lord does is always for the ultimate benefit of the suffering living entities, to release them from material bondage.

While the Digvijaya Pandita was struggling to swallow his ignominious defeat, the students began laughing and giggling excitedly. The Lord immediately stopped them and spoke soft, soothing words to the Pandita, "Today let us stop here. Please return to your home and tomorrow we can continue our discussion. You must be tired after composing such a lengthy recitation. It is also very late now; soon it will be time to sleep."

The Lord's behavior was so gentle and compassionate that even a defeated person did not suffer in humiliation. Although the Lord was victorious, He nevertheless spoke words of concern for the scholars and teachers of Navadvipa. Again to the Digvijaya Pandita he said, "Please go home now and study your books. Tomorrow I will ask you questions and you must try to answer them." The Lord was so merciful that despite His victory, He did not dishonor the great scholar. Hence, everyone felt pleased. The scholars and teachers of Navadvipa were very affectionate toward the Lord because of His sweet disposition.

The Lord and His students left the assembly to go home, but the Digvijaya sat alone in utter shame and dejection. He thought to himself, "Mother Sarasvati herself has given me this boon. I have not come across anyone in the whole world who would dare confront me in a debate. Neither the expert scholars in the six philosophical branches like logic, sankhya, patanjali, virmansa, etc., nor the scholars of sastra would contest my authority. How is it that the Lord has allowed this insignificant teacher of children to defeat me in this manner. Seeing the power of Mother Sarasvati undermined in this way causes me equal consternation. How have I offended the Goddess that all my talent and knowledge were disparaged in this humiliating defeat? I must try to determine the cause of this situation." With that he chanted his mantras and then lay down to sleep.

In his dream Mother Sarasvati looked compassionately upon the brahmana and spoke confidentially to him. "O learned brahmana, listen to me. I will now reveal to you that knowledge which is undisclosed even in the Vedas. If for any reason you reveal this secret to anyone, you will immediately forfeit your body. The person who defeated you today is actually the Supreme Lord of the entire cosmic manifestation. I am an eternal servant at His lotus feet, and out of shyness I hesitate to stand before Him.

"In the Srimad Bhagavatam it is mentioned, 'Being ashamed of her position, the illusory energy of the Lord cannot take precedence, but those who are bewildered by her continually talk nonsense, being absorbed in thoughts of 'It is I' and 'It is mine''. Because of the Lord's presence it was impossible for me to appear on the tip of your tongue as I have in the past. I lost my potency, but that is not my fault. How could it be otherwise? Even Lord Ananta Sesa who describes the Vedas with his thousands of mouths, Lord Brahma, Lord Siva and all the other demigods, worship Him and are totally bewildered in His presence, what to speak of me? He is the Supreme Absolute Truth, eternal, pure, indivisible and infallible. He is the omnipotent Supreme Lord residing in everyone's heart as the Supersoul. The person who appeared before you as a young brahmana boy is none other than the Supreme Personality of Godhead, the ultimate cause of destruction of the entire cosmic manifestation.

He is the cause of the dualities of fruitive action, knowledge, learning, good and bad, manifest and unmanifest – everything.

It is by His desire that all living entities from Lord Brahma down experience happiness and distress. He is the Supreme source of all incarnations like Matsya, Kurma and others. It is He who appeared as Lord Varaha to lift the world and again as Nrsimhadeva to protect His devotee Prahlada. He appeared again as Lord Vamana to trick Bali Maharaja and thus His lotus feet became the source of Mother Ganga.

He appeared in Ayodhya as Lord Ramacandra and performed many wonderful pastimes, ultimately killing the demon Ravana. He who is known as the son of Sri Vasudeva and Sri Nanda Maharaja has now appeared as a young brahmana boy immersed in the mellows of a scholar.

"Where in the Vedas is this incarnation of the Supreme Lord revealed? Who will know about it if the Lord Himself does not reveal His true identity? To become the greatest of all the scholars of the world is not the real result of chanting the mantra I gave you. You have received the factual result; you were able to see in person the Supreme Personality of Godhead, the Lord of the entire cosmic creation.

"O brahmana, go quickly to Him and take shelter of His lotus feet. Surrender yourself completely to Him. Do not imagine my advice to be a dream or hallucination. The power behind the mantra you chant has brought me here and forced me to reveal the most esoteric knowledge of the Vedas."

Mother Sarasvati disappeared after consoling the Pandita. He awoke from his sleep feeling purified and fortunate. Early dawn had just touched the eastern sky when he left for the Lord's house. He threw himself at the feet of Nimai Pandita to offer his obeisances and the Lord reciprocated by lifting him up and embracing him.

"Why, it is you!" said the Lord. "Why are you behaving in this manner?"

"So that I may attract your kind grace," replied the Pandita.

"But you are a famous and erudite Digvijaya scholar. Why do you approach me like this?" questioned the Lord.

"O Lord of the learned brahmanas, please hear me out. The highest perfection in all activities is achieved simply by worshiping You. You are the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Lord Narayana. You have appeared as a brahmana in this age of Kali, but no one has the potency to perceive Your real identity? Doubt entered my heart the very moment You asked me questions and then remained silent. Now I have personal realization that You are magnanimous and free from any pride, and my realizations are in keeping with the verdict of all Vedic scriptures.

"You defeated me three times, yet You kept my honor intact. Is such behavior possible for anyone other than the Supreme Lord? I am convinced that You are that Supreme Personality of Godhead.

"I have traveled far and wide – Bengal, Trihatta, Kasi, Gujarat, Vijaya Nagara, Anga, Banga, Tailanga, Udra and many other places. The most qualified scholars in each place were defeated by me. They could not even understand my discourses, let alone find fault with them. But in your presence all my education and intellect seemed to flee – I know not where. I now realize that this was not an extraordinary feat for You, because You are the Lord and master of Mother Sarasvati. She personally revealed this to me.

"I was wallowing in material existence, but because of my immeasurably good fortune I came to Navadvipa and met you face to face. I was captivated and deluded by the desire for material knowledge, and in self-deception I roamed about neglecting real Absolute knowledge. Destiny has favored me and thus I have met You personally. O Lord, kindly purify me by Your benevolent glance and destroy my nescience. You have a magnanimous nature and you are inclined to favor others, so there is no one but You from whom I can seek shelter. O Lord, please instruct me so that I shall never again allow unholy desires to enter my heart."

As a meek and insignificant man, the Digvijaya Pandita spoke with repentance before the Lord. Sri Gaurasundara replied, "O learned brahmana, you are very fortunate because Mother Sarasvati resides on the tip of your tongue. But conquering the world with mundane knowledge is not a suitable objective for one with true wisdom. Knowledge becomes valuable only when it augments the worship the Supreme Lord. Try to carefully understand. When death strikes and the soul is forced from the body, no one can take his material knowledge or opulence. The learned and self-realized souls completely reject this transient phenomenal existence and engage with unalloyed faith in the Lord's devotional service.

Now O brahmana, leave aside all extraneous engagements and utilize your time worshipping the lotus feet of Sri Krsna for the remainder of your life. Remember that the fruit of true knowledge is tasted when the heart and mind are unflinchingly attached to the lotus feet of Lord Krsna. Of all activities, devotional service to the Supreme Lord Vishnu, is the only manifestation of absolute truth. This is the advice I offer you."

Lord Gaurasundara embraced the Pandita and at once the shackles of material existence fell away from the Digvijaya. The Lord said, "O Brahmana, curb your arrogance and insolence; worship Krsna and be kind to all living entities. And be careful that you do not reveal anything Mother Sarasvati has told you. Revealing the confidential knowledge of the Vedas to unauthorized persons reduces the life-span and deviates one from the spiritual path."

Having received the Lord's instructions, Digvijaya Pandita begged permission to leave. He repeatedly offered his prostrated obeisances at the feet of the Lord and uttered prayers, feeling fortunate and purified. By the Lord's mercy, the brahmana was immediately blessed with detachment from material affairs, perception of Absolute Truth and devotion to the Supreme Lord. Within moments the brahmana's arrogance and vanity diminished and he grew as humble and meek as a blade of grass. He renounced everything – his elephants, horses, palanquins, money and the undesirable associates he had previously kept. Lord Gauracandra's mercy had such a miraculous effect that the brahmana Digvijaya abandoned everything and traveled alone.

That mercy could make a king leave his palace and take up a beggar's bowl. The remarkable example of this was Srila Rupa Gosvami who was also known as Dabir Khas. He left his kingly position and lived in the forests of Vrndavana. A servant of Krsna can ignore the material wealth, position and prestige which are desired by the common people. Any person who has not realized the value of devotional service to the Supreme Lord will naturally consider the position of a king most comfortable and enviable.

But for the devotee of Krsna, even the happiness derived from liberation is insignificant, therefore mere kingly comfort is of no consequence whatsoever. Reality and true happiness lie solely in the merciful glance of the Supreme Lord, and therefore the Vedas advise everyone to serve Him.

Lord Gaurasundara's wonderful defeat of the Digvijaya and the Pandita's subsequent conversion was soon known in all corners of Nadia. People were astounded by the news and they commented, "Nimai Pandita must be a truly great scholar for even the Digvijaya, the greatest of all panditas, was humbled by him. Nimai Pandita has now made Himself worthy of our praise and His fame will definitely spread."

Someone said, "If this brahmana boy studies logic, He can immediately claim the highest title, Bhattacharya."

But another suggested, "Let's jointly offer Him the title of Badhi Sinha now."

The Lord's illusory potency was so strong that in spite of witnessing His miracles, no one could perceive His true identity. From that time on the people of Nadia could only discuss Nimai's victory over the Digvijaya.

I offer my obeisances to the feet of all the residents of Navadvipa for they were fortunate enough to see the Lord's transcendental activities.

Whoever faithfully and attentively hears this pastime of the Lord defeating Digvijaya Pandita will always be victorious, and whoever hears about His captivating pastimes as a scholar will immediately become His eternal servant.

Sri Krsna Caitanya and Lord Nityananda Prabhu are my life and soul. I, Vrndavana dasa, an insignificant soul, humbly offer this song at Their lotus feet.

Adi Lila

Chapter 14

All glories to the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Gaurasundara, who was very dear to Nityananda Prabhu. His transcendental body is comprised of eternality, knowledge and bliss. All glories to the Lord who was the life and soul of Pradyumna Misra; and all glories to the most treasured object of Sri Paramananda Puri. All glories to You my Lord, for You are the life and soul and the most precious gem of all the Vaisnava devotees.

O Lord, please look mercifully upon us, the living entities, and liberate everyone from the bonds of nescience. I humbly request everyone to please listen faithfully and attentively to the wonderful activities of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Lord Krsna, in His form as a young brahmana boy.

The Lord of Vaikuntha absorbed Himself in the mood of a scholar and passed His time in academic pursuits with His disciples. In every neighborhood of Navadvipa He was seen performing His cocky and playful pastimes. But by that time every person unquestioningly accepted Nimai Pandita as the superior scholar and teacher in Navadvipa. Rich, influential and aristocratic men would immediately take a humble position upon seeing Nimai and offer their respects to Him. The very sight of Him induced a sense of awe and reverence in the residents who were all captivated by His charm.

Nimai Pandita would frequently receive gifts from various classes of people in Navadvipa. He set the perfect example as a householder and was as charitable as the Supreme Lord Himself. Whenever Nimai saw a poor person, He would kindly offer him food, clothing or money. In this way Nimai generously distributed gifts to the poor.

An endless stream of guests visited the Lord's house. The Lord offered each one respect according to his position and rendered him service to his full satisfaction. On some days sannyasis would visit His house and the Lord would serve them graciously. Once twenty sannyasis came at one time, so the Lord sent word to His mother to cook for all of them.

Mother Saci fell into immediate anxiety for she had nothing in the house to feed twenty sannyasis. Lost in her problem she did not notice that someone had brought all the different ingredients she might require and left them in the kitchen. Laksmi Devi immediately went to the kitchen and, pleased with the array of ingredients, she cooked some special preparations. After the cooking, the Lord checked the arrangements and then invited the sannyasis to sit down. He supervised the serving of their prasada and He satisfied each one of them personally. In this way the Lord satisfied all His guests and taught the world how to behave as a perfect householder.

The foremost duty of a householder is to serve his guest and responsible householders live by that standard. The householder who does not serve and satisfy his guests properly is worse than an animal or a bird. Even those who because of their previous impious activities have insufficient means to be hospitable can at least offer a place to sit, some water and a place to rest.

That simple hospitality is sufficient to satisfy any guest if it is offered with love and affection. A householder who is pious may be poverty stricken and possess very little with which to serve a guest, but his disposition should be hospitable. He can offer drinking water and water with which the guest can wash his feet. He can offer a grass mat on which the guest can sit or rest to become refreshed and he can offer sweet words to please the weary ears of the traveler. The host must endeavor with all humility to keep the guest from leaving his house and beg forgiveness for any mistakes in his humble hospitality. A householder who sincerely tries to satisfy his guests even though his means are meager is considered hospitable.

The Supreme Personality of Godhead set the example of a perfect householder and repeatedly asked His guests if they had any further needs or if they were satisfied. Those guests of course were the most fortunate souls for Srimati Laksmi Devi, the Goddess of Fortune, and Supreme Personality of God, Narayana, the proprietor of the entire cosmic manifestation, personally fed them. Because of the wonderful activities of the Supreme Lord, that divine food which is cherished by great souls like Lord Brahma and other demigods was distributed to common people and ordinary citizens in Navadvipa.

The twenty sannyasi who were guests in the house of Lord Nimai had become a subject of conversation amongst the people. Someone said, "Those guests could not have been ordinary persons. They must have been Lord Brahma, Siva, Sukhadev Gosvami, Srila Vyasadeva, Narada Muni and other such elevated personalities. Who else could be eligible to take food in the house of Sri Gauranga who is non-different from Lord Narayana with His wife Laksmi Devi? The Supreme Lord has appeared in Navadvipa and these great personalities and demigods must have known of the advent and come in the guise of sannyasis to take prasada in Their house. Other than Brahma, who has the great fortune to eat in the house of Mahaprabhu?"

Some others expressed their opinion that, "The Supreme Lord has appeared to alleviate the sufferings of humanity. Along with the Supreme Lord, other demigods like Lord Brahma have also appeared, for they are the eternal associates of the Supreme Lord. Yet in this incarnation the Lord has promised that, 'I will give the living entities that which is rarely achieved even by Lord Brahma and others.' Therefore, the Supreme Lord distributes prasada generously from His own house simply to release the wretched and needy living entities from material suffering."

Laksmi devi worked without any assistance to serve her Lord and master yet she was always in a cheerful mood. Seeing the wonderful qualities and pious nature of Laksmi Devi, Mother Saci's joy increased by each hour and each day. From early morning she would work alone at the household chores, setting the example of an ideal wife. In the temple room she decorated the floor with auspicious designs made from colored paste; she drew the different symbols of the Lord like the conch shell and chakra. She also arranged for the paraphernalia required for the Lord's worship like incense, flowers, lamp, water, etc. She worshiped Tulasi Devi and also saw to the needs of Mother Saci, serving her with great affection. The wonderful attributes of Laksmi devi's nature did not go unnoticed by Lord Gauracandra; although He never commented on it, He was extremely satisfied with her.

Frequently Laksmi Devi would sit for long hours massaging the Lord's lotus feet on her lap. At times when she served her Lord like that, Mother Saci could see a brilliant effulgence emanating from the feet of Gauracandra. At other times the fragrance of lotus flowers would fill the entire house, and although Mother Saci would search everywhere, she could not find the source of the fragrance. Srimati Laksmi Devi, the Goddess of Fortune, and the Supreme Lord Narayana remained incognito, unrecognized by the residents of Navadvipa.

Without any prior indication, Lord Gauranga one day announced His desire to visit Bangladesh, the eastern part of Bengal. "I'll be gone for a few days." He told His mother. To Laksmi Devi he instructed, "Please always look after your mother's needs."

The Lord gathered a few of His confidential disciples and prepared for his journey. People gathered to see Him off, but as the Lord departed they stood transfixed in their places simply staring after Him. It was difficult for them to take their eyes away from the Lord.

The ladies said, "The mother of this young man must be very pious and fortunate, we offer our obeisances at her feet. Fortunate also is the wife of this young man; her birth as a woman has become worthy just by gaining such an excellent husband." In this way the residents discussed the Lord's glory as they watched Him leave. It was only by His mercy that the ordinary residents of Navadvipa could see Him directly; even the demigods long to see the Lord in this way.

Lord Gaurasundara continued His unhurried journey and at last arrived on the banks of the river Padmavali. The river view was enchanting: small waves constantly creased the wide expanse of water, and on either bank green forests lined the powerful current. The Lord was refreshed by the sight of the river and joined His friends for a swim in the clear water. Padmavali became fully spiritualized by the touch of the Lord's lotus feet, and her water was thereafter capable of purifying the entire creation. Padmavali was truly a beautiful river, her lapping waves and swift current most pleasing to the mind. The enchanting forests on her banks were equally pleasing so the Lord stayed there for a few days. It was Padmavali's good fortune that the Lord blessed her, joyfully playing in her water just as He has played in the Ganga in Navadvipa.

From the moment the Lord entered East Bengal the land became blessed and remains so, even today. The residents were happy to learn that the Lord had spent a few days on the banks of the Padmavali. News of the Lord's arrival swiftly spread far and wide. "Nimai Pandita, the crest jewel of all scholars and the foremost of teachers has arrived." the residents announced. Pious brahmanas came forward to greet the Lord, each bearing a gift for Him. They offered their obeisances to Him and humbly submitted, "Our great fortune must be immeasurable to have your presence in this country."

People of East Bengal make a tremendous endeavor to collect funds and arrange to go to Navadvipa to study under the great scholar Nimai Pandit, said one brahmana. "But by the divine grace of the Supreme Lord that ocean of knowledge has personally come to our doorstep. You are certainly the incarnation of Brhaspati, for no other teacher can compare with You. On closer scrutiny however, that comparison is inaccurate.

I am convinced that You are an empowered part of the Supreme Personality of God. My heart tells me it is impossible to find such erudition in anyone except the Supreme. We all submit this humble petition to You: it is our greatest wish that You impart knowledge to us. In Your absence we have kept you in our memories, studied Your commentaries amongst ourselves and also taught others. But now You are here in person so please accept us as Your disciples, and let the whole world know of Your wonderful pastimes."

The Lord smiled at all of them, giving them assurance and hope and remained in East Bengal for sometime, enjoying the land and the people. It is because of this event that the residents of East Bengal are attracted to the holy name and engage in congregational chanting even today.

At the time of the composition of this book, a group of evil persons were trying to mislead people in general from the spiritual path with wrong advice.

These sinners claimed to be pious and cheated people just to fill their bellies. Another group of sinful offenders stopped performing congregational chanting of the holy name of the Lord and began instead to chant Narayana, referring to themselves. It is most obvious that these men are under the clutches of the modes of material nature, so how can they shamelessly profess themselves to be the Supreme Lord?

In the district of Raar there lived a man who externally appeared to be a brahman but internally was a sinful demon. He declared himself to be Gopala, the Supreme Lord, but more intelligent men considered him a sly and evil fox. Anyone who claims to be the Supreme Godhead, separate from Sri Krsna Caitanya, is certainly the most wicked soul, fit to live only in hell. I loudly declare with both my hands raised that the only true Supreme Personality of Godhead, the Lord of the entire material creation, is Sri Gaura Hari. Just by remembering his name one becomes free from material entanglement; even by simply remembering His servant one becomes victorious in every sphere of life.

See around you that the whole world is chanting the glories of His name, so discard your misdirected conceptions and serve the lotus feet of the Lord.

Lord Gauracandra, the Lord of Vaikuntha, enjoyed traveling in East Bengal immersed in the mood of a scholar. On the enchanting banks of the river Padmavali the Lord roamed through the forests and imparted knowledge to large gatherings of eager students. Hundreds came from everywhere to crowd His lectures. They all had one thought in mind, "I want to study from Nimai Pandita." Such was the extent of the Lord's mercy upon them that within two months all the listeners became very knowledgeable and scholarly. Although many came simply to hear the Lord, hundreds of students returned to their homes with degrees. In this way the Lord passed His time as a scholar in East Bengal.

Meanwhile in Navadvipa, Laksmi devi was feeling the pangs of separation from her Lord. She never spoke of her loneliness to anyone. She served Mother Saci very lovingly but reduced her own eating almost to nothing after the Lord left Navadvipa. Bereft of His company she silently suffered, crying alone throughout each night, trying to suppress the restlessness which welled in her heart.

Unable to bear any further separation from the Supreme Lord, Sri Laksmi devi, the Lord's eternal consort, left her transcendental body behind and went secretly to meet her Lord. Seated on the bank of the Ganga, Laksmi devi fixed the lotus feet of the Lord within her heart and went deep into meditation, never to return again.

Mother Saci's shock and deep grief is indescribable, her pitiable lamentations could have melted stones. Since I am incapable of describing the mellow of sadness experienced by Mother Saci, I shall not go into further details but simply mention the incident as reference. The saintly Vaisnavas were also grief stricken by the news and they all came forward to help complete the necessary rituals.

The Supreme Lord remained for sometime in Bangladesh and then returned of His own desire to Navadvipa. When the residents of East Bengal learned that the Lord would leave they immediately collected gifts and precious treasures to give Him. They presented Him gold, silver, drinking vessels, beautiful mats, soft and warm blankets and a variety of clothes. Each person took what was most precious in his house and joyfully offered it to the Lord. In reciprocation the Lord blessed each person and accepted his gift. The Supreme Lord Sri Gaura Hari personally visited each of the residents and after taking leave, He started for Navadvipa. Many students decided to accompany the Lord to Navadvipa where they could study under Him.

As the Lord was about to leave, an intelligent Brahmana, named Tapan Misra approached Him. Although Tapan Misra was a pure devotee and was well versed in the conclusions of the Vedas, he could find no one to answer his questions on the perfect spiritual path and the ultimate and absolute worshipable object. He constantly chanted the holy name of Krsna, yet he felt dissatisfied in the absence of proper spiritual practice. He had lived in a perturbed state of mind for sometime, but because of his piety he was awarded a vision in an early morning dream. An effulgent person who looked like a demigod spoke some confidential constructions to him. "Listen O brahmana, you are a renounced soul, so do not worry so much. Pacify your mind. Go and meet Nimai Pandita. He will explain all that you want to know about the spiritual path and spiritual goals. He is not an ordinary mortal, but the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Narayana. He has appeared in this material world, accepting a human body to perform his wonderful transcendental pastimes. But I warn you not repeat to anyone what I have just told you, for this knowledge is most confidential. It is not available, even in the Vedas. If you reveal this then you will suffer unbearable pain life after life."

The demigod disappeared from his dream and the brahmana woke up. He was thrilled by his wonderful vision and shed tears of joy. Convinced that his fortune has changed, the brahmana received new life and left immediately to meet the Lord. When he reached the bank of Padmavali he saw Lord Gaurasundara surrounded by many hundreds of disciples. In the midst of that enchanting scene he threw himself down at the Lord's lotus feet and then stood up with folded hands.

The brahmana said, "I am a fallen and wretched person. Please look upon me mercifully and destroy my bewilderment. I have no knowledge about the perfect spiritual path and the ultimate goal of human life. Be gracious and impart this knowledge to me. My heart does not long for material enjoyment and luxuries, please tell me, O merciful Lord, what will be the ultimate shelter for my soul."

The Lord said, "O brahmana, who can describe your good fate? You have a desire to worship the Supreme Lord Krsna, and that is the highest and most perfect path. It is very difficult to be a devotee of the Lord so the Lord comes in every millennium to establish proper standards of religion. He appears in each of the four Yugas to establish the particular religious practice for that Yuga himself, and then He returns to His spiritual abode. 'In order to deliver the pious and annihilate the miscreants as well as to reestablish the principles of religion I advent millennium after millennium.'

"The Lord appears in every millennium, accepting different incarnations with different complexions like white, red and yellow. Most recently, in the later portion of Dvapar Yuga, He appeared with a blackish complexion so He was called Kṛṣṇa. In the four yugas there are four different authorized processes of religion for the elevation of human society. The religious practice for the age of Kali is congregational chanting of the holy name of Lord Kṛṣṇa. The real purpose of religion is to satisfy the Supreme Personality of Godhead Sri Hari."

"In different yugas different religious practices were established by the Supreme Lord himself to achieve this end. In Kali Yuga the recommended authorized religious practice is congregational chanting of Kṛṣṇa's name and this process includes all the other previous processes. Therefore, in Kali Yuga chanting the holy name is the essential religious principle and no other religious practice can help one cross over the material ocean of nescience. Constantly chant the Lord's name in any situation. Even the Vedas fail to sufficiently describe the super excellent qualities of chanting of the holy name of the Lord."

"Listen my dear Miśra, in Kali Yuga there is no need for severe penances or performance of opulent sacrifices; whoever worships the Supreme Lord Kṛṣṇa he will be crowned with fortune and success. So go back to your home and worship Lord Kṛṣṇa with undeviating faith and attention, giving up falsehood and pretensions. By chanting the holy name of Lord Hari, Kṛṣṇa, you will simultaneously obtain both the proper spiritual practice and the ultimate goal. In this age of quarrel and hypocrisy the only means of deliverance is chanting the holy name of the Lord. There is no other way. There is no other way. There is no other way. I am repeating this great chant for deliverance to you. This consists of sixteen names of the Supreme Lord with thirty two syllables: Hare Kṛṣṇa Hare Kṛṣṇa Kṛṣṇa Kṛṣṇa Hare Hare Hare Rama Hare Rama Rama Rama Hare Hare. By constantly chanting and worshiping this Maha Mantra, your heart will feel the first blossoming of love and God; then gradually you will understand the truth about the proper spiritual path and the ultimate spiritual goal."

Having received such sublime instructions from the Lord, Tapan Miśra offered repeated obeisances at His lotus feet and then said, "O Lord, with your permission, I would like to accompany You."

The Lord replied, "You should go immediately to Varanasi; there I shall reveal the answers to your request."

The Lord then embraced him, and the brahmana felt his entire body surge with horripilations and spiritual ecstasy. The Lord's embrace filled Sri Misra with immeasurable happiness. As the Lord prepared to leave, Misra held His feet tightly and confidently narrated his entire dream. After hearing it the Lord said, "You must be very careful not to reveal this to anyone." He repeated the same instruction to the brahmana, and then sensing that the auspicious moment had arrived for Him to leave, He laughed loudly and proceeded to Navadvipa. Thus the Lord purified the entire tract of East Bengal and then returned home.

The Lord reached Navdvipa in the evening, laden with the gifts He had received. He offered full obeisances at his mother's lotus feet and gave her all the gifts. Then the Lord and His students left to bathe in the Ganges. Although her heart was breaking with pain, Mother Saci busied herself preparing a meal for her son.

Nimai Pandita acted as the instructing spiritual master to all his students.

He joined them in offering deep and repeated obeisances to the Ganga, and then sported for some time in the water. When His bath was complete He returned home, performed His daily religious rituals and then sat down to eat. The Lord of the Vaikuntha planets, Sri Gaura Hari, ate with great satisfaction and then went to the temple room. One by one His relatives came forward to greet Him after His long absence. They sat around Him as He joked and laughed while describing His stay in Bangladesh. Nimai imitated the strange habits of the people of East Bengal and everyone had a good laugh. None of them mentioned the passing of Laksmi Devi, knowing that the shock would cause the Lord grief.

After some time, the relatives all returned to their homes, and the Lord sat quietly chewing on the betel pan and reflecting on the humorous conversation.

Mother Saci avoided meeting the Lord; she stayed in her room, affected by the pain of Lakshmi's death. When Nimai found His mother He saw the marks of deep sorrow which lined her face. In a sweet, comforting voice He said, "What is the reason for your sorrow mother? I have returned from My journey in good health, so you should be happy, but I see only sadness on your face. Tell me the truth Mother, what is the reason?" Her son's words simply increased her pain and she wept silently, unable to speak.

"Mother, I know everything," said Nimai. "Tell Me what has happened to your daughter-in-law."

Some relatives stepped forward to speak, "Listen Nimai Pandita, Your mind must have reached the lotus feet of the Lord."

The Supreme Lord Sri Gaura Hari remained silent, casting His head down as He contemplated the death of his eternal consort and wife Sri Laksmi Devi. He allowed the pain of separation to engulf Him, and although He was the personification of all Vedic truths, He remained silent. Like any ordinary human being, He displayed the emotions of deep sorrow, but after controlling Himself, He spoke, "Because of bodily attachment one is regarded as a husband or son. These illusory relationships are caused by misunderstandings. O mother, why do you feel sad? How can you hope to change that which is ordained by the Lord's desire? No one can check the passage of time, and all relationships in this world are temporary. This is the verdict of the Vedas.

"The activities of the entire cosmic creation rest in the hands of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Who but our Lord can bring people together and then separate them? Why should these arrangements of the Supreme Lord, make you so unhappy? It is fortunate for the wife if she can leave before her husband. This is proof that she was a very pious woman."

The Lord tried to console His mother by these philosophical truths, and everyone felt the veil of sadness dissipate by the soothing words of the Supreme Lord. In this way the Lord of Vaikuntha, Sri Gaura Hari, performed wonderful pastimes in the mood of a scholar.

Sri Krsna Caitanya and Lord Nityananda Prabhu are my life and soul.

I, Vrndavana Dasa, humbly offer this song at Their lotus feet.

Adi Lila

Chapter 15

All glories to Lord Gauracandra and all glories to Lord Nityananda. Kindly offer Me your lotus feet so that I may hold them in the inner recesses of my heart. All glories to Lord Gauranga and His associates; one achieves devotional service to the Supreme Lord just by hearing the wonderful pastimes of Sri Caitanya.

The Lord continued to perform His pastimes as a scholar without anyone detecting His real identity. He rose early each morning performed His daily religious duties, offered obeisances to His Mother and went to teach His students.

Mukunda Sanjay was an eternal servant of the Lord and his son was Purushottam Dasa. He was so fortunate that the Lord went to his house everyday to teach. Nimai would sit alone in the courtyard in front of the temple of Durga and gradually His students would assemble. Occasionally some student would forget to mark his forehead with urdhapunda tilaka. As the propagator and maintainer of Santana Dharma, Nimai felt compelled to protect the conditioned souls from deviating from the path of religion. Therefore He never neglected to rectify His students when necessary. He would chastise the forgetful boy to such a degree that the student would acquiesce in shame and certainly never again forget to apply his tilaka.

"My dear boy, I see that you have not put on tilaka. What is the reason for this?" demanded Nimai. The Vedic literature says that the forehead which does not bear the mark of tilaka is as good as a crematorium. I can also understand from this oversight that your brahmanical practices have been rendered useless. Go home and perform your brahminical duties again, and then with tilaka on your forehead you may return to the school."

In this way the Lord taught all His students to maintain the proper standards of brahminical and religious practice. The Lord did not modify His arrogant spirit, nor did He spare anyone His criticism. Whoever was negligent was eligible for the Lord's strict correction. Nimai's character was always exemplary; He never made jokes or laughed in the company of women.

In fact, He kept His distance from women and avoided meeting them.

Nimai especially liked to taunt and find fault with the residents of Sri Hatta, imitating their peculiar pronunciation. The infuriated residents of Sri Hatta would retort, "Oh Lord, which land do You hail from? Tell us where Your father and mother and Their descendants come from. Which one of you was not born in Sri Hatta? You yourself are a descendent of Sri Hatta. So why do You make such fun of us?" The more they tried to chastise the Lord, the more fun He had imitating their pronunciation and making jokes at their expense. It required little provocation to infuriate them further and occasionally one of them would chase the Lord with pusillanimous intentions. The chase was usually futile, for the Lord could not be caught easily, and ultimately the angry fellow would simply stomp the ground in frustration and shout invectives. Occasionally someone managed to capture Him and drag Him to the local Muslim Magistrate to register a complaint. His friends would arrive in time to pacify the angry parties and reach some mutual understanding.

The Lord would also search out the house of a person from east Bengal. He would break in, destroy the foodstuffs and run away in mock fear. In this way He created havoc in Navadvipa, but He never had any incident which involved women. He never even looked at a woman.

In this incarnation, the Supreme Lord did not even hear the name of a woman. Therefore, those realized souls who are fixed in the scriptural conclusions never glorify Lord Caitanya as Gauranga Nagara, the Lord in the mood of a paramour. Although every kind of eulogy is applicable to the Lord, knowledgeable pure devotees glorify the nature that the Lord manifests in a particular incarnation.

In Navadvipa the Supreme Personality of Godhead was Nimai Pandita, the scholar. The Lord of the Vaikuntha planets enjoyed His transcendental activities as a teacher in the house of Sri Mukunda Sanjaya. All His students sat around Him and He taught them with great pleasure. Sometimes He pretended to have a headache and ordered medicated oil massaged into His head. Then He continued His discussion, submerged again in His intimate spirituality.

From early morning till afternoon He taught His students and then went to the Ganga for His bath. Then again, from early evening to late evening He continued His discussions and teaching. If any student studied under Nimai for a year, he left His tutelage as a full fledged scholar well versed in scriptural conclusions.

While the Lord was absorbed in His activities, Mother Saci constantly thought of the Lord's marriage. She searched all of Navadvipa for a daughter-in-law suitable for her Nimai. Sri Sanatan Misra was a pious and charitable brahmana, a benevolent and pure-hearted devotee of Lord Visnu. He lived in Navadvipa and engaged himself in serving guests and assisting less fortunate people. Born of a noble family, he was truthful and self controlled. As a scholar he earned the title Raja Pandita and as a gentleman in Navadvipa he personally maintained many needy people.

Sanatan Misra's daughter was like Laksmi Devi in beauty and character. As soon as Mother Saci saw her, she was convinced that this girl was the best choice to be her son's wife. From early childhood the young girl bathed regularly in the Ganga two or three times a day. She was dedicated and obedient to her parents and she had no other interest than devotion to Lord Krsna. Everyday when she met Mother Saci at the bathing place in the Ganga, she humbly offered her respects. Mother Saci reciprocated and blessed her saying, "May Krsna bless you with a suitable husband." But as Mother Saci bathed she thought, "This girl should marry my son." Sri Sanatan Misra and all his near relatives were equally eager to have the Lord as a son-in-law. One day Mother Saci sent for Kasinath Pandita and told him, "My dear Sri, I have a proposition. Go tell the Raja Pandita that if he so desires he may offer his daughter's hand in marriage to my son." Kasinath Pandita proceeded immediately to Sri Sanatan Misra's house, repeating the Lord's name in silent joy.

When the Raja Pandita saw Kasinath Pandita at his door he immediately offered him a seat with due respect. "What brings you here, my dear Sir?" asked Sri Misra.

"I have come with a proposal, and if you so desire I will reveal it to you", replied Kasinath Pandita. "You should offer your daughter Visnupriya in marriage to Visvambhara Pandita. I think it is a perfect match. He is a divine personality, suitable in all respects for your daughter. Your daughter, who is chastity personified, will be the best for Him. Visnupriya and Nimai Pandita remind me of the divine couple Krsna and Rukmini, so perfectly suited They are for each other."

Raja Pandita disclosed the news to his wife and near relatives and waited for their advice and comments. Unanimously they agreed, "What is the need for further debate? This is a perfect proposition. Quickly make all the necessary arrangements." The Raja Pandita happily replied to Kasinath Pandita, "I have decided to marry my daughter to Visvambhara Pandita so I will proceed with all the arrangements. If the Lord desires my family and ancestors will be greatly blessed by this marriage for my daughter. Kindly go to their house and tell them everything, I am fully in favor of this marriage."

Sri Kasinath Pandita was extremely satisfied with the outcome of his mission and he promptly told Mother SAcI everything that had transpired. Mother Saci was relieved that everything had gone smoothly. Without wasting further time she began the preparations.

Nimai's students were jubilant when news of His marriage reached them. A rich gentleman named Buddhimanta Khan immediately offered, "I shall bear the cost of the entire marriage." But Mukunda Sanjaya objected, "My dear brother and friend, if you take all the responsibilities, then what am I supposed to do?"

"Listen my dear friend," said Buddhimanta Khan "I will not allow this marriage to become another poor brahmin's wedding, I will make such arrangements for Nimai Pandita's wedding that everyone will think a prince is getting married."

Adhivas, a important ceremony before the day of the marriage was held at an auspicious time amidst great joy and festivity. The area set aside for the actual marriage ceremony was decorated with colorful hangings around the sides and across the tops. Water pots with intricate designs, ghee lamps, grains, yogurt, and strings of young mango leaves were all around. Different auspicious ingredients required for such an occasion were placed on the floor which had been beautifully designed with colored rice paste.

The Vaisnava devotees of the Lord, the brahmanas and all the gentlemen of Navadvipa attended the auspicious occasion. Invitations had been sent to all of them requesting them to attend the feast in the evening of the day of the adhivas. By early afternoon the musicians had already arrived and began to play. Loud and melodious sounds of mrdanga and other drums, shani, and cymbals were carried in all directions. The priests began to chant the Vedic mantras and the ladies ululated, adding to the festive mood.

The crest jewel of the brahmana race, Nimai Pandita, seated Himself in the midst of the Vedic chanters. The priests and brahmanas around Him felt a surge of joy in His presence. Different objects required to formally receive the guests were brought to Nimai Pandita. He garlanded the respectable gentlemen with flowers and applied sandal wood paste on their foreheads, offering each of them a betel nut and betel leaf according to the custom of the time.

The brahmin population in Navadvipa was large in those days, so countless gentlemen came and went with no one keeping track. Some amongst them were very greedy and returned again and again, mixing with the crowd and pretending they had just arrived in order to receive another gift. Having received invitations, people came from distant localities and were unknown to each other, but despite such anonymity there was a strong festive spirit. The Lord was in a joyful mood and He played the perfect host.

"Give all the flower garlands, sandal wood paste and other gifts to the guests at least three times," ordered Nimai. "Do not think about the cost, just give freely to everyone. The greedy brahmins who were endeavoring to take the free gifts several times were suddenly checked and felt ashamed because of the Lord's generosity. The brahmanas were dear to the Lord and He wanted to protect their religiosity. Some men were committing offenses by deceitfully collecting extra gifts, therefore He gave the instruction to give the gifts three times to any person. After receiving the gifts three times, no one wanted anymore. They were satisfied.

No one amongst the milling guests knew that the flower garlands, sandalwood paste and betel leaf they had received were actually expansions of Lord Ananta Sesa, serving his master the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Nimai Pandita. In the profuse distribution of gifts, some flowers, sandal paste and betel leaf fell to the ground, and the quantity of those remnants would have sufficed for five opulent weddings, not counting those gifts which were taken home by the guests. Every visitor was impressed by the arrangements and left the wedding praising the opulence of the ceremonies. Even the wealthiest men of Navadvipa were impressed for their father's had not spent so lavishly for their weddings. The profusity of flowers, sandal paste, betel leaf, betel nut and other gifts had never been seen in Navadvipa.

Raja Pandita, Sri Sanatana Misra, was extremely happy. He and his close relatives attended the Adhivas, laden with valuable gifts. At an auspicious moment, he joyfully applied tilaka to the Lord's forehead, just as the Vedas recommended. The excitement of the moment was heightened by the loud chanting of Lord Hari's name accompanied by the musicians and the ululating ladies.

Having completed all of his ceremonial duties Raja pandita returned home. The relatives of Nimai Pandita then went to Raja Pandita's house to perform the same adhivas ceremony for Visnupriya. Whatever was customary for a marriage in those days was performed in the midst of great festivity.

Early the next morning the Lord went for his bath in the Ganga, and on returning he went directly to the temple to worship the Supreme Lord Visnu. Thereafter He sat with his close relations to offer obeisances to their forefathers for their satisfaction. The festive mood was maintained by the musicians, dancers and singers performing loudly enough for everyone to hear.

Every corner of the house was decorated, there were beautiful designs on the floor, water pots, grains, yogurt, lamps and strings of auspicious mango leaves hung everywhere. Colored festoons fluttered like flags in the wind, and the air was filled with festive excitement. The chaste ladies of Navadvipa accompanied Mother Saci while performing all the customary and traditional rituals. First they went to the Ganga for their bath and then, followed by musicians, they visited the village deity Sasti where they prayed for her blessings. From the temple they visited the house of different relatives and then returned home. She distributed khoi, bananas, oil, betel nut, betel leaf, and vermilion to the ladies who had accompanied her and satisfied them in every respect. By the will of the omnipotent Supreme Lord, there was no dearth of anything so mother Saci generously distributed her gifts to the ladies several times over. Not a single lady was dissatisfied. They happily rubbed oil on their bodies and bathed.

Laksmi Devi's house was also in a state of great excitement; her mother bustled with happiness. Caught in the waver of ecstasy, Raja Pandita spent lavishly and offered his daughter wholeheartedly to Lord Gaurasundara.

After completing all of His rituals the Lord sat down to rest and from that place He humbly distributed food and clothes to all the assembled brahmanas. He offered respects to each person according to his position and gave in charity to satisfy each person's need. The brahmanas blessed the Lord and returned to their houses fully satisfied.

In the afternoon the relatives came to dress Lord Gaurasundara for His marriage that evening. They decorated His entire body with sandalwood paste and applied aromatic perfumes on different parts of his body. On His forehead they drew a half-moon shaped tilaka with sandalwood paste, placed a beautiful crown lightly on His head and draped His neck with fragrant flower garlands. A fine, expensive silk dhoti was tied expertly around His hips; it shone golden yellow like the setting sun. His pink lotus-shaped eyes were smeared with kaajal ointment, black as the bumblebee. He held the auspicious three bladed grass and the pit of a banana tree, while exquisite and expensive golden earrings swayed from his ears and other valuable jewelry decorated His upper arms and His neck. Each of the relatives decorated the Lord according to his won taste, hanging different types of jewelry on different parts of His body. Men and women both marveled at the Lord's exquisite beauty. They forgot themselves fixed as they were on the beauty of the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

Almost an hour before the time of marriage the relatives decided that the Lord should proceed to the house of the bride. "Let us begin the journey," they announced. "For an hour the bridegroom will parade through the town before arriving at the bride's house." Buddhimanta Khan appeared suddenly with a beautiful palanquin. The musicians started up afresh and the priests began chanting Vedic mantras. Singers, dancers and guests all joined in a jubilant clamor. The Lord first circumambulated Mother Saci and offered her respects, then offered respects to the brahmanas and sat on the palanquin in the midst of the joyful confusion which included the ululating ladies.

It was early evening and the marriage procession went first to the bank of the river Ganga. The waxing moon hung nearly full above their heads and shimmered in the water of the Ganga. Hundreds of lamps were lit and music played on with undying enthusiasm. In front of the Lord's palanquin were two long rows of Sri Buddhimanta Khan's estate employees followed by the festoon holders bearing colored flags. In their midst were the jesters, joking and evoking laughter. There were a variety of dancers performing many different dance styles, while the countless musicians played at least five kinds of drums, cymbals, conch shells, flutes, bells, kettle drums and a variety of horns. Excited young children danced amongst the musicians and caught in the festive atmosphere, even older people abandoned their reserve and joined the children while the Lord smiled at the happy sight. On the bank of the Ganga they stopped for a while singing, dancing and playing the instruments before proceeding to the bride's house. After offering flowers to Mother Ganga, the entire procession turned towards town.

Whoever witnessed the parade was struck with wonder at its opulence. "I have seen many extravagant marriages, but I have never witnessed anything like this one before", said one person. The residents of Navadvipa were fortunate to see the Supreme Personality of Godhead in person as He swayed past them in His palanquin.

The brahmanas who had beautiful, unmarried daughters in their homes all lamented. "It is a great pity and certainly my misfortune that I could not give my daughter in marriage to this handsome young man. But what can I do?" I offer my obeisances at the feet of all the residents of Navadvipa who witnessed this transcendental joyful pastime of the Lord.

After the procession had passed through all the different localities of Navadvipa they arrived at the house of Sri Sanatana Misra, the Raja Pandita. Everyone came out of the house, ululating and making other loud sounds of welcome for the procession. Raja Pandita came forward to receive the Lord from the palanquin, helped Him step down and took Him inside where a seat had been prepared. The joy Raja Pandita felt was indescribable and the love and respect he felt for the Lord was visible on his face as he escorted Nimai Pandita into his house. He showered flowers on the Lord as a blessing and welcome.

The reception party from the bride's side consisted of relatives and priests who came forward with fine clothes, jewelry and other precious gifts for the Lord. The bride's mother placed the auspicious three-bladed grass on the Lord's head and then worshiped Him with seven ghee lamps. At that time Laksmi Devi, who had been dressed exquisitely took her seat.

The relatives of Nimai Pandita were both impressed and satisfied to see such a beautiful bride. They lifted the Lord onto His seat according to the marriage ritual. They hung a curtain around the Lord, and Laksmi Devi circumambulated Sri Gaurasundara seven times.

Then facing Him with folded hands, she offered her respectful obeisances. The relatives threw flowers on the couple, and the air filled with loud music and the ululations of the ladies. Laksmi Devi placed a flower garland at the lotus feet of her Lord offering Him her life and soul.

The Lord picked up the flower garland and smiling sweetly, placed it around her neck. Again the divine couple was drowned in a shower of flower petals. Unseen by the common men, demigods like Lord Brahma also showered flowers on Sri Laksmi Devi and Sri Gaurasundara. Lord Gaura Sundara's group competed with Laksmi Devi's group in showering flowers and making joyous sounds.

Absorbed in the contest, everyone forgot their own cares and worries. Sometimes the Lord's side seemed to be victorious and at other times Laksmi Devi's side seemed more enthusiastic. The Lord was pleased to see everyone enjoying himself in such a wonderful way.

Thousands of lamps shed bright light everywhere and the loud and joyous sounds of song and instruments filled the sky. By the time the moment came for the bride and bridegroom to exchange glances, the universe seemed inundated by tumultuous and joyful sounds. Then the divine couple sat down and Raja Pandit sat with Them to officially offer his daughter to Lord Gaurasundara. In the midst of all rituals and chanting of Mantras, the marriage began with Raja Pandit offering his daughter and praying for the Lord's pleasure.

Along with his daughter Raja Pandita also gave nice cows full of milk, a lot of land and property, beds and furniture, maids and servants, and other valuable gifts. Laksmi Devi sat on the left of the Lord as the Brahmins lit the fire and began the 'Homa'. After all the customs and traditional rituals were complete, the bride and the bridegroom went into a well decorated reception room.

Raja Pandita's house was transformed into Vaikuntha, and the guests came in to enjoy the marvelous feast. Countless people came and all left fully satisfied.

The newlywed bride and groom spent the night in Laksmi Devi's house amidst great joy.

The happiness Sanatana Pandita felt can not be described. He reveled in the same inconceivable good fortune which befall great sages such as Nagaajit, Janaka, Bhisma and Jambuvan who also became the fathers-in-law of Lord Krsna or Lord Ramacandra.

The divine couple passed the night and next morning till midday in Sanatana Misra's house. Then the Raja Pandit and his relatives bid farewell to Lord Gaurasundara and Visnupriya. In the midst of music, kirtan, the blessings of the brahmanas and the chanting of mantras appropriate for such a journey, Nimai offered His respects to the elderly members of His father-in-law's family and left with Laksmi Devi on a palanquin for Saci Mata's house.

The people They met on the way all blessed them and congratulated Them, ladies spoke respectfully of the good fortune of the bride saying, "She is very fortunate, she must have worshiped Laksmi Devi for many births."

Others commented, "This couple is just like Lord Siva and Gauri."

Still others said, "They must be Laksmi and Sri Hari."

"They are Cupid and Rati, or Indra and Saci, or they must be Ramacandra and Sita Devi."

Truly, the good fortune of the residents of Navadvipa is unfathomable, for they were able to see the Supreme Lord and His eternal consort. Such was the extent of their piety. The whole of Nadia was blessed and the residents experienced unrestrained joy by being able to see Laksmi Devi and Lord Gaurasundara, Narayana.

Finally the divine couple arrived in the house of Mother Saci. Accompanied by other ladies, Mother Saci went out to jubilantly welcome the divine couple into her house, where she seated Them amidst joyous sounds and music. How can one express the joy Mother Saci and everyone else felt at the presence of Visnupriya and Gaurahari?

So magnanimous is the Supreme Lord that one becomes completely free from all sinful activities and their reactions just by looking at the transcendental luster of the Lord. Moreover, he becomes eligible to enter the spiritual sky, the Vaikuntha planets. Everyone from all walks of life could see the Lord and His spiritual effulgence. Therefore He has been called the most compassionate, the only friend of the fallen souls.

Nimai Pandit freely distributed clothes and gifts to all the performers, dancers and the beggars who had come to the house of Mother Saci. To the brahmana relatives and friends, He gave sufficient gifts to satisfy them all, and satisfy Himself as well. To Buddhimanta Khan the Lord gave a tight and affectionate embrace, leaving Buddhimanta Khan in indescribable ecstasy.

According to the Vedic Literature, there is no end to the transcendental pastimes of the Lord. Those divine activities which transpired in only a few hours can not be described by hundreds and hundreds of years of discourse. As for myself I am simply giving brief descriptions, and that only by His mercy. I am unable to fully describe His wonderful pastimes. Whoever hears or reads these transcendental activities of the Supreme Lord can certainly reside in Lord Gauracandra's eternal association.

Lord Sri Krsna Caitanya and Lord Nityananda Prabhu are my life and soul.

I, Vrndavana Dasa, humbly offer this song at Their lotus feet.

Adi Lila

Chapter 16

All glories to Lord Gaurasundara, the friend of the meek and poor.

All glories to the husband of Srimati Laksmi Devi. He is the omnipotent Supreme Lord, the maintainer and controller of everyone and everything.

All glories to You, Sri Gaura Hari, for You descended to protect Your devotees.

All glories to Gauracandra. He is the personification of the holy name, the supreme friend and the absolute truth.

All glories to Lord Gauracandra and His devotees. One is elevated to the platform of pure devotional service simply by hearing His transcendental pastimes sincerely.

The transcendental topics narrated in the Adi Khanda of this book are like a stream of pure nectar, for they describe Lord Gauracandra's enchanting pastimes. The Supreme Lord of the Vaikuntha planets lived in Navadvipa as a householder teaching His students. He had appeared specifically to reveal and propagate the process of pure devotional service to the Supreme Lord, but it was His wish that no one should know His true identity.

The entire human society was totally devoid of any spiritual aspirations; they were immersed in base and perverted enjoyments of the body. Those who held discourses on the Bhagavad-gita and the Srimad Bhagavatam were scarcely better for they did not instruct people on the essence of those scriptures, the congregational chanting of the holy name of the Lord. Seeing the hopeless plight of the living entities, the Vaisnava devotees of the Lord often met together, away from the public view, to clap their hands and chant the holy name in ecstasy.

The materialistic people of Nadia continually criticized the devotees saying, "What is the purpose of howling so loudly! After all, I am Brahma and the absolute resides within me, so why discriminate between master and servant?"

Others angrily said, "They beg food to fill their bellies and they call out Hari! Hari! Let us break down their doors and smash their houses!"

The devotees were discouraged by these derogatory remarks and the fact that they had no one to complain to made their dismay even greater. Wherever they looked, the devotees found the people devoid of devotion to the Supreme Lord. They simply cried to Lord Krsna and lamented the plight of human society.

About this time, Srila Haridasa Thakura came to Navadvipa; his body glowed with pure devotion for the Supreme Lord. Now I will narrate the wonderful activities of Srila Haridasa Thakura. Whoever hears this narration will receive the full shelter of Lord Krsna.

Srila Haridasa Thakura was born in a village called Buron, and because of his presence there, many people became purified and took up the chanting of the holy name. After some years he left his village and traveled to a place near the river Ganga. He finally settled in the village of Phulia near Santipura.

Advaita Acarya Prabhu was overjoyed to meet Srila Haridasa Thakura in Navadvipa and expressed his joy by roaring loudly. Haridasa Thakura was similarly swept away by the waves of ecstatic love of Godhead in the transcendental company of Advaita Acarya Prabhu. Srila Haridasa Thakura passed his time wandering on the banks of the Ganga chanting the name of the Supreme Lord Krsna.

Haridasa had absolutely no attraction for material enjoyment. The holy name of Lord Krsna continuously vibrated on his tongue, creating an extraordinary beauty about his mouth. Never for a moment did he feel any apathy towards his chanting of the holy name of Krsna; he remained absorbed, tasting the nectar of devotional service.

He occasionally danced in ecstasy or cried in lamentation while other times he lay still in a state of unconsciousness. Sometimes he spoke in mysterious languages, and later explained the meaning of his words. All the ecstatic symptoms of love of Krsna were manifest in him – profuse crying, horripilation, laughing, fainting, perspiring, etc. It was common to see Srila Dasa Thakura dancing while he sang the glories of Lord Krsna's name.

People would gather around him just to see the unrestricted tears of love of Godhead that flowed profusely from his eyes, drenching his entire body. Even the strictest atheists marveled at his behavior. Horripilations swelled across his body like thousands of blooming flowers and even Lord Brahma and Lord Siva were amazed by his devotion.

In the village of Phulia even the ritualistic brahmins were sincerely impressed if not astonished by Srila Dasa Thakura's spiritual ecstasies. The saint was held in full respect by the people of the village, and having won their trust, he lived there quite peacefully. He bathed daily in the Ganga and roamed freely, chanting the Lord's holy name.

The local Moslem authority known as the Qazi became envious of Haridasa Thakura's popularity and reported to the Nawab, "This man is acting like a Hindu; arrest him and punish him appropriately." The envious words of the sinful Qazi sparked an immediate response from the equally sinful Nawab, and Haridasa Thakura was arrested and brought forth. Having received the mercy of Lord Krsna, Haridasa had no fear of the Moslem authorities nor even of death itself. With the name of the Lord on his lips, Haridas appeared before the Nawab.

When devotees and other pious persons in the locality of the Nawab's palace heard that the saint Haridasa was coming, they were extremely happy, but when they subsequently learned that he was coming as a captive of the Moslem ruler, they were horrified. Previously many religious people had been terrorized and incarcerated by the Moslems; those prisoners were happy to learn that Haridasa might be joining them. His presence in their miserable situation would certainly eradicate their suffering. The prisoners even requested the prison wardens to allow them unrestricted association with Srila Haridasa.

When Srila Thakura was brought into the prison, he looked compassionately at all the prisoners who immediately prostrated themselves at his lotus feet. His long graceful arms which extended to his knees, his lotus eyes, and his charming moon-like face enchanted everyone. They offered their most sincere respects to the saint, and love for Krsna stirred in their hearts. Srila Haridasa Thakura was pleased with the tremendous devotion which had grown in the hearts of the prisoners and he blessed them, "Just remain as you are." But the miserable prisoners could not grasp the depth of that blessing and they felt quite dejected.

Haridasa could see the misunderstanding and compassionately explained himself, "My blessing to you is that you will remain as you are, but please do not feel dejected. I could never wish you any misfortune. I simply desire that the love you now feel for Krsna should always remain the same. From now on chant Lord Krsna's name and constantly remember His pastimes, inspiring one another to retain his devotion.

"Violence and tyranny are absent in the spiritual world, so sincerely cry out for Krsna's help and constantly think of Him. When you are released from this prison do not return to your old materialistic ways nor associate with degraded or sinful people because one can never cultivate love for the Supreme Lord Krsna by living a mundane life. You should know for certain that Krsna is unobtainable by the materialistic person.

"A materially engrossed mind is shaped by unwanted, mischievous desires; the attachment for wife, children, family and other such illusions brings about destruction. If by divine arrangement any person reaches the platform of pure devotion toward Kṛṣṇa, certain realizations dawn on him and he gradually becomes detached from material life, giving himself instead to the worship of the Supreme Lord. If that person returns again to his materialistic life, his mind will become contaminated by capricious, mischievous desires.

"I certainly do not want you to remain prisoners forever, but I do pray that you develop a distaste for material pleasures. Please chant the holy name of the Lord. My blessing was meant to free you from your present miserable condition and to insure that you remain happy in love of Kṛṣṇa. I look upon everyone equally and wish the best for all living entities. I pray that you may develop unflinching devotion for Kṛṣṇa. Do not be sad; you will be freed within two or three days. You may believe me. Once you leave the prison you may live in the forest or you may live in your home, but always think of Kṛṣṇa and try to cultivate spiritual life." Having showered his unrestricted mercy upon the prisoners, Haridasa went before the Nawab.

Because of his purity, Srila Haridasa Thakura radiated a certain effulgence which the Nawab could not fail to notice. He rose respectfully when Haridasa entered and offered the saint a seat. Although he himself had become quite confused, the Nawab asked Haridasa, "What sort of mentality has overcome you? Knowing you have the good fortune to become a Muslim, why do you behave like a Hindu? We do not even accept rice touched by a Hindu. Yet you want to ignore your high birth and become a low-caste Hindu? To discard your own race, land and religion for another is perverted. How do you expect to attain the liberated platform if you behave like this? I have decided to punish you according to the mandates of the Koran so that you will be freed from your sins."

Srila Haridasa Thakura patiently listened to the threats and accusations of the Nawab, recognizing his words as the illusory potency of the Supreme Lord Viṣṇu. Without any apprehension, Haridasa simply smiled at the Nawab and spoke in a sweet, soothing voice, "My dear Sir, there is only one God for all living entities. The difference between the Moslem God and the Hindu God is in name only. According to knowledgeable Hindus and Muslims, and according to every scriptures, be it Koran or Puran, God is one. He is the non-dual, eternal, transcendental and absolute Truth, infallible and perfectly complete, and in that capacity He resides in everyone's heart.

"The omnipotent Lord is the supreme controller of everything. The living entity is moved by the desire of the Supreme Lord, and he acts and works only according to the Lord's design. The Supreme Lord's transcendental name, activities, qualities, associates and abode, etc. are glorified according to different classes of spiritual instruction. But irrespective of the manner in which He is worshiped, the Lord accepts everyone's individual mood of surrender towards Him. However, if one living entity feels hatred or envy toward another, he ultimately reflects those emotions in his relationship with the Lord. Whatever you see of me and my activities are direct manifestations of the Lord who guides me from within.

"Looking at it from another perspective, a person may be born in a family of brahmanas but despite his high birth he demonstrates the perverted behavior of a fourth-class, uncultured person. What can the Hindus do with such a person? He is forced to act in degrading ways because of his innate propensities, and he accordingly suffers or enjoys the reactions of his activities. What could be achieved by punishing him for activities which are an intrinsic part of his nature? My dear respected Sir, please consider these points seriously, and if you still find me guilty then punish me."

The Moslem courtiers were sincerely moved by the honesty of Haridasa Thakura's words and presence. But his wisdom could not penetrate the envious and sinful heart of the Qazi who turned to the Nawab and instructed, "You must punish this man! He is evil and mischievous. Others will fall under his influence and become equally sinful. He will disgrace our Muslim religion and community. Therefore he must be appropriately punished. If he wants to be excused, then let him preach from his own scripture."

The Nawab tried again, "My friend, just speak from your own scripture and accept the path. Then you will have nothing to fear. Otherwise, the Qazis presently will force me to punish you; they will revile and insult you. Why should you let that happen?"

"Whatever the Supreme Lord desires is destined to happen; there is no one who can check it," replied Haridasa. Each one of us suffers according to the degree of his previous offenses. You should know without a doubt that you are merely an instrument of the Lord's desire. Even if my body is cut into pieces and I lose my life, I will never give up chanting the Lord's holy name."

The Nawab heard the fearless reply of Srila Haridasa Thakura and turned to the Qazi, "Now what is your decision about him?"

"Lash him in twenty-two market places until he dies," replied the envious Qazi. "There is no other judgment I find appropriate. If he lives despite the punishment, then I will conclude that our big scholar has spoken the truth."

The sentries were called in and the orders boomed out, "Lash him until he breathes his last breath! The sin a Muslim incurs by becoming a Hindu can only be punished by death!"

The Qazi's envious designs had fructified in the heart of the Nawab and Srila Haridasa was dragged away by the sentries. From one market place to another they beat him mercilessly, their black hearts consumed by hate for the pure devotee of the Lord. But Haridasa was a pure soul, completely surrendered to the Supreme Lord, so he faithfully chanted Lord Krsna's holy name. So absorbed was he in the fervent chanting that he did not feel any pain.

Goodhearted and pious people could not bear to see the torture inflicted on such an innocent person. Some begged the sentries to stop while others predicted, "If they continue to torture this good man, the entire kingdom will be ruined." Many of them cursed the king to die, while some tried to stop the sentries physically. One person threw himself at the feet of the sentries and pleaded, "I will give you any reward you like if you stop this merciless beating." But none of these protests evoked the slightest mercy from the sentries who continued to drag Srila Haridasa Thakura from one market place to another, lashing him relentlessly.

By the grace of Lord Krsna, Haridasa felt little pain in his body. Just like Prahlada in the Srimad Bhagavatam who was tortured by demons, Haridasa never suffered at all. Not only was Haridasa freed from his pain, whoever remembers this story of Srila Haridasa will also be saved from the miseries of life. Throughout his ordeal, Haridasa's one emotion was pity for the sentries. "O Lord Krsna, please be merciful upon these poor souls so they may not be punished because of me."

Nothing could stop the insensitive sentries who were determined to see their assignment through to its deathly end. Yet for all their beating, Haridasa showed no signs of distress as he was absorbed in remembering the holy name of Lord Krsna. At last the guards had to stop in amazement. "How can a human being survive such a brutal beating? Any ordinary man would have died after the beating we gave in the first two or three market places. We have lashed him continuously through twenty-two market places and he still shows no sign of either pain or death. Occasionally he looks up to smile at us." They concluded that he must be a saintly person.

"Oh Haridasa," they pleaded. "Because of you we shall certainly be punished. When the Qazi sees that despite our beating you are still alive, he shall certainly kill us instead."

"If my survival brings such terrible misfortune to you," replied Haridasa, "then I shall definitely give up my body. Just see how I die."

Srila Dasa Thakura immediately fell into trance. A pure devotee of the Supreme Lord possesses all mystic power so without any hesitation, Srila Hari dasa fell lifeless, without a trace of breath. The Muslim sentries were astonished but gladly brought the body of Srila Haridasa to the Nawab. When the Nawab ordered the sentries to bury him, the Qazi protested, "No, if he is buried he will be saved and ultimately gain entrance into heaven. Although he got the high birth of a Moslem, he behaved like a low Hindu, therefore it is proper for him to be thrown in the Ganga to suffer eternally like the other lost Hindus. By being buried he will become elevated and freed from his sin."

On the Qazi's order the sentries picked up the body of Haridasa Thakur and carried him to the Ganga. Hari dasa remained in his deathly trance, meditating on the Supreme Personality of Godhead. The spirit of the Lord Krsna then descended into the body of Srila Thakura and he became so heavy that it was impossible to move him. The strongest sentries came forward to push him into the waters, but he remained in deep trance and could not be moved. Haridasa had already drowned in the ocean of love of Lord Krsna, and he had no perception of the world around him. He knew not if he were still embodied, or wandering somewhere in the universe, or deep in the water of the Ganga. Just like Prahlada Maharaja, Haridasa Thakur had the spiritual ability to constantly remember the Supreme Lord. Such an extraordinary capability was not surprising for Haridasa's heart was the permanent residence of Lord Gauracandra.

This entire episode with Srila Haridasa Thakura is a replication of the heroic activities of Sri Hanuman in Sri Lanka. Indrajit, Ravana's son, had sent the Brahmastra, a weapon given to him by Lord Brahma, to capture Hanuman.

Hanuman could easily have escaped it, but to show respect to the potency of Lord Brahma, Hanuman allowed himself to be bound by the Brahmastra. Similarly, Srila Haridasa Thakura could have escaped the punishment of the Moslems, but by allowing them to torture him, he taught the world a lesson: despite the extreme miseries of life, one must never stop chanting the name of Krsna.

Dasa Thakura was directly protected by the Supreme Lord Krsna, Govinda, therefore who could harm him? If one simply remembers the name of Haridasa – not to mention his terrible ordeal at the hands of the Moslems – he becomes free from his own pain and misery. Most certainly Srila Haridasa Thakura was one of the closest and most important associates of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Sri Caitanya Candra.

Haridasa floated downstream on the currents of the Ganga, and after some time he became conscious, by the Lord's desire. Fully awakened and overwhelmed with ecstasy, he climbed the bank of the Ganga and proceeded toward Phulia, loudly chanting the name of Krsna as he walked. When the Moslems saw Srila Haridasa they were convinced that he possessed extraordinary mystic powers. Pure, happy feelings replaced the envy and hate in their hearts. They offered him obeisances, worshiping him as a very saintly person. By this worship the Moslems became free from material entanglement. In the presence of the Nawab, Haridasa stopped chanting and smiled compassionately at the Moslem ruler who was standing respectfully with folded hands.

In a humble and meek voice the Nawab said, "I can now understand that you are truly a saintly person. You have realized the absolute truth, and you have seen the one Supreme Lord everywhere and in everyone. Absolute knowledge and liberation – which the mystic yogis and philosophers proudly boast – has been easily attained by you because you are a perfect human being. I have come just to see you, simply to beg forgiveness. Kindly forgive me for the offenses I have committed against you. Because you see everyone equally, you have neither friends nor enemies; there is no one in the entire world who can actually grasp your extraordinary position. You are a free man in every respect. You may stay wherever you wish – in a lonely hut or a cave on the bank of the river Ganga. But please be merciful upon those of us who have committed this great offense against you."

Everyone – whether elevated or wretched – automatically forgets about mundane life when he sees the lotus feet of Srila Haridasa Thakura. The Muslims had been angry enough to kill him, yet they were transformed and they worshiped his feet, accepting him as a holy man. After forgiving and blessing them Haridasa went to Phulia.

With the holy name resounding from his lips, he reached an assembly of brahmanas near Phulia. The brahmanas were overjoyed by his arrival and they joined him in a roaring kirtan. As he danced in their midst, he felt ecstatic joy sweep through his body; crying, shivering, laughing, falling unconscious, swelling with horripilation, and roaring loudly, he fell to the ground totally immersed in love of God. The brahmanas could not contain their unbounded joy.

After sometime Srila Hari Dasa calmed himself and spoke to the brahmanas who sat around him, "My dear brahmana friends, do not feel sad because of what happened to me. This punishment was certainly due me. I stood in the court and listened to the Moslems blaspheme my Lord; for this the Lord has punished me suitably. I am really very happy because my punishment should have been more severe; the Lord let me off very easily. One goes to hell if he hears blasphemy of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. My sinful ears were filled with such blasphemy and the Lord has given me the proper punishment so that I may never commit this offense again."

Srila Haridasa passed his time relishing the nectar of the holy name and giving his enlightened association to the brahmanas. Those Muslims who tortured Dasa Thakura, and their families as well, were all eventually destroyed. Haridasa left the village and moved into a cave on the banks of the river Ganga where he maintained himself on the sweetness of the holy name and the memory of the pastimes of the Supreme Lord.

Daily he chanted a minimum of three hundred thousand names of the Krsna. By the influence of the transcendental sound of the holy name and the holy presence of Srila Haridasa Thakura, the cave was transformed into a Vaikuntha planet of the spiritual sky.

In Haridasa's cave lived a large and poisonous snake who emitted such strong vapors that not a soul could remain in the cave for more than a moment. People from the village came every day to visit Haridasa, but they could not stay long enough to speak with him. Although the visitors were all driven away by the poisonous air, Haridasa was completely oblivious to the presence of the snake.

The brahmanas consulted one another about the foul air in the cave and then discussed the matter with some Ayurvedic physicians in Phulia. After some research they determined that a poisonous snake had indeed built its home under Haridasa's cave.

The physicians felt strongly that Haridasa should vacate his cave, for living with such a snake was improper. They joined the brahmanas and approached Haridasa to explain the situation. "Because of the vapors from a poisonous snake living underneath your cave, no one can remain here," they explained. "You should also vacate this place and find a suitable cave to live in."

"I have been living in this cave for a long time, and I have never been inconvenienced by these vapors you speak of," replied Haridasa. "But if none of you can remain in the cave and it causes you such distress, then I shall leave here tomorrow. If it is true that a snake lives here, and if he doesn't leave by tomorrow, then I shall certainly go. I can assure you that one of us will leave this cave by tomorrow. Please do not worry about this problem any longer. I am concerned that all of you not waste your time in futile, mundane talks; every moment should be utilized discussing topics on Krsna consciousness."

In the course of this discussion, a miracle occurred. Evening had gradually descended around the brahmanas and Haridasa when the snake slithered out of its hole. Its huge, frightening body, crossed with effulgent red, yellow and blue stripes and crowned with a brilliant gem, slid quietly past the brahmanas and left the cave forever.

Its appearance was both awesome and attractive, and as it slithered past, the brahmanas remembered Krsna as their only shelter. After the snake left, the burning sensation from the poisonous air also vanished and all the brahmanas were satisfied. Their faith in the extraordinary spiritual potency of Haridasa Thakura swelled for they understood that the snake had left because of Haridasa's assurance to the visitors. Simply the sight of Haridasa dissipates one's innate nescience and material entanglements. Out of His love for Haridasa, the Supreme Lord never minimizes or neglects Haridasa's words.

There is another similar incident related by a snake charmer. One day in the courtyard of a rich man's house this snake charmer was performing a snake dance. He was chanting a special mantra accompanied by musicians playing the mrdanga and mandira.

Haridasa was passing by and stood to one side watching the snake dance. Although the snake charmer was an ordinary human being, by the influence of his mantra he could dance as though he were possessed by the spirit of the king of the snakes, Ananta Sesa. With an enchanting melody he sang about the pastime of Lord Krsna in the lake called Kalidasha where the Lord vanquished an evil serpent called Kalia.

Haridasa listened intently to the pastime of his beloved Lord Krsna, and suddenly moved by ecstasy, he fell unconscious to the ground. When he regained consciousness, he jumped to his feet and roared like a lion, dancing in ecstasy as he babbled with joy. The snake charmer was impressed by Haridasa's manifestation of ecstatic symptoms and stood respectfully to the side. As the various symptoms of horripilation, crying and shivering traversed his body, he rolled in the dust, crying in love for Krsna. He remembered how his beloved Lord had mercifully saved the snake Kalia, and as he floated in ecstatic trance, the people around him obliged by singing songs about the wonderful pastimes of the Lord. The snake charmer simply stood to the side, overcome by awe and reverence for Haridasa. When his ecstasy subsided, Haridasa left and the snake charmer resumed his performance.

Everyone who witnessed the ecstasy of Haridasa felt spiritually exhilarated and they smeared their bodies with dust from his feet. However, one cunning and deceitful brahmana in the crowd decided to cheat the people. "I will also dance here," he told himself. "I can see that the people are not very intelligent. They are offering so much respect to this low-born Haridasa just because he dances and cries; if I, a brahmana, also dance and cry they will certainly worship me as well."

The brahmana threw himself on the ground and feigned unconsciousness as though he had fallen into trance. But as soon as he touched the ground, the dancing snake charmer became furious, picked up a stick and began beating the brahmana relentlessly. He struck him again and again on every part of his body until the brahmana, howling in agony, got up and ran away just to save his life. The snake charmer then resumed his dance while the entire crowd stood dumbfounded. At last, a man with folded hands humbly requested the snake charmer to explain why he had stood respectfully to the side while Haridasa danced, yet he had beaten the brahmana for what seemed to be the same activity.

The spirit of Ananta Sesa who dwelt within the snake charmer then spoke in glorification of Srila Dasa Thakura. "The subject matter of your inquiry is very confidential. Although such a topic is rarely discussed because of its highly esoteric nature, I shall nevertheless answer your question. When Srila Dasa Thakura was dancing in ecstatic trance, each one of us felt our respect and affection for him spontaneously increase. But the deceitful brahmana was simply imitating Haridasa in order to get some cheap adoration from the crowd.

"Not out of love for Krsna, but out of enviousness toward a pure devotee, the brahmana threw himself on the ground and feigned ecstasy. Furthermore, he interrupted my dancing. Because he disturbed me and tried to imitate the pure devotee, I punished him severely.

"This arrogant and deceitful brahmana has no love for Krsna. To receive the shelter of devotional service at the lotus feet of Lord Krsna, one has to become pure; free from deceit. By seeing Srila Haridasa Thakura dance one becomes liberated from material bondage. Even the Supreme Lord Krsna himself dances when He sees Srila Dasa Thakura dance. The entire universe becomes cleansed of all sinful reactions just by seeing Srila Haridasa dance. He is truly worthy of his name – Haridasa Thakura, the servant of the Supreme Lord Hari Krsna, who shines eternally like a full moon in the heart of His devotee.

"Haridasa is affectionate and compassionate towards all living entities, and he descends as the eternal servant of the Supreme Lord in each of the Lord's incarnations. He is totally free from any fault or offense towards the Supreme Lord or His devotees. Even in his dreams he never commits an offense. A moment's association with Haridasa can purify any living entity and assure him the eternal shelter of Lord Krsna's lotus feet. Even Lord Brahma and Lord Siva constantly desire his association.

"Haridasa appeared in the family of a lowly Moslem on the order of the Supreme Lord, just to teach human society that material designations like caste, creed, birth status, and family position are all illusory and pursuing them is futile. If a pure devotee of the Lord is born in a low-class family, he is no less worthy of worship; that is the injunction of the scriptures. On the other hand, if someone is born in a sophisticated family but does not worship the lotus feet of Sri Krsna, then his high birth is useless for he lives just like a resident of hell.

"Just to prove the truth of these scriptures, Srila Haridasa took birth in a low-caste family. Prahlada Maharaja, one of the greatest devotees of the Lord, had previously appeared in a family of demons, and Hanuman, the greatest devotee of Lord Ramacandra, took birth in the monkey species. Similarly, Srila Haridasa appeared in a family of Moslems.

"The demigods desire the touch of the pure and transcendental form of Srila Hari dasa Thakura, and Mother Ganga also prays that her water will be sanctified by his presence. But one need not touch Srila Dasa Thakura; simply by seeing him, one is automatically freed from the eternal cycle of birth and death. Furthermore, one who sees a devotee who has taken shelter at the lotus feet of Srila Haridasa Thakura is also granted freedom from material bondage. Neither a thousand mouths nor a thousand ears would be sufficient to describe and hear the wonderful qualities of Srila Haridasa. You are a fortunate soul for your inquiry gave me an opportunity to glorify the pure devotee and gave you the opportunity to hear the transcendental topic. From the moment a person speaks the name of Srila Haridasa Thakura, his ascension to the supreme abode of Lord Krsna is guaranteed."

Nagaraj, the snake charmer, then fell silent. The assembled brahmanas and pious gentlemen felt thoroughly satisfied by his glorification of Srila Haridasa. Of course, Ananta Sesa is a pure Vaisnava devotee of the Supreme Lord and is always engaged in glorifying the Lord and His devotees; this was not his first occasion to describe the outstanding qualities of Haridasa. The assembly accepted the Nagaraja's appraisal of Haridasa, and the love each person felt for Haridasa increased.

Srila Haridasa was a pure devotee of Lord Caitanya and although Sri Gauracandra was yet to reveal the process of devotional service to the Supreme Lord, Haridasa continued to demonstrate his love for Sri Krsna. People in general were disinterested in the process of devotional service, and they could not understand the purpose behind chanting the holy name of God. Because of a general apathy toward the holy name, the mood of devotional service was absent.

People taunted and jeered at the Vaisnavas who engaged in kirtan, so the saintly devotees assembled in a quiet spot away from everyone where they could sing and dance undisturbed. Even then, atheistic people angrily condemned them. "These degraded brahmanas will completely destroy this entire country," they complained. "All this loud, sentimental singing and dancing will probably cause a famine in the land. These emotionalists sing like this just to fill their bellies, not realizing that Lord Visnu takes rest during these four months of the rainy season. They will just disturb Him, and in irritation He will send some natural calamity. Can't these fools understand the disaster they could cause?"

Another man threatened, "If there is an increase in the price of food grains then I will catch them one by one and beat them soundly."

"It may be proper to chant loudly on the night of Ekadasi, but what is the use of this daily recitation of Govinda's names?" questioned another irritated atheist.

The devotees felt genuine compassion for the atheistic people, and despite their harassment, the devotees continued the kirtans. Srila Haridasa was one of those sincere devotees who felt sorry to see that the majority of the people in society were not the least inclined toward devotional service. He continued his loud chanting of Krsna's holy name which the extremely sinful people in society found unbearable.

Once in a village named Hari Nadi, an arrogant brahmana offended Srila Haridasa. He shouted angrily, "Hey Haridasa, why do you behave like this? Why must you chant so loudly? The actual injunction is to chant softly in your mind. Which scripture instructs you to chant loudly? Who has taught you this type of religious practice? Here is an assembly of scholars; you can ask them about the correct method of worship."

Srila Haridasa humbly replied, "I do not know the scriptural conclusions about the glories of the holy name of God. You must certainly know more than I. I can only repeat what I have heard from scholars like yourself. The principle effect of chanting the name of God loudly is that it purifies the soul one thousand times more than any other form of worship. Nowhere in the scriptures is loud chanting of the holy name condemned; on the contrary, there are excellent benefits which have been described in many places. In one scripture it says: Loud chanting of Lord Krsna's name is a thousand times better than silent chanting."

"Why is the result of loud chanting magnified a thousand times over any other process?" demanded the brahmana.

"My dear Sir, please listen to the conclusions of the Vedas and Srimad Bhagavatam." As Srila Haridasa spoke, he floated in the ocean of love of Krsna and his explanations capsulized the essence of all scriptures. "O brahmana, please try to understand that when any living entity – be it human, animal, insect or bird – hears the holy name chanted by a pure devotee of the Lord, he goes directly to the spiritual world, Vaikuntha, after leaving this body.

"In the Srimad Bhagavatam, tenth canto, chapter thirty-four, verse eighteen, it says: 'O Lord when your name is chanted by the unalloyed devotee who has been purified by the touch of your lotus feet, and that holy name is heard even once by any living entity, it can immediately purify both the chanter and the listener.' There is nothing disputable in the matter of the unalloyed devotee purifying other living entities. Lower species which do not possess the ability to chant the Lord's name can be liberated simply by hearing the name chanted by a pure devotee.

"One who chants the holy name to himself liberates himself only, but one who chants the Lord's name loudly liberates anyone who hears him. The sound of the Lord's name is beneficial for everyone. Therefore the scriptures all assert that loud chanting of the Lord's name is a thousand times more effective than any other religious process.

"Again, in the Naradiya Purana there is a quote from Prahlada Maharaja saying, 'I see perfect logic in the fact that a person who chants the Lord's name loudly is a thousand times more pious than the person who chants to himself; one who chants softly liberates only himself but one who chants loudly liberates himself and any other living entity who hears him.'

"O brahmana, listen carefully. It is easy to understand that a person who acts for the benefit of the entire society including the lower animals is certainly on a higher religious platform than a person who is simply concerned with his own liberation. Only the human being has been endowed with the capacity to utter the Lord's name; an animal cannot.

"If loud chanting can liberate these unfortunate animals who otherwise have no hope for liberation, then what is the harm in chanting loudly? A selfish person is interested in his own welfare, but a selfless devotee is concerned with everyone's welfare. If you understand this, you can easily determine who is on the higher platform. I must emphasize that loud chanting of the Lord's holy name is the most efficient type of chanting."

The foolish brahmana became even more infuriated by the unequivocal instructions of Srila Haridasa. He angrily retorted, "O Haridasa, you have now become the master of the Vedas. It seems you have propounded the seventh philosophical thought, the other six having been destroyed with the passing of time. It has been prophesied in the Vedas that at the end of Kali yuga, a low born Sudra will propagate the Vedas. But I see it already happening right before me. What is the need to wait for the end of the Kali Yuga? You deceive everyone by acting like a holy man, but all you do is visit the homes of householders and fill your belly. If I find your explanations unauthorized or unbonafide according to shastra, then I will cut off your ears and nose."

Completely equipoised, Srila Haridasa simply smiled at the harsh, revengeful words of the fallen brahmana. Without another word, he walked away, chanting loudly the Lord's holy name. The scholars of the assembly were as sinful as that vicious brahmana for they neither accepted the correct, bonafide explanations of Srila Thakura nor did they condemn the offensive words of the wretched brahmana. Those men were brahmanas in name only, while in actuality they were demons; their residence was Hell and they suffered untold misery in the hands of Yamaraja, the god of death. In Kali yuga the demons will be born as brahmanas who harass and offend pious people.

The Varaha Purana says, "In the Kali yuga, demons find shelter in brahmana families and torture the transcendentalists who are rare souls." All the scriptures have strictly forbidden us to touch, hear or worship persons who live in the guise of a brahmana; one simply becomes contaminated by their contact. In the Padma Purana it is mentioned, "There is no need for a detailed explanation: those brahmanas who are not devotees of the Lord should neither be respected nor touched by anyone." Meeting a non-devotee brahmana is as contaminating as meeting a low-born dog eater; on the other hand, a pure devotee of the Lord, born in any family or any class, can purify the entire universe.

A few days after this incident with Srila Haridasa, the fallen brahmana contracted such a severe case of smallpox that his nose fell off. He was justly punished by Krsna for his offenses against the Vaisnava saint. Haridasa sighed in deep depression over the sad state of the human society which was engrossed in mundane life.

For a long time he had desired the association of other pure devotees, so he went to Navadvipa where the Vaisnavas were overjoyed to see him. Sri Advaita Acarya Prabhu grasped him to his chest in a loving embrace, and the other devotees showered their affection on him, just as he reciprocated their emotions. The atheists continued their offensive criticism of the devotees, while the Vaisnavas continued their transcendental discussions of the subjects in the Bhagavad-gita and Srimad Bhagavatam. Anyone who listens with faith and devotion to these narrations will find eternal shelter at the lotus feet of the Supreme Lord Sri Gauracandra.

Sri Krsna Caitanya and Nityananda Prabhu are my life and soul.

I, Vrndavana dasa, humbly offer this song at Their lotus feet.

Adi Lila

Chapter 17

All glories to Sri Gaura Sundara, the Supreme Lord of all lords, he possesses an eternal transcendental form and is very dear to Sri Nityananda Prabhu.

All glories to the Lord for He is the life and soul and the most precious object of love of all the Vaisnavas. Kindly bestow Your merciful glance on all the living entities so that they may become liberated from material entanglement.

Now listen carefully to the narrations of Lord Gaura Sundara going to Gayadham. The Lord of the Vaikuntha planets now resided in Navadvipa as the crest jewel teacher and scholar. The condition of human society had deteriorated to such an extent that there was an increase of atheistic people, and the process of devotional service had become very rare. People in general were attracted by the temporary and illusory pleasures of the senses and this greatly saddened the devotees.

Another reason why the Vaisnava devotees were despairing was because Lord Gaura Sundara was so engrossed in scholastic pursuits. The mischievous and sinful population continued to hurl abuses at the Vaisnava devotees, and they simply bore the insults quietly. Supreme Lord Gaura Sundara desired within His heart that now the time was ripe to reveal His true identity and manifest His transcendental pastimes but first He decided to visit Gayadham, such was the desire of the fully independent Supreme Personality Gaura Sundara.

He performed the last rites, sraddha ceremony of His father according to the scriptural injunctions and then accompanied by His disciples proceeded to Gayadham. The Lord was in a very blissful mood at the thought of being able to see Gayadham so taking leave of Mother Saci He left for Gaya. He passed through many towns and villages and by the touch of His transcendental lotus feet they have become places of pilgrimage.

On the way He discussed many spiritual topics and explained difficult conclusions to His disciples sometimes joking with them, sometimes in a serious mood, finally He arrived in Mondata. In the Mandar hill there is a very famous place, the Lord visited the temples on the hill, the temple of Lord Madhu Sudan. One day while traveling, the Lord pretended to have fever. The Lord of Vaikuntha, the Supreme Personality, in order to teach the living entities, pretended to have fever just like an ordinary mortal. Half way to Gayadham the Lord got fever which brought anxiety to His disciples.

They tried various medicines and means to bring the fever down, but such was the desire of the Lord that His fever persisted. At last the Lord Himself suggested a remedy. "The remedy for all suffering is drinking the water that has washed the feet of a pure brahmana." To teach the world of the unique position of a pure brahmana the Lord drank the water that had washed the feet of the brahmana. Immediately upon drinking that water, the Lord became healthy and His fever was gone. Such activities of the Lord are His real nature, this has been described in all the Vedic scriptures.

In the Srimad Bhagavad-gita it is said, "All of them, as they surrender unto Me I reward accordingly. Everyone follows my path in all respects, O son of Pratha." When the devotee sincerely desires to become a servant of the Lord then the merciful Lord grants him eternal servitude. Therefore He is known as Sevadvatsal or one who is very affectionate to His servitors. The Lord readily accepts defeat if it increases the name and position of His surrendered devotee.

How can devotees who have totally surrendered themselves to the lotus feet of the Lord even think of leaving the shelter of the Lord's lotus feet. The Lord continuing His journey now cured of His fever, came to the pilgrimage of Kukum.

The Lord took His bath and offered worship to the departed soul of His father and then He entered Gaya Dham.

On entering Gaya Dham the Lord offered His obeisances with folded hands to the holy place of pilgrimage. He came to Brahma Kunda and took His bath and worshiped His father in the proper way. The Lord then went to Cakartier. He went inside to see the impressions of the lotus feet of Lord Visnu. All the brahmin priests sat surrounding the lotus feet of Lord Visnu, flower garlands offered to the lotus feet were piled around. One could never take account of all the incense, flowers, perfumes, clothes, and ornaments which were offered to the lotus feet and which now lay all around.

The brahmanas looked like divine beings and sat there describing the wonderful glories of the lotus feet of the Lord. They said, "Lord Vishveshvar, Siva, holds these lotus feet always close to his heart, and they are the life and soul of Srimati Laksmi Devi, the Goddess of fortune. The Supreme Lord blessed Bali Maharaja by placing these feet on his head, now all of you pious souls, see His very same lotus feet. Just a moment of sincere meditation on these lotus feet will immediately save you from hell. These lotus feet that are so rarely attained even by great mystic yogis. You have the good fortune to see them.

"Mother Ganga sprang forth from these lotus feet and surrendered souls of the Lord always hold these lotus feet deep in their hearts. All you fortunate souls please see these lotus feet that lie on the head of Ananta Sesa."

Hearing the wonderful glories of the lotus feet of the Supreme Lord, Lord Gauranga merged into an ocean of ecstatic bliss. Tears flowed profusely from His lotus eyes, and ecstatic symptoms like horripilation and shivering manifested on His transcendental body at the sight of the lotus feet. For the benefit of the entire human society, for the good fortune for all living entities, the Supreme Lord Gaura Candra now began to manifest the process of devotional service, love of Godhead.

All the brahmana priests marveled at the sight, as an unrestricted stream like mother Ganga poured from the Lord's lotus eyes. By divine arrangement, Srila Isvara Puri was also present there at that time. When Lord Gaura Candra saw Srila Isvara Candra Puri, He offered His obeisances with great affection. Isvara Candra Puri was also overjoyed to see Lord Gaura Candra and he embraced Him very lovingly. They could not control their intense joy of meeting each other and tears flowed profusely from their eyes drenching each other.

Lord Gauranga said, "Now that I have seen your lotus feet, My visit to Gaya has become successful and worthy. Oblations offered in a place of pilgrimage for the liberation of the departed souls of forefathers, effect only those who they are intended for, but just by your presence you have liberated so many innumerable souls of departed forefathers. Therefore no place of pilgrimage can be compared to you, in fact you are the purifier of even the places of pilgrimage. So kindly save me from drowning in the ocean of material existence, because I am surrendering my heart and soul and body to your feet. The only benediction that I desire from you is that you make me drink the nectar from Sri Krsna's lotus feet."

Then Isvara Candra Puri spoke, "Listen to me, Pandita! I know very well that You are an expansion of the Supreme Lord. Otherwise how is it possible to possess vast learning like Yourself or such a transcendental nature as You have? I had a dream last night of meeting the Supreme Lord and now meeting You that dream has been fulfilled.

"To tell You the truth, O Pandita, every moment I am feeling increasing ecstasy in Your presence. Ever since I saw You in Navadvipa, there has been nothing else on my mind except for You. Whatever I have spoken is certainly the truth. I have no other motivation for speaking this. The bliss one experiences in Lord Krsna's presence – I am experiencing that fully in Your presence."

The Lord was very pleased to hear these sincere words from His beloved Isvara Puri. He said, "It is My good fortune that I have met you." They were very happy with each other's company – talking confidential topics of Krsna consciousness. Srila Veda Vyasa in the future will describe in detail these discussions between Lord Caitanya and Isvara Candra Puri. The Lord then left Isvara Puri; taking permission to go and take His bath and perform sacrifice in honor of His father, the sraddha ceremony.

After completing His necessary rituals of offering oblations to His father, He left for Srinagar in Bedgaya. In Bedgaya Lord S..... again performed a sraddha ceremony and He satisfied the attending priests with very humble and sweet words – this was His way of pleasing the priests. From there He proceeded to Dakshir Mamusa then to Rama Gaya. In Rama Gaya, the Lord offered the incarnation of Lord Rama Candra, sraddha. He then proceeded to Yudhisthir Gaya and offered oblations to Yudhisthir Maharaja.

Each time the Lord performed a sraddha ceremony, the brahmin priest would sit around Him and chant mantras. After the sacrifice when the oblations were offered into the water, the brahmana priests were almost swooping down upon Him for fees and other gifts. The Lord simply smiled at such behavior and mercifully cut the knots of material entanglement in their hearts. Then from the Lord Sri Gauranga then went to Bhima gaya, then to Sva gaya and Brahma Gaya and various other holy places. When He arrived in Sourasa gaya He offered a special sacrifice with 16 special ingredients and offered everyone oblations very respectfully. In Brahma Kunda the Lord took His bath then in Gayashir oblations. There the Lord offered beautiful flower garlands and sandalwood paste with His own hands and worshiped the lotus feet impressions of Lord Visnu. Completing His pilgrimage in all the places and satisfying all the brahmana priests, He returned to His place of residence.

He rested for a while, then feeling refreshed from rest, He made preparations for cooking. As He completed the last preparation, Srila Isvara Candra Puri came to visit Him. Intoxicated from chanting the holy name of Krsna and feeling ecstatic love for the Lord, he walked into the room swaying as if drunk.

The Lord immediately left His cooking and the kitchen and offered His respectful obeisances and sat him down comfortably. Laughing Srila Isvara Candra Puri said, "O Pandita, I have come certainly at the right time." The Lord replied, "When good fortune has smiled upon Me today by sending you here, I pray that you will please accept some rice prasada." Srila Puripada smiled and said, "But then what will You have?"

The Lord replied, "I will cook some rice for Me now." Srila Puripada asked, "What is the use of cooking again? Whatever You have already cooked, let us share that amongst ourselves." Smiling the Lord replied, "Whatever is already prepared that is all for you, in no time I can prepare something afresh, please do not feel hesitant, you eat first." Offering to Isvara Puri what He had cooked for Himself the Lord went back into the kitchen and began preparing food once again.

Feeling great happiness the Lord exhibited so much mercy to Isvara Candra Puri. And Sripada Puri also had no other thought in mind other than Krsna. The Lord served Sripada Puri with His own hands and Sripada Puri relished the Lord's cooking with great delight. While this was going on, Roma Devi, Laksmi Devi, the Goddess of fortune personally appeared and cooked for the Lord unseen by anyone in the kitchen. Seeing so that Sripada Puri was fully satisfied, the Lord sat down to eat.

These transcendental activities of the Lord and His devotees are so wonderful that anyone who hears them with faith and sincerity is immediately granted unalloyed devotional service at the lotus feet of Lord Krsna.

After the meal, the Lord arranged for Sripada Puri to rest. As a disciple would serve a spiritual master, the Lord began massaging Sripada Puri with scented oil. Who can describe the elevated position of Sri Isvara Candra Puri. Sri Caitanya, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, acting like an ideal disciple, went to see the place of appearance of Sri Isvara Candra Puri. The Lord said, "I offer my obeisances to the village Kumar.. where Sri Isvara Puri appeared."

The Lord was so spiritually moved by this place that He shed profuse tears of love for Isvara Puri and continuously repeated his name. He picked up a handful of earth and tied it to the corner of His cloth. The Lord said, "This handful of earth from the place of Sri Isvara Candra Puri's appearance is My most precious possession." Only the Supreme Personality of Godhead is capable of increasing the glories of His devotees, which was exemplified by Lord Caitanya's intense love for Sri Isvara Candra Puri.

The Lord said, "By being able to associate with you I have fulfilled a reason for coming to Gaya." The next day the Lord went to meet Isvara Puri and approached him for an initiation mantra with sweet and humble words. Srila Puripada said, "How is it that You ask for an initiation mantra from me? I can give You my very life and soul."

The Supreme Personality of Godhead Narayana, the Supreme instructing spiritual master of everyone, accepted initiation from Sripada Puri, with an initiation mantra consisting of ten syllables. The Lord circumambulated Sripada Puri, and said, "I have surrendered My life to You, please always look upon Me with a merciful glance, so that I may always float in an ocean of love of Krsna." Sri Puripada was moved by the Lord's words and he embraced the Lord holding Him close to his breast. The profuse tears of love flowed like torrents from their eyes, drenching each other.

The omniscient Supreme Lord remained in gaya for sometime distributing His mercy to Srila Puripada so profusely. The time was slowly approaching for the Lord to reveal to the world the reason for accepting this incarnation. His love for Krsna manifested increasingly day by day. One day the Lord sat in a solitary place chanting and meditating on His specific mantra. The Lord was lost in the ecstatic world of meditation on the Supreme Lord, and when His consciousness returned He began lamenting and calling out to the Lord, His object of meditation.

"O my Krsna, My dear Lord, O Lord Hari, You are My life and soul! You have stolen my heart, now which way have You run away? In which direction can I find My beloved Lord?" The Lord cried out in intense separation from His beloved Lord and wept bitterly. The Lord was totally absorbed in relishing the nectar of love of Krsna and rolling on the ground – His body was covered with dust. He cried out as if greatly afflicted, "Where is My beloved Krsna and where has He gone leaving me?"

Lord Nimai, so long a grave and serious scholar teacher, now exhibited extreme restlessness, becoming stunned by the arrow of love of God. He rolled about on the ground and cried out loudly and floated on the waves of ecstasy from intense separation from Himself. Soon His students returned and treated the Lord with great care, they brought Him back to normal condition. The Lord said, "All of you return to your homes, I do not want to go back to My family anymore. I am going to Mathura to find the beloved Lord of My heart, Sri Krsna Candra."

The students used all their intelligence, and in various means they kept the Lord calm and still. The Lord of Vaikuntha was now in the mood of an unalloyed devotee, and He was constantly absorbed in love of God. His heart was all restless in separation from the Lord. He could not remain anywhere still. In the very early hours of one morning the Lord slipped out of the house without anyone's notice wanting to go to Mathura. He was in a state of ecstatic trance. He cried to Krsna as He walked on, "O Lord Krsna, My dear Lord, where can I find You?"

After some distance He heard the divine voice saying, "Do not proceed to Mathura now. The time will come when You will go to Mathura, but for now return to Navadvipa, to Your house. You are the Supreme Personality of Godhead, the Lord of the Vaikuntha planets. You have come into this material world with all Your eternal associates to liberate the entire world. You will propagate the congregational chanting of the holy name of God all over the universe and distribute freely to everyone the most treasured object, love of Godhead. You are omniscient. You already know everything. We know the reason why You have descended to this material world.

"You have come to distribute the most desired object whose nectarine taste bewitches the mind of even Lord Brahma, Lord Siva, Senatka and the other sages, and of whose glories Lord Ananta Sesa continuously sings. We are Your eternal servants – it is our duty to remind You of Your incarnation. We place this request at Your lotus feet. You are the maintainer of all living entities, the Supreme independent truth. No one can obstruct You from carrying out Your own pure desires. So my Lord please return to Your home and very shortly You shall go to Mathura."

The Lord Sri Gaura Sundara returned home feeling very happy after hearing the divine message. His pilgrimage over in Gaya, the Lord returned back to Navadvipa with all His disciples, for He was to begin the propagation of the holy name of God, and distribute love of Godhead to everyone. After His return from Gaya a definite change had come over the Lord. He felt ecstatic symptoms of Love of Godhead increasing in Him day by day. Whoever hears this narration about the Lord going on a pilgrimage to Gaya with devotion and faith, Lord Gaura Candra will appear in his heart.

One can associate with Lord Krsna simply by hearing the transcendental activities of Lord Krsna and this association with the Lord is eternal because the Lord will never leave such a pure devotee.

I am able to describe some of the transcendental pastimes of Lord Caitanya in this book just because my beloved Lord and master, Nityananda Prabhu, is sitting on the throne in my heart and dictating all this to me.

It is only by His mercy that I can write these wonderful transcendental activities of Lord Caitanya. Independently it would be impossible to write all this.

I am just a wooden doll made to dance by the magic spell of a Supreme magician, the Supreme Lord Gaura Candra, for He is making me speak about His transcendental pastimes.

Lord Caitanya's transcendental activities are eternal and limitless, without beginning and without end. So it is unfathomable for me. I am simply writing somehow.

On the other hand, my position is like that of a bird who flies in the limitless azure. It flies as far as it is capable of flying.

Lord Caitanya's pastimes and glories are like a shoreless ocean. One is capable of narrating to that extent as the mercy he has received from the Lord allows him to.

In the Srimad Bhagavatam (1.18.23) it has been described, "Birds can fly as far as they are capable of flying. Similarly, scholars according to their intelligence, describe the transcendental pastimes of the Lord as much as they know.

I offer my fallen obeisances at the feet of all the Vaishnava devotees of the Lord so that I may become purified from all my offenses.

If anyone is of the desire of crossing this ocean of nescience and drowning in the ocean of nectarine love of Godhead then let him take complete shelter of the lotus feet of Lord

Nityananda Prabhu.

The greatest hope that eternally keeps alive in my heart is that Lord Caitanya Mahaprabhu is the Lord of my most beloved Lord Nityananda Prabhu. Many people say different things about my Lord Nityananda. Some say that Lord Nityananda Prabhu is Lord Balarama. Others say that He is the most beloved of Lord Caitanya. Still others say that He is the master of Supreme Power. Still others say, "I cannot understand who He really is.

Let Him be a sannyasi spiritual master or a highly knowledgeable devotee of the Lord, or let Him have any sort of relationship with Lord Caitanya, let anybody say anything about my Lord as they desire, but I will hold His lotus feet forever in my heart. And as for those sinful wretched agnostics, who in spite of everything else, criticize my Lord, then I will kick them on their heads.

All glories to Lord Nityananda Prabhu who is the life and soul of Lord Caitanya Mahaprabhu. May I receive the eternal shelter of Your lotus feet.

You are constantly singing the glories of Lord Caitanya. May I also be able to assist You in Lord Caitanya's glorification. My one and only desire is that I may have Your association birth after birth.

Whoever hears these narrations of Lord Caitanya as described in the Adi Khanda of this book will certainly receive the full benediction of Sri Gaura Candra.

Before leaving Gaya, Nimai Pandita went to Isvara Puri and begging leave of him, returned back to Navadvipa dham. All the residents of Navadvipa dham were mad with joy at the Lord's return, like a dead body coming suddenly alive.

Lord Sri Krsna Caitanya and Lord Nityananda Prabhu are my life and soul.

I, Vrndavana dasa, humbly offer this song to Their lotus feet.

Madhya Lila

Chapter 1

All glories, all glories to Lord Visvambhara the crest jewel among brahmanas, and all glories to the beloved associates of Lord Visvambhara.

All glories to Lord Gaura Candra, a stalwart amongst all religious preachers, the safe bridge to the spiritual sky – He has fully subdued His physical and mental urges.

All glories to Him, He possesses incomparable beauty and is the embodiment of congregational chanting of the holy name of God.

All glories to Lord Gaura Candra for He is the dearest friend and life of Lord Nityananda Prabhu, and the sublime object of love of Gadadhara Pandita and Advaita Acarya Prabhu. He is very dear to Sri Jagadananda Pandita, and the tender loving heart of Vakresvara Pandita and Kasiswara. He is the Lord and master of Srinivasa and other beloved associates. O Lord, kindly look upon the living entities with divine benevolence.

The descriptions recorded in the Madhya Khanda are like streams of nectar, when it pours out into the ears. It melts the granite-like doubts and atheistic thoughts in the deep recesses of the heart.

Please listen attentively and with unflinching faith to the narrations of Madhya Khanda, describing the beginning of congregational chanting of the holy name.

The entire township of Navadvipa offered jubilant and loud welcome to the Lord who had just returned from Gaya Dhama. Friends and relatives rushed to meet the Lord. The Lord spoke sweetly to everyone and they were overjoyed to see Lord Visvambhara return. They all accompanied the Lord, many of them going in front of Him. They brought Him to His house, and He began narrating the experiences of his pilgrimage.

The Lord said, "Because of all your blessings and good wishes I could visit Gaya Dhama and return without any difficulties. The Lord spoke very humbly, pleasing everyone and they were very impressed to see the Lord's humility.

The senior members touched the Lord's head and blessed Him with a long life. Others touched different parts of His body and chanted mantras for His protection. Others put their heads on His breast and invoked the mercy of Lord Govinda and Sita Devi.

Nobody could describe the joy Mother Saci experienced when she saw her son return. Laksmi Devi glowed with happiness by seeing her Lord's face and the cloud of loneliness had dissipated. The joyous news spread to His in-laws house and touched them with jubilation. The Vaisnavas were especially happy and they ran to see the Lord. To everyone the Lord spoke very humbly and softly and taking leave of them He returned to His room. He took a handful of His intimate disciples and went inside to discuss more confidential topics about His pilgrimage to Gaya.

The Lord said, "My dear friends, I want to describe to you the wonderful places that constantly reminded Me of Lord Krsna. As soon as I entered into Gaya, I heard the auspicious sounds of chanting and conch shells and bells, hundreds and hundreds of brahmana priests were chanting from the Vedas and were glorifying the lotus feet of the Lord Krsna and His place of pilgrimage where the Lord left His lotus feet impression."

They said, "Welcome to the holy spot where the Lord washed his lotus feet. In previous ages when Lord Krsna visited Gaya He washed His transcendental lotus feet. Mother Ganga has become glorious and holy by the touch of the waters from the lotus feet of the Lord, and Lord Siva holds that water on his head with the full realization that this is the water from the lotus feet of Lord Krsna, and that is why this place of pilgrimage has become one of the holiest and known as 'Padapadma tirtha' or the pilgrimage where the Lord left the waters of His lotus feet."

As soon as the Lord repeated the name of Gaya Dhama or Padapadma tritha, and remembered the lotus feet of Lord Visnu, incessant streams of tears poured down from his eyes. The Lord became extremely restless. Unable to control His spiritual emotions, He began crying out the name of Lord Krsna. So profuse were the tears of love of God that it watered an entire flower garden.

He sighed deeply, repeating Krsna's name. His whole body was covered with horripilation. He could not control Himself anymore. He shivered like an autumn leaf. Sriman Pandita and other devotees present were astounded at seeing this wonderful manifestation of love of Krsna. The devotees could not remain unaffected. Tears swelled up in their eyes and flowed freely and unrestrained as if mother Ganga had found another source.

They all thought in their minds how this sight is. We have never seen the Lord acting like this, this must be the great mercy of Lord Krsna that He has allowed us to see such spiritual emotions. After a while the Lord became still and external consciousness returned to Him. He began to speak again, "My dear friends! Please return to your homes today, but I want to see all of you tomorrow again and discuss very confidentially. I want to disclose the deep sadness in my heart. Come to Suklambara Brahmachari's house with Murari and Sada Siv."

Everyone returned to their houses and the Lord became engrossed in His own world. The spirit of love of Godhead had now manifested in the body of the Lord and He had lost all taste for anything mundane. Mother Saci could not understand His new transformation that had overcome her son, but nevertheless she was happy just to have Him near her. She saw her son crying out Krsna's name, and tears of love of Godhead flowed profusely from His eyes. The Lord cried out, "Where is my beloved Krsna, where is my beloved Krsna?" This increased His mood of separation in love of Krsna.

All such activities of the Lord were incomprehensible to Mother Saci, so in great awe with folded hands she prayed for the shelter of Lord Govinda. The time had dawned when Lord Caitanya was to reveal His real identity and the entire universe swayed with the waves of joy. News spread to all the devotees of the Lord that Lord Caitanya was constantly shedding tears of love of Godhead and so they all ran to meet Him. All the Vaisnavas visited the Lord. The Lord treated them humbly and spoke with everyone.

He requested of the Vaisnavas: "Please come and meet Me in Suklambara Brahmachari's house tomorrow, I want to open My grief laden heart to all of you."

Sriman Pandita was extremely happy when he saw this wonderful transformation in the Lord – His extraordinary love of Godhead. The devotees as usual went early in the morning to pick flowers. In Srinivasa's house there is a jasmine tree, which was like a wish fulfilling desire tree. As many flowers were picked from the tree, the tree was never empty of flowers. It had an inexhaustible bloom of fresh flowers. So all the devotees as usual met during the flower picking and they exchanged words on topics about Krsna and His wonderful pastimes; every morning they, Gadadhara, Gopinatha, Rama and Srinivasa enjoyed each other's company.

Just then Sriman Pandita came laughing with joy and everyone greeted him saying, "Why are you so happy today?" Sriman said, "Certainly there must be a reason.' So they asked, "Why do you not say it?" Sriman Pandita began, "Then hear the reason: something most wonderful and most impossible has happened. Nimai Pandita has become a great Vaisnava devotee. I heard that He had returned from Gaya, so I went in the evening to meet Him. He spoke with everyone with a humble and very detached air, and did not show the slightest sign of arrogance or insolence.

Then He took us aside and began telling us about His pilgrimage and about Lord Krsna. As soon as He spoke the name of the lotus feet of Lord Krsna and 'Padopadma tirtha', His eyes flooded over with tears of love of Godhead. His whole body was overwhelmed with ecstatic symptoms, shivering horripilation and as soon as He cried out Lord Krsna's name he fell to the ground unconscious. When He regained consciousness He repeated Krsna's name and began crying in separation from the Lord, as if Mother Ganga was flowing there.

After I saw such an exhibition of sublime love of God, I am convinced in my mind that He is not an ordinary personality. When He became controlled and stilled He told us that we should all come and meet Him in Suklambara Brahmachari's house today; and I should bring Sada Shiv Pandita and Murari along with me and He would reveal the torment within His heart to us. Thus I have told you the reason for my joy and the most auspicious news." Sriman's words gave much pleasure to all the devotees, and they loudly repeated Lord Hari's name. Srivasa Thakura commented, "May Lord Krsna increase our congregation."

The assembled devotees appreciated this mood of Srivasa Thakura and happily they discussed topics on Krsna consciousness. The joyous sound that went around them was pleasing to the heart. The devotees blessed everyone saying, "May everyone be blessed by worshiping the lotus feet of Lord Krsna." Sriman Pandita then left this Vaisnava assembly and proceeded to Suklambara Brahmachari's house.

Gadadhara Pandita who had heard the discussions silently while everyone was picking flowers, also went towards the house of Suklambara Brahmachari while the others went to perform their daily worship of the Lord. Gadadhara Pandita thought, "Let me go and hear what He speaks about Krsna." He entered the house and hid himself. Sada Shiv, Murari, Sriman, Suklambara and other such highly advanced loving devotees had already assembled there.

Just then, Lord Visvambhara, the crest jewel of the brahmanas appeared in the assembly. They greeted each other happily, but the Lord was all the time engrossed within Himself. As soon as He was in the assembly of Vaisnava devotees He began reciting different slokas.

He said, "I had found my beloved Lord, but then He disappeared. In which direction did He go?" Saying these words He fell down completely paralyzed. The Lord embraced the pillars of the house and began crying out, "Where is Krsna?" and then again fell down. The devotees became affected by the Lord's intense mood of separation from His beloved Lord Krsna, He constantly repeated, "O Krsna, where is My Krsna?" and the devotees became intoxicated in that mood and they swayed and about the room.

Gadadhara Pandita inside the room unseen by anyone fell down unconscious. The devotees lost all sense of direction and identity, nobody knew where he was. They became so overwhelmed with love of Krsna that all external consciousness was lost in them, and Jahnava devi, Mother Ganga was amazed at the whole spiritual scene. After a while, consciousness returned to the Lord and He again repeated Lord Krsna's name and began crying bitterly.

It was a wonderful scene, everyone had lost themselves in an ocean of ecstatic bliss of love of God. The Lord fell repeatedly and continuously lamented, "O my beloved Lord Krsna, where did You go?" In this ecstatic mood the Lord fell many times to the ground unconsciousness, but no bruises or pain were visible on His transcendental body. Loud jubilant cries and weeping in love of Krsna reverberated through the entire house and Suklambara's house became surcharged with the ecstasy of love of Godhead.

After some time, the Lord calmed Himself and sat down, but tears of ecstatic love flowed unrestrained from His eyes. He asked – "Who is inside the house?" Suklambara Brahmachari replied, "Your beloved Gadadhara Pandita." Gadadhara Pandita entered with his head down and his unchecked tears flowed profusely in torrents. This pleased the Lord beyond words. The Lord said, "Dear Gadadhara! You are most fortunate and pious because from your childhood you developed unflinching love for Krsna, but My life has been wasted so far in useless pursuit of material knowledge. Then finally when I found the most precious object of love, He disappeared as a result of my previous impious and profane activities."

Saying this, the Lord Visvambhara again fell unconscious to the ground and the dust covered His entire body. Later His external consciousness returned and then again He fell unconscious, totally lost in ecstatic separation of His beloved Lord Krsna. It was certainly the grace of God that the Lord was not hurt. It became impossible for the Lord to open His eyes because they were brimming with tears of love of Krsna, and the only words He repeated were Krsna's name.

He embraced everyone and cried bitterly and asked, "Where is My beloved Krsna?"

"My dear brothers, please tell Me quickly." The devotees were greatly moved to see His intense pain of separation from Krsna and they remained dumbfounded and lost for words.

The Lord said, "Please release Me from this grief, I only need the son of Nanda Maharaja, the Lord of the Gopis. I need Lord Krsna."

Saying this He again fell down, His hair loose and mingling in the dust. The day passed unnoticed by anyone, and finally the Lord bade farewell to all the devotees.

After the Lord had departed the devotees spoke openly, expressing their surprise. Each one had marveled at the Lord, their external senses and body had become numb. The entire Vaisnava community was overjoyed at the new turn of events.

The word spread quickly, and it was received by all the devotees with great joy and spontaneously they responded by chanting the holy name of Krsna. They could not restrain their amazement and made comments like, "He will reveal God to everyone."

Someone else said, "When Nimai Pandita feels a little better in this condition then He can easily break the heads of atheists."

Another commented, "I have no doubt that He will reveal to the world the most confidential pastimes of Lord Kṛṣṇa." Another commented, "Perhaps, because of His association with a pure devotee like Isvara Puri, He saw the Supreme Lord Kṛṣṇa." Endlessly they tried to find a possible reason for the Lord's transformation.

The devotees were very happy about Nimai Pandita's condition and they all blessed Him saying, "May He be blessed with the mercy of Lord Kṛṣṇa. The devotees were truly very happy; they danced, sang and cried tears of love with new life.

While the devotees were happily engaged in dancing and singing, the Lord became totally immersed in His mood of ecstatic absorption. He went to the house of Ganga Dasa Pandita. He offered His respects to the feet of His teacher and His teacher got up and affectionately embraced Him. Ganga Dasa Pandita said, "What a glorious life! You have liberated both the families of Your mother and father. All Your students have been awaiting You anxiously, they have not opened their books since You left, and even if Lord Balarama had come in person and told them to read, they would have refused. You have returned to brighten everyone's days, but go home now and tomorrow come back and begin Your teaching. The Lord again offered His obeisances to His teacher before He left, and all the students surrounded the Lord like many stars surrounding the moon.

He went to the house of Mukunda Sanjay and sat in the courtyard of the Durga temple. The whole household of Mukunda Sanjay was overwhelmed with joy. The Lord embraced Purusottama Sanjay and drenched him with tears of love. The ladies, elevated with joy, made auspicious sounds and the whole house was reverberating with jubilant sounds. The Lord glanced mercifully at everyone and returned back to the house.

He came and sat in the temple room, then affectionately bade everyone farewell. Whoever came to meet the Lord and spoke to Him went away bewildered, unable to comprehend the Lord's mood. No trace of previous arrogance or showing off His learning remained in the Lord's character. Everyone saw that He was completely detached and engrossed in deep meditation.

Mother Saci was completing at a loss. She could not understand her son anymore. She prayed constantly to Mother Ganga and Lord Viṣṇu for her son's well being. She prayed, "O my Lord Kṛṣṇa Candā, You have taken my husband. You have also taken my son. There is only Nimai who remains with me. O Kṛṣṇa, I am helpless and alone, just grant me this one favor: let my child Viśvambhara remain in the house healthy and whole."

Mother Saci would bring Lakṣmī devī and make her sit in front of the Lord, and the Lord would stare without noticing her. The Lord continuously recited slokas and kept lamenting and repeating, "Where is Krsna? Where is Krsna?" And at times when the Lord roared in ecstatic bliss, Laksmi devi ran away in fear, and Mother Saci stood helpless and fearful. The ecstasy of love for Krsna kept Him (away) from sleeping, and His unbearable separations from Krsna made Him sit up the whole night through. As soon as He saw anyone, He immediately went inside Himself and did not exhibit any of the ecstatic symptoms.

Early every morning He went for His bath in the Ganga, and on His return from His bath He found the students waiting for Him. The Lord uttered only Krsna's name and nothing else but the students could not understand their teacher in this mood. On the students' request the Lord sat down to teach. The students sat down and opened their books, taking the Lord's name Hari as they used to. The son of Mother Saci, Nimai Pandita was greatly overjoyed at hearing His beloved Lord's name. He again became absorbed, forgetting His external senses, and He looked upon everyone with His merciful glance. Totally absorbed in Krsna, the Lord began explaining to His students. He told His students that the essential lessons of everything was Lord Krsna, all aphorisms, commentaries and dissipations were actually describing the glories of the Holy name.

The Lord said, "The only eternal truth is the Holy name of Krsna, Krsna is the only worshipable Lord in all the scriptures. Krsna is the Supreme Controller, Maintainer, the Lord of the entire creation. Lord Siva, Lord Brahma and every other deity are His servants. Whoever tries to explain anything without describing the lotus feet of Lord Krsna then he is in illusion, his words are untrue and his birth is useless, the entire Vedanta and all the agamas and other philosophical treatises point out that devotion to the lotus feet of Krsna is the only and ultimate goal.

"All the mundane scholars are mesmerized by the illusory potency of the Lord, and they are totally lost because they cannot find shelter at the lotus feet of Krsna. Lord Krsna is an ocean of mercy, and He is the life and soul of every living entity. He is most dear to His surrendered souls, the dear son of Mother Yasoda. A person may be very versed in all the scriptures, but if he has no attraction and attachment for the holy name of Lord Krsna, then he follows the path of destruction and hell. And if a wretched and abominable person chants Lord Krsna's name, then even if he is most sinful, he reaches the supreme abode of Lord Krsna after leaving this material world. This is the verdict of all the scriptures and if anyone doubts it then he is the worst sufferer. If anyone tries to explain the scriptures without having taken shelter of the lotus feet of Lord Krsna, then such a degraded person can never know the purport of the scriptures. He pretends to be a teacher of the scriptures yet he does not know the real purport of the scriptures. He is like a washerman's donkey carrying the load of all the scriptures. Such a soul is truly unfortunate because in spite of his education, he has been forfeited the joy of Krsna consciousness.

"People in general are so foolish, that instead of meditating on the Supreme Lord Krsna they meditate on others, not knowing that the one supreme Lord Krsna offered liberation to the demoness Putana who had come to kill Him. For what greater pleasure do they receive, glorifying Lord Kṛṣṇa; for didn't He redeem the demon Aghasura? That Supreme Lord Kṛṣṇa, whose name alone can purify the entire universe, the miserable living Lord Brahma knows, becomes overwhelmed with joy when he participates in the great festivities surrounding Lord Kṛṣṇa. But these unfortunate souls disregard this, and sing and dance and revel in inauspicious mundane festivities.

"Intoxicated by wealth, high birth, education etc., they do not know the wonders of the holy name of Kṛṣṇa that liberated Ajāmita just by chanting the Lord's name once. My dear students and brothers, please hear me carefully for everything I say is very true, you should just worship the lotus feet of Lord Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the most precious treasure. Lakṣmī devī always desires to serve these lotus feet, and Lord Śiva has become a pure devotee just by taking shelter of them, and these Supreme lotus feet are the ultimate source of Mother Ganga. So all of you, My brothers, please simply desire to take shelter of the Lord's lotus feet. Now I also want to send out a challenge to refute my explanations that I have just rendered."

Lord Viṣvambhara is the Supreme Absolute Truth and the embodiment of transcendental sound vibration, so whatever He speaks is the absolute truth. The mesmerized students listened to the Lord's words with individual attention while the Lord spoke on as if in a trance, revealing the absolute truth. The Lord explained everything in the light of Kṛṣṇa consciousness and He established a facile connection of every word with the Supreme Lord Kṛṣṇa. This was an astonishing feat for the Supreme Lord Himself. Lord Viṣvambhara soon became aware of His external words and coming out of His trance, He became shy wondering what His students would think of Him as being mad or something. So in order to cover it up He said a few words. He asked the students, "How were My commentaries today?"

The students replied, "We could not understand anything. You have described Kṛṣṇa as a purport to every word, who is there who can understand Your explanations?" Lord Viṣvambhara laughed and said, "Listen my dear brothers, pack your books and let's go to the Ganga for a bath." The students put their books away and accompanied Lord Viṣvambhara down to the Ganga. They were all happy to be in the water playing and joking. Lord Viṣvambhara surrounded by all His students, looked like the glowing full moon just rising out of the ocean. All those who saw the Lord frolicking in the waters were extremely pious and fortunate. Even Lord Brahma aspires to see the Lord like this, playing in the water. Everyone who had come to bathe kept looking longingly at the beautiful face of Lord Gaurācandra. They said to each other, "How beautiful He is. His father and mother are really blessed."

Mother Ganga could not contain the joy she experienced by the Lord's presence in her waters. Her waters swirled, sending out dancing waves of ecstasy. She was dancing with joy – she wanted to serve those lotus feet that are even desired by Ananta Śeṣa and all the demigods. So her many thousand waves washed the Lord's lotus feet. Only the Vedas know the truth about all such transcendental activities of the Lord and His devotees, and in the future someone will come and reveal these wonderful pastimes of the Lord.

Finishing His bath the Lord returned home and the students went back to their respective homes. He changed His clothes and washed His feet and then offered water to the Tulasi plant. He performed His daily worship of Lord Govinda and then came to take His meal. Mother Saci brought His plate with rice, Tulasi Manjari and other preparations. The Lord offered it to Visvakesara and then the Lord of the entire universe began taking His meal. Mother Saci, the mother of the universe, sat in front of the Lord as He ate. Meanwhile Laksmi devi, the goddess of fortune, remained inside unseen and looked at the Lord.

Mother Saci asked, "My son, what book did You read today? And who did You have an argument with?" The Lord replied, "Today we read about the holy name of Krsna and the glories of His lotus feet, the abode of all excellencies. His name and transcendental qualities are eternal – chanting and hearing the Lord's name are also eternal. His surrendered servants and devotees are also eternal. That scripture is true and eternal, that explains the process of devotional service to the Supreme Lord Krsna. Otherwise, such a book cannot be called a scripture – it is an atheistic and shallow book. The Vedic scriptures say, 'that scripture which fails to establish the process of devotional service is to be rejected. Even if Lord Brahma himself was to come and speak from it, one should never hear him speak.'

"If the lowest man in human society, the dog-eaters, utter Krsna's holy name, then he is not the lowest of mankind; and a Brahmin born in a high family is not a Brahmin if he does not follow the principles of scripture and religion." Lord Visvambhara spoke to His mother just like Lord Kapila had spoken to His mother, Devahuti.

"Dear mother, listen to the wonderful influence of the process of devotional service to Lord Krsna. Try to develop in every respect, attachment to the Supreme Lord. The devotees of Lord Krsna can never be destroyed. The fearful death himself is afraid of a servant of the Lord. The excruciating pains of birth and death and living in the womb of the mother is never experienced by the Lord's devotees. All such sufferings are unknown to the devotee.

"Whoever refuses to worship the lotus feet of Krsna, who is the father of every living entity, is a great sinner, an enemy of his own father, and becomes a resident of Hell, birth after birth. My dear mother, please listen attentively how frightful a living entity suffers if he is not willing to serve the lotus feet of the Lord.

Again and again he has to enter into the womb of his mother as a sinful creation. He is subjected to unbearable suffering in the womb. Everything the mother eats pains him. Whether it is spicy, salty or sour, he suffers unable to do anything. He cannot protect himself against the many worms and bacteria that nibble his soft unprotected flesh. Unable to move, he suffers everything inside the hot and sticky womb. He lives through this nightmare if his fate allows him to. There are some who are extremely sinful; they are condemned to die within the womb again and again.

The living entity after remaining seven months within the womb, begins to gradually understand his position. He remembers his previous birth and promise, and he begins to repent for his mistake. He sighs and prays heedlessly to Lord Kṛṣṇa, 'Oh Lord Kṛṣṇa! Please save me! You are the life and soul of all the living entities.

"You are the only shelter to turn to for the living entities in distress. Due to my forgetfulness, Kṛṣṇa, I have been captured by the external energy of the Lord. Oh Lord, You who are the Lord of all the energies, please relieve me by an easy death. I have wasted my life chasing after illusory and temporary happiness such as family, children, wealth etc., and I neglected your priceless and eternal lotus feet.

"The son who I raised so lovingly and in a life of sin, where is he now? where is everything? What have all my activities brought me? Who will save me from this untold suffering? My Lord, You are the only friend in this distress. Now I know that Your lotus feet are the only eternal shelter, O Lord Kṛṣṇa! Please save me. I take the shelter of Your lotus feet. Oh foolish me, I have left such a merciful Lord as Yourself, who is like a touchstone sufficing all desires, and I became mad after illusion and forgot You.

"For such a crime my present suffering condition is a proper punishment, but now, Oh Lord, please be merciful upon me. Grant me just this one favor, that I may never forget You and neglect Your lotus feet. That wherever I am, whether living or dying, I can always remember You. I do not want to be in that place where there are no assemblies of Your devotees. I do not even want to be in Indra loka if they do not celebrate Your festivals.'

"The Srimad Bhagavata says, 'An intelligent person does not take interest in a place, even in the topmost planetary system, if the pure river of topics concerning the Supreme Lord's activities does not flow there – if there are no devotees engaged in service on the banks of such a river of piety – or if there are no festivals and sankirtana yajna to satisfy the Lord, (especially since sankirtana yajna is recommended in this age). Better, Oh Lord, to live cramped up perpetually in a airtight mother's womb suffering constantly, if I can remember Your lotus feet there. But I never want to live in a place where I must forget Your lotus feet. O Lord, please be merciful and never put me in a place like that.

"So many millions of births I have suffered in this abominable position, Oh Lord. They were all due to my own sinful activity. Let me always remain in that precarious and suffering position if You mercifully appear on the mirror of my memory, because You are the essence of all Vedic scriptures. Oh Lord, please offer me Your servitude, and keep me eternally at Your lotus feet, just like a sold-out slave. And if this time You relieve me from this painful condition, then I want nothing other than Your lotus feet.'

"In this way the living entity suffers unbearable pain within the womb, yet he still loves this painful condition because he can still remember Lord Kṛṣṇa. Praying to the Lord in this manner the devotee does not feel the pain anymore, and soon he comes out of the womb unwillingly.

"Oh mother, please listen carefully to the position of the conditioned living entity. As soon as he enters this world he loses all of his knowledge. Sometimes he is sleeping as though unconscious – sometimes crying, breathing deeply. Unable to express himself, he is drowned in an ocean of suffering.

"The living entities are eternal servants of Lord Kṛṣṇa. If they turn away from the Lord then they suffer the punishment meted out by the illusory potency of the Lord. After some years, knowledge and intelligence blossom within him, and then if he worships Lord Kṛṣṇa he is truly fortunate and pious. But if, by the influence of bad association, he does not worship the lotus feet of Lord Kṛṣṇa, then he falls down into the dark well of sin and suffering.

"The Srimad Bhagavatam says, 'If therefore, the living entity again associates with the path of unrighteousness, influenced by sensually-minded people engaged in the pursuit of sexual enjoyment and the gratification of the palate, he again goes to hell as before.'"

----- [Texts 237 to 263 are missing] -----

He continually chanted Lord Kṛṣṇa's name, feeling great ecstasy and sometimes He laughed out loud, sometimes roared out loud, and sometimes His whole body broke out in horripilation. In this way different symptoms manifest within Him. When He sat down to teach, He connected the root of every single word to Kṛṣṇa. All His purports and commentaries described Kṛṣṇa. This new transformation in Him seems to be so alien to us. "Please, Oh Master, please tell us what we can do?"

Ganga Dasa Pandita, the jewel-like teacher of Navadvīpa, smiled after listening to the complaints of the students, he told them, "Go home now and return tomorrow morning, I will teach Nīmaī a lesson. I will see that He tutors all of you properly from now on. Be here with your books tomorrow morning to attend Nīmaī's class."

The students were relieved and happy, and came back the next afternoon to attend Viśvambhara's classes. The Lord touched His master's feet with respect, and Ganga dasa Pandita blessed His master's feet with respect, and Ganga dasa Pandita blessed him saying, "May You become highly learned." Ganga dasa Pandita then said, "My dear Viśvambhara, I must tell You something. You know that it is no small matter for a brahmin to be able to teach. It is a question of good fortune.

"Your grandfather is none other than Sri Vilambhara Cakravarti, and Your father Sri Jagannatha Misra, both great scholars. Neither of Your parent's families are illiterate, and You Yourself are a very able scholar with an exceptional faculty to give commentaries. Would You say that one achieves the path of devotion by giving up his education and learning? In that case aren't Your parents devotees of the Lord? The only thing that I know is that You should learn and study properly, and only through proper education and learning can one become a Vaisnava brahmin.

"How can an illiterate brahmin develop the faculty for discriminating between good and bad, proper and improper? My knowledge tells me to chant Kṛṣṇa's name and continue Your education. Go and teach the scriptures in the proper way with the proper explanations, and do not try to misconstrue its meanings. It brings me tremendous anxiety."

The Lord replied, "By your grace and the mercy of your lotus feet, there is no one in Navadvīpa who can defeat Me in any argument? Who can refute My arguments, and then establish a new and original concept? I will go into town and teach. I would like to see who has the courage to find the faults and mistakes in My commentaries."

The teacher, Gāṅgā dāsa also Pāṇḍita, was very pleased when Viśvambhara offered His obeisances to His master and left. Gāṅgā dāsa Pāṇḍita is so fortunate and such an elevated personality, that his disciple offered obeisances to his feet, and His disciple is none other than Sarasvatī devī the Goddess of learning. For what more can Gāṅgā dāsa Pāṇḍita aspire? His disciple is the most worshipable Lord of the entire universe.

Lord Viśvambhara walked down the street surrounded by His students like the shining full moon against a velvet dark firmament surrounded by so many stars.

Lord Viśvambhara, whose lotus feet are worshiped by Lakṣmī devī within her heart eternally, came and sat on the bank of the river Gāṅgā. There He began His explanations and commentaries, establishing, refuting, and then reestablishing different points.

The Lord said, "In Kali yuga the so-called scholar has no idea of conjugation, but receives the title of Bhattacharya. One who has no knowledge of philosophy, he has the audacity to debate, but none of these scholars can ever challenge Me. Whatever arguments I establish and whatever I refute, let Me see if there is anyone who can challenge this!" Like this, the Lord of the universe, Viśvambhara, boldly challenged everyone. And who is there who can take up that challenge?

The scholars who came to pay their respects to mother Gāṅgā heard Lord Viśvambhara's bold words in fearful silence, their scholarly pride broken to pieces. Is there anyone in Navadvipa who can challenge Visvambhara in debate? The Lord continued to speak for four hours as if in a trance, explaining and giving commentaries. It was late in the evening yet the Lord did not stop. Then the Lord visited another gentleman's house, and this happened to be the house of a very pious brahmana whose name was Ratnagarbha Acarya. He was a close acquaintance of Lord Visvambhara's father – both were born in the same village. He had three sons who were elevated devotees of the Lord, full of spiritual humour. They were like the bees which gather nectarine pollen from the lotus feet of Lord Krsna. Their names were Krsnananda, Jiva and Vadunatha Kavicandra. Ratnagarbha Acarya was a great devotee of the Lord and was very fond of the Srimad Bhagavatam. He was now reading from the Bhagavatam with great respect and affection.

He read, "The wives of the Jagat brahmana saw a beautiful young boy. His complexion was darkish. He wore a golden yellow cloth. He was nicely decorated with flower garlands around His neck – a peacock feather slanted sideways out of His crown where precious stones and metals glistened brightly like stars. He was with His friends. He stood leaning against a dear friend, His left hand only. His shoulders and with his right hand He twirled a beautiful lotus flower. His ears were decorated with earrings in the shape of lotus flowers. His cheeks carried decorative designs of sandalwood paste, and His sweet smile played on His lotus-like mouth." These words of Srimad Bhagavatam spoken with great devotion entered the ears of Lord Visvambhara. The devotion of the speaker affected the Lord and as soon as He heard these words, the Lord fell down unconscious overcome with loving spiritual ecstasy.

All the students were amazed at the sight. After remaining in a trance for a while the Lord regained His external consciousness. When He was able to speak the Lord said to Ratnagarbha Acarya, "Go on, Go on", and He rolled on the ground in ecstasy. The Lord urged him on saying, "Go on, Go on," and the brahmana continued to read, and everyone floated on the ocean of nectar-like love of Krsna. Unrestrained tears from the Lord's eyes flooded the entire world. All the ecstatic symptoms like shivering, horripilation and crying manifested in the Lord's person.

The brahmana was extremely happy and he continued to read the slokas with great inspiration. The Lord was very satisfied with the brahmana's devotion, and He embraced him warmly. Being touched, Ratnagarbha Acarya experienced immense bliss. He fell down and held the Lord's lotus feet crying, and from that moment he became trapped by the love of Lord Caitanya.

He continuously read the slokas from Srimad Bhagavatam, and the Lord responded roaring loudly, "Go on. Go on."

The people were completely amazed at this sight and they realized that something extraordinary was taking place. Then Gadadhara Pandita intervened and told the Acarya, "Do not read any further." He stopped reading and they all sat down surrounding the Lord. When external consciousness returned to the Lord, He inquired, "Tell Me what happened? Did I act very restlessly?"

The students replied, "What ability do we have to be able to explain Your activities? All we know is that You are very fortunate." The Lord's friends and relatives discouraged them and said, "Do not praise Him like this." The Lord now withdrew His emotions within Himself and He accompanied all the students to the bank of the Ganga. The Lord sprinkled some water on His head offering His obeisances to the Ganga and sat down on her banks.

Nimai Pandita, the son of Mother Saci, sat with all the students discussing topics about Krsna, as Lord Krsna sat with all the young damsels of Vrndavana on the banks of the Jamuna. He spent some time with the boys and then everyone returned to their respective homes. The Lord returned to His home and after His meal He lay down to rest just like Maha Visnu lies down for Yuganidram. After a good night's sleep the students returned early in the morning with their books to see the Lord.

The Lord went for His daily ablutions to the Ganga and upon returning, sat down with His students and began explaining and commenting on the different aspects of grammar. But all of His explanations and commentaries revolved around one subject only: Krsna, and the process of devotional service to the Lord.

The students inquired, "What is the definition of verbal roots?"

The Lord replied, "It is the energy of Lord Krsna. My dear students I will now explain the aphorisms of verbal roots. Let me see who can refute my explanation!

"There have been many kings with beautiful bodies, decorated with golden ornaments, flower garlands and sandalwood paste. People say that they are representatives of Laksmi, the goddess of fortune, and their words are the words of Yamaraja, the presiding demigod of religious principles. Let me explain to you what happens when 'Dhatu', or life, leaves their body.

"Where goes their physical beauty, their decorations and their power? Some of them turn to ashes and some become buried underneath the earth. Lord Krsna is present in everybody in the form of His energy 'Dhatu', or His life. Living entities love this and they offer their devotion to Him. All these other so-called scholars and teachers are very confused. They do not understand the real meaning of 'Dhatu' or verbal roots. So all of you now listen attentively.

"The kingly personality, who was for so long worshiped and respected, becomes contaminated as soon as life leaves him; and when his body is touched, one must take a bath. The son who spent happy hours on the lap of his father must touch fire to the dead father's mouth and burn his body to ashes. Therefore the definition of 'Dhatu' or essential substance, is the energy of Lord Krsna that is loved by everyone.

"Now I want to see if there is anyone capable of refuting this explanation. So the energy of Krsna is so pure, transcendental and worshipable – develop unflinching faith and devotion in Lord Krsna. Just chant Krsna's name, worship His lotus feet and hear only the name of Lord Krsna.

"Spend all of Your time meditating on the lotus feet of the Lord. Just take shelter of the lotus feet of the son of Nanda Maharaja, for if one simply worships the lotus feet with a little water and grass or leaf then the Lord of death can never approach him. Just worship Him, He who has by killing Aghasuma and Baksara and Putana given them liberation. Ajamila at the point of death cried out his son's name Narayana, and even after a sinful life, by worshipping the Lord's lotus feet and remembering the Lord, he gave up attachment for his son and went to the spiritual sky, the Vaikuntha planets.

"Simply take shelter of those Supreme lotus feet of Lord Sri Krsna. Lord Siva and Laksmi devi are always desirous of worshipping those lotus feet. Lord Ananta Sesa very humbly always glorifies the wonderful mercy of the lotus feet of Lord Krsna. As long as there is life within the body, and strength in the limbs and mind, take shelter of devotional service to the lotus feet of Lord Krsna. Krsna is your mother – Krsna is your father – Krsna is your very life and soul. Simply embrace His lotus feet and offer your mind, words and body completely to Him."

Lord Visvambhara who is the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Sri Krsna, explained the devotion mood of servitorship to Himself. He was unaware that it was already past noon, and still He continued. The students listened as if hypnotized with undivided attention. No one felt like disturbing or making contradictory remarks. One must understand that these students are not ordinary mortals. They are all servants of Lord Krsna. Otherwise how can they be personally taught by the Supreme Lord Krsna. After a while Lord Visvambhara came out from this trance and looked at everyone's face feeling a little ashamed and shy. He asked, "How were My explanations on verbal roots?"

The students replied, "You have revealed the truth to us, Your explanations on the word meanings are impossible to be refuted or contradicted by anyone. All of your explanations are eternal truths, but the reference we use for our understanding may comply with the present day grammatical concepts of the so-called scholars, but we can understand that these are not the proper meanings."

The Lord said, "Can any of you explain how My word disorders are influencing My mind? Instead of explaining the nature of word roots, I do not know whose nature or what I am talking about!"

The students replied, "You have always described the glories of the holy name of God. All of Your commentaries and definitions and purports describe Lord Kṛṣṇa and His transcendental potencies. Who can understand such esoteric subject matters? The transformation we notice come over You as soon as You hear transcendental subject matters of Kṛṣṇa lila and His holy name are so wonderful that we cannot think of You as an ordinary personality."

The Lord inquired, "What sort of transformation did you see in Me?"

The students replied, "It was marvelous, the different emotions that played on You like shivering. Your tears, and Your entire body was covered with horripalations. We have never seen anything like this before. Yesterday we accompanied You to the bank of the river Ganga where You were explaining from the books to us. In one of those houses a brahmana was reciting a sloka, and You fell down unconscious as if the life air had left Your body. We were bewildered and amazed. And when You came out of Your trance, unrestricted tears poured out of Your eyes in streams, like the flowing of the Ganga. Finally You began shivering so uncontrollably that even a thousand men could not have held You still. Horripalation covered You from head to toe, and You perspired profusely. You lay upon the ground as if You were a golden statue in the dust. Everyone present marveled at You, and they all said that He is the supreme Lord Nārāyaṇa. Some were saying that You were Śrīla Vyāsadeva, Sukadeva Gosvāmī, Nārada Muni or even Prahlaḍa Mahārāja. You were equal to them in receiving the Supreme Lord's mercy. All of us got together and tightly held You down, and gradually Your external consciousness returned. You do not know any of these details that we have just described. We want to tell You something more, please listen to us attentively.

"All of Your explanations on word meanings and aphorisms for the last ten days describe the process of devotional service to Lord Kṛṣṇa and the glories of the holy name of Kṛṣṇa. So for the last ten days we have not been able to follow the lessons in the books. We were a little fearful to tell You this. Your profound erudition can explain unlimited meanings of words. It is truly amazing – no one can equal that feat."

The Lord replied, "Ten days without studies! Was it not your duty to tell Me about this?"

The students replied, "Your explanations were very correct: Lord Kṛṣṇa is the eternal truth. This is the verdict of all the scriptures. Your explanations on the Supreme Absolute Truth is absolute education, and is the essence of all scriptures, but we were unable to understand them due to our own faults and limited intelligence."

These words greatly pleased the Lord. He gently blessed them and said, "My dear students, you have truly spoken the truth. My words are not meant for others. I am constantly seeing a little boy playing the flute. He has a blackish–blue glowing complexion. That is why you always hear Me speaking about Him. All that you have heard is actually the name of Lord Kṛṣṇa, and everything that you see around is the spiritual world Goloka Vṛndavana. Therefore I shall not teach anymore. I give you complete freedom to go to anyone that you want to, and study under him because to tell you the truth I cannot speak about anything other than Lord Kṛṣṇa, His name and His pastimes. It will not be possible for Me to teach you anymore in this condition."

Lord Viśvambhara then tied the books together and handed them to the students with tears in His eyes. The students then spoke up, "We have also decided according to Your desire to give up studies because once we have studied under You, where can we find another teacher who is able to explain and teach the way You do?" The thought of separation from their teacher was too heavy a burden for the students to bear and they began to lament. They said, "Those explanations that we have heard from You, we want to treasure in our hearts birth after birth, to meditate upon them. What is the use of studying further, and who would we go to? All that we have learned from You is more than sufficient for us."

Overcome with feelings and with folded hands they prayed to the Lord and then tied their books. The students were now extremely happy and they jubilantly shouted Lord Hari's name. Lord Viśvambhara embraced His students and began to weep.

Everyone was drowned in the waves of joy. Their voices choked with ecstatic bliss. The son of mother Saci, Lord Caitanya, then blessed them saying, "If I ever become a true servant of Lord Kṛṣṇa then may all of your desires be fulfilled. All of you please take shelter of Lord Kṛṣṇa, and always chant Lord Kṛṣṇa's holy name. Try to hear Kṛṣṇa's name always and may Kṛṣṇa become your most precious object and your very life and soul. Whatever you have studied so far, that is enough. There is no need to study any further. Now all of you get together and chant Lord Kṛṣṇa's name in one place. By Kṛṣṇa's mercy may the purport of all the scriptures manifest within you. All of you are my dear friends, birth after birth."

The words of the Lord were like nectar in the students ears and they became extremely happy. I offer my obeisances unto the feet of all such students who are so elevated and fortunate to become the direct disciples of the Supreme Lord Viśvambhara. All of them are eternal servants of the Supreme Lord Kṛṣṇa. How could it be any other way – Kṛṣṇa Himself personally taught them.

One is freed from material bondage just by seeing that person who has seen these wonderful scholarly pastimes of the Supreme Lord. What a miserable birth I have taken, that I was excluded from seeing such transcendental pastimes and sights of the Lord. Still I pray for Your mercy, Oh Lord, that these pastimes of the Lord in the mood of a scholar may remain eternally within my heart. The Lord of Vaikuntha appeared in Nadia to teach in the mood of a scholar. The signs of His appearance are still visible now.

The transcendental pastimes of the Lord are eternal and unlimited, without beginning or end. The scriptures describe His eternal pastimes as unmanifest and manifest. The Lord had now begun His pastime of congregational chanting of the holy name which is the ultimatum of all learning and education.

The students were sad and weeping. The Lord was very moved and He spoke to them in comforting words, "Now you can fulfill the purpose of your studies by chanting and singing the holy name of Krsna."

The students inquired, "Oh Lord we do not know how to perform this chanting or singing. Why do you not please teach us!"

The Lord began singing, "Hare haraye nama Krsna Yadavaya namah, Gopala Govinda Ram Sri Madhusudana". He clapped His hands and led the students in a beautiful kirtana.

Lord Visvambhara is the Lord of the chanting the holy name of Krsna, the propagator of the congregational chanting and now He sang the Lord's holy name surrounded by His students. He was in an ecstatic trance tasting the intoxicating nectar of His own name, rolling in the ground oblivious to everything around Him. He repeated, "Sing on, Sing on", and kept falling on the ground and the earth seemed to split open each time He crashed to the ground.

The residents of Navadvipa hearing the great commotion coming from the Lord's house rushed to that spot. When the neighboring Vaisnavas heard His loud kirtana they quickly came to Lord Caitanya's house. The Vaisnavas saw the Lord's ecstatic trance, and they marveled deep within themselves. Feeling great happiness they thought that now, at long last, kirtana has made an appearance in Navadvipa. Where in the entire universe is there the practice and propagation of such a rare devotional service? Such devotional ecstasy is the perfection of sight.

This very same Visvambhara had been the epitome of arrogance, but now the devotional ecstasy He manifested is rarely achieved even by Narada Muni and others. If such a degree of devotion is exhibited by such a vain glorious personality, I (we) do not understand the will of Lord Krsna and how He can make this happen.

Sometime later, Lord Visvambhara came out of His ecstatic trance, and simply repeated, "Krsna! Krsna!"

Although external consciousness returned, the Lord spoke nothing about this mundane world. He just embraced all of the Vaisnavas and cried. Finding the Lord agitated by ecstatic emotions, the Vaisnavas pacified the Lord. Feeling great joy, they then left the Lord's house.

Some of the Lord's students, infected by the Lord's love of God took to the path of renunciation, cultivating detachment from material existence and attachment for the lotus feet of the Supreme Lord Krsna.

The Lord, Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu, had now begun the congregational chanting of the holy name of the Lord. He has begun to freely and profusely distribute the nectar of His own holy name, thus washing away all of the sufferings of all the Vaisnava devotees.

Lord Sri Krsna Caitanya and Lord Nityananda Prabhu are my life and soul.

I, Vrndavana Dasa, humbly offer this song at Their lotus feet.

Chapter 2

All glories to the moon-like Sri Gauracandra whose cooling rays benedict the entire universe. Kindly offer me Your lotus feet as the eternal treasure of my heart. All glories to Lord Gauranga and His devotees. If one hears the transcendental pastimes of Lord Sri Caitanya he surely attains the highest stage of love of God.

Advaita Acarya Prabhu heard the different comments from the Vaisnavas about the Lord's ecstatic trance, and he was extremely pleased. Overcome with joy, he spoke to the Vaisnavas: "My dear devotee brothers, I had a dream last night which I wish to reveal to all of you. I was feeling very sad and dejected, and I was fasting because I could not understand the text of the Bhagavad-gita. Sometime during the night a person came to me in my dream and said, 'Wake up Acarya! Take your food immediately. I will reveal to you the real meaning of the Bhagavad-gita text. But first, you must rise and eat, then worship Me.

'Discard this melancholy from your heart, for your austerities and vows have finally reaped a full harvest. All of your fasting, your worship, and your endless entreaties to the Lord crying, "Krsna! Krsna!", and the vow you made with lifted hands for the advent of the Lord, will all come to fruition. The chanting of Lord Krsna's holy name will constantly reverberate in every country, in every town, and in every village. By your mercy, everyone will be able to see here, in this Navadvipa, in Srivasa's house, devotional ecstasy that is rarely achieved even by Lord Brahma. Now I will take your leave, but first you must eat. I will appear to you again in the future.'

"When I opened my eyes I saw our Lord Visvambhara, but within moments He vanished from my sight. I do not understand the mysterious ways of Lord Krsna, how He acts and to whom He reveals what secrets.

"Visvambhara's elder brother, Visvarupa, use to come to my house and discuss Bhagavad-gita. At that time Visvambhara was a most exquisite child who was very charming to look at. He would come to my house to call His brother. The little child, Visvambhara, captivated my entire being with His extraordinary beauty. I would spontaneously bless Him saying, 'May You develop pure devotion to the Lord.'

"The child hailed from an illustrious family of great scholars; His maternal grandfather was Sri Nilambara Cakravarti. Lord Visvambhara is a great scholar, so it is natural that He would become attached to Lord Kṛṣṇa. It is extremely pleasing to hear all the wonderful activities of Visvambhara. All of you kindly bless Him that He may develop the purest and highest devotional mood. May the Supreme Lord Kṛṣṇa be merciful upon everyone and benedict them that they become totally mad with the chanting of the Lord's holy name. If there is any truth to my words, then in the future everyone will come to the house of this great brahmana, Sri Visvambhara."

Advaita Acarya Prabhu roared jubilantly and all of the devotees joined in with Him. The Supreme Personality of Godhead descended in the form of His name, and everyone chanted, "Hari! Hari!".

Someone said, "Nimai Pandita has now become a great devotee, so He will propagate the congregational chanting of the holy name of the Lord and increase our joy." The devotees offered their obeisances to Advaita Acarya Prabhu and left in great ecstasy, chanting the holy name of Lord Hari.

Whenever Lord Visvambhara met anyone on the street He would always speak with great affection. When He went for His early morning bath to the Ganges, He met all of the Vaisnava devotees on the way. When He saw Srivasa Thakura He would offer His obeisances. Being very pleased with His behavior, the devotees would bless Him saying, "May You develop unflinching devotion to the lotus feet of Lord Kṛṣṇa. Always chant Lord Kṛṣṇa's name and only hear Kṛṣṇa's glories. Everything becomes auspicious and successful when one worships the Supreme Lord Kṛṣṇa; but without devotional service to His lotus feet, physical beauty, learning, etc., are useless. Kṛṣṇa is the Supreme Father and the life and soul of everyone. Simply try to develop undeviating love for the lotus feet of Lord Kṛṣṇa."

These heartwarming words filled Lord Visvambhara with joy. Lifting His face, He glanced at everyone, showering His mercy. He said, "Your blessings carry the weight of real truth. Who, other than you devotees, will bless Me with such mercy to receive devotional attachment to the Lord's lotus feet? Elevated devotees like yourselves are capable of granting devotional service to the Supreme Lord. Lord Kṛṣṇa is very pleased and showers His mercy upon those who serve His devotees. I consider that it is due to My great fortune that you are teaching Me the process of devotional service to the Supreme Lord. I know that I can become attached to the lotus feet of Lord Kṛṣṇa if I can serve pure devotees like yourselves."

In great humility, the Lord fell down and caught the feet of the Vaisnavas. He rendered service to them by wringing someone's wet cloth, folding someone's dhoti, or sometimes He brought the mud from the river on an usav grass asana. Some days He would carry something heavy for someone and bring it to their house. All the Vaisnavas would mildly protest, saying, "Oh Visvambhara, why are You doing this?" But the Lord continued to serve the Vaisnavas. In this way the Lord would serve His own devotees and servants everyday, performing all varieties of errands for them. He is the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Lord Krsna Himself, yet He gave up His own position to serve His devotees.

All the scriptures proclaim that Lord Krsna is everyone's dearest friend, therefore Lord Krsna never hates or dislikes anyone; He is equally disposed to all living entities. Yet He is even willing to break this injunction for His pure and dedicated devotees. The proof of this statement is that Lord Krsna eliminated Duryodhana's entire family. It is the natural tendency of a pure devotee to serve the Supreme Lord Krsna; and it is Krsna's nature to serve His devotees. Lord Krsna becomes purchased by the love of His surrendered devotees, who are thus able to control Him. Satyabhama in Dvaraka can bear witness to this statement.

That selfsame Supreme Personality, Lord Krsna, is now living incognito in Navadvipa as Lord Gaurasundara, Visvambhara. Yet no one can recognize the Lord and the purpose for which He has accepted this incarnation.

Whoever desires to take shelter of the lotus feet of Krsna must serve His pure devotees. Lord Gauracandra personally taught all the living entities that service to the Vaisnavas is the highest form of worship. Lord Visvambhara did not feel ashamed to serve His devotees. He did all sorts of menial services for them; carrying things for them, washing their cloth, and respectfully holding their hands, etc.

The devotees were very impressed with the Lord's humility. With all good intentions they blessed Him saying, "Worship the lotus feet of Krsna, remember only Krsna, and chant always His holy name. May Lord Krsna be as dear to You as Your very life. Go on repeating Lord Krsna's name, and become His dedicated menial servant. May only Lord Krsna manifest within Your heart, and by Your association may we be freed from all of our sufferings. By Your grace may all of those wretched fools who (ridicule?) the chanting of the Lord's holy name, drown in the nectarean flood of love of Godhead. You have defeated the entire world with Your knowledge of the scriptures; in the same way You must annihilate the fallen atheists with the purity of Your devotion. May we, by Your mercy, be overwhelmed with happiness through chanting Krsna's name and dancing in ecstasy."

All the Vaisnava devotees touched the Lord and blessed Him. Then they revealed to Him the sorrows in their hearts, "Alas! In Navadvipa all the scholars and teachers speak endlessly on various subjects, but when it comes to explaining the process of devotional service to Kṛṣṇa, they remain silent. There are many great scholars, stalwarts of the renounced order, and ascetics living in Navadvīpa, yet not one of them is heard glorifying Lord Kṛṣṇa. Instead of praising the Lord's pastimes and explaining the process of devotional service, they are always criticizing. A sinful audience hears their words and believes in them; thus they treat us worse than dirt or grass in the street. My Lord, chanting of Kṛṣṇa's name cannot be heard anywhere, so we are burning in the fire of distress. Lord Kṛṣṇa is now pleased with us, therefore He has inspired You from within to take to the path of devotion. Now we know for certain that You will be the cause of annihilating the atheists. May You live forever chanting the holy name of Kṛṣṇa, and may all the transcendental qualities of Kṛṣṇa be revealed by You to the entire world."

The Lord accepted the blessings of His devotees with deep gratitude, for a Vaiṣṇava's blessings can increase one's attachment to the lotus feet of Kṛṣṇa.

The distressing plight and words of the devotees affected Lord Viśvambhara, and He considered revealing Himself very soon. The Lord replied, "You are all beloved devotees of the Lord, whatever you say must certainly happen. My life is truly blessed by your encouraging words. I know that when you glorify the Supreme Lord Kṛṣṇa and chant His holy name then there is no one who can stop you, not even death! What can a sinful atheist do to you? Just continue chanting the glories of Kṛṣṇacandra. The Supreme Lord cannot bear to see His devotees suffer, therefore Lord Kṛṣṇa appears in different incarnations to protect His devotees. I see now that you will be the cause of Śrī Kṛṣṇa Candra's appearance in His next incarnation in Navadvīpa to convert this whole place into the spiritual planet of Vaikuntha. You will redeem this world from illusion. Please allow me the favor that I may always be your humble servant."

Lord Viśvambhara then touched the feet of all the Vaiṣṇavas, and the devotees in return spontaneously blessed Him profusely. Finishing their bath in the Ganga, they dispersed and returned to their respective houses.

The Lord was feeling extremely joyful, but as He began to contemplate the words of the devotees and the suffering they were experiencing, He felt anger rising within Him and a desire to punish the atheistic society. He roared angrily, repeating, "I shall destroy them! I shall destroy them! I am Him, I am Him!" Conflicting emotions took hold of the Lord, sometimes He laughed, sometimes He cried, sometimes He fell unconscious, and sometimes He felt like beating and destroying. The Lord thus manifested His terrible mood of destroying the miscreants.

Mother Saci could not understand her son; everything seemed very perplexing. She thought that some disease had attacked the Lord. Mother Saci felt nothing but affection for her son, so she was deeply affected by this peculiar transformation in Him. She discussed it with everyone she met, "The Lord has already taken away my husband and my son, and all that I have left is this young boy. Now His actions perplex me, I do not know how to think of Him. Sometimes He laughs, sometimes He cries, and at other times He falls down unconscious. Often He speaks to Himself, and sometimes He yells out loud saying, 'Break the heads of those atheists!' Sometimes He runs to a tree and climbs into its branches, then suddenly with closed eyes He falls down to the ground. Sometimes His grinding teeth make a grating noise. Sometimes He claps His hands on His body, then falling down, He rolls on the ground, not saying a word."

The ordinary, ignorant people could not see the symptoms of love of Godhead in the Lord and thought it to be some disease, a sort of wind disorder. They suggested that He should remain bound up. Mother Saci's description of the Lord's condition attracted many people to come and see Him. When the Lord saw the people He charged at them. These ignorant fools simply laughed and ran away, thinking that the Lord was suffering from some wind disorder.

Mother Saci became flustered and ran after the people to pacify them. Some of the people told her, "He is definitely suffering from some wind disorder." While others said, "You are just an ignorant brahmana's wife, what is there to ask about this? It is apparent that He is suffering from some wind disorder. Give Him coconut water to drink and tie His feet in case He gets violent when madness overcomes Him." Some others suggested, "He is not to be cured with some simple medicine, you must give Him nothing less than 'siva ghee' to relieve Him from this attack of wind disorder. Apply the ghee on His head and then give Him a bath."

Saci devi, the affectionate, kind, and noble minded mother of the entire universe, became fraught with apprehension. Feeling at a loss, she simply prayed to Lord Govinda, taking complete shelter in Him. She sent people to the house of Srivasa and various other devotees, requesting them to come there.

One day Srivasa Pandita came to visit the Lord, and Visvambhara immediately got up and greeted Him with respect. Upon seeing a pure devotee of the Lord, Visvambhara's ecstatic emotions increased.

As Srivasa Pandita was circumambulating tulasi devi, the Lord manifested ecstatic symptoms: crying, shaking, shivering, horripilating(?), and then falling down unconscious on the ground. After a while, when external consciousness returned to the Lord, He began crying profusely and shaking uncontrollably. To Srivasa Pandita all these manifestations of the Lord were wonderful. He thought to himself, "These are the symptoms of the highest spiritual ecstasy of love of Godhead. Foolish persons misunderstand and think this is due to a wind disorder."

When the Lord could speak, He said to Srivasa Pandita, "Oh, it is you Pandita! What do you make of My condition? Some people are suggesting that I should be kept bound up because I suffer from some terrible wind disease. What is your opinion?"

Smiling, Srivasa Pandita replied, "Good wind, I also want to be attacked by the same wind that is causing this disorder in You. Actually, I see signs of great spiritual ecstasy of love of Godhead in You. You have been favored by Krsna's mercy."

The Lord was very happy to hear this from Srivasa Pandita and He embraced him affectionately. He said, "Everyone is saying that this is a wind disorder, but now you have given Me great hope. For this I am grateful and forever indebted to you. If you had also said that I was suffering from some wind disorder then certainly I would have jumped into the Ganga."

Srivasa replied, "Your love for the Supreme Lord Krsna has reached such ecstatic heights that it is even desirable by Lord Brahma, Lord Siva, and sages such as Saunaka. Let us all come together and glorify Krsna's holy name without caring about the criticisms of the atheists and sinners."

Srivasa Pandita said to Mother Saci, "Cast your sorrows away, your son does not suffer from wind disorder. I tell you positively that these symptoms are due to the highest love of Krsna. Even though you may see some wonderful and ecstatic pastimes of Lord Krsna, such activities and topics are far beyond the intellectual capacity of ignorant and materialistic nondevotees, so such subjects should not be discussed in their presence."

Srivasa left the house of Lord Caitanya and returned home, leaving behind a pacified and relieved Mother Saci. However, she could not completely remove the despondency she felt within, for she was always afraid that her son would leave home at any moment.

Such were the wonderful activities of Lord Visvambhara. How could anyone understand these transcendental pastimes, unless the Lord Himself revealed them?

One day the Lord and Gadadhara Pandita visited the house of Advaita Acarya Prabhu. Entering his house, They saw that the Acarya was busy offering water and tulasi to the Lord. With raised hands he was calling out, "Hari! Hari!", sometimes laughing and sometimes crying, completely oblivious to himself. He emitted loud, roaring sounds like a mad lion full of raging fury, as if He were the incarnation of the Lord of destruction, Rudra. When Lord Visvambhara saw Advaita Acarya Prabhu overcome with spiritual emotions, He fell down unconscious.

Due to pure devotional insight Advaita Acarya Prabhu could see that this person, Lord Visvambhara, was his most worshipable Lord. He thought to himself, "Today I have captured You, You are a thief. How will You escape from me today? All this time You have been hiding Your real identity from me and everyone, but now somehow You have come here. You cannot always cheat me. I know who You are, and now I will cheat the cheater."

Advaita Acarya Prabhu made all arrangements to worship the Lord, and reveal to the world the supreme absolute position of Lord Visvambhara, who so far had very cunningly hidden His true supreme spiritual identity. He brought all the different paraphernalia for worshipping the Lord. He offered incense, flowers and lamp to the lotus feet of Lord Caitanya while repeating one verse over and over again, "My Lord, You are the well-wisher of the cows and the brahmanas, and You are the well-wisher of the entire human society and world."

Sri Advaita was very happy to recognize the Lord of his heart, and he cried tears of joy, washing the lotus feet of Lord Caitanya with his tears. He stood with folded hands before Him and worshiped His lotus feet, chanting one sloka continuously.

A little amused, but nevertheless respectful, Gadadhara Pandita told Advaita Acarya Prabhu, "Oh Gosvami, it does not befit you to behave like this with someone so much younger than yourself, a mere lad."

Advaita Acarya Prabhu slightly laughed at Gadadhara Pandita's words and replied, "Oh Gadadhara Pandita! How long are you going to see Him as a mere lad?" A more profound thought dawned on Gadadhara Pandita's heart and he said, "Is He the incarnation of the Supreme Personality of Godhead?"

After some time Lord Visvambhara regained His external consciousness, and saw that Advaita Acarya was worshipping Him, absorbed in an ecstatic trance. Lord Visvambhara quickly withdrew into Himself, hiding His real identity. With folded hands He began offering praises in glorification of Advaita Acarya Prabhu. He offered His obeisances to Advaita Acarya and touched his feet, taking the dust and placing it on His head, surrendering His life to Advaita Acarya Prabhu. "You are a magnanimous person," He said. "Please be gracious to Me. I am always your humble servant. Seeing you today is a blessing for me, and if you are merciful I will be able to chant the holy name of Lord Krsna. You can destroy the darkness of nescience because your heart is the permanent residence of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Lord Krsna." The Supreme Lord is most expert in glorifying His devotees, and this wonderful exchange of love and affection between the devotee and the Lord is spontaneous.

Sri Advaita said to himself, "All this is real (bravo?), today I have out-cheated the biggest cheat." The smiling Advaita Acarya replied, "My Supreme Lord, to me You are superior to everyone. Please remain here, I want to be with You and hear the wonderful transcendental pastimes of Lord Krsna, so that I may be able to see You all the time. It is everyone's desire to be with You and chant the glories of Lord Krsna."

The Lord accepted, and appreciating Advaita Acarya's sentiment, He went back to His house. Advaita Acarya Prabhu was now convinced that his dear Lord had appeared. Secretly, he left Navadvipa and went to Santipura to test his bond of affection with the Lord.

He thought, if He is truly the Supreme Personality of Godhead then, I am His humble servant. He is certainly capable of tying His servant with the bonds of love and bringing him to His side."

Who is capable of understanding the mind of Sri Advaita Acarya? By his spiritual potency he was able to invoke the appearance of the Supreme Lord in this world. One who has no faith in these words will soon fall away from the righteous path and be destroyed.

The Supreme Lord Visvambhara continued to perform the congregational chanting of the holy name of the Lord along with all the Vaisnavas. All of them were very happy to have the Lord amongst them, but none of them could actually recognize Him as the Supreme Person. Everyday they saw the Lord go into wonderful ecstatic trance. This was an extraordinary sight for them, and it caused them to wonder whether this personality was actually the Supreme Lord Himself. When the Lord went into one of His ecstatic trances, only Ananta Sesa was able to describe it.

When the Lord was in ecstasy He trembled like a falling autumn leaf. This trembling was so uncontrollable that thousands of devotees could not keep Him still, streams of tears flowed unchecked like hundreds of rivers. His entire body broke out in horripilation(?) like a ripe, golden jackfruit. From time to time He would break into loud laughter, being very amused with Himself. At other times He would fall unconscious to the ground, unable to contain the bubbling ecstasy within. When external consciousness returned to Him, He kept repeating Lord Kṛṣṇa's name.

The loud roaring sound that He sometimes made seemed to burst the eardrums of the nondevotees; but the devotees of the Lord, by His grace, gradually came closer to crossing the ocean of material existence. His body would at times become stiff like a marble statue, and at other times soft and pliable like butter. The devotees saw the wonderful transformations in the Lord, and everyone of them were convinced that it was not humanly possible to manifest such ecstatic symptoms.

They each offered comments according to their own level of understanding. Someone said, "He is definitely a partial incarnation of the Supreme Lord." Someone else said, "He is a great devotee. Maybe He is Sukadeva Goswami, or Prahlada, or even Narada Muni." Another said, "He is here to remove all calamities." The wives of the Vaisnava devotees who observed this also remarked, "Lord Kṛṣṇa has taken His birth again." Another lady said, "I think that He is an incarnation of God." In this way, different people offered different opinions about the Lord. When the Lord finally regained His external consciousness He embraced everyone.

It is impossible for me to describe it. He would pitifully cry out for Krsna saying, "Oh tempter, who steals the hearts of the damsels of Vrndavana! Oh divine friend of the weak and frail! Oh ocean of mercy! Oh My Lord Syama! Alas, Alas! Tell me, How will I spend those awful and fretful days when I am unable to see You?" At other times He cried out, releasing heavy sighs, "Where can I find the sweet face of My Lord that always (flowers the fruit?)" Then gradually becoming still, the Lord revealed the pain in His heart saying, "Please be merciful and hear My pitiful condition. There is no end to My sorrows. Although I have found My life, My dear Krsna, now I have lost Him." The devotees were greatly pleased to hear these words that explained the mystery and increased their faith and reverence. Sitting around the Lord, they all listened as the Lord continued, "While returning from Gaya I came to a village named Kamai Naksala. There I saw a young boy of exquisite beauty. He had a glowing dark complexion, the color of the bark of the tamala tree. His curly hair was decorated with wild flowers. He wore a beautiful crown with a peacock feather stuck in it. All His jewelry and gems shone brightly like the sun.

"It is impossible for Me to describe the beauty of the delicately ornamented flute He held in His hand which captured everyone's heart, and His fine lotus feet which looked so attractive with ankle bells softly touching His skin. His graceful, strong arms were more formidable than a blue pillar, and were covered with sparkling jewels and gems. From His neck hung the famous kaustubha jewel, and His chest was marked with the srivatsa. How will I describe to you the beauty of His yellow golden silken dhoti, His dangling fish earrings, and His lazy lotus petal eyes? Smiling sweetly, He approached Me and embraced Me; then suddenly He ran away, fearing what, I do not know."

No one can enter into these intimate loving moods of Lord Caitanya unless and until He specially blesses someone to understand them. The Lord could proceed only so far with His narrations and then fall down unconscious on the ground, crying out, "Oh My Lord Krsna!" Greatly concerned, all the devotees quickly removed the dust from the Lord's body while loudly chanting, "Krsna, Krsna." The Lord seemed to become a little calm, and then again He became extremely restless crying out, "Where is My beloved Krsna? Where is My beloved Lord?", and He wept bitterly. Finally, the Lord was able to control Himself and could hold Himself still. His body then gradually returned to its butter-soft condition, and the devotees were happy.

The Lord's words, steeped with devotional emotions, filled their hearts to the brim. They said, "We are all feeling very fortunate and blessed to have Your association. Who is attracted by the opulence of Vaikuntha Dhama when You are here? A moment's association with You will enable anyone to taste the highest nectar of devotion. We are all Your followers, protected by You, so kindly lead us in chanting the glories of the Supreme Lord Krsna. We have been burned by the caustic words of the atheists, let your tears of love of Godhead cool us forever."

The Lord was very happy to hear these words from the Vaisnavas, and He returned to His house walking like a mad lion, filled with love of Krsna. Although He returned home, He never behaved like an ordinary, mundane family man in His house. He was always immersed in love of Krsna. Loving tears of separation from Krsna flowed profusely from His eyes like streams. How did the waters which washed His lotus feet in the form of the Ganga now appear in His eyes? He had only one answer to anyone's inquiry. Whenever He saw a Vaisnava devotee He would rush to him asking, "Where is My beloved Krsna? Where is my beloved Krsna?" Crying out like this, He broke down weeping, and the devotees tried to calm Him down.

One day when Gadadhara came to see the Lord, he noticed that the Lord was hiding a betel leaf in his hand. As soon as the Lord saw Gadadhara, He asked, "Where is that blackish boy who is dressed in yellow, and radiant with blossoming, youthful beauty?"

Such earnest yearnings of the Lord for Krsna were truly heart breaking, and it left everyone at a loss for words. Gadadhara Pandita replied bravely, "Lord Krsna resides within Your heart eternally."

When the Lord heard that Krsna was within His heart, He began to pierce His chest with His nails. With immense endeavor Gadadhara Pandita was able to restrain the Lord, holding tightly His hands and trying to calm Him down, "There, Krsna will come just now, try to compose Yourself."

Mother Saci saw how Gadadhara Pandita was able to pacify the Lord, and she was very satisfied with him. She thought, "I have never seen anybody so intelligent as this young boy. I feel afraid to even comfort Him, and this young lad has so intelligently and nicely pacified Nimai." She spoke to Gadadhara Pandita, "Dear boy, stay here always, do not leave Nimai's company to go anywhere else."

Mother Saci was awestruck by the Lord's ecstatic devotional trances. She saw Nimai as merely her young son. "He is not an ordinary mortal," she thought. "How is it possible for an ordinary human being to shed tears like gushing cascades? I do not know which extraordinary personality has come here." Mother Saci was therefore afraid to come in front of the Lord.

Towards the evening all of the Vaisnavas slowly assembled in Lord Caitanya's house. Sri Mukunda Mahasaya began reciting verses in a sweet melodious voice. Mukunda was blessed with such a beautiful voice that as soon as the Lord heard him recite, He went into an ecstatic trance. He loudly resounded the Lord's name, roaring like a lion. Losing His balance He fell in all directions. This made it difficult for the devotees to hold Him. All the ecstatic symptoms manifested within Him simultaneously; he expressed apprehension, laughter, trembling, paling, horripilating, roaring, etc. The devotees were filled with amazement at such a wonderful sight. The Lord's ecstatic absorption in love of God gradually increased in intensity. The whole night passed as if in a moment, and in the early morning hours the Lord came out of His trance.

Day and night, the Lord was totally absorbed in the nectar of kirtana, chanting the holy name. The Lord had already begun propagating the holy name; and seeing Him, all of the devotee's sufferings were destroyed. The beloved son of Mother Saci, Gaurasundara, continuously chanted the Lord's name loudly like the roaring of a lion. Waking the atheists out of their stupor, their kirtan disturbed the nondevotees.

Thus the atheistic population became enraged, and aimed abusive language at the devotees. Someone said, "I cannot even sleep at night." Another commented, "All their screaming and shouting will enrage the Lord, and that will cause their complete destruction." Another said, "They avoid philosophy and speculative knowledge, and so they behave arrogantly." Another said, "Who knows what they sing about? Behind all this mischief is that brahmana Srivasa. He and his three brothers get together and scream, 'Krsna! Krsna!' like madmen, just to fill their bellies. Does not one earn piety by chanting in his mind? Or is it sheer madness? The whole country will be ruined because of this Srivasa. Today I heard in the king's court that they will send two boats with government men to capture anyone who sings kirtana in Nadia. This is the king's order.

"Srivasa Pandita and his men will run away and escape, but we will have to suffer the entire brunt of this. I warned all of you earlier to throw Srivasa's house into the river. But you did not act because you thought I was joking. But now it is too late, the danger has come upon us."

Another said, "What do we care? If the government men come here we will just capture Srivasa and hand him over to them." The atheistic population of Navadvipa discussed about the Vaisnavas in this manner while two boats with the government men came to Navadvipa.

The Vaisnavas heard this news and simply took shelter of the Supreme Lord by remembering Him; in this way all of their fears were dissolved. They said, "Whatever the Supreme Lord Krsnacandra wants will happen, and it is for the best. As long as He is here, then what fear do we have from these wretched people?" Srivasa Pandita was a soft-hearted and magnanimous soul. This news disturbed him, and he became anxious for the well-being of the Vaisnavas. He was apprehensive because he knew that anything could happen under the Muslim rule.

The Supreme Lord Gaurasundara, the Supersoul, knew everything in everyone's heart. The devotees still were not aware that the Supreme Lord had come and was amongst them. Now the Lord began to manifest Himself. Lord Visvambhara roamed everywhere, unperturbed and unconcerned, his transcendental beauty unmatched within the entire creation. His body was decorated with sandalwood paste, His reddish lips were like the early morning sun, and His eyes were like a blooming lotus flower. Cascading curly tresses shone like a halo around His glowing moonlike face. He wore a brahmana thread around His shoulders, and dressed in fine clothes. His exquisite personal beauty completely captivated the mind. Casually chewing on pan, He went for a walk on the river bank.

When the devotees saw the Lord, they became very joyful; but the atheistic people felt intimidated. "He must have heard everything," they said, "Yet He shows no sign of fear. He strolls about as though He is a prince." Another person said, "Listen friends, I understand all this, wait and see. What you are observing now is just another trick to escape."

Fearlessly, Lord Visvambhara looked in every direction, observing the scenic beauty of the swift flowing Ganga and her banks. He saw a herd of cows grazing on the banks. Some of them went to the river to drink water, and a few young ones jumped about with raised tails. Some of them were butting each other, while others just lay around chewing their cud. This sight immediately agitated the Lord. He forgot Himself, and began emitting loud sounds like roaring. He kept saying, "I am Him, I am Him." In this condition the Lord ran to Srivasa's house shouting, "What are you doing now Srivasa?"

Srivasa was engaged in worshiping Lord Nrsimhadeva behind closed doors. The Lord came and kicked the door. The Lord screamed out, "Who are you worshiping? Whom are you meditating on? The person who you are worshiping is here!" Srivasa trembled, and sat awestruck. The Lord spoke to Srivasa calling out, "Oh Srivasa, all this time you did not know who I was. I left My spiritual abode of Vaikuntha and came down to this material world at your beckoning, because of your loud chanting of the holy name, and Advaita Acarya Prabhu's loud calling.

"Not recognizing Me, you are living completely complacent and unconcerned. And avoiding Me, Advaita Acarya Prabhu has gone back to Santipura. I have come to protect the pious and punish the miscreants. There is no need for you to worry, just go on worshiping Me."

Tears filled Srivasa's eyes and his heart swelled with love for the Lord. All his fears were destroyed by His assuring words. Currents of joy passed through his body, and he stood up with folded hands, offering prayers to the Lord. Srivasa Pandita was a good and pure devotee, and a great scholar. Having received the Lord's order, he began to offer prayers to Him.

He recited from the Srimad-Bhagavatam Lord Brahma's prayers to Lord Krsna, "'Oh Lord, You are the eternally worshipable Supreme Personality of Godhead. Your complexion is blackish like the monsoon cloud; and the color of Your cloth is yellow like a flash of lightning. Wild flowers adorn Your ears, and a peacock feather adorns Your crown. Your face looks so exquisite; a gently swaying flower garland hangs around Your neck. Your mouth is smeared with the curd that You have just eaten.

"Your transcendental possessions – the cane, horn, and flute – are special features of Your beauty. Your feet are soft like the petals of the lotus. I worship You, the son of Maharaja Nanda. I worship the lotus feet of Lord Visvambhara, whose complexion is like the blackish monsoon cloud, and who wears a yellow dress. I offer my obeisances at the lotus feet of the son of Mother Saci, whose ornaments are a bunch of wild flowers and a peacock feather.'

"My obeisances at the lotus feet of the disciple, Gadadhara Pandita. Nimai, who is decorated with a flower garland, holds a preparation of sweet rice in His hands. I offer obeisances at the lotus feet of the son of Sri Jagannatha Misra, Nimai. A million full moons fade before the exquisite beauty of His face. I offer my obeisances at Your feet my Lord, You who hold the cane and the flute. I offer my obeisances to Your lotus feet. You who have been declared by the Vedas as the son of Maharaja Nanda."

Srivasa Pandita prayed like Brahma to the Lord's lotus feet. The words of transcendental praise flowed out with ease from his mouth, and he spoke on, "You are the Supreme Lord Visnu. You are Lord Kṛṣṇa. You are the Lord of all sacrifices. The holiest of rivers, the Ganga, has sprung out of Your lotus feet. You are the life and beloved son of Janaka Maharaja, Lord Ramacandra; and You are Lord Nṛsimhadeva. Lord Brahma and Lord Siva are like bumblebees searching for honey at Your lotus feet. You are the knower and compiler of the Vedas; and You are the Supreme Lord Narayana.

"You appeared as Lord Vamana to trick Bali Maharaja. You are Lord Hayagriva. You are the soul of the universe. You are Lord Jagannatha, the moon of Nilacala; and You are the ultimate cause of all causes. Is there anyone who is not subordinate to Your energies, whether it be Your insurmountable material energy or Your internal spiritual energy? Even Lakṣmi devī is unaware of this, although she is Your constant companion. Lord Śeṣa who acts as a friend, companion, and brother, and who serves You in every respect, is even subjected to Your illusory potency, what to speak of others.

"You have placed me into this (??) existence of family life, which is a dark well of forgetfulness. My rare human birth has been wasted because I could not recognize You. In various ways You have deluded me, My Lord, going to the extent of putting on fine clothes, etc, (??) so I was unable to recognize You.

"Oh Lord of my heart, please listen to me. Now that I have met you I disregard all of my fears. All my sorrows and sufferings have vanished. My life has again begun, my day has come. My whole life and all of my endeavors have now become successful. The sun of good fortune has risen in my heart. My fore– fathers have been liberated, and my house has been sanctified. My eyes have never been blessed with such a wonderful sight as I am seeing today. I see Him whose lotus feet are most worshipable by the goddess of fortune, Ramadevi."

Observing the wonderful form of the Lord, Srivasa Pandita was unable to control himself, and he fell into an ecstatic trance. Currents of joy ran through his body, and he merged into an ocean of happiness. With raised arms he wept and breathed heavily, then rolled on the ground.

The Lord smiled and accepted Srivasa's prayers with great satisfaction. "Bring all your relatives in the house and let them see My form," the Lord said. "Along with your wife, worship My feet and ask for any boon that your heart desires."

Following the instructions of the Lord, Srivasa went into his house and gathered all his relatives, friends and wife, and returned quickly to the presence of the Lord. Weeping with joy, Srivasa offered all the flowers collected for the worship of Lord Visnu to the lotus feet of Lord Caitanya. With fragrant flowers, incense, and lamp, Srivasa, along with his wife, brothers, other relatives, servants, and maidservants, offered worship at the lotus feet of the Lord. They fell down and earnestly prayed, pleading for the Lord's mercy.

Srivasa was very dear to the Lord, therefore the Lord blessed him, as well as everyone present, by placing His lotus feet on their heads. Smiling, He said, "May your attachment and attraction for Me increase." The Lord spoke loudly like a roaring lion, and addressing Srivasa said, "Oh Srivasa, are you afraid of something? News has reached Me that the government men want to capture you, and they have come with two boats. I am the Supersoul within everyone's heart; I control and direct everyone's activities according to My sweet will. The king can only capture you if I, being situated in his heart, prompt him to do so.

"Yet, for some reason, if he acts independently and gives the order to capture you, then I will do the following: I will be the first to step into the boat and present Myself before the king. On seeing Me do you think that he will still remain sitting on the throne? I will delude him and take control of him.

"If the king evades this move of mine, then I have another alternative. I will tell the king, 'Listen to the truth, oh king. Call all of your religious heads and judges to come to the court. Collect all of your elephants, horses, animals, and birds, etc. Whatever you have, bring them to your place. Then order all of your Kazi priests to read from your scriptures and inspire every listener to such a state of spiritual emotion that they begin to cry.' If they fail to do so, then I will reveal my true identity to the king.

"Then I will say, 'Oh king, on the instructions of these same Kazi priests, whose spiritual powers we have already witnessed, you want to forbid the congregational chanting of the holy name of God. Now you shall see My power to the full satisfaction of your eyes. I will capture a mad elephant and bring him here, along with other elephants, horses, deer, and other animals, and make them all cry in ecstasy and chant Kṛṣṇa's name.' I will make the king and all his men cry and chant Kṛṣṇa's name. I know that you don't believe that it is possible, but I will show you right now and you can see for yourself."

The Lord noticed a small girl, who was the daughter of Srivasa Pandita's brother, named Narayani. Lord Gauracandra, the Supreme Godhead, the Supersoul within everyone's heart, ordered the little girl, "Narayani! Chant Kṛṣṇa's name and cry in ecstasy." The four year old girl became extremely agitated with ecstatic spiritual emotions and cried out, "Oh Kṛṣṇa!" She began to weep, losing all perception of the external world. Tears streamed down her body, and she fell to the ground. Smiling, Lord Visvambhara asked Srivasa, "Are your fears pacified now?" Vaisnavas will remember for many years to come how Narayani was a recipient of the Lord's mercy.

Srivasa, a very learned Pandita who is well versed in all the scriptural conclusions, threw up both of his hands and said, "My Lord, when you exhibit Your terrible form as all devouring time, and annihilate this entire material creation, I will fearlessly chant Your holy name. Now that You are here, present before me in my house, what fear do I have?"

Seeing the Lord manifest His opulent Vaikuntha form, Srivasa, along with all the assembled relatives, brothers, wife, and servants went into ecstatic trance. The transcendental form of the Lord that even the personified Vedas are eager to see, was now being seen by even the servants and maidservants of Srivasa Thakura. How can I possibly describe the magnanimous nature of Srivasa Pandita? A little dust from his lotus feet can purify the entire creation.

Lord Kṛṣṇa appeared in the prison house of Vasudeva, and all of His pastimes were performed in the house of Nanda Maharaja. Similarly, Lord Caitanya appeared in the house of Sri Jagannatha Misra, but all His Vṛndavana pastimes were performed in Srivasa Pandita's house. Srivasa Pandita was loved by all the Vaisnavas. Anyone who came to Srivasa's house experienced great joy. Even the servants and maidservants in the house of such a devotee can see the rarest of sights, the Supreme Personality of Godhead in person. From this we can understand that serving a pure devotee is the best process of attaining the supreme goal, because by the mercy of a Vaisnava one can certainly receive the shelter of Kṛṣṇa's lotus feet. Lord Visvambhara ordered Srivasa Pandita, "Do not speak about this incident to anyone."

When the Lord regained His external consciousness He felt very ashamed of Himself, and after comforting Srivasa Pandita, He returned to His own house. Srivasa Pandita's whole house was immersed in jubilation.

Whoever reads Srivasa Pandita's prayer to the Lord will immediately be elevated to the position of eternal servant of Lord Kṛṣṇa.

Lord Balarama, my beloved Lord and Master, has spoken to me from within my heart as the Supersoul, and so, on His order, I am writing these wonderful activities of Lord Caitanya.

I pray to the lotus feet of all the Vaisnavas that they bless me so that I may attain the service of Lord Balarama, my Lord and Master, birth after birth.

Just as there is no difference between the name Nrsimha and Yadusimha, in the same way, I know Lord Balarama and Nityananda Prabhu to be the same person.

Lord Balarama is very dear to Lord Caitanyacandra, and in his present incarnation I glorify Him by the name Avadhutacandra.

Lord Sri Krsna Caitanya and Lord Nityananda Prabhu are my life and soul.

I, Vrndavana dasa, humbly offer this song at Their lotus feet.

Madhya Lila

Chapter 3

All glories to Lord Visvambhara, the omnipotent Supreme Lord of all living entities! He is the beloved Lord of Nityananda Prabhu and Gadadhara Pandita. All glories to Lord Caitanya, Advaita Acarya Prabhu, and all the pure devotees of the Lord who have captured Him by their unalloyed devotion!

I, Vrndavana Dasa, am a very wretched and miserable person; so my dear Lord Caitanya, please instill within me the mood of devotion, and redeem me from this ocean of material nescience.

The devotees frequently floated on waves of transcendental bliss, seeing the manifestations of Lord Caitanya's ecstatic mood. Lord Caitanya's devotees were as dear to Him as His very life. Chanting Krsna's name and weeping bitterly in separation of the Lord, Lord Caitanya embraced His beloved devotees, and the devotees gathered around Him, crying in ecstatic joy of love of God.

The devotees, engaged in devotional service, experienced love of God in association with Lord Caitanya. Even stone-like hearts melted at the sight of the Lord's ecstatic manifestations. The devotees found no more interest in wealth, family, children, etc. Day and night they remained by the side of the Lord, chanting Krsna's name.

Lord Gauracandra became totally absorbed in love of Krsna. He exhibited different devotional moods, finding inspiration from the topics the devotees discussed. In the devotional mellow of servitude, He would cry for hours as if Mother Ganga had descended through His eyes. Then, in a jolly mood, He laughed for hours; and when He fell unconscious, He remained without breathing for several hours.

At times when He became aware of His Supreme Personality, He would, with real arrogance(?) say, "I am Him, I am Him, the Supreme Lord," and laugh. "Where is that old man, Advaita Acarya, the one who brought Me here from My spiritual abode? I will fulfill his desire and distribute love of Godhead to every home."

The next moment the Lord cried out, "Oh Krsna, Oh my beloved Lord!", and weeping, He would tie His feet with His long curly tresses. Then He repeated the sloka from the Srimad Bhagavatam where Akrura came to take away Krsna and Balarama to Mathura. He fell to the ground like a stick offering His obeisances, as if He were Akrura. Absorbed in ecstatic trance, He said, "Oh Nanda, let us take Krsna and Balarama to Mathura and see the great festivals at the palace where they are performing the Dhama Yajna sacrifice." In this way, Lord Caitanya exhibited so many ecstatic moods. This gave unlimited joy to all of the devotees present there.

One day the Lord heard the pastimes of Krsna in His incarnation as a boar, Lord Varaha. Roaring He rushed to Murari Gupta's house. Lord Caitanya had a special love for Murari Gupta, just like Lord Ramacandra had a special love for Hanuman. When Lord Gauracandra arrived at Murari Gupta's house, Murari Gupta received the Lord with great respect, offering obeisances to the Lord's lotus feet. The Lord hurried past him shouting, "Boar, boar."

Murari Gupta was left dumbfounded, looking all around him. The Lord entered the temple room of Lord Visnu and saw a beautiful water pot standing in the corner. Just at that moment the Lord took the form of Lord Varaha. Absorbed in this mood, He lifted the water pot with His tusks, and roaring loudly like a boar He stood there with His four hooves.

The Lord ordered Murari Gupta, "Offer prayers to Me Murari!" Murari remained dumbfounded. Amazed by this extraordinary sight, no words came to his mouth. The Lord then said, "Speak up Murari, speak up, you do not have to fear. Don't you know My supreme identity?"

Trembling with fear, Murari pleaded with the Lord saying, "Oh Lord! You Yourself know how to glorify Yourself and offer prayers. Lord Ananta Sesa, who holds the entire creation on just one of His hoods, has manifested a thousand mouths to glorify You, yet He laments that He cannot find the limits to Your glories. Who is more capable than Ananta Sesa to glorify You? The entire material universe follows the instructions of the Vedas, yet these very Vedas are unable to fully reveal Your transcendental, absolute nature.

"I have heard that there are an unlimited number of universes in this material creation and that they all emanate from the pores of Your transcendental body.

"You are the fully independent Supreme Autocrat, and You are always blissful. How is it possible for the limited Vedic literature to describe the pastimes which You perform according to Your own sweet will. Therefore, Oh Lord, only You know Yourself fully, and others can know You only if You reveal Yourself to them through Your causeless mercy. What ability do I possess to offer You prayers and glorify You?" Saying this, Murari Gupta fell flat on the floor offering obeisances to the Lord.

Lord Varaha was pleased with Murari Gupta's words. Then expressing anger at the Vedic literatures, He spoke out loud, "The Vedas have the audacity to say that I have no hands, no legs, no mouth, and no eyes! There is a mischievous sannyasi living in Kasi who teaches his students. That rascal tries to mutilate My transcendental form. He studies the Vedas and teaches others, but he does not accept My transcendental form. As a result of such blasphemy he was attacked by the dreaded disease leprosy, but he could not understand the import of it.

"I am the Lord of all sacrifices, the Supreme Lord Visnu. There are no imperfections in My transcendental form. Lord Brahma and Lord Siva are always engaged in glorifying My supreme transcendental position and nature. A mere touch of My body can spiritualize and purify everything; yet that rascal is so insolent that he proclaims that My transcendental form is non-existent. Carefully hear My opinion, Murari Gupta. I will tell you that which is not manifest even in the Vedas.

"I accepted the incarnation of a boar to lift the material world out of the waters of nescience. Know Me to be the ultimate goal of the Vedas. The purpose of My present incarnation is to propagate the congregational chanting of the holy name of Krsna. In this incarnation, as in other incarnations, I will annihilate the miscreants for the protection and pleasure of My devotees. I cannot tolerate My devotees being threatened and tortured. I will even kill My own son to protect My beloved devotees. This is not a lie Murari!

"Listen attentively. In My boar incarnation, when I lifted the earth, Mother Earth became impregnated by My touch. She gave birth to My son, named Naraka, who was very strong and powerful. I gave My son all religious instructions. He became a very powerful king and dutifully protected the demigods, brahmanas, spiritual master, and the devotees. However, the hand of destiny changed everything. Due to the influence and bad association of King Venu, he became a criminal and was cruel to the devotees. Any aggression or violence towards My devotees is totally intolerable to Me, so I killed My son to protect My devotees. I am revealing all these confidential matters to you because you have been serving Me for many births."

Murari Gupta was overwhelmed by the Lord's presence and narration, and he wept with joy.

All glories to Sri Gauracandra and Sri Murari Gupta! All glories to Lord Varahadeva, the protector of His devotees!

In this way Lord Caitanya went to the homes of all His devotees, and by His causeless mercy revealed His real supreme identity to them. The devotees and servants recognized their Supreme Lord and their hearts were filled with ecstatic bliss. They now became fearless and did not care for the atheists. They went everywhere, in all public places, and chanted Kṛṣṇa's name loudly. Day and night the devotees spent their time with the Lord chanting and singing Lord Kṛṣṇa's holy name.

Only Lord Nityananda Prabhu was missing, and this saddened Lord Gauracandra. Lord Visvambhara was constantly thinking about Lord Nityananda. His separation became unbearable to the Lord. Lord Visvambhara knew Lord Nityananda to be the Supreme Lord, Ananta Vasudeva. I shall take this time to describe some transcendental facts about Lord Nityananda's birth, activities and so on.

The Supreme Lord Nityananda Prabhu was born in the village of Ekacakra. Lord Nityananda, who is Lord Haladhara, Balarama, worshiped Lord Mooresvara, Lord Siva, in the form of His linga. This temple is situated close to the Lord's birthplace. Lord Nityananda's parents were extremely pious. His father, Hrdaya Pandita, was a very learned brahmana, very compassionate and detached from material life. His mother, Srimati Padmavati, was a very pious and chaste lady. She was a great devotee, and the Universal Mother. Lord Nityananda Raya was the eldest son of the family. Everyone was captivated by His good looks. I have already described in detail His childhood pastimes in the earlier portion of this book, so for now, I will give only indications, otherwise the book will become voluminous.

Lord Nityananda spent some years performing His childhood pastimes in the house of Hrdaya Pandita. The Lord decided to leave home but He could not sever the bonds of affection of His mother and did not want to see her suffer. The parents could not live for a moment without seeing Lord Nityananda. Even a moment out of His sight seemed like a millennium to His mother and father. Hrdaya Pandita never went anywhere without his son. When Hrdaya Pandita went about doing his work, like going to the fields, attending to the pilgrims, or going marketing, Lord Nityananda would always accompany him. If per chance, the Lord fell behind Hrdaya Pandita, His father would frequently look frantically behind him to see whether the Lord was following him or not.

The parents often embraced and fondled Him, and the Lord's soft body, which was like butter, would melt with the bodies of His parents. Lord Nityananda became more dear to Hrdaya Pandita than his own life. The Supreme Lord is the Supersoul, therefore he knew all the desires of His father, thus He remained in the house to make His father happy.

One day, by divine arrangement, a sannyasi with a 'God-like' appearance visited Lord Nityananda's house. Hrdaya Pandita welcomed him and looked after him very nicely with great pleasure. Lord Nityananda's father spent the whole night with the sannyasi talking about Kṛṣṇa and His pastimes. As he was preparing to leave, early the next morning, the sannyasi asked Nityananda's father, "I have one request." Hrdaya Pandita replied, "Whatever you desire you may have." The sannyasi said, "I am on a pilgrimage tour, but I do not have a good brahmana as a companion. Give me your eldest son for a few days to be my companion. I will protect and look after him with my life, and your son will also be able to learn about the many places of pilgrimage we visit."

The sannyasi's words greatly perturbed Hrdaya Pandita, who was a pure and pious brahmana. Fraught with worries, he became weak and thought, "The sannyasi has begged for my very life, and I feel that if I refuse then I will be ruined. Great personalities previously have offered even their lives to fulfill the desire of a sage or a renunciate. In the Puranas we read that Lord Ramacandra was more dear to His father, Dasaratha, than His own self. Once the sage Visvamitra begged Dasaratha to allow his son to come with him. It was very painful for Dasaratha to depart from his son, Lord Ramacandra, yet he did not refuse. I feel myself to be in the same predicament. Oh Lord Krsna, please guide me and protect me in this dilemma! By divine arrangement I have to take the position of Dasaratha and my son has to take the position of Lord Ramacandra, otherwise why is this happening to my son? And why does he have an air of detachment about him?"

Hrdaya Pandita went inside to consult his wife. The chaste Padmavati, the Universal Mother, heard everything from Hrdaya Pandita and said, "Whatever you decide, my lord, is my decision too."

Hrdaya Pandita returned to the sannyasi, and put his son in his custody. He stood there crestfallen with his head hanging down, and Lord Nityananda left with the sannyasi. In this way Lord Nityananda was able to leave His house.

As soon as Lord Nityananda left, Hrdaya Pandita crumbled to the ground unconscious. He wept bitterly in separation from his beloved son and Lord. His piteous cries could even melt a heart of stone. Overwhelmed with intense love in separation from the Lord, Hrdaya Pandita appeared to be in a state of total shock. He went about like a statue. The people said, "Hrdaya Pandita has become mad." For three months Hrdaya Pandita stopped eating. But unlike ordinary human beings, he did not die or become emaciated. He remained alive only because of his attachment for the Supreme Lord.

In this context a person may question why the Lord left His house where He was so beloved? The correct answer to that question is that Lord Visnu and His devotees, the Vaisnavas, possess unlimited potencies, hence their activities are inconceivable.

Lord Kapila, saturated in transcendental knowledge, left His home and widowed mother for the sake of saving the entire creation. Srila Sukadeva Gosvami walked out of His home and left His father who was none other than the great Vaisnava, Vyasadeva, never once looking back.

Even a wonderful and affectionate mother like Saci had to lose her son, who became the crest jewel of the sannyasis, and left her alone. Renunciation on the spiritual platform is not like ordinary renunciation. Who can understand the meaning of this? The Lord performs such pastimes for the liberation of all living entities. Such is the unparalleled mercy of the Lord. The moving story of how King Dasaratha was separated from His dearest son Lord Ramacandra when He went to the forest, would bring tears to the eyes of even a meat-eater.

After leaving His home, Lord Nityananda traveled, carefree and happy, to many places of pilgrimage. He visited Gaya, Kasi, Prayaga, Mathura, Dvaraka, Badarikashram, etc. He visited the birth place of Lord Buddha, and from there He went to the cave of Vyasadeva. In the South He visited the temple of Lord Ranganatha at the tip of India, where Lord Ramacandra built the bridge to cross to Sri Lanka. Then He went to the Malai Hills. He traveled through lonely forests fearlessly. He also visited Gopati, Gandhaki, Sarayun and Kaveri, Ayodhya, Dandhakaranya, Trimala, Venkathanatha, Saptho, and Gadhavari. In Karnak Nagar He visited the temple of Lord Siva. Then He visited Reva, Mahisvati, Mala Tirtha and Haridwar.

His travels finally brought Him to Mathura. He visited Gokula, the place where He had appeared in His previous incarnation as Lord Balarama. He roared with ecstatic emotion, but no one could recognize Him as the original Lord Ananta Sesa. In Vrndavana He felt like a young boy, playing with the sand of Vrndavana and rolling on the ground. This feeling was constantly with Him. He did not even feel like eating, he just wanted to roll and play in the dust of Vrndavana. No one could understand the inner mood of Lord Nityananda; He simply maintained Himself on the nectar of loving exchanges with Krsna. On some rare occasions He drank a little milk, and even then it appeared as if someone offered it to Him unsolicited.

While Lord Nityananda was living in this manner in Vrndavana, Lord Gauracandra manifested Himself in Navadvipa. Lord Caitanya was constantly engaged in the congregational chanting of the holy name in great ecstasy, but He felt sad because of Lord Nityananda Prabhu's absence. Lord Nityananda was waiting in Vrndavana for Lord Caitanya to reveal His sankirtana pastimes. As soon as He heard that Lord Caitanya had begun His sankirtana movement, He immediately came to Navadvipa and stayed in the house of Sri Nandanacarya.

Nandanacarya was a very elevated devotee, and he was happy to have Lord Nityananda Prabhu staying in his house. He saw that the Lord was very effulgent like the brilliant sun. The Lord had a large body and was dressed in the clothes of a traveling renunciate. He was always grave and equipoised. Day and night He chanted Lord Krsna's holy name. He is the Supreme unequalled Personality, non-different from Lord Caitanya. Absorbed within Himself, He often roared loudly like a lion, for He is the direct manifestation of Lord Balarama. His beautiful, glowing face could have easily defeated a thousand shining full moons. His captivating smile played sweetly on His exquisite lips. So white and radiant were His teeth that if a pearl were held next to them the pearl would look like a faded and discarded piece of glass. His long, languid eyes stole the pinkish tinge of the early rising sun. His arms were long and reached down to His knees, and He possessed a robust chest and broad shoulders. His lotus feet were soft, and His gait was graceful. He spoke to everyone with kind words which severed the bonds of material attachment within everyone's heart.

The coming of Lord Nityananda to Navadvipa was welcomed by all the devotees with shouts of joy. Who can describe the unlimited qualities of Lord Nityananda Prabhu, the one who had the potency to break the sannyasa stick of Lord Caitanya? Lord Nityananda is so merciful that anyone who chants His name becomes purified. Even a gross materialist, or an ignorant or fallen person can cross over this ocean of material nescience if he simply chants Lord Nityananda's name. His holy name is capable of purifying the entire material creation. Nandanacarya Prabhu was more than happy to have Lord Nityananda Prabhu stay in his house, and he looked after Him with great care.

Whoever hears Lord Nityananda's pastimes of coming to Navadvipa will be blessed with love of God. Lord Visvambhara heard of Lord Nityananda's arrival in Navadvipa, and He felt great joy within. Earlier Lord Caitanya had given indications of Lord Nityananda's arrival to the Vaisnavas, but they could not understand its import. The Lord had told them, "A great personality will come to Navadvipa within a few days."

Lord Gauracandra worshiped Lord Visnu in His temple, and then quickly went to meet all the devotees. He told them, "Last night I had a wonderful dream. A chariot came and stood in front of my door. The chariot's flag had a palm leaf drawn on it. This chariot was meant to carry one from this temporary material existence to absolute reality. The passenger of that chariot was a colossal figure, He carried a plough on His large shoulders, He was moving about as if He were restless. In His left hand He carried a renunciate's water pot which was wrapped over by cane reeds. On top He wore a blue cloth, and His lower dress was also blue. A beautiful earring pierced His left earlobe. His whole appearance and demeanor gave me the impression that He was Lord Balarama. Then speaking in (Hindi??), He repeated a question at least ten or twenty times saying, 'Does this house not belong to Nimai Pandita?'

"Never before had I seen such a formidable looking mendicant. I felt great respect for this person and I asked, 'I see that You are a great personality. Who are You?' Smiling, He replied, 'I am Your brother. Tomorrow we shall get to know each other.' His words increased My delight and I began to feel that He and I were the same person."

In the middle of the narration the Lord went into an ecstatic trance, and entering into the mood of Lord Balarama, He began to roar and shout loudly, "Bring Me wine, bring Me wine." His thundering voice seemed to burst the eardrums. Srivasa Pandita said, "Listen to me my dear Lord, the wine that You want is not to be found anywhere, but You and others will have it only if You distribute it!"

The devotees, a little afraid and trembling, stayed at a distance from the Lord. The Vaisnavas thought to themselves, "There must be a reason for all this."

With reddened eyes the Lord recited small lyrical poems and ballads. Smiling, He softly and rhythmically swayed His body like Lord Sankarsana, Balarama. After a while the Lord returned back to His normal self.

Then Murari Gupta, the beloved devotee and friend of Lord Ramacandra, began to explain the inner meaning of the Lord's dream, "My feeling is that a great personality has come to Navadvipa. I had told You earlier that we would soon meet a great personality." The Lord then said to Srila Haridasa Thakura and to Srivasa Pandita, "Go and find out where this great personality is."

The two great spiritual stalwarts left on the order of Lord Caitanya and roamed about Navadvipa, searching. On the way they discussed, "Maybe Lord Sankarsana, Lord Balarama, has come Himself." They went about looking everywhere with great happiness, but could not find a single trace of the person they were looking for. After three hours of intensive searching, they returned back. They humbly submitted their report to the Lord, "We could not find Him anywhere. We looked everywhere. We went to Vaisnavas' houses, spoke to sannyasis, went to the householders, even to the houses of the atheists and Mayavadis. But we were unsuccessful. We looked in every house in Navadvipa. The only houses we did not see were the ones on the outskirts of Navadvipa." Lord Gauracandra smiled, indicating that Lord Nityananda was a very mysterious personality.

In the Lord's present incarnation as Sri Krsna Caitanya some people want to glorify Lord Caitanya, but refuse to glorify Lord Nityananda Prabhu. Such a grievous sin is similar to worshiping Lord Krsna, Govinda, but not respecting Lord Siva or Shankara. Such an abominable person will surely be condemned to eternal hellish sufferings. Lord Nityananda's incarnation is very mysterious and confidential. It is impossible for anyone to see Him, unless and until Lord Caitanya Himself reveals this secret. Although the living entity is part and parcel of Krsna and it is His constitutional position to be an eternal servant of Krsna, he has eternally forfeited this opportunity to engage in Lord Krsna's and Lord Caitanya's devotional service.

Unalloyed devotees such as Srivasa Pandita and Haridasa Thakura are fully realized in such esoteric understandings, yet for some mysterious reason, they could not find Nityananda Prabhu. Then Lord Caitanya, laughing mildly said, "Come with Me and let us go find Him."

All the devotees became very jubilant and chanted, "All glories to Krsna!", and they accompanied the Lord. The Lord took all the Vaisnava devotees, and went directly to the house of Nandanacarya. Everything was already known to the omniscient Supreme Lord, Sri Gauracandra. Inside the house they saw a great personality – effulgent like a million suns. Without proper spiritual vision one cannot see Lord Nityananda. A sweet smile played on His lips and He was totally absorbed in meditation on Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu.

The Lord saw before Him a towering spiritual stalwart, and Lord Visvambhara, along with all the devotees, offered their obeisances to Lord Nityananda Prabhu. They stood up respectfully and kept standing without speaking a word. Lord Visvambhara stood at the head of all the Vaisnavas. Lord Nityananda saw Lord Visvambhara and recognized Him as the beloved Lord of His heart.

Lord Visvambhara was looking so beautiful, even more beautiful than Cupid Himself. A fragrant flower garland hung around His neck. His face was decorated with sandalwood paste, and He had nice fine clothes.

What is glittering gold next to the Lord's aura? The full moon has lost interest in her own beauty and she yearns to see the glowing face of the Lord.

How enchanting they look, Nityananda and Lord Gauranga, as they roam about Navadvipa with the devotees chanting the holy name of God! What is the luster and value of pearls next to the Lord's teeth? One is sure to lose his mind at the sight of the Lord's beautiful cascading black hair. All other lotuses look faded and artificial next to the pinkish, graceful lotus eyes of the Lord.

His long hands extend down to His knees, and the thin line of His brahmana thread hangs loosely across His broad and expansive chest. A thin and perfect tilaka decorates His broad forehead. Without any jewelry or ornaments, every limb of His beautiful body looks exquisite and captivating. Whence goes the brilliance of millions of precious gems compared to His dazzling nails?

What use do I have for ambrosia when I see the sweet smile playing on my Lord's lips?

Lord Sri Krsna Caitanya and Lord Nityananda Prabhu are my life and soul.

I, Vrndavana dasa, humbly offer this song at Their lotus feet.

Chapter 4

All glories to Lord Gauracandra, the life and soul of all the living entities! May my memories constantly embrace His lotus feet.

Within His heart Lord Nityananda was certain that this Lord Visvambhara who stood before Him was none other than His beloved Supreme Lord. Overwhelmed with bliss, Lord Nityananda Prabhu was unable to move, He stared unblinking at the beautiful face of the Lord.

With His tongue He wanted to taste the Lord's beauty and drink it with His eyes. He wanted to embrace Him with His hands and smell His fragrance with His nose. To everyone's amazement, Lord Nityananda stood speechless, completely enchanted by the Lord's beauty.

Lord Gauracandra is the Supersoul in everyone's heart, therefore He knew Lord Nityananda's heart. Thus, He was planning a means by which to reveal Himself to Lord Nityananda.

The Lord indicated to Srivasa Pandita to recite a verse from the Srimad Bhagavatam. Srivasa understood, and immediately recited a sloka describing the beauty of Krsna, "At that time Krsna, dressed as a dancer, stepped into the forest of Vrndavana. A peacock feather was stuck in His crown, His ears were decorated with graceful drooping yellow earrings, His golden yellow dress glistened and He was wearing the Vijyanti jewel around His neck.

"That land which carried the impression of His lotus feet, marked with the signs of the conchshell, disc, etc., is Vrndavana, His place of transcendental pastimes. He touched the flute to His lips and playing on it, filled it with His nectarean saliva. At the same moment His cowherd boyfriends were describing His beauty."

As soon as Nityananda Prabhu heard this verse He fell down unconscious. While Lord Nityananda lay in ecstatic bliss, Lord Caitanya advised Srivasa Pandita, "Read on, read on."

After sometime Lord Nityananda Prabhu regained His external consciousness and began crying tears of joy. The more He heard the verses the more it increased His mad love for Krsna. His ecstatic roaring filled the universe and pierced through the covering of this material world. Lord Nityananda jumped down, crashing to the ground, and everyone thought that the bones of His body were smashed.

Seeing this, the Vaisnavas became very afraid and loudly uttered, "Krsna, please save Him! Krsna please save Him!"

Lord Nityananda rolled on the ground, His body covered with tears of love. Long and frequent sighs escaped His mouth as He looked deep into Lord Visvambhara's face. Lord Nityananda felt great ecstasy, and often He laughed out loud. Sometimes He jumped and danced; sometimes He wrestled; and other times He hung His head quietly.

Lord Gauracandra and all the devotees began to cry in joy, seeing such total absorption and madness in love of Krsna. It became impossible for the Vaisnavas to hold Nityananda Prabhu still. When the devotees failed, Lord Visvambhara held Nityananda Prabhu in an embrace. As soon as Lord Nityananda was embraced by Caitanya He immediately became still. The Lord to whom He was totally surrendered, now embraced Him! So Nityananda Prabhu allowed Himself to be held without endeavor.

Lord Caitanya flooded Lord Nityananda with ecstatic tears of love. Lord Nityananda Prabhu was afflicted by the arrow of ecstatic love of God; and Lord Caitanya held Him just as Lord Ramacandra had held Laksmana when He lay unconscious, drained of all strength. Both Lord Nityananda and Lord Caitanya wept, overwhelmed with joy.

The intensity of love between Lord Caitanya and Lord Nityananda Prabhu can be properly described only by the example of the loving relationship between Lord Ramacandra and Laksmana.

When Lord Nityananda came out of His ecstatic trance, all the devotees began loudly chanting Lord Hari's name. Visvambhara was embracing Nityananda Prabhu, and Gadadhara Pandita smiled, thinking how Their Lordship's roles had changed. He thought, "Lord Nityananda Prabhu, as Ananta Sesa, renders service to Lord Visvambhara by becoming the bed on which Lord Narayana always rests. But today His pride as a servitor has been broken, and He lies in Lord Visvambhara's embrace."

Gadadhara Pandita was well aware of Lord Nityananda's potencies; and the Supreme Lord Nityananda Prabhu knew the innermost thoughts of Gadadhara Pandita. All the devotees were jubilant on meeting Lord Nityananda, and their minds were steeped in thoughts of Him.

The ecstasy that Lord Visvambhara and Lord Nityananda experienced in meeting each other was impossible to be expressed through words, but it found expression in the continuous tears of joy from Their eyes that drenched the earth. Lord Visvambhara said, "This is the most glorious day in My life. Today I have seen the embodiment of loving devotion to the Supreme Lord, which is the essence of all the four Vedas. Such intensity of ecstasy is only capable of being manifested by the Supreme Lord Himself.

"Those fortunate souls who were able to see His loving devotional symptoms will never be rejected by Lord Krsna. Now, I understand that You, Lord Nityananda, are the full fledged manifestation of the Lord's energy. You are nondifferent from Him. The living entities can get loving devotional service at the lotus feet of Krsna simply by worshipping You.

"You purify the entire cosmic manifestation and Your transcendental nature is inconceivable, incomprehensible, and esoteric. You are the personification of the highest ecstatic love of God. Even a moment's association with You can dissolve millions and millions of sins. I can understand that Lord Krsna intends to purify and redeem Me by giving Me Your association. It is my great fortune that I was able to see Your lotus feet. And I know that if I worship Your lotus feet, then I will surely receive love of Krsna."

Unaware of the passing of time, Lord Gaurasundara was totally absorbed in glorifying Lord Nityananda Prabhu. Lord Nityananda and Lord Caitanya had endless exchanges, but they were very confidential, so They conversed in signs. The Lord then asked Nityananda Prabhu, "I am hesitant to ask You from which direction You came." Lord Nityananda was always absorbed, and He spoke like an innocent, restless child.

He understood that Lord Caitanya had descended to this material world; thus when He replied, He did so with folded hands and great humility. He had felt very ashamed and shy when Lord Visvambhara was glorifying Him, and so through gestures, words and indications He explained everything in detail.

Lord Nityananda Prabhu said, "I extensively toured all places of pilgrimage, but I could see only the place and not Krsna, the Supreme Lord. I asked some good people why their altars were standing empty. 'I do not see Him in His own place,' I said. 'Where is Krsna? Where did He go?' They all replied, 'Krsna has gone to Gaudadesa, Bengal. He was in Gaya recently, and not so long ago He returned back to Bengal.' When I came to Nadia I was greeted by jubilant chanting of the Lord's holy name, and someone told me that Lord Narayana, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, had appeared here. I heard that in Nadia even the most wretched fallen souls can get liberation. Thus being such an abominable wretch, I have come here."

Lord Visvambhara replied, "We are most fortunate that a devotee such as Yourself is amongst us now. And we are very grateful to the Lord that today we have seen Your ecstatic tears of love of God."

Murari Gupta smiled and said, "The confidential discussions between Lord Nityananda and Lord Visvambhara are incomprehensible to us." Srivasa Pandita said, "How can we understand all this? Their intimate exchanges are like Lord Hari's with Lord Siva, as they worshiped each other and increased the amazement of everyone."

Gadadhara Pandita said, "You are quite right, Pandita. They seem to be exactly like Lord Ramacandra and Laksmana." Another Vaisnava said, "They look as if They are two Cupids." Someone else said, "They are Lord Balarama and Lord Krsna." Someone else said, "I don't have much knowledge, but from what I have seen it appears that Lord Krsna has taken Lord Ananta Sesa in His arms." Someone else commented, "They are like two friends. Their loving affectionate exchange is just like the relationship between Krsna and Arjuna."

Some others were saying, "They have such intimate association with each other that we cannot understand it; and they are talking only in signs." Thus, the devotees expressed their joy at having Lord Nityananda amongst them, giving their different opinions.

Lord Nityananda Prabhu serves Lord Caitanya in every way – sometimes as a friend, sometimes as His umbrella, His bed, or as His carrier. All these services can be rendered by Lord Nityananda alone. He serves Lord Caitanya according to His own sweet desires. Others can also become eligible to serve the Lord, but only by the mercy of Nityananda Prabhu.

Lord Nityananda Prabhu's glories are unlimited. No one can fully know Him. Even Lord Sesa who is a great yogi, a pure devotee, and Himself a controller in this material energy, cannot fully fathom the limits of Lord Nityananda's transcendental nature.

If one criticizes or offends Lord Nityananda Prabhu without knowing about all of His wonderful attributes, then although He is constitutionally an eternal servant of Krsna, he becomes forever rejected from the path of devotional service.

Lord Nityananda is the object of Lord Caitanya's complete love, and it is my heart's desire that that same Lord Nityananda reside in my heart as my most beloved Lord and Master. By His grace I have developed attachment and attraction for Lord Caitanya. It is by His order that I write these wonderful pastimes of Lord Caitanya.

As there is no difference between Raghunatha, Lord Ramacandra, Yadunatha, and Lord Dwarakadisa; in the same way Lord Nityananda is nondifferent from Lord Krsna, or Lord Caitanya Mahaprabhu.

One who desires to cross over this ocean of nescience and drown in the nectarine waters of love of Godhead, must take shelter of the lotus feet of Nitya-candra.

Whoever sings and glorifies this wonderful pastime will be blessed by Lord Visvambhara, along with his entire family. Lord Caitanya is the Supreme Personality of Godhead, the most beloved object of everyone's love. The name of Lord Visvambhara is extremely rare and precious.

Sri Kṛṣṇa Caitanya and Sri Nityānanda Prabhu are my life and soul.

I, Vṛndavana dāsa, humbly offer this song at Their lotus feet.

Chapter 5

All glories to the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Lord Sri Caitanya, who is also praised by the name of Murari!

He is the constantly glowing lamp of Navadvipa.

He is like the fearless lion come to slay the elephant-like atheists.

He has taken the knotted thread in order to exemplify the need of chanting a specific number of times the Lord's holy name, which are His own names.

All glories to Lord Visvambhara, the Supreme Lord of all living entities. He is the Lord and master of Lord Nityananda and Gadadhara Pandita!

All glories to the Lord, for He is subjugated by the love of pure devotees like Advaita Acarya Prabhu and others!

O Lord, please engage the conditioned living entities in the eternal loving service of Lord Krsna, and release them from the bondage of material existence.

In this manner all the devotees passed their time in great joy, discussing topics of Krsna's pastimes with Lord Nityananda Prabhu. All the assembled Vaisnavas were very elevated souls and unalloyed devotees of the Lord. They became totally immersed in the nectar of Krsna consciousness. Lord Nityananda Prabhu was extremely joyful, and He kept looking around at the Vaisnavas. It was a scene of extreme ecstasy, and tears of happiness cascaded down from everyone's eyes.

Seeing this ecstasy, Lord Visvambhara spoke to Lord Nityananda Prabhu, "Listen, My dear Nityananda Goswami, where shall Your Vyasa-puja be performed?"

"Tomorrow there is a full moon, and it is on this day that Srila Vyasadeva is worshiped. So You may choose anyone, and make arrangements with him."

Nityananda Prabhu could understand Lord Visvambhara's mind, so He took Srivasa Pandita by his hand and smiling, said, "Listen Visvambhara, I will have My Vyasa-puja in this brahmana's house."

Lord Visvambhara then spoke to Srivasa Pandita, "Now you have a heavy responsibility over your head." Srivasa replied, "No my Lord, this is no botheration, by Your grace everything is in this house." The paraphernalia required like clothes, grains, brahmin thread, ghee, etc., are all available here. I have only to get the book which gives the procedure for performing a Vyasa-puja ceremony. And then tomorrow, by my great fortune, I shall witness a Vyasa-puja." Lord Visvambhara was very pleased with Srivasa's reply, and all the devotees were jubilant.

Lord Visvambhara said, "Listen Nityananda Gosai, let us all make preparations to go to Srivasa Pandita's house." Lord Nityananda very much appreciated Lord Visvambhara's words, and immediately proceeded to Srivasa Pandita's house. The Lord and Nityananda Prabhu, accompanied by Their associates, looked exactly like Krsna and Balarama in Gokula as They went about accompanied by Their friends.

As they entered Srivasa Pandita's house, the devotees felt a current of joy run through their bodies. The Lord ordered the doors to be closed, allowing only friends and relatives inside. Then on the signal from Lord Visvambhara, they began singing bhajans and kirtanas, and gradually the external world faded away into oblivion.

The chanting was ecstatic and befitting the occasion of Vyasa-puja. The two Lords began to dance ecstatically, surrounded by the devotees who were singing. The bond of love and affection exists eternally between Lord Nityananda and Lord Visvambhara, and now as they danced together each one was immersed in thoughts of the other.

The devotees were experiencing extraordinary joy. Some began to roar loudly, some fell unconscious, and others could not restrain the flow of joyful tears.

The two Supreme Lords were experiencing all the symptoms of ecstasy like shivering, paling, horripilating, crying, and falling unconscious. Who can describe all the ecstatic symptoms that They manifested?

The two Lords danced, lost in Their ecstasy. And often They would embrace each other, crying. In the mood of brotherly love They tried to catch each other's feet. But because both were wary and cunning, They could not succeed. They were overwhelmed in happiness and They rolled on the ground forgetting Their absolute supreme position. Such are Their wonderful pastimes.

The world of phenomena was forgotten and Their clothes fell from Their body. They could not sit still, and even though the Vaisnavas tried to hold Them down, they were unsuccessful. How is it possible for the Vaisnavas to hold on to the personality who holds the entire universe?

The two Supreme Lords were lost in the nectar of chanting and dancing. Lord Gaurasundara kept repeating, "Chant! Chant!", drenching His whole body with tears of happiness. The Lord, having found that personality whose association He always desired, His eternal brother Lord Nityananda, was floating on an ocean of eternal endless ecstasy. Lord Visvambhara's dancing was so enchanting, sometimes He would touch His head with His feet. When Lord Nityananda Prabhu danced it seemed there was an earthquake. Thus, the two Supreme Lords danced in ecstasy. Who can describe that scene of great jubilation?

Lord Visvambhara then sat on the seat of Lord Visnu, feeling in the mood of Lord Balarama. Like Lord Balarama, He was expressing madness, and repeatedly cried out, "Bring Me wine. Bring Me wine."

To Nityananda Prabhu the Lord said, "Immediately bring Me a plough." At the Lord's request, Lord Nityananda stretched out His hands and Lord Gauracandra received it in His hand. Some saw the two Lords go through these motions empty-handed, while others saw Lord Nityananda give a plough to Lord Caitanya.

Only by the Lord's mercy can one understand His supreme position. Such confidential pastimes and topics of the Lord as displayed by Lord Caitanya and Lord Nityananda are known to a very limited few.

Receiving the plough from Lord Nityananda Prabhu, Lord Caitanya now began to ask for wine, acting agitated and mad. Most of the devotees could not understand this mood of Lord Caitanya. They looked at each other's faces in bewilderment, wondering why the Lord was asking for wine. Trying to think logically, they finally brought a pot of Ganga water to the Lord. The Lord distributed the Ganga water to everyone and drank much of it Himself, thinking this to be real wine.

All around, the devotees began to chant hymns about Lord Balarama, and Lord Visvambhara kept repeating, "Nara", the name by which He would call Advaita Acarya Prabhu. The Lord continuously called out, "Nara", and His head kept dropping as if drunk; but nobody could understand the inner meaning of the word Nara. They asked, "Lord who is Nara?" The Lord replied, "On whose loud beckoning I am here, the personality you call Advaita Acarya Prabhu is Nara to Me in My present incarnation. Nara has brought Me down from the Vaikuntha planets, but He is enjoying peacefully with Haridasa Thakura. In this incarnation I shall propagate congregational chanting of the holy name in every house.

"Those who are intoxicated with material knowledge, wealth, family, austerity, etc., are naturally offensive to My pure devotees. To such wretched and fallen people I will not give the gift of loving devotional service to the Supreme Lord, but to the residents of Navadvipa Mayapura I shall bestow that supreme gift of love of God which is most desirable even by Lord Brahma." The devotees were overjoyed on hearing the Lord, and the Lord gradually became tranquil and still.

The Lord asked the devotees, "Were My speech and actions uncontrolled?" The devotees replied, "No, nothing inconsistent." The Lord embraced everyone with great love and affection, and said, "Please always forgive My offensive nature." All the devotees began to laugh. "Surely", they thought, "the Lord was joking."

Unable to control His ecstasy, Nityananda Prabhu began to roll on the ground. Lord Nityananda was totally immersed in the nectar of love of Godhead. Sometimes He laughed; sometimes He cried. And sometimes He opened His clothes and stood naked, being in the mood of a young boy, and His body manifested this mood. His stick fell in one direction, and His water pot and clothes in another.

That great and tranquil personality, Lord Nityananda, was now restless and uncontrollable. Lord Visvambhara had to hold Him still. Lord Caitanya's words acted on Nityananda Prabhu just as a guard acts on a mad elephant. Lord Nityananda Prabhu became still. The Lord said, "Be calm, and if You want, tomorrow You can have the Vyasa-puja." Then the Lord left for His home.

All the devotees returned to their respective homes, and Lord Nityananda remained in Srivasa Pandita's house. Late in the night, overcome with ecstasy, Lord Nityananda began roaring like a lion. He broke His stick and water pot. Who can fathom the activities of the Supreme Personality of Godhead? Who knew why Lord Nityananda broke His stick and water pot?

Early next morning Ramai Pandita saw the broken stick and water pot. He was amazed and perplexed. He went quickly to Srivasa Pandita and reported this matter to him. Srivasa Pandita said, "Go to Lord Visvambhara."

When Lord Caitanya Mahaprabhu heard from Ramai Pandita the activities of Lord Nityananda Prabhu, He immediately came to the house of Srivasa Pandita. There, He found Lord Nityananda in a trance and laughing constantly. Lord Visvambhara took the broken stick and led Lord Nityananda Prabhu to the Ganga.

Srivasa Pandita and the other Vaisnavas accompanied Their Lordships to the Ganga for a bath, and there Lord Visvambhara threw the stick into the river. Lord Nityananda Prabhu, still in a trance, was restless and did not heed anyone's advice; so Caitanya Mahaprabhu loudly chastised Him, which pacified Him a little. A crocodile was swimming down the river, and on seeing it, Lord Nityananda jumped in to catch it. Immediately Srivasa Pandita and Gadadhara Pandita raised an alarm. Fearlessly, He continued swimming toward midstream. Only Lord Caitanya's words could hold Him still and bring Him back.

Lord Visvambhara cried out to Lord Nityananda, "Come immediately and let us proceed with the worship of Vyasadeva." Obeying Lord Visvambhara, He came out of the water and accompanied the Lord back to His house.

Soon after, all the devotees assembled and began chanting the holy name of Lord Krsna. Srivasa Pandita was the preceptor for the rules of worship for the Vyasa-puja, and by receiving instructions from Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu, he executed them. A continuous, sweet kirtana converted Srivasa Pandita's house into the spiritual world of Vaikuntha. Well versed in all scriptures, Srivasa Pandita performed the ceremony according to the strict injunctions of the scripture. He gave Nityananda Prabhu a garland of fragrant flowers and said, "Oh Nityananda Prabhu, please take this garland and offer Your prayers and obeisances to Srila Vyasadeva. The scriptures instruct that Srila Vyasadeva should be garlanded when He is being worshiped, and if Srila Vyasadeva is satisfied then all our desires will be fulfilled."

The more Srivasa Pandita spoke, the more Lord Nityananda continued repeating, "Yes, yes." But He did not pay any heed to his words. He held the garland and muttered something softly underneath his breath which nobody could hear, and just looked all around.

Srivasa Pandita went to Lord Caitanya and reported this matter, "Your Sripada does not want to worship Srila Vyasadeva." The Lord immediately came to the presence of Lord Nityananda and said, "Nityananda, please listen to Me. Offer the garland to Srila Vyasadeva and worship Him." Lord Nityananda saw that Caitanya was there and He immediately placed the garland on the Lord's head. The fragrant flower garland on the Lord's curly hair made a beautiful sight.

At that very moment Lord Caitanya revealed His six-handed form to Lord Nityananda Prabhu. The Lord held in His hands the conchshell, disc, mace, lotus, and plough(?). Seeing this, Lord Nityananda Prabhu immediately went into an ecstatic trance and fell unconscious. All the devotees became very afraid and started praying, "Protect Him, Krsna! Protect Him, Krsna!" while Lord Caitanya clapped His hands loudly on His four arms (?) and continued to roar loudly.

Lord Caitanya then bent down to lift Lord Nityananda up from the ground saying, "Nityananda, please get up and steady Your mind. Listen to the chanting of the holy name. The reason You descended to this material world is to propagate the chanting of the holy name, and now You have perfectly succeeded in this mission. What more do You want?"

"You are the absolute proprietor of the treasure house of love of Godhead, and the embodiment of sublime devotional love. No one can receive love of God unless and until You distribute it. Therefore, please get up and look around You. You are surrounded by Your own beloved associates. You may distribute it to anyone You want. If anyone nurtures even the slightest dislike for You, then although He may worship Me, I will never recognize him as dear to Me."

Lord Caitanya's words brought Him out of His trance, and seeing the Lord's six-handed form, He went into a state of great ecstasy. Lord Nityananda Prabhu is nondifferent from Lord Ananta Sesa, in whose heart Lord Gauracandra is an eternal resident. Without a doubt, Lord Nityananda Prabhu is Lord Balarama. The Supreme Personality of Godhead has appeared as Lord Gauracandra, the source of all incarnations. Therefore, it is not surprising that He should manifest His six-armed form.

In His incarnation as Lord Ramacandra He offered oblations to His departed father. At that time His father, King Dasaratha, appeared in person to receive the oblations. If this can be considered to be wonderful, then the Lord's six-armed form is also wonderful. But all of this is natural for the Supreme Lord Krsna because His pastimes are extraordinary and supramundane.

Lord Nityananda Prabhu's natural propensity is to serve Lord Gauracandra, and He is never distracted from this service even for a moment. Just like Laksmana served Lord Ramacandra constantly with His mind, body, and heart; similarly, Lord Nityananda Prabhu constantly engages in Lord Gauracandra's loving devotional service. The Supreme Personality of Godhead is the Lord of every living entity. He is unlimited and the source of everything. Yet He enters the material realm and causes the creation, maintenance and annihilation of the material world. According to the verdict of the Vedas, He is the Absolute Truth, the Supreme Controller, yet He remains unaffected by the phenomena of material nature.

In spite of His supreme lordship over everything, Ananta Deva, Sri Nityananda Prabhu, is eternally engaged in rendering loving devotional service to Lord Gauracandra. In every millennium and in every incarnation, He accepts that His natural mood is to serve His Supreme Lord Krsna. As Laksmana, He became the younger brother of Lord Ramacandra and served Him constantly. He neglected eating, drinking, sleeping, and other such activities to constantly serve the lotus feet of Lord Ramacandra. Yet He felt unable to satisfy His intense desire to serve.

As Lord Balarama, He was the elder brother of Lord Krsna. Yet He could not forsake His attitude of serving the Lord deep within His self. He always referred to Krsna as Lord, and He was always in the mood of rendering loving devotional service to Lord Krsna. Such is the wonderful nature of Lord Nityananda, Ananta Sesa. Only the most foolish rascals will see a difference between Lord Nityananda Prabhu and Lord Balarama. One who disrespects a devotee who is fully surrendered to the lotus feet of the Supreme Lord Visnu commits a great offense at the lotus feet of Lord Visnu Himself.

Sri Laksmidevi, the goddess of fortune, is so elevated that Lord Brahma and Lord Siva offer praise and worship to her. Yet she is naturally inclined to serve the lotus feet of Lord Visnu, Krsna.

Lord Balarama, Sesa, is the omnipotent Supreme Personality of Godhead. Yet His natural inclination is to serve the Supreme Lord. Therefore, Lord Gauracandra feels most satisfied when He can describe the glories and wonderful devotional attitude of Lord Nityananda Prabhu. It is the nature of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, Lord Gauracandra, to be subservient to the loving devotional attitude of His devotees. Therefore, the Lord specifically likes to glorify His own surrendered devotees.

There is special significance to hearing the Supreme Lord glorify His own devotees. The Lord and His devotees like to glorify each other, and in this way increase their attachment for one another. I have faithfully presented that which has been propounded in the Vedic literatures and Puranas about the relationship between the Supreme Lord Visnu and His devotees.

Lord Nityananda has only one thought in His mind, "Lord Caitanya is My Lord in every respect, and I am His devoted servant. Whoever considers Me to be the servant of My Lord and master, Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu, becomes very dear to Me and receives My shelter."

For the pleasure of Lord Nityananda, I have described this pastime of His seeing the six-armed form of Lord Caitanya. Lord Nityananda always sees the transcendental pastimes of Lord Caitanya within His heart, and Lord Caitanya always exhibits His transcendental pastimes in Lord Nityananda's heart. Yet still, the Lord externally manifests His pastimes according to His incarnations. Although Lord Nityananda is the Supreme Personality of Godhead, He always serves Lord Gauracandra. Who can understand such ecstatic topics?

The Vedas and Puranas have revealed these philosophical matters. The Vedic literature is actually a compilation of all the wonderful activities of the Supreme Lord. And it is the foremost objective of the Vedic literature to propagate the pastimes of the Lord. However, it is not possible to comprehend these spiritual matters without engaging in pure devotional service of the Lord. There are only a few who, by the mercy of Lord Gauracandra, have realized the truth.

The Vaisnava devotees of the Lord are eternally pure and realized souls. Sometimes there are differences of opinion amongst them which might appear like an argument. But in fact, it is an amazing relationship between devotees. Foolish rascals who do not understand this exchange, praise one Vaisnava and denounce the other. Such a mentality will lead to destruction of faith and knowledge.

In the scriptures it says that when a foolish wretch worships the lotus feet of a brahmana and then strikes him on the head, he will be sure to go to hell.

Similarly, when someone worships the Deity of Lord Visnu, but disrespects or disregards Lord Visnu residing in everyone's heart, he also goes to hell. What to speak of committing offense and violence to a Vaisnava devotee! If someone offends or tortures even an ordinary living entity yet worships Lord Visnu, the Lord of every living entity, then all his worship is worthless, and he suffers great pain. It is verified that to worship Lord Visnu on one hand, and be ignorant about Lord Visnu being the Supersoul in everyone's heart on the other, is like touching a brahmana's feet for blessings with one hand, and beating him on the head with the other.

Such foolish persons do not know what is most beneficial for themselves. To criticize a Vaisnava devotee is a thousand times more sinful than offending an ordinary living entity. The person who faithfully worships the Deities, but has no love and respect for the devotees, also does not possess any compassion for the ignorant and fallen conditioned souls. He accepts one incarnation of the Supreme Lord and worships Him, while he rejects another. He treats Lord Krsna differently from Lord Ramacandra, seeing a difference between Them. He does not show any respect or devotion for Lord Balarama or Lord Siva. Such persons are described in the scriptures as the weakest devotees.

In the Srimad Bhagavatam it is stated that a person who has surrendered to a spiritual master and received initiation, who has left the association of nondevotees, and who worships the Deity of the Supreme Lord according to the Pancharatra injunctions, but who does not worship the devotees due to lack of proper understanding of the different categories of devotees, is known as a neophyte, or kanistha devotee – not a pure devotee. I have just briefly mentioned the symptoms of a neophyte devotee incidentally in the course of discussion.

Seeing the six-handed form of Caitanya Mahaprabhu, Lord Nityananda was totally overwhelmed. Whoever hears this wonderful pastime of Lord Nityananda is immediately released from material bondage. When Lord Nityananda came out of His ecstatic trance, He began to cry profusely, tears flowing from His eyes like rivers. Lord Caitanya then said to everyone, "The Vyasa-puja worship has been completed. Now let the kirtana begin!"

The devotees were jubilant when they received Lord Caitanya's orders and immediately began to loudly chant Lord Krsna's transcendental name. The Brothers, Lord Nityananda and Lord Caitanya, danced like two mad men, having severed all contact with this phenomenal world. The Vyasa-puja was celebrated with great joy and singing and the Vaisnavas became even more inspired and jubilant. Some danced, some sang, while others rolled on the ground catching each other's feet.

Lord Caitanya's mother, Sacimata, everyone's worshipable mother, sat alone and watched the transcendental merrymaking. Each time she saw Lord Nityananda and Lord Visvambhara she thought to herself, "Both of Them are my sons."

The celebration of the Vyasa-puja was very ecstatic. It is only possible for Lord Sesa Himself to fully describe it. I am able to give only indications about the wonderful activities of Lord Caitanya Mahaprabhu. I know that one advances spiritually if one glorifies the Supreme Lord Krsna in any manner.

The day passed into night and the devotees went on celebrating the Vyasa-puja, dancing with Lord Visvambhara. The Vaisnavas were mad with ecstatic joy and they wept, crying out, "Oh Krsna! Oh Krsna!" In this way the Lord propagated the process of loving devotional service to Himself.

After the kirtana the Lord sat down with all His devotees. He spoke to Srivasa Pandita saying, "Quickly bring the Vyasa-puja offerings." Srivasa Pandita arranged for all the prasadam to be brought in and Lord Visvambhara Himself distributed the prasadam to all the devotees. The devotees were in bliss to be personally served by the Supreme Lord Gauracandra.

The Lord called everyone from inside the house and gave them prasadam with His own hands. Receiving prasadam directly from the Lord is extremely fortunate for great personalities like Brahma. But now, even the servants and maidservants of the house were receiving that great spiritual treasure. Who can describe the glories of Srivasa Pandita, in whose house such spiritual activities occurred?

Thus, the Supreme Lord performed wonderful pastimes in Navadvipa, but not everyone was aware of them.

Lord Sri Krsna Caitanya and Lord Nityananda are my life and soul.

I, Vrndavana Dasa, humbly offer this song at Their lotus feet.

Madhya Lila

Chapter 6

All glories to the moonlike Sri Krsna Caitanya, the fully independent Supreme Person, who is always engaged in eternal transcendental pastimes. He is the master of the universe, the supreme controller of all controllers, the life and soul of every living entity, and the direct manifestation of transcendence. Please mercifully place Your lotus feet in my heart.

All glories to all the intimate servants and dear devotees of Lord Gauracandra. All glories to their ecstatic dancing.

All glories to Lord Visvambhara, the supreme benefactor of the universe, the life of Sri Paramananda Puri, and the dear most object of Svarupa Damodara.

All glories to Sri Krsna Caitanya, the beloved master of Sri Rupa, Sri Sanatana, Jagadisa, and Gopinatha. Oh Lord of Darpan Govinda, please bless the entire universe by Your merciful glance.

Lord Gauracandra performed His pastimes of congregational chanting with Lord Nityananda, in this chapter I will describe Advaita Acarya Prabhu's(arrival?).

One day Lord Caitanya, exhibiting the mood of the Supreme Lord, ordered the younger brother of Srivasa Pandita; "Ramai go to Advaita Acarya's house and inform him of My appearance. Tell him that the person he has worshiped for so long, the person he wept for, the person he fasted for, that same Lord has now appeared. He has come to distribute knowledge of loving devotional service to the Supreme Lord, thus he must come immediately to meet Him. Also tell him about Lord Nityananda Prabhu's arrival, but do it secretly and explain to him everything you have seen. Tell him to come immediately, along with his wife, and bring all the paraphernalia for My worship."

Happy to be entrusted with these orders, Ramai started for Advaita Acarya's house, absorbed in remembrance of the Supreme Lord. Although he did not know the way, he felt very joyful, his only treasure was Lord Caitanya's instructions. Somehow, by divine guidance, he arrived at Advaita Acarya's house. Offering his obeisance to Advaita Acarya Prabhu he was overcome with great joy. He could not speak.

Advaita Acarya Prabhu already knew everything that was happening in Navadvipa. He could perceive this because he was on the pure devotional platform. He spoke to Ramai Pandita sweetly saying, "I know you have instructions to take me to Navadvipa." Ramai Pandita folded his hands in respect and said, "You already know everything, so please come quickly with me."

Advaita Acarya Prabhu was in a completely blissful state of mind, transcendental to all his bodily sensations. Who is able to fathom the transcendental nature of Advaita Acarya Prabhu? He is all important yet he speaks as if ignorant.

Advaita Acarya Prabhu then questioned Ramai Pandita, "In which scripture is it mentioned that the Supreme Lord Hari will descend to Navadvipa in a human form for the redemption of the fallen conditioned souls? O Ramai, your elder brother, Srivasa Pandita, knows about my standard of devotion, renunciation and self realization."

Ramai Pandita was well aware of Advaita Acarya Prabhu's spiritual powers thus he remained quiet, smiling within. Advaita Acarya Prabhu's transcendental pastimes are unlimited, they are a source of great joy to the pious, while they remain incomprehensible to sinful persons.

Again Advaita Acarya Prabhu inquired, "O Ramai, please tell me why you have come so suddenly?"

When Ramai Pandita felt that Advaita Acarya had calmed down, he began to cry while delivering Lord Caitanya Mahaprabhu's message: "That Supreme Personality for whom you have wept so profusely, for whom you have performed continuous worship, and for whom you have accepted vows of fasting and austerity, that Supreme Personality has now appeared to distribute love of Godhead, and He has instructed you to come to Him immediately. Please bring your wife with you, as well as all the proper paraphernalia for His worship. Lord Nityananda Prabhu has also appeared, He is non-different from Lord Caitanya and He is your life and soul. You already know everything, what more do I need to say. If I am fortunate enough then I will be able to see all of you together."

When Ramai Pandita delivered this message Advaita Acarya Prabhu swooned in ecstasy, lifting his hands he began to cry. Suddenly, to everyone's amazement, he fell unconscious. Shortly after he regained his external consciousness, roaring loudly he repeated, "I have brought, I have brought my Lord. The Lord has left His supreme abode in the Vaikuntha planets and appeared here in answer to my prayers." Saying this he fell to the ground weeping.

Hearing the news of the Lord's advent, the chaste wife of Advaita Acarya Prabhu, Sri Sita devi, who is respected as the mother of the entire universe, began to weep joyfully. Although Advaita Acarya's son, Acyutananda, was only a young boy he also cried incessantly. Advaita Acarya's house was transformed into an abode of love of Krsna as mother and son, surrounded by their friends and relatives, wept together joyfully.

Engrossed in thoughts of the Supreme Lord Advaita Acarya Prabhu tried to control himself but he was unable to remain still, his body swayed in slow motion, and he inquired from Ramai, "What did the Lord say to me?" Ramai replied, "To come immediately." Advaita Acarya said, "Listen Ramai Pandita, if He is actually my worshipable Supreme Lord then let Him appear before me to speak the truth. If He can exhibit His supreme opulence and place His lotus feet on my head then I will know that He is the Lord of my heart."

Ramai Pandita replied, "O Lord, what power do I possess to speak, if I am blessed then I can see with these eyes the Supreme Lord's pastimes. The Lord's desire is your desire and He has incarnated because of you."

Satisfied with Ramai's reply Advaita Acarya began preparing for the journey. "Get ready immediately", he told his wife, "Collect the different paraphernalia for worship and let us proceed."

Sitadevi was a chaste and dedicated woman, she had full knowledge of the truth about Lord Caitanya's pastimes and appearance. She collected incense, garlands, scented oils, cloves, sweet condensed milk, yogurt, cream, butter, camphor, betel leaf and nut for worship.

Advaita Acarya then left with his wife and Ramai Pandita. He reminded Ramai Pandita, "Do not tell the Lord that I have come, I want to find out what the Lord replies. I will hide in Nanda Acarya Prabhu's house."

Lord Visvambhara is the Supersoul residing in everyone's heart, thus He immediately knew Advaita Acarya's plans. Understanding that Advaita Acarya Prabhu had arrived in Navadvipa, He proceeded to Srivasa Pandita's house. By the arrangement of the Lord all of the devotees met there.

Seeing that the Lord was in a contemplative mood, the devotees remained quiet and apprehensive. The Lord suddenly rose up roaring like a lion. He went to sit on the seat of Lord Visnu which was placed on the altar. He began shouting, "Nara has come, Nara has come. I know Nara wants to test whether I am the actual Supreme Lord, the Supersoul within everyone's heart."

Nityananda Prabhu understood all of Lord Caitanya's moods, therefore He picked up the umbrella and held it over the Lord's head. Gadadhara Pandita, who was also perceptive to the Lord's moods, offered Him camphor and pan leaf.

All of the devotees followed and worshiped the Lord with various ingredients. Some offered prayers to the Lord, while others rendered different services.

Amidst all these activities Ramai Pandita returned. Before Ramai could speak the Lord said, "Nara has sent you to test Me." The Lord shook His head gently and said, "Nara has come. Although Nara knows Me well, he always tries to test Me. He is here in Navadvipa at Nanda Acarya's house and he has sent you here to test Me. Go quickly and bring him here immediately."

Ramai happily went back to Advaita Acarya Prabhu and narrated everything in detail to him. Advaita Acarya felt extremely blissful hearing the incidents that took place and he came to Srivasa Pandita's house considering his plans to be successful. Advaita Acarya wanted the whole earth to know that Lord Caitanya was the Supersoul and the all-potent Supreme Personality of Godhead. Now the Lord Himself had propagated this Supremacy.

Advaita Acarya and his wife approached the Lord, offering repeated obeisances from a great distance while chanting hymns in praise of the Lord. Advaita Acarya Prabhu was now fully (content?convinced) that he was seeing the fearless lotus feet of his beloved Lord, the most beautiful Personality in the entire creation. The beauty of millions upon millions of cupids seemed pale and ordinary next to the beauty of the Lord. His golden complexion was effulgent and His blissful face was beaming like millions of glowing full moons. The Lord looked down upon Advaita Acarya with great affection. Golden pillars were no match against the graceful and powerful arms of the Lord and the ornaments that decorated His arms paled any gems.

His breast was marked with the Srivatsa mark and the great kustubha jewel hung loosely from His neck. From His ears dangled fish shaped earrings and around His neck swung the vijanti garland. His unlimited mighty power and brilliance outshone a million suns. Rama, the goddess of fortune, always serves His lotus feet, and Ananta Sesa holds the umbrella over His head.

One is put to quandary to discern which are the Lord's nails and which are brilliant gems. He played the flute in a most exquisite position, bent in three places and a charming smile played on His lips.

Advaita Acarya Prabhu saw everything shining all around the Lord. The Lord, His devotees and the beautiful ornaments that decorated the Lord's transcendental form shone brilliantly. He also saw the four-headed Lord Brahma, the five-headed Lord Siva and the six-headed Lord Kartikaya offering Him obeisances, while Narada Muni and Sukdeva Gosvami recited prayers reverently. An extremely beautiful lady, who looked like mother Ganga, was offering the Lord obeisances seated on a chariot. All around, the demigods were offering eulogies and prayers to the Lord. Turning around he saw that hundreds and hundreds of demigods were flat on the ground offering their obeisances and repeating Lord Krsna's name.

Seeing these wonderful sights Advaita Acarya Prabhu lifted himself up from his prostrated position, overcome with awe and reverence. Huge many-hooded serpents stood with their hoods raised high offering hymns and prayers to the Lord. In another direction he saw many chariots, horses, elephants and swans, the carriers of the demigods. Innumerable wives of the demigods stood around with tears in their eyes offering praise to the Lord and chanting Lord Krsna's name. There was not an empty space left either in the sky or on land. In another direction all the great sages offered chaste prayers to the Lord. Totally overwhelmed Advaita Acarya and his wife stood there speechless.

Lord Visvambhara, the all merciful Supreme Godhead, looked at Advaita Acarya Prabhu and said, "I have descended to this earth because of your vow and your repeated devotional service and worship. I was resting on the ocean of milk and your roaring woke Me up. You are so merciful that you could not bear the sufferings of humanity, and so you have brought Me here to alleviate their sufferings. All these demigods, sages, devotees and associates that surround Me have appeared in answer to your prayers. You have arranged for all living entities to see those great devotees whom even Lord Brahma is constantly thinking about."

Hearing these wonderful words from the Lord's mouth, Advaita Acarya lifted his hands and wept along with his wife. "Today my life has become successful," he said, "All my dreams and desires have been fulfilled. Seeing Your lotus feet, my birth and all my activities have gained meaning. It is by unlimited good fortune that I am able to see, in person, that Personality whom even the Vedic literature has never seen, yet describes Him with mere words. O Lord, I am incapable of anything. Everything is made up of Your mercy. Who else but You can liberate the living entities?" Tears rolled down Advaita Acarya's face as he spoke.

"Now perform My worship," the Lord said. Having received this instruction Advaita Acarya Prabhu began to worship the Lord's lotus feet with great ecstasy. First he washed His feet with scented waters and then covered Them with highly scented oil. He dipped the tulasi manjari into the sandalwood paste and placed it on the Lord's lotus feet. Then, as tears of love flowed unrestricted from his eyes, he began to offer worship with flowers, scents, incense, frankincense and lamps.

He then offered the lamp with five flames while chanting prayers, after which everyone jubilantly glorified the Lord. He continued to worship the Lord strictly according to the injunctions of the scriptures, offering sixteen types of paraphernalia, as well as flower garlands, clothes and ornaments. He then glorified the Lord with the verse: "O my Lord, You are the well-wisher of the cows and the brahmanas, and You are the well wisher of the entire human society and world."

Advaita Acarya Prabhu offered his worship with this verse and then began to recite verses from the scriptures in praise of the Supreme Lord: "All glories, all glories to the Lord of everyone's heart, Lord Visvambhara. All glories to Lord Gauracandra, the ocean of mercy. All glories to Lord Caitanya Mahaprabhu, the source of all incarnations. He comes to prove that His devotees are always right. All glories to Him who feels great joy beholding the exquisite beauty of Laksmi devi. All glories to the Lord who is decorated with the mark of Srivatsa and is decorated with the kaustuba gem.

"All glories to Lord Visvambhara who has propagated the chanting of the maha mantra, Hare Krsna. All glories to Him, for He manifests the pastimes of a pure devotee just to teach the living entities the process of devotional service and surrender unto Him.

"All glories to Lord Mahaprabhu who lies on the bed of Ananta Sesa. All glories, all glories to the only Supreme shelter of all living entities. O my Lord, You are Lord Visnu. You are Krsna and You are Narayana. You are eternal and You appeared as Matsya, Kurma, Varaha and Vamana. In every millennium You protect and maintain the Vedic principles. You are Lord Ramacandra, the life of Mother Janaki, and the destroyer of all the demons. You gave a boon to the Chandala Guhuk, and You liberated mother

"You appeared as Lord Nrsimhadev just to protect Your beloved devotee Prahlad Maharaja, and in that incarnation You slew his father Hiranyakasipu. You are the most precious jewel of the Vedas, and the best of the brahmanas. You appeared in Nilacala in Your deity form to receive the worship of the living entities.

"The four Vedas search after You, but You have mercifully appeared here and hide Yourself from the Vedas. O Lord, You are most expert in hiding Yourself, but Your pure devotees are as expert in finding You out and exposing You. You have advented to propagate the congregational chanting of the holy name of God, this is unprecedented in the entire creation, there is no parallel to You.

"The nectar from Your two lotus feet satiates and intoxicates Lord Siva and Paravati. Rama, the goddess of fortune, constantly serves Your lotus feet with great attention, and great sages sing incessantly in praise of Your lotus feet.

"Lord Brahma worships You with great awe and reverence, and all the Sruti, Smrti and Puranic shastras glorify Your lotus feet. As Lord Vamana You covered the entire universe up to Satyaloka with Your lotus feet, and Bali Maharaja surrendered His life and soul, laying his head at Your feet.

"The holy Ganga emanates from Your lotus feet, and Lord Siva feels greatly fortunate to hold her waters on His head."

Advaita Acarya's intelligence was a million times greater than Brhaspati's. Thus he was fully aware of the absolute and transcendental position of Lord Caitanya. Drenched in his own tears, Advaita Acarya Prabhu glorified the Lord and fell prostrate before Him seeking shelter under His lotus feet.

Lord Gauranga is the Supreme Personality of Godhead, the Supersoul residing in every living entities heart. He lifted His lotus feet and placed Them on Advaita Acarya Prabhu's head. Seeing this, all the devotees began to glorify the Lord with jubilant sounds of victory. They swooned with joy and filled the air with sounds of the Lord's holy name, "Hari! Hari!"

The devotees lost control of themselves. Some of them rolled on the ground, many of them slapped each other boisterously, while others embraced, and some just cried out loudly. Advaita Acarya and his wife felt that all their desires were fulfilled because Lord Caitanya had placed his lotus feet on his head.

Lord Caitanya instructed Advaita Acarya Prabhu, "O Nara! See My glories and dance." Advaita Acarya Prabhu happily began dancing with great devotion. Someone started a sweet, melodious kirtana and Advaita Acarya Prabhu continued dancing ecstatically in front of Lord Caitanya. At times his dancing became sprite-like and at other times he danced gracefully with delicate movements.

At times he felt very humble and moved about holding a straw in his teeth. Sometimes he spun around jumping in the air and then falling to the ground he rolled back and forth. At other times he would breath deeply and quickly, and fall unconscious with ecstasy.

A variety of devotional moods overtook him as he danced ecstatically, spontaneously reciprocating with the mood of the kirtana. Finally he came and sat down quietly like a servile(?) servitor of the Lord. It is impossible to communicate this inconceivable and transcendental pastime.

Advaita Acarya Prabhu ran to Lord Caitanya's side. Seeing Lord Nityananda he buckled his eyebrows, and Nityananda Prabhu began to laugh. Advaita Acarya Prabhu replied laughing, "It is wonderful that You are here Nitai. For a long time I have had no trace of You. Now if You want to go anywhere, then I will tie You up."

Lord Nityananda laughed at Advaita Acarya Prabhu's demeanor. Though now They appeared in two different forms, in the pastimes of Lord Krsna They are the same Personality. I have already discussed previously how Nityananda Prabhu served Lord Caitanya in various ways, with great pleasure.

For this purpose He expanded Himself in many forms. In some forms He described the glories of the Lord, in other forms He meditated within His heart on the Lord, sometimes He manifested Himself as the Lord's umbrella and bed, while in another form He would sweetly sing the holy name of the Lord.

Only the most fortunate can understand that in this incarnation Lord Nityananda Prabhu and Lord Advaita Acarya Prabhu are non-different. In the course of Their pastimes whatever arguments or differences They had between Them are all the inconceivable and transcendental behavior of the Supreme Lord. The manner in which They served Lord Caitanya with great ecstasy is similar to the mood of service of Lord Ananta Sesa and Lord Siva. Those ignorant persons who do not understand the purport of Their quarrels and take sides, criticizing one and praising the other, are destined to perish.

The dancing of Advaita Acarya Prabhu mesmerized all the devotees and filled their hearts with ecstatic joy. When Lord Caitanya instructed Advaita Acarya Prabhu to stop dancing he immediately sat down accepting the Lord's instructions with utmost respect. Lord Caitanya then garlanded Advaita Acarya Prabhu with a garland from His own neck, smiling He said, "Ask for a boon, Advaita Acarya."

Advaita Acarya Prabhu remained quiet, yet Lord Visvambhara insisted on his asking for a boon. Advaita Acarya replied, "What more of a boon can I ask for?"

"What I wanted I already have received. Because You personally watched my dancing, my heart's desire has been fulfilled. What more could I ask from my Lord? I have seen You in person – that is all that matters. You know everything, You have seen everything with Your transcendental treasures.(?) You know what I want and what I do not want."

Inclining his head to one side Lord Visvambhara said, "I have appeared because of you, I will propagate the chanting of the holy name in every home so that the entire universe may dance, singing My glories. I promise that I will distribute love of Godhead to everyone. That devotional service which is worshiped and meditated upon by Lord Brahma, Lord Siva and by Me will now be given freely."

Advaita Acarya Prabhu said, "If You distribute love of Godhead, then give it also to the women, the sudras, the fallen and the ignorant people. And those sinful persons who have become intoxicated with material learning, wealth, family, etc., and subsequently do not respect Your devotees, or the process of devotional service to You, let them burn in the fire of hell. Let everyone else, including the chandalas, dance in ecstasy, chanting Your holy name."

Appreciating the words of Advaita Acarya the Lord roared loudly, "Everything you have said is true. Let the entire world bear witness to Your mercy upon the ignorant and fallen conditioned souls."

While the low class chandalas danced in ecstasy, chanting the Lord's name, the brahmana scholars like Bhatta Misra Cakravarti and others could only criticize Lord Caitanya. These atheistic scholars vigilantly studied the scriptures and felt very proud, thinking that they had mastered them, which actually destroyed their proper intelligence and understanding of the Vedas.

These people criticized Lord Nityananda without understanding His transcendental pastimes, thus inviting their own doom.

I have described in this chapter how the entire universe received love of Godhead by the mercy of Sri Advaita Acarya Prabhu. The esoteric discussions between Lord Caitanya, Lord Nityananda, and Advaita Acarya Prabhu are all known to Sarasvati, the goddess of learning. She appears in the mouth of all the pure devotees of the Lord and sings the unlimited glories and pastimes of the Lord.

I offer my obeisances at the lotus feet of all the Vaisnavas so that I may be cleansed of all sins and offenses.

Sri Krsna Caitanya and Lord Nityananda are my life and soul.

I, Vrndavana Dasa, humbly offer this song at Their lotus feet.

Madhya Lila

Chapter 7

Lord Caitanya, the ocean of all transcendental qualities, is the most graceful dancer. He is like the Cintamani gem which fulfills everyone's desire by the arrangement of Providence. The rare gem of devotional service unto His lotus feet has been given to me.

All glories to Lord Gaurasundara, the life and soul of every living entity, and the most beloved object of Sri Advaita Acarya Prabhu and Lord Nityananda. He sustains life in Sri Jagannatha Pandita and Sri Damodara, and is the crown jewel of (?) heart.

May that Supreme Lord Gauracandra, who is the Lord and master of Jagadisa and Gopinatha, be glorified, along with all His dear devotees.

Lord Gauracandra continued to perform His ecstatic pastimes with Lord Nityananda Prabhu in Navadvipa. All the Vaisnavas accompanied Srila Advaita Acarya Prabhu who led them in grand, ecstatic dancing and chanting of the holy name of Lord Krsna.

Lord Nityananda Prabhu remained in Srivasa Pandita's house and constantly exhibited the mood of a young boy. When He sat down to eat He would not feed Himself, but acted like a young boy, thus Malini, Srivasa Pandita's wife, would have to feed Him.

Now hear the story of Vidyanidhi Prabhu's arrival in Navadvipa. Pundarika was a very dear associate of Sri Krsna. By the Lord's arrangement he appeared in the village of Cattagrama in East Bengal, and purified that land. The Lord Himself appeared in Navadvipa and when He could not find Pundarika Vidyanidhi there He sighed heavily, feeling separation from him.

One day after ecstatic dancing, the Lord sat down exclaiming, "O My father Pundarika," and began to cry. "O Pundarika, O My father when will I be able to see You again." Such was the extent of the Lord's affection for Pundarika Vidyanidhi. In this way Lord Gauracandra revealed His intimate associates by performing such wonderful pastimes.

All the devotees surrounding the Lord were unable to comprehend the import of the name. He continued to repeat, and the reason for the tears which flowed from His eyes. They conjectured that Pundarika naturally implied Krsna, and Vidyanidhi could have many different explanations, but no one could understand that this person was a very confidential associate of the Lord. When the Lord finally came out of trance the devotees asked Him, "For which associate of Yours are You weeping my Lord? Please reveal to us who he is, when he was born and what he does. Tell us, Lord, so that we may have the good fortune to know him."

The Lord replied, "You are certainly fortunate because you desire to hear about him. His activities and character are most wonderful, the whole world can be purified simply by hearing his name. His ecstatic appearance is almost like an ordinary man, therefore no one can recognize Him as a pure devotee of the Lord.

"This highly learned scholar brahmana was born in Cakragrama. He strictly executed the prescribed religious principles and was respected by everyone. He always floats in the ocean of nectar of love of Krsna, and his body constantly displays various ecstatic symptoms such as crying, horripilation, etc. He never went for ablutions to the Ganga to cleanse himself of his sins like everyone else, nor did he enter her waters. He also avoided touching her with his feet.

"However he came to see and pay his respects to her everyday in the evening when the teeming crowds had all gone. He could not bear to see Mother Ganga disrespected and utilized by people who spat into her, cleaned their mouth with her waters, and washed their hair and dirty clothes in her. Thus he preferred to come to her in the evenings when there was no one around.

"Another wonderful characteristic of Pundarika Vidyanidhi is that he always drank Ganga water before worshiping the Lord, then he performed all his daily prescribed religious duties. This was meant to give a lesson to all the puffed up scholars about the greatness of Mother Ganga.

"He is presently in Cakragrama, but he is soon coming to Navadvipa where he also has a house. None of you will be able to recognize him, as on first sight one would be inclined to think he was an ordinary materialistic person. I am very anxious to see him, so all of you must endeavor and pray to bring him here very quickly."

Talking about Pundarika Vidyanidhi threw the Lord into an ecstatic trance and He began to weep saying, "O My father, Pundarika." The Lord lamented loudly, for only He could understand the extent of the greatness of such a pure Vaisnava, and through His mercy only can that wonderful and unique position of a pure devotee be revealed.

When the Supreme Personality of Godhead Himself attracts a living entity, there is no way that one cannot respond. Thus Pundarika Vidyanidhi suddenly desired to go to Navadvipa. He made arrangements and came to Navadvipa with many disciples. In Navadvipa he remained incognito and all the ordinary men considered him to be a lavish materialist, attached to a life of comfort and self enjoyment.

With the exception of Mukunda, no one amongst the Vaisnava's knew about Pundarika Vidyanidhi's arrival in Navadvipa. Sri Mukunda was a ayurvedic, brahmana doctor who was born in Caktagrama, thus he knew about the wonderful Vaisnava qualities of Pundarika Vidyanidhi. When Mukunda found out that he was in Navadvipa, he was so overwhelmed that it was difficult for him to control himself.

However, Mukunda did not reveal Pundarika Vidyanidhi's identity to anyone. Thus Pundarika remained a materialistic self enjoyer in the eyes of the ordinary folks. Only Mukunda and his brother Vasudeva Dutta knew about the intensity of Pundarika's love for God.

Gadadhara Pandita and Mukunda were very dear friends and always kept in each other's company. Mukunda thus told Gadadhara Pandita, "Listen carefully Gadadhara, a very great devotee has come to Navadvipa. You have been hankering for the association of pure vaisnavas and today your desire will be fulfilled. I will take you to see a wonderful Vaisnava devotee. In return for this I simply want you to think of me as your dear servant."

The excited and happy Gadadhara Pandita called out the name of Krsna as they proceeded towards the great vaisnava's residence. Arriving there they found Pundarika Vidyanidhi sitting comfortably. Gadadhara offered his obeisances and was respectfully seated.

Vidyanidhi inquired from Mukunda, "What is his name and which village does he come from? I can see that his body is effulgent due to rendering devotional service to the Supreme Lord Visnu, both his form and demeanor are extremely wonderful."

"His name is Sri Gadadhara", Mukunda replied, "He is very fortunate because from early childhood he has been totally detached from family life. His external, material identity is that he is the son of the brahmana Sri Madhva Misra. Because he is totally absorbed in devotional service he only associates with Vaisnavas, and he is extremely dear to all the devotees. When he heard about you he was anxious to meet you."

After hearing the wonderful qualities of Gadadhara Pandita, Vidyanidhi was very pleased to meet him. That great personality, Sri Pundarika Vidyanidhi, sat like a prince. His beautiful bed was made of wood, covered with intricate brass and a reddish stone inlay work. Above were three tiers of ornamental overhangings, made of glittering brocade strips. He was seated on a soft mattress covered with clean expensive sheets, and silk pillows were placed under his back.

On either side of him many small and large water pots sat within his reach, as well as a nice shining brass plate with betel pan neatly prepared on it. Two large ornate mirrors hung on either side of him which he continually glanced into while smiling with lips reddened from chewing pan. He wore a sandalwood paste tilaka mark on his forehead and his face was decorated with dots made from a mixture of sandalwood and perfume. As for his hair, it was well-groomed and shining with delicately perfumed hair oil.

Two persons stood behind him fanning him gently with long peacock feathers and in front of him was a nicely prepared hammock. Because he followed a life of pure devotional service, he looked as charming as Cupid himself. Those who did not know him would consider him to be a prince, as everything about him and around him gave the impression that he was a man of easy and comfortable life, given to pleasure.

When Gadadhara Pandita saw these luxurious items and a general atmosphere of materialistic life he became suspicious. Since Gadadhara was a fully renounced soul from his early childhood, naturally some doubts regarding the character of Pundarika Vidyanidhi entered his heart. He thought, "What sort of a Vaisnava is he, surrounded by so much finery and lavish living? Hearing about his devotional mood I developed great respect for this person, but now on seeing him it is slowly giving way to doubt and suspicion."

Mukunda understood the mind and heart of Gadadhara Pandita, thus he took upon himself to reveal the true nature of Pundarika Vidyanidhi. By the special mercy of Lord Krsna, Gadadhara Pandita was allowed to perceive everything – nothing remained unknown to him.

In a very sweet voice Mukunda began to sing a verse from the Srimad Bhagavatam describing the glories of devotional service: "Alas how shall I take shelter of one more merciful than He who granted the position of a mother to the she-demon Putana? Putana was unfaithful and always hankering for the blood of human children. With that desire in mind she prepared deadly poison to be sucked from her breast and came to kill Krsna, but because she offered her breasts to the Lord she attained the greatest achievement."

As soon as these words concerning devotional service entered his ears, Pundarika Vidyanidhi began to weep, tears of ecstatic love welled up in his eyes, rolling down his face profusely like streams of the Ganga. Simultaneously all the symptoms of ecstasy manifested on his person. He wept, trembled, rolled, horripilated, roared and finally fell into an unconscious state of ecstasy.

Then suddenly regaining consciousness he said in a loud voice, "Speak, speak," and again fell down to the ground. Agitated with spiritual emotions he kicked everything that was near him and all the luxurious paraphernalia went crashing to the ground. The shining brass pots of water, the container of betel pan, pillows, bed sheets, everything became a confused mass. He began tearing his fine clothes, and his well groomed hair went haywire as he wept and rolled in the dust.

He cried out, "O Krsna, My Lord, My soul, My very life, You have made me hard-hearted like a stone." He lamented loudly, piteously crying out, "I have been deprived of the Lord's association in His most merciful incarnation." He rolled around and crashed down to the ground. Everyone was afraid he might break his bones.

He trembled so violently that three persons could not hold him down. He kicked everything that was in his way, as his disciples stood by helplessly, unable to control him. In this way the storm of ecstatic love continued until it finally abated and he fell into an unconscious state of bliss. He lay down without breathing, totally submerged in an ocean of spiritual ecstasy.

Amazed at what he witnessed Gadadhara Pandita began to worry, thinking "What inauspiciousness has overcome me to make me think in such an offensive manner about this great personality?" He embraced Mukunda, being extremely pleased with him. Drenching him with tears of love he said, "Mukunda you have acted like a true friend, you have shown me a pure and unalloyed devotee of the Lord. It would be difficult to find another pure Vaisnava like him anywhere in this entire creation.

"One can become totally purified simply by observing his devotional attitude. Today, because you are right next to me I have been able to avoid a great catastrophe. When I saw all the luxurious paraphernalia surrounding Pundarika Vidyanidhi I was convinced that he was a materialistic Vaisnava given to the pleasures of life.

You could read my mind and being a great magnanimous soul you revealed to me the unlimited extent of Pundarika Vidyanidhi's love of for God. Yet today I have been offensive and the extent of my offense can only be mitigated by your mercy. You must be merciful to me and purify my heart.

All these devotees who have taken to the process of surrender through devotional service to the Lord have all accepted the shelter of a guide under whose instructions they act.

Yet I do not have such an instructor, so I have decided to take shelter of Pundarika Vidyanidhi and follow devotional service under his guidance. I know that I can counteract all my offenses to him by becoming his disciple." Thus Gadadhara Pandita revealed to Mukunda his desire to become a disciple of Pundarika Vidyanidhi. Mukunda was extremely pleased with the decision and patted him on the back saying, "Very good, very good."

Sri Pundarika Vidyanidhi was in a state of ecstatic coma for six hours. Gradually he returned to his normal state and sat down quietly. It was impossible for Gadadhara Pandita to control the tears of joy which rolled profusely down his face, wetting his entire body. When Sri Vidyanidhi saw this, he embraced Gadadhara Pandita, holding him to his heart. Overwhelmed by Pundarika Vidyanidhi's ecstatic devotion, Gadadhara was unable to sleep.(?)

Mukunda spoke up, revealing Gadadhara Pandita's mind, "Doubt arose in Gadadhara's mind when he first saw your extravagant appearance and surroundings, but now he is repentant and wants to accept initiation from you. He is a renounced devotee of the Lord. Although he is young, he is mature in spiritual realization, and comes from the very good family of Madhva Misra. From early childhood he has always been very attached to the Supreme Lord. I think it is a very good match — a very elevated spiritual master like Pundarika Vidyanidhi having an equally able disciple like Gadadhara Pandita. Please consider these points and choose an auspicious day to initiate him with your diksa mantra."

Pundarika Vidyanidhi smiled and said, "Be assured that I will do as you say, for by the Lord's mercy I have had the great fortune to meet a person who is like a precious gem. The result of many lifetimes of pious activities is that one may find a disciple such as him. The forthcoming twelfth day of the waxing moon is very auspicious, come here to meet me and your plan will become successful." Overjoyed, Gadadhara Pandita offered his obeisances and took leave of Pundarika Vidyanidhi. Mukunda and Gadadhara went straight to meet Lord Gauracandra, who happily received the news of Pundarika Vidyanidhi's arrival.

During the night, without being seen by anyone, Pundarika left all his associates behind and came to the place of Lord Gauracandra. As soon as he saw the Lord he fell down like a rod, offering his obeisances to the Lord. Overwhelmed with ecstatic trance he lay on the ground experiencing waves of joy. Shortly afterwards he regained external consciousness and roared loudly. Then, despising(?) himself, he began to weep saying, "O my dear Krsna, You are my Lord and father. I am a great offender. Please punish this wretch. O Lord, You have liberated everyone in the world, only I have been deprived of such good fortune."

Hearing his lamentation all the assembled Vaisnavas, who knew Pundarika Vidyanidhi to be a great and elevated Vaisnava, felt pained and began to cry.

The Supreme Personality of Godhead, Lord Caitanya, is especially inclined to His pure devotees, therefore upon seeing His beloved devotee, He got up and embraced him. Crying the Lord said, "O My father Pundarika, finally I am able to see you today."

The Vaisnavas were overjoyed to have the association of such an elevated devotee as Pundarika Vidyanidhi and their eyes filled with tears. So wonderful was this scene that no pen could possibly describe it.

Lord Gaurasundara held Pundarika Vidyanidhi in a loving embrace, wetting him with His tears. Understanding how dear Pundarika was to the Lord, the devotees immediately felt affection, respect and a sense of closeness with him. The Lord continued to hold Pundarika Vidyanidhi closely as if He wanted to merge His body into his. For sometime the Lord was unable to move. Remaining like a statue He held Vidyanidhi in His close embrace. When the Lord came out of trance He began to chant the name of Hari, and said, "Today Lord Krsna has been very merciful to Me – He has fulfilled all My desires. I have met the person of My heart's desire."

Pundarika Vidyanidhi greeted all the Vaisnavas fondly and they began to chant the holy name together. The Lord then introduced Pundarika saying, "His name is Pundarika Vidyanidhi, the Lord has specially created him to distribute love of Godhead."

Hearing this, the devotees happily responded by lifting their arms and chanting "Hari, Hari." The Lord said, "Today is a special day, a wonderful thing has happened, I woke up from sleep and My eyes beheld the ocean of love of Godhead directly in Person."

All this went on while Pundarika Vidyanidhi was absorbed within himself in an ecstatic trance, totally unaware of his immediate external surroundings.

Suddenly he became aware of the devotees around him and he immediately offered obeisances to the Lord, properly recognizing Him for the first time since their meeting. Then he offered his obeisances to Advaita Acarya Prabhu and exchanged obeisances with all the other Vaisnavas.

It was a glorious scene, as all the devotees floated on waves of ecstasy, thrilled to have met Pundarika Vidyanidhi who himself is an ocean of love of Godhead. Only an extremely pious and fortunate person is able to describe this marvelous scene.

Gadadhara Pandita took Lord Visvambhara's permission to accept initiation from Pundarika Vidyanidhi. Gadadhara said, "I could not understand the uncommon behavior of this great personality and so I became disrespectful. Therefore in order to cleanse myself of this sin I want to become his disciple, for certainly as my spiritual master he will exonerate me."

Appreciating Gadadhara Pandita's mood, the Lord said, "Yes, perform it quickly." Thus Gadadhara Pandita formerly accepted initiation from Pundarika Vidyanidhi, the ocean of ecstatic loving devotion.

What ability do I have to speak about the wonderful qualities of Pundarika Vidyanidhi, for he was such an elevated Vaisnava that even Gadadhara Pandita was his disciple.

I have just narrated in short this wonderful pastime of Pundarika Vidyanidhi, as I was hankering for this opportunity with the hope that I will be able to have his initiation.(?) Both the spiritual master and the disciple are competent and are dearly beloved of the Supreme Lord, Sri Krsna Caitanya.(?)

Whoever hears of this meeting between Gadadhara Pandita and Pundarika Vidyanidhi will gradually experience the highest ecstasies of love of Godhead.

Lord Sri Krsna Caitanya and Lord Nityananda Prabhu are my life and soul,

I, Vrndavana Dasa, offer my humble song at Their lotus feet.

Madhya Lila

Chapter 8

All glories to the beloved Lord Gaurasundara, who is most dear to everyone, especially Lord Nityananda and Advaita Acarya Prabhu. He is the life and soul of Sri Jagannatha Pandita and Sri Gadadhara, and the most precious treasure of Pundarika Vidyanidhi. All glories to Lord Caitanya for He is the Lord and master of Jagadisa and Gopinatha. All glories to the associates of Lord Caitanya.

Lord Caitanya continued to perform wonderful pastimes in Navadvipa along with Lord Nityananda Prabhu. Assisting in Their pastimes Advaita Acarya Prabhu, as well as all the other Vaisnavas, performed grand kirtana, dancing ecstatically while constantly chanting of the holy name of Lord Krsna.

While Nityananda Prabhu remained in Srivasa Pandita's house He manifested the mood of a young boy. He would not even eat by Himself and had to be fed by Mother Malini, who felt like a mother to Him.

One day Lord Caitanya began to discuss topics regarding Krsna Consciousness with Srivasa Pandita. Wanting to test Srivasa He asked, "Why do you keep and maintain this Avadhuta in your house? You don't even know anything about Him, who He is, where He comes from or what is His family background is. I warn you that you are being too lenient and kind to Him. If you want to maintain the good reputation of your family in society then you should immediately turn this Avadhuta out of Your house."

Srivasa Pandita smiled and said, "O Lord, it is not proper for You to test me in this way. I know that Lord Nityananda is Your expansion. You are the Supreme Lord and there is no difference between Yourself and Lord Nityananda. I am Your servant and anyone who serves You becomes my master. Even if Lord Nityananda were a meat-eating drunkard and due to my association with Him I lost my reputation, wealth and everything, still, I tell You truly that I would never think of anything else other than serving His and Your lotus feet."

Hearing Srivasa Pandita speaking in this manner, the Lord stood up and roared loudly with great joy, "What have I just heard from you, Srivasa Pandita? You have so much faith and love for Nityananda Prabhu? You have understood the truth about My dearmost confidential associate. This has pleased Me so much that I grant you this boon: even if there comes a time when Laksmi devi, the Goddess of fortune, is forced to wander about with a begging bowl, still your house will never know the chills of penury. Everyone in Your house, including your pet dogs and cats, will find complete shelter in My devotional service. Therefore I leave Lord Nityananda Prabhu in your care so that you may look after Him and serve Him properly." Saying this the Lord returned home.

Lord Nityananda spent His time roaming about Navadvipa. Sometimes He went to the Ganga to take a swim and happily allowed the currents to carry Him away. At other times He played with the young boys acting like a little child Himself. He would visit the houses of Gangadasa Pandita and Murari Gupta, and then run to Lord Caitanya's house where Mother Saci showered Him with affection. Absorbed in the mood of a young boy, Lord Nityananda would try to catch mother Saci's feet and she always tried to escape from Him.

One night mother Saci had a dream which she later related to Lord Visvambhara in confidence. "Late in the night I dreamed I saw You and Nityananda. You were two five year old boys, running about playing and fighting. I saw both of You enter the Deity room and then come out with the deity of Lord Balarama in Your hand, and the deity of Krsna in Nityananda's hand. The four of You then began to fight with each other.

"Lord Balarama and Lord Krsna were angry and said to You, 'Hey, You cheaters, You impostors, get out of here. This house and this room belongs to Us, and everything else here like the sweets, curds and milk are all Ours.'

"Nityananda replied, 'Those days of stealing butter and curd for You to eat are now gone. You are no longer cowherd boys. Now You have become young brahmanas, so give up Your possessiveness about all these sweets, yogurt and milk now. If You do not listen to Our sweet persuasion then We will convince you with a beating. Who is going to tolerate Your plundering and mischief.'

"Lord Balarama and Lord Krsna replied, 'We will catch hold of both of You impostors and tie You up and leave you here. If by chance You go against the wishes of Krsna, no one will blame Us for this.'(?)"

"Lord Nityananda Prabhu then replied, 'Who is afraid of Your Krsna? My Lord and Master is Lord Visvambhara.'

"The four of them fought with each other in this way, snatching the sweets and food from each other's hands and mouths and eating it. Nityananda called out to me saying, 'Mother, bring My food. I am very hungry'.

"Thereafter I woke up, but I cannot understand anything of this dream. Therefore, I am telling You."

Hearing the description of Mother Saci's dream, Lord Visvambhara smiled and spoke to her tenderly. "That was a nice dream you had mother, but do not tell this to everyone. Our Deities are actually living and are very potent. Your dream has increased and strengthened My devotion and faith in Them. It is interesting that you dreamt about this, as I have been observing something strange which I did not reveal before because I was feeling ashamed. I noticed that the foodstuff which your daughter-in-law cooked and offered to Their Lordships, Lord Balarama and Lord Krsna, would remain half-eaten after the offering was over. I was suspicious of my wife, but now everything has become clear.

Visnupriya, Sri Laksmi Devi, the mother of the universe, heard the details of Mother Saci's dream from the inner quarters and smiled at her husband's words.

Lord Visvambhara said, "Mother let me go and bring Nityananda here right away and you can feed him." Happy to hear this, Saci Mata quickly began to prepare for cooking.

Lord Visvambhara went to Nityananda Prabhu and extended an invitation to Him, along with a warning: "Today, we are making a special offering to the Deities, so please do not misbehave."

Nityananda Prabhu caught hold of His ears and cried, "Visnu, Visnu, only made people misbehave. You think that I will misbehave because You think everyone is like Yourself." Joking in this way, They proceeded towards Visvambhara's house, absorbed in talks of Krsna.

Entering the house, They were given water to wash Their feet and then sat down to eat next to each other, surrounded by Gadadhara Pandita and other friends. Sitting together in this way, Nityananda and Visvambhara looked exactly like Lord Ramacandra and Laksmi sitting in Their mother's house. The mood was the same and Their affection for each other was the same, as They were the same Persons.

Mother Saci was very happy and excitedly hurried to serve out three full plates of prasadam for the two of Them. When she returned she found two young boys of five in the place where Visvambhara and Nityananda had been sitting. One of the boys had a blackish complexion and the other was very fair. Both of Them were exquisitely beautiful, and both were without any clothing. One of Them had four arms which held the conch shell, disc, mace and lotus. His breast was marked with the Srivatsa, the glistening kosa(kaustubha?) jewel hung from His neck and beautiful fish-shaped earrings dangled from His ears. The other boy held the plough and the pestle. She also saw her daughter-in-law, Visnupriya, situated on the breast of one of the young children. No sooner had she seen this wonderful sight, then it vanished.

Mother Saci stood still, mummified with ecstasy and tears rolled down her face drenching her clothes. All the foodstuff scattered as mother Saci fell to the ground and lay unconscious.

Lord Visvambhara rushed to wash His hands and mouth then quickly ran to rescue His mother. Lifting her up He said, "Mother, Mother, please get up, calm down, get control of yourself. Why did you suddenly fall to the ground?"

Mother Saci slowly regained consciousness and quickly tied her loosened hair. Without uttering a word she went inside her room and began weeping. She was overwhelmed with ecstatic love for God and nothing else mattered to her. Her breath came in great sighs and her body trembled from head to toe.

Meanwhile the servant, Isana, cleaned the eating room. He collected the remnants of food that had scattered on the floor and ate it all. Isana is truly extremely fortunate, for everyday he performed such wonderful activities yet he remained like a servant, thus no one knew that he was actually perceiving the highest transcendental truth.

Lord Gauracandra, along with His devotees, continued to perform congregational chanting of the holy name in Navadvipa. Although the Lord's eternal associates had appeared in different parts of Bengal, gradually, in small numbers, they began to come to Navadvipa. There they soon found out that the Supreme Lord had appeared. Allaying the fears of the devotees and filling their hearts with bliss, Lord Visvambhara manifested Himself before them as the Supreme Personality of Godhead.

The Lord's devotees are as dear to Him as His own heart, thus that Supreme Personality who is intensely sought after through the Vedic literature, mixed freely with His devotees, embracing all of them so lovingly that each one of them felt as if he were the most prominent of the Lord's associates.

The Lord regularly visited His disciples in their homes, where he would exhibit to them His four-handed form. Sometimes He went to Gangadasa Pandita's house or to Murari Gupta's house, and at other times He visited Srivasa Pandita's. But all the while The Lord's constant companion was Nityananda Prabhu, from whom He could not bear to be separated. Lord Nityananda was always engrossed in the playful mood of a young boy, and Visvambhara wholeheartedly reciprocated with him in the same spirit.

According to their particular faith, various devotees saw Lord Caitanya appear before them in different incarnations: Matsya, Kurma, Varaha, Vamana, Nrsimha, etc.

Some days the Lord was absorbed in the mood of the gopi's and wept continuously, oblivious to the passage of time. Other days He felt like Uddhava, or Akrura, while at other times felt like Lord Balarama and demanded that wine be brought to Him. Sometimes he was filled with the emotions of Lord Brahma and began chanting hymns, falling on the ground. Another time, feeling like Prahlad Maharaja, He offered prayers to the Supreme Lord. In this way Lord Caitanya floated on various waves of devotional ecstasy.

Observing the happiness of her son, Mother Saci was extremely happy, yet one dreadful thought continuously interrupted her cheerful mood: "What if my son leaves home?" Brushing such unpleasant thoughts aside she said, "Dear son, go and take Your bath in the Ganga."

"Mother, please chant the holy name, Krsna, Rama." In every conversation with His Mother the Lord simply replied with one word: 'Krsna'.

These super excellent transcendental pastimes of the Lord's are all inconceivable. They cannot be understood by any amount of material calculation.

One day a wandering devotee of Lord Siva passed by singing the glories of his Lord, while dancing blissfully round and round. Hearing the singing of the Sivaite, Sri Caitanya suddenly appeared in the form of Lord Siva, with great matted locks of hair piled on His head. Jumping up on the singer's shoulders He shouted loudly, "I am Sankara, I am Sankara." The people watched in amazement as the Lord sat perched on the devotee's shoulder. Playing on a horn and a small hand tabor, the Lord encouraged the Sivaite to continue singing.

That day, that fortunate devotee received the full benefit of purely glorifying his Lord Siva – purely without offenses. The Supreme Lord Gaurasundara sat on his shoulders. The Lord regained normalcy and climbing down He personally offered alms to the singer. The singer devotee left feeling extremely grateful and satisfied. The devotee servants of Lord Gauranga shouted Lord Hari's name in illusion, feeling a surge of devotional ecstasy in the Lord's company.

The Lord said, "You My brothers, please hear the essential teachings of all scriptures. Why should we waste our nights in useless activities? Let us make a firm resolution from today to spend the nights engaged in the most auspicious activities, chanting the Lord's name. By performing congregational chanting of the holy name, all of us will drown in divine deluge as if the flood of devotional ecstasy is gushing like Ganga devi. Let the whole world be delivered by hearing the holy name; in that way you will become everyone's spiritual life-giver and beloved treasure."

The Lord's words breathed great joy to all the Vaisnava hearts – Lord Caitanya had begun His kirtana pastimes. Every night, the Lord met the devotees in Srivasa Pandita's house and performed kirtana. Some days He would also meet in Candra Sekhara's house. These kirtana meetings would be attended by so many devotees, the Lord's dear servants, that all their names cannot possibly be remembered.

Lord Nityananda was there with Gadadhara Pandita, Advaita Acarya, Srivasa Pandita, Vidyanidhi, Murari, Hiranya, Haridasa Thakura, Gangadasa, Banamali, Bijoy, Nandana, Jagadananda Pandita, Buddhimanta Khan, Narayana, Kasisvara, Vasudeva, Rama, Garudai, Govinda, Govindarama, Gopinatha, Jagadisa, Sriman, Sridhara, Sadasiva, Vakresvara, Srigarbha, Suklambara, Brahmananda, Purusottama, Sanjaya and others. The Lord was always surrounded only by such devotees who accompanied Him in kirtana and dancing.

The Lord's ecstatic thunderous roars and loud kirtana rented the very limits of the material world.

These kirtans agitated the envious atheists. They clapped their thighs and jumped up, pouring out streams of profanity, "All this loud howling and wild dancing after a good wine bout as soon as it gets to be night time, is robbing us of our entire night's precious sleep. These impostors entice women to them with their hypnotic enchantments and enjoy them the whole night. These atheists are consumed in their own fire of hate, and the Lord, Sacinandana, dances in graceful ebullience.

As soon as the kirtana begins, the Lord comes in trance and becomes oblivious to the phenomenal world. Dancing, He falls to the ground with such force that the earth quakes and cracks in places. The devotees look at Him mummified in fear. As the Lord's tender body contacts the hard surface, Sacimata closes her eyes silently praying to Lord Govinda, Krsna for his protection. Sacimata knows that Nimai is in spiritual trance, yet due to her intense love for the Lord she experienced great agony. She did not know what action to take so she earnestly prayed to the Lord. "O Lord Krsna, please grant me this wish, that I may not know when Nimai hurls Himself to the ground. Please grant me this mercy, Krsna.

Although for Nimai there is no pain but actual blissfulness, I will be happy to remain unaware of all this." Lord Caitanya, the Supreme Lord knew Sacimata's wishes, so accordingly He infused in her divine ecstasy. As long as Lord Caitanya performed kirtana and dancing, Mother Saci entered a state of spiritual exhilaration and became heedless of this material world.

All the time now, the Lord spent in kirtana and ecstatic dancing surrounded by His followers. Some days the devotees would collect in the Lord's house and begin loud sankirtana while the Lord immersed Himself in dancing.

At times the Lord exhibited His mood as the Omnipotent Supreme Controller. Then at other times he wept in humility saying, "I am Your servant." Dear readers hear these narrations about the Lord's transcendental ecstasies very attentively, for there is no one who can dance so gracefully as Lord Caitanya in the entire creation. And likewise the beautiful and exuberant singing of His associates that accompany His dancing is also incomparable.

On special (religious) days, like ekadasi, dvadasa or Visnu tattva appearances, Lord Caitanya assembled all the devotees in Srivasa Pandita's house from early dawn and began mesmerizing everyone with jubilant dancing. In the house of that most fortunate soul, Srivasa Pandita a melodious tumult of the holy names of Govinda Gopala went up in the atmosphere. Different kirtana groups emerged from the assembled devotees.

Srivasa Pandita headed one group, Mukunda another and Govinda yet another. They all sang and the Lord danced. Nityananda Prabhu, that great spiritual stalwart circumambulated the dancing Lord while Advaita Acarya Prabhu stealthily lifted the dust from the ground where the Lord danced and put it on his head. Gadadhara Pandita and others experienced divine exhilaration and looked at the Lord with tearful eyes.

Hear some of the descriptions of how they performed kirtanas to accompany the Lord's magnificent dancing. They sang often in "Bhatigari Raga." The directions resounded with the singing of the holy name, "Govinda", and Mahaprabhu accompanied it lost in His scintillating body movements. They sang, "Hari O Rama. Hari O Rama."

Lord Caitanya would begin to weep during kirtanas. It continued for a minimum of an hour. His long tresses tossed about on the ground and He made no attempt to tie them. Only hearts of stone can remain unmoved by the sight; the devotees fell swooning to the ground trying to reach out to the Lord. And when He began laughing, He broke out in carefree effervescent mirth infecting everyone with ecstatic joy for hours. Lord Caitanya being surcharged with the mood of servitorship became unaware of His own divinity. Jubilantly He repeated, "I am victorious. I am victorious." and all the devotees chorused the same.

At intervals the Lord sang out so loudly it sounded as if the entire universe would split open. Sometimes He became heavier than our earth, impossible for anyone to hold Him; and again He lost so much weight in a moment, He was lighter than cotton wool and being carried around the house jubilantly by devotees on their shoulders. The Lord frequently went into ecstatic trances on the least of provocation putting the devotees in anxiety and they chanted, "Hari" loudly into His ears to awaken Him.

Then sometimes His entire body shivered uncontrollably, His teeth chattering like a little boy out on a winter morning. Next moment He was drenched in cold sweat like Mother Ganga was flowing out of His pores. His body would suddenly become burning hot, drying up all the cooling sandal paste applied to His person. He released gigantic sighs throwing asunder the devotees from His front and then He rushed at the devotees to catch their feet and all the Vaisnavas tried to escape the Lord.

The Lord liked to sit and rest back against Lord Nityananda lifting His lotus feet He looked smiling at the devotees. The devotees immediately comprehended the impact of this pastime and they ran to loot the priceless treasure of the dust of the Lord's lotus feet. Advaita Acarya said, "O You thief, now we have crushed Your pride." Lord Caitanya blissfully rolled on the ground and allowed the devotees to glorify Krsna.

When Lord Caitanya danced vigorously, the earth quaked and the devotees looked around in apprehension, but when He danced with graceful postures He looked like the divine Krsna, the son of Nanda Maharaja. He roared sometimes with the roar of ten million lions but He carefully protected the devotees ear drums. Often He would be seen by some moving on air a little above the ground, yet not everyone could see. He stared at devotees with eyes turned bright red due to feelings of extreme ecstasy. They were shocked at first but fled away laughing.

Visvambhara became restless with ecstasy and danced, lost in Himself. He caught someone's feet and sometimes even clambered on His head. He would drape around someone's neck weeping, and the next moment would climb on to his shoulders. Again overcome by the youthful mood He became restless and made sounds of musical instruments with His mouth like a playful lad. He would shake His foot and laugh continuously and then get down and crawl on all fours feeling like a baby.

At times Visvambhara entered into the mood of Syamananda Sundara Krsna and stood for hours in the trilinga position (the body bent in three places). He meditated for sometime and then played the flute melodiously. He looked just like Krsna, the moon of Vrndavana. When He came out of this mood He again felt like the Lord's servitor and wept. With utmost humility He begged everyone – wanting to serve their feet.

The Lord sometimes bent His body like a wheel, His feet touching His head, remaining like this for long hours. He expressed all His ecstatic moods in wondrous ways, exquisitely dancing immersed in the bliss of chanting His own names. Now His body trembled as He frequently made roaring sounds and He became unquiet falling crashing to the ground. A dancing resplendent golden figure – suddenly they see Him multicolored. They see double images of Him. Supreme Lord Caitanya exhibited such extraordinary displays of ecstatic emotion under the total influence of His mood of a Vaisnava devotee. He often repeated unspeakable words, shouting before the Vaisnava He respected as a "Prabhu" who was now caught by his hair by the Lord. The Lord called out, "This fellow is My servant." The Vaisnava whose feet He tried to catch previously in humility, He now stands on His breath. The devotees all around were so captivated and moved by the Lord's ecstatic symptoms that they put their hands around each other's necks and cried.

The entire group of assembled Vaisnavas look so radiant, their bodies decorated with sandalwood tilaka and tulasi mala; and blissfully tasting the nectar of chanting Lord Krsna's name. The sounds of their voices, mrdangas, conch shells and kartals mingled to a melodious uproar. As this auspicious sound of the holy name spread and filled the azure vaults, evil and misfortune disappeared in every direction. How extraordinary is that Supreme Master that the entire universe becomes cleansed of sin simply by the dancing of His disciples.

And the Master, Krsna Himself, dances to the accompaniment of His own holy name. How can the Puranas ever explain this supernatural phenomena?

Lord Caitanya danced, surrounded by His devotees loudly chanting the auspicious name of Lord Hari. Lord Siva becomes spiritually surcharged with bliss at the sound of the Lord's name. Once He begins to dance and taste the nectar, he loses track of his person and clothes. That very name of the Lord transformed Valmiki to an embodiment of knowledge and renunciation. The same holy name offered Ajamila supreme liberation. Hearing His name, the shackles of material existence are broken. That selfsame Supreme Lord has now appeared in Kali yuga and is dancing to His own name. Narada Muni and Sukdeva Gosvami roam the universe singing His praises. Ananta Sesa Prabhu with a thousand mouths glorifies His name. Whose name is the best means for atonement from my sin, that same Supreme Personality dances only to be seen by the most fortunate souls. I am so fallen and wretched that I was not born then to see this marvelous festival of sankirtana and dance.

Srila Vyasadeva's son, Sukadeva Gosvami, praised Kali yuga in Srimad Bhagavatam because he knew of the future advent of Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu. That same Lord now danced immersed within His joyful self enchanting all with the rhythmic patting of His feet. The Vaijayanti garland around His neck swung wildly echoing the Lord's ecstatic dancing mood. He tore the garland and threw the shreds at His devotees' feet; gave up His joy rides on Garuda's shoulder, forgot His conch shell, disc, mace, lotus holding form, and forsook His bed of Ananta Sesa. In His pastimes as Gaurasundara He rolled on the dust and wept, overcome with the ecstatic mood of servitorship to the Supreme Lord. Gone was His mood of Lord and Master and the pleasures of the Vaikuntha planets – the ecstasy of being the Lord's servant overshadowed all other pleasures.

The Lord is the Supreme subject of all pleasures. Yet disregarding the pleasure of Laksmi devi's company and exquisite face He prefers to heave His hands and face in the ecstasy of the kirtana and drown in an ocean of acute separation from His beloved Krsna. The Supreme Lord who is diligently served by elevated personalities like Lord Siva and Narada Muni having given up their wealth and position for Him – that same Lord Gauranga has neglected His Supreme Absolute Lordship and with utmost humility, taking straw in his mouth, begging and praying for devotional service. And if any wretched soul, in spite of the Lord's unprecedented novel example disregards devotional service to the Supreme Lord, he is unfortunate enough to throw away the nectar and drink poison.

These are again those who read and propagate the teachings of Srimad Bhagavatam and establish themselves as lord and master, without appreciating the extraordinary beauty of devotional service. All their activities are lowly and futile. They do not know the essential truth of the Vedas, yet they deliver dissertations on the scriptures, to an equally agnostic audience. They are truly like the mules carrying the burden – some load of useless learning. The Vedas and Bhagavatam have unequivocally elucidated the elevated position of devotional servitorship to the Supreme; Laksmi devi, Lord Brahma, Lord Siva and others carefully cultivate this priceless process.

Those who do not have complete faith in Lord Caitanya's words are most unfortunate and are forever disassociated from His mercy.

It was so divinely enchanting to see Lord Gaurasundara dance surrounded by all His associates singing sweet melodious kirtanas. Advaita Acarya, unable to control His ecstasy, often went into a trance and covered His entire body with straw, and holding one in His mouth in humility with some on His head He danced vigorously, His eyebrows drawn close together. The assembled devotees were astounded by Advaita Acarya's ecstatic symptoms, while Nityananda Prabhu and Gadadhara Pandita were shaking with laughter.

Lord Gaurasundara, the dear life of every soul, continued His sublime dance, frequently overcome by endless ecstatic emotions.

Lord Gaura Sundara exhibited such extraordinary symptoms of ecstasy that are not even mentioned in the Srimad Bhagavatam, nor has anyone heard about them from anywhere else. Sometimes His body became stiff like a statue, and no one could possibly move or bend Him. Then again His body became soft as cream, as if He had no bones in the body. Other times He looked at least twice His normal size and again sometimes He looked at least twice His normal size, and again sometimes He became thinner and smaller than usual. Sometimes He moved drowsily about like a drunkard, suddenly breaking out into joyous boisterous laughter that shook His entire frame.

Seeing the assembled Vaisnavas surrounding Him, Lord Gaurasundara enraptured in spiritual emotions, started calling each with their previous names. He looked around and shouted out to the individual names like, "Haladhara, Siva, Suka, Narada, Prahlada, Rama (laksmi) Aja (Brahma), Uddhava. In this way the Lord skillfully revealed different devotee's previous identity in Krsna lila. All the devotees marveled, filling their eyes with the enchanting dance of Lord Gaurasundara in the mood of Lord Krsna.

The crowd at Srivasa Pandita's residence drawn by the delightful kirtana was overflowing and over-anxious to see Sri Gaurasundara. Those who arrived early were in the house and could see everything, others remained outside. The Lord instructed for the doors to be closed. The people of Nadia were impatient, creating a loud commotion to get inside. They cried out, "We want to see the kirtana. Open the doors immediately." The Vaisnavas inside were unaware of any happenings, their complete attention captivated by the kirtana.

Amongst those who were not allowed inside were some atheistic and envious persons making various comments. They said, "They are a bunch of beggars. Afraid and feeling ashamed that they might be recognized by others, they close the doors." "You are right, it is only due to the pangs of hunger that they scream nonstop for hours." "Actually they closed the doors because they do not want us to catch them drinking wine all night," "Nimai Pandita was good and normal, we do not know why God changed His mentality." "I think this is a consequence of His past life."

"In fact, this is happening because of bad association. Ever since Nimai lost His father, He has no one to discipline Him. Nimai has long since given up His studies. Grammar is such a subject: if you lose touch of it for even a month, you forget it. His mind is now idle, we know all their excuses.

"We know the real reason for their closed-door activities. In the night they chant mystical incantations casting spells on women to bring them here. Together they eat and drink all sorts of things and decorate themselves with fragrant flowers and perfumes and engage in various illicit recreation. So they lock their doors to avoid public censure.

"Tomorrow I shall definitely have them arrested and taken away bound up like common criminals. All this howling and shouting, 'Hari, Hari' was never heard in these parts. Now this kirtana has stolen the sleep and peace of common people. All material prosperity is now forever gone and instead we will have famine. The rains will stop due to their reprobate activities, and no grains will grow and we will all starve. But let us wait outside a few days, because this madness cannot go on for too long. We shall see that Srivasa or Advaita or that Avadhuta Nityananda does." In this manner the godless persons raved and threatened, but the Vaisnavas were immersed in joyous ocean of kirtana and they did not pay attention to their words.

Outside the tirade continued, "It is not a brahmana's duty to sing and dance – that is for the low class man. It is sad that a educated brahmana should set such a bad example." Just looking at them, even a upright brahmana loses all his good qualities. No one should as much as see their dancing and kirtana even out of curiosity. Look what happened to Nimai. He was intelligent, now He is mad – dancing and singing with them, and they are steadily increasing in number. What is their use of calling out to God, without any self-realization. God resided within you, why reject the wealth in your own house and search for it elsewhere in the forest."

Then someone quite unexpectedly said, "It is of no use criticizing others, better just go home and mind our own business." Another voice supported him saying, "We cannot get inside to see the kirtana due to our own misfortune from our previous life. How can we criticize those who are fortunate to be inside participating in the kirtana? They are very pious."

"He must also belong to their group," the atheists cried out, and pressed aggressively towards him. "What is the great loss if we do not see their kirtana? They are simply a few hundred, prancing around, screaming as if in war. Without practicing chanting, penances or cultivating knowledge they follow a concocted method of discipline and meditation. They collect foodstuffs like rice, bananas, milk and curd, and mixing everything they sit together and eat. This way they corrupt the caste system."

People came to see the kirtana only to abuse, "Just look at how madly they are acting. They indulged in such comments and left. Again a fresh group of people gathered to continue the vilification. When two agnostics met they engaged in ridiculing the Vaisnavas and rolling in laughter. When they met anyone who had never seen the kirtana they forced them to go to Srivasa's house, and only on repeated pleadings would they allow someone to get away.

Someone said, "What a wonder! In spite of seeing all this, the people crazily follow Nimai Pandita. With all the hustle and bustle, Srivasa Pandita's house sounds like he is celebrating Durga puja. The only sound one hears is a great din. This certainly gives rise to all the ill rumors. Navadvipa is crowded with thousands of erudite scholars, yet these charlatans have gained prominence here. We must free Navadvipa from this Srivasa, tomorrow I will demolish his house and float his belongings down the Ganga. It is for the better of this town to be rid of this so called brahmana, otherwise when the brahmanical culture wanes by his bad example, the Muslims will take over."

Such were the unending string of invectives against the Vaisnavas, yet some atheists were somehow very fortunate. They were born in the same place as the Lord, and so they automatically saw and heard the Lord's dancing, kirtana and other pastimes.

The devotees of Lord Caitanya were deaf to all such criticism, intoxicated by the sweet nectar of Krsna's name. Day and night they sang the different transcendental names of Krsna, "Jaya Krsna, Murari, Mukunda, Banamali." And day and night a tireless Lord Visvambhara sang and danced with His associates whose transcendental bodies were naturally indefatigable.

Immersed in the ecstasy of nama kirtana with Lord Caitanya, millenniums passed by, but by human considerations they were but a few years for the devotees. Like in the Rasa dance pastimes of Lord Kṛṣṇa, the young damsels, the Vraja gopis, spent millenniums with Kṛṣṇa dancing with Him, but to Him it seemed a mere flitting moment that came to an end only too early. Kṛṣṇa's pastimes are all inconceivable and the associates of Lord Caitanya, knowing this, experienced the slow passage of time like the Vraja gopis.

One night, an hour before dawn, Lord Caitanya suddenly stopped dancing and climbed up on the altar and lifting the shaligrama silas that were in Lord Viṣṇu's seat up on His lap, He sat down in it. The seat crackled and protested loudly under His weight. Lord Nityananda quickly rushed to hold up the altar seat. Now with Lord Ananta Sesa supporting the seat, it did not crumble, and Lord Gaurasundara sat comfortably in it and swayed gently. The Lord ordered for the kirtana to discontinue and as quietness settled, He began to reveal the transcendental truth about Himself with a booming loud voice.

"In Kaliyuga, I have appeared as Kṛṣṇa. I am the Supreme Lord Narayana and the fortunate son of Devaki. I am the Lord and master of the entire cosmic creation; it is I who am glorified in all your songs, for you are My servitors. I have appeared for the sake of all of you. I have accepted whatever foodstuffs you have offered – they were gifts meant for Me."

Srīvāsa said, "O Lord, everything is Yours." Lord Caitanya replied, "I will eat everything." Advaita Acārya said, "Lord, it is a great fortune for us."

The devotees became busy bringing edibles for the Lord, and the Lord enjoyed it with relish. He ate milk, curd and fresh butter and kept repeating, "What else do you have? Bring it." They brought Him milk sweets like sandesh which He mixed with sugar. They brought rock candy with coconut milk and grains, bananas with flat rice and fried rice. He consumed large amounts and still said, "Bring more." He ate in a matter of minutes more than what two hundred men could eat.

Still the Lord said, "What else is there? Bring it, bring it. Oh there is nothing here." The devotees were alarmed because their supplies were exhausted. They became amazed at the Lord in this mood and began to remember the Lord Almighty in fear.

They prayed to the Lord with folded hands, "O Lord, what do we know about Your mystique? How can we satisfy You with our small gifts – someone who can hold the entire creation in His stomach?" The Lord replied, "My devotees' gifts are never small or insignificant to Me. Quickly! Bring, bring! What other things you have?"

They said, "Please listen dear Lord: the only thing left is some camphor rice." The Lord replied, "Do not worry, bring Me that."

The devotees became jubilant and forgot their fear. Each one hurried to bring as much rice as they could, and the Lord received it with open outstretched palms. The Lord then made large eyes and rolling them He began calling out loud, "Narra, Narra, Narra."

The dumbstruck devotees sat around with terror in their hearts. They saw the Lord as a terrible master come to give out punishments. No one could approach Him. Lord Nityananda stood behind Mahaprabhu holding an umbrella over Him, and Advaita Acarya stood before the Lord with folded hands offering Him prayers. All the devotees hung their heads in consternation and remembered the shelter of Lord Caitanya's feet.

Whosoever relishes these narrations of the Lord's mystic opulence will certainly be able to see the beatific face of the Lord. And in whatever stage of spiritual realization one is situated, he will perceive to that extent only such esoteric revelation. Anything more is impossible without the Lord's sanction.

Looking at Advaita's face the Lord said, "As for a boon, I have incarnated here only because of you." The Lord looked at all the devotees one by one and laughing said, "Ask for what you want." The Lord manifested His divine awesome potency in this way, sweeping away the devotees in waves of ecstasy.

The Lord's inconceivable pastimes are impossible to comprehend; in a matter of moments the Lord changes from an exacting autocrat to a devotee swooning in devotional ecstasy. On regaining consciousness, the Lord wept continuously manifesting the mood of servitorship. He went around putting His arms around the Vaisnavas' necks and wept calling them, "Brother, friend."

An ordinary person could never see such activities. Only by the arrangement of the Lord's maya potency, the Lord's servitors were eligible to perceive the truth about the Lord's supra-mundane situation. The devotees were joyous and laughed at the Lord's wonderful character and they said, "Supreme Lord Narayana has advented."

He again fell down unconscious with overwhelming bliss, and lay on the ground as if dead. The devotees began to lament bitterly. They thought, "My beloved Lord has left me behind and left this world. Why is He so cruel to me? I will also leave my body immediately."

The all-knowing Lord again woke up feeling the thoughts of His devotees, and started a loud kirtana. The devotees were suddenly stirred up and in extreme exhilaration lost balance. Navadvipa devotees thus relished such wonderful loving pastimes with the Lord of Vaikuntha.

Whoever hears these transcendental pastimes of the Lord, his mind will always dwell in the association of devotees and the Supreme Lord Gaurasundara Himself.

Sri Krsna Caitanya and Lord Nityananda are my life and soul,

I, Vrndavana dasa, humbly offer this song at Their lotus feet.

Madhya Lila

Chapter 9

Lord Sri Gauracandra is the Controller of the Universe and He accepted the garb of a sannyasi not for His own sake but for everyone's benefit.

All glory to the son of Jagannatha Misra and Mother Saci, and all glory to His sankirtana movement.

All glory to Lord Caitanya, the very Life of Lord Nityananda and Gadadhara Pandita. He is the most beloved of Advaita and Srivasa Pandita, Jagadananda Pandita and Haridasa Thakura, Vakreswara Pandita and Pundarika Vidyamidhi, Yasudeva and Srigarbha.

Be merciful, O Lord, and look upon every living entity graciously. May the Lord and all His associates be glorified, for hearing about the pastimes of Lord Caitanya one immediately attains the supreme goal of bhakti, love of God.

Please listen intently to the narration in Madhya Khanda because they depict pastimes of Lord Caitanya. Now hear the descriptions of Lord Caitanya's "Mahaprakasa" lila or great revelation, for this fulfills the desire of all Vaisnavas.

The Lord manifested the glorious "Sat Praharia bhava" or Twenty-one hour long devotional emotions. In this pastime, He wonderfully revealed His different incarnations, extraordinary feat at feasting and freely gave away pure love of Godhead to the devotees. All the Vaisnavas honored the Lord in a grand bathing ceremony known as "Raja Rajeswar" fit only for the most powerful Kings of the Universe.

One day Lord Gaurasundar came to Srinivasa Pandita's house accompanied by Lord Nityananda who was beside Himself with joy. Gradually all the Vaisnavas assembled there. Lord Gaurasundara, who was then fully engrossed within Himself, looked about Him – as a regal Personality surveys His surroundings with intensely powerful glances. The devotees could perceive the Lord's mood and immediately they started a loud kirtana.

On other days the Lord would dance in the ecstasy of a devotee servant of the Supreme Lord. Then, changing that mood momentarily, He revealed His identity as the Omnipotent Supreme Lord. That mood also would quickly change and he would again revert back to the mood of a devotee. But today, to the good luck of the assembled devotees, the Lord stood up as if to dance as usual, and instead sat on the throne of Lord Visnu.

On previous occasions the Lord would sit on Lord Visnu's throne immersed in devotional ecstasy, as if unaware of His own conduct. Not so today; today He did not obfuscate His real identity with the cloak of His internal energy, but instead, sat on the throne continuously for twenty-one hours. The devotees stood in front of Him with folded hands and hearts effervescent with joy. It was a wonderful sight – the devotees were fully content. They spontaneously expressed that it felt like they were in Vaikuntha.

And so it was: the Lord also sat amidst all, like the Lord of Vaikuntha, and everyone present there became totally free from the influence of the illusory material potency.

Lord Caitanya instructed, "Sing that bathing song". The devotees were very pleased and they began to sing. The Lord gently swayed His head sideways in time with the song and showered the devotees with His merciful glances. The devotees now could service the Lord's mood, and they desired to perform His `abhiset' or bathing ceremony.

The devotees brought water from the Ganga. First they strained the Ganga water. Then they added musk, sandal paste, saffron and camphor into it proportionately, preparing everything with increasing love of the Lord. They began the ceremony with jubilant shouts and started chanting appropriate mantras.

Lord Nityananda was the first to pour water on the Lord's head. He kept repeating "Jaya, jaya" as He did so with great pleasure. Other leading devotees like Advaita Acarya and Srivasa Pandita bathed the Lord, chanting the famous "Purasa Sukta" prayers. The devotees of Lord Gauranga are very well versed in the science of the scriptures and the chanting Vedic hymns, so they poured water accompanying it with mantras.

Mukunda and others were sweetly singing the bathing ceremony song, and other devotees wept or danced with overwhelming happiness. The upright and chaste wives were ululating with joy. The entire assembly was immersed in an ocean of bliss. The Lord of Vaikuntha, Lord Gauranga, remained seated and the devotees one by one poured water on His head, bathing the Lord. Usually on such religious occasions 108 pots of water were supposed to be required, but today it far exceeded that number.

Even the demigods came there not wanting to miss the opportunity to make more spiritual progress, but were disguised so as not to be recognized.

Where even a drop of water is offered to the Lord's lotus feet, that also in meditation, is sufficient to ward off punishment given out by the god of death – what to speak about the good fortune of the people who were able to bathe the Lord directly, who were present there in person.

All the servants and maid servants in Srivasa Pandita's house were also engaged in bringing water for the Lord. The wonderful result that one enjoys from serving the Lord was amply proved by one incident. One of the maid servants, a pious woman named "Dukkhi" (sad), was one of the water carriers. The Lord saw her actively engaged and told her, "Bring, bring more." The Lord was so impressed with her devotional service attitude that He changed her name to 'Sukhi' or happy, indicating He had taken away her distress.

Having bathed the Lord, accompanied with the chanting of the Vedic mantras, the devotees dried the Lord's body. They dressed Him in fresh new clothes, and smeared His transcendental and exquisite body with fragrant sandalwood paste. They cleaned Lord Visnu's throne and arranged everything properly, and the Lord sat on the throne which was truly His. Lord Nityananda held the umbrella over the Lord's head while one of the more fortunate devotees began to whisk the Lord with the 'camara'. The devotees collected the paraphernalia for offering worship to the Lord and began to worship Him.

Their offering tray was packed with charanamrita, fruits, acamani, incense, fragrant oil, lamp, new clothes, brahmanas thread etc. As customary, they worshiped Him with sixteen ingredients. Applying sandalwood paste on Tulasi manjaris, they offered it at His lotus feet. The Gopala mantra consisting of ten syllables was chanted while they offered worship, following strictly the rules of this particular worship. All the devotees were offering their prayers to Him.

All the stalwart associates of the Lord, like Advaita Acarya Prabhu fell before the Lord's feet like rods and offered full obeisances to Him. All the devotees were experiencing spiritual love for the Supreme Lord and tears cascading down their cheeks, mingling and flowing like a river. They constantly chanted verses eulogizing the Lord. The Lord heard everything with great satisfaction.

They prayed "All glory to the Lord of the Universe. Kindly direct Your merciful glance on this world now ablaze with the three fold suffering. All glory to the Original cause of everything, the Maintainer of everyone. You have advented to inaugurate the congregational chanting of the holy name. You establish the Savatam Dharma of the Vedas. You are the Protector of the pious and the Original Soul of all the fourteen worlds.

"All glory to Lord Caitanya for He is the redeemer of the most fallen souls, an ocean of transcendental qualities, the Supreme Shelter of the meek and poor. All glory to Lord Caitanya who is Vrajendra–Nandana–Krsna who expands to Lord Visnu and lies on the ocean of milk like Ksirodakasayi Visnu. He appears as an incarnation for the pleasure of His devotees.

"All glory to Lord Gauranga who is the Original and Absolute – inconceivable, imperceptible. He is always transcendently situated, the compassionate Supreme Person. All glory to Lord Caitanya. He was born in a family of Brahmanas as the crest jewel of this class, as well as to liberate the entire brahmana population. He is the origin of the Vedic religion – the life and soul of every living entity. All glory to Lord Caitanya who saved Arjuna from an inglorious death and He gave liberation to the demoness Putana. All glory to Lord Caitanya who never sees the faults of living entities. He is the husband of the Goddess of fortune." With such chosen words the devotees praised the Lord.

The Lord's servitors were drowning in an ocean of bliss seeing Lord Caitanya manifest this extraordinary mood. The Lord mercifully removed the veil of maya from everyone's heart and offered His lotus feet to be worshiped by His devoted servitors. Some devotees brought sweetly perfumed oil and smeared it on the Lord's lotus feet; other's worshiped Him with an offering of tender tulasi leaves. Again more came offering precious gems, gold and silver ornaments, and paid obeisances at His feet. Many valuable gifts were offered to the Lord, white, blue and bright yellow silken clothes. A variety of precious metal containers were placed in offering at the lotus feet of the Lord – the gifts were countless.

All the household servants in Srivas Pandita's house, by dint of serving a pure Vaisnava, now could directly serve Lord Gauracandra's lotus feet which are desired by all. Even Lord Brahma, Lord Siva and Laksmi devi aspire for that mere opportunity.

They offered many items of worship to the Lord without fear or hesitation, the Lord having removed His reverential mood. They brought unhusked rice, tulasi, durba grass, musk, saffron, camphor and varieties of fruits, fragrant blossoms, sandalwood and placed them at His lotus feet. Each one worshiped according to his heart's inclination following different rules of worship.

Then Caitanya Mahaprabhu, the Supreme Lord of Vaikuntha, exhibited another of His extraordinary pastimes. He said to the devotees, "Get Me something – I want to eat," and held out His hand. Whatever the devotees offered, He ate.

The different Vaisnavas brought a variety of foodstuff to eat: banana, mung dhal, yogurt, sweet condensed milk, butter, and milk. They placed it in the Lord's hands and He undisturbedly ate everything. Some of the devotees hurried to the market and rushed back with the choicest articles. They offered the Lord coconuts, a variety of milk sweets in huge quantities, black berries, green melons, and sugar cane. Some even brought water from the Ganga. The Lord ate everything. Seeing the Lord was happily eating everything they offered, they presented generous helpings of more delicacies many times over. Hundreds of devotees gave gallons of Ganges water, and the Lord, who is the greatest of the mystics, drank all.

Hundreds of barrels of yogurt, sweet condensed milk, milk, hundreds of bunches of bananas, huge amounts of mung dhal, mountains of milk sweet preparations, camphor, betel, fruits and nuts were instantly consumed by the Lord in front of the amazed and gaping devotees.

The Lord contentedly ate everything offered to Him and in turn He revealed all the details of the devotees' past lives. When the devotees heard their individual stories, they remembered their earlier days and fell to the ground in ecstasy.

The Lord addressed Srivasa Pandita, "Do you remember: you used to hear lectures on the Srimad Bhagavata at Devananda Pandita's house? Every line of the Bhagavatam is saturated with the nectar of divine love of Godhead, so your heart melted on hearing those recitations of the Bhagavatam. You had cried loudly and had fallen unconscious to the ground. The neophyte and ignorant students there, not knowledgeable in the matters of bhakti yoga, could not understand the reason for your extraordinary behavior.

"You were so engrossed within yourself in the ecstasy of love of Krsna, oblivious to the external world, that you did not even know that they had carried you outside. Devananda Pandita, their teacher, witnessed the entire happening without dissuading his students. Since he himself was inexperienced in the science of Krsna consciousness, it is expected that his students will also be like him. On waking and finding yourself outside on the street, you picked yourself up and returned home feeling sad.

"Your sadness persisted and so you preferred to be alone; you desired to read the Bhagavatam again. Seeing your sorrowful state I descended from Vaikuntha into your heart and made you weep with the ecstatic emotions of your love for Me. You experienced happiness again reading the Bhagavatam – your tears submerged the place where you sat".

When Srivasa Pandita heard this he was overcome with emotions and he fell to the ground crying and drooling, breathing fast and heavily. In this way the Lord spoke to Advaita Acarya Prabhu and different devotees, and brought back to them a recollection of their earlier days. He submerged the devotees in an ocean of bliss while He sat on His throne chewing betel leaf. The devotees danced and performed kirtana singing, "Jaya Sacinananda", all glory to the son of Mother Saci.

If perchance a devotee was absent, immediately the Lord had him brought before Him. He put His hand out and would say to him, "Give Me something to eat". And whatever they offered to Him, He ate it all. Then the Lord would say, "Do you remember that night

I came to you as a doctor, sat next to your bed? I cured your fever." On hearing this from the Lord the devotees would fall down overwhelmed by uncontrolled spiritual emotions.

Seeing Gangadas the Lord said, "Can your mind recall? That night you were escaping from the Muslim king fearing capture? Your whole family was accompanying you and when you arrived at the ferry stand there were no boats. You were in a great dilemma. The night was turning to dawn and still no boats were in sight. You began weeping in anxiety. You shuddered at the thought that the Muslims might molest your family in your presence and so it was better to drown in the Ganges, you thought.

"At that moment I appeared as a boat man rowing a boat towards you. Your spirits lifted seeing the approaching boat. You spoke to Me, the boatman, with affection saying, 'My dear brother, please take me across. I surrender my body, wealth, life, everything to you. I solely depend upon you. Here is a couple of rupees for your endeavor. take me and my family to safety.' Then I ferried you and your family across and returned to My eternal Vaikuntha abode."

Gangadas was carried on the waves of blissful ecstasy from hearing the Lord. Such are the wonderful pastimes of Lord Gaurasundara. The Lord continued, "Do you recall that incident? You were so worried, you were so worried. And I came to your rescue and brought you across". Gangadasa unable to contain himself further fell to the ground rolling in ecstasy.

Lord Caitanya, the Lord of Vaikuntha is sitting on His throne, His body covered with sandalwood paste and nicely decorated with fragrant flower garlands. One of His dear servants was fanning Him. Another arranged His hair. Some other was preparing betel and offering it to Him. Many of them were dancing in ecstasy around Him.

How the entire day passed and how the darkness of night stole in went unnoticed. Realizing that it was night, the devotees got busy lighting up the lamps, and they offered the lamps in worship at the Lord's lotus feet. They began to perform kirtana playing kartal, gongo, conch shell, mrdanga drum and string instruments. The Lord continued sitting in a benevolent mood but remained silent, in spite of the devotees' various activities.

Devotees offered different kinds of flowers at His lotus feet and prostrated themselves before Him saying, "O Lord protect me". Some devotees prayed to the Lord with great humility; others were singing loudly in praise of the Lord. The sound of jubilant crying was the only thing one could hear.

Everyone present experienced such indescribable and wonderful elated feelings right at this moment that everyone joining the assembly felt as though they had been immediately transported to the Vaikunthas. In this way the Lord exhibited a mood of Supreme opulence while all the devotees stood circling the Him with folded hands in reverence.

Lord Gaurasundara behaved in a casual manner with His disciples, placing His lotus feet on them and in this manner, He performed His transcendental pastimes. Lord Gaurasundara was in His munificent mood ready to disburse boons to His devotees as they surrounded Him with folded hands. The Lord showered His causeless mercy on everyone as He performed the pastime of twenty-one hour ecstasy.

The Lord then ordered, "Go and bring Sridhara immediately. Let him see My opulence. He is constantly thinking about Me in separation. I want him to come right away. Go to the outskirts of the town and sit there waiting for anyone that calls for Me and bring them here to Me." The Vaisnavas rushed to fulfill the Lord's order and went in the direction of Sridhar's residence.

EDITED Now hear some stories about Sridhar, how he made a living from selling "khola" (the trunk of the banana tree). He buys the khola joint and then cutting it into short pieces he sells them. Whatever in a day half of it he spend in buying offering for mother Ganga. With the other half he uses to maintain himself. This is the test of a true devotee of the Supreme Lord.

Sridhar is a very honest and truthful person, like Yudhisthira Maharaj, he always quotes the correct price of his wear and never once vacillates from it. Those who know this fact buys from him at the price he quotes. In this humble way this great soul lives in Navadvipa, known to people only as the 'khola seller'; his real self was unknown to all. He would spend the entire night engrossed in chanting the holy name of Krsna, forgetting everything including sleep.

The atheistic neighbors protested saying, "we cannot sleep in the night, Sridhar's screaming shatters the eardrums. That poor vagabond cannot fill his body and so now in the night he is kept awake by the pangs of hunger."

The atheistic neighbors invited sure doom for themselves in speaking in this manner, but Sridhara continued his spiritual activities unperturbed and remained always joyful. He loudly chanted the holy name all night long with overflowing love for Krsna.

The devotees who had gone to find Sridhara had covered only half of the way to his house, and could already hear his loud chanting. Following the voice they came to Sridhara's house. They said to him, "Please come with us O holy one and meet Lord Caitanya, we are greatly blessed being in your august presence."

When Sridhara heard the mention of Lord Caitanya he became overwhelmed with ecstatic feelings and feel unconscious to the ground. Quickly the devotees picked him up, and they very slowly and gently led him to the Lord.

Lord Caitanya was extremely happy to see Sridhara and called out loud and warm invitations to him saying, "Come, come, You have amply worshiped Me, many lifetimes you spent in My devotional service. In this life you have rendered abundant devotional service, I have tasted your `khola' countless times. Many times I took different things from your hands, you have forgotten the verbal exchanges we had."

When Lord Caitanya was manifesting His pastimes as a scholar, He acted bold and insolent. During this time hiding His real identity the Lord would daily enjoy Sridhar's company under the pretext of bargaining with him. He would go to his shop and purchase banana, spathe etc. Daily they argue about the price for several hours and finally the Lord returned with His purchases bought at half the actual price. The truthful Sridhar always quoted the correct price but Lord picked the goods Himself and paid only half price. Then this would excite Sridhar, he would jump up and try to take the goods back from the Lord.

The Lord would then say, "Why my dear brother Sridhar! You are a renounced person, I think you are very rich. Then why do you try to snatch away these things from My hand. I am also surprised that in all this time you do not know who I am."

The Supreme Personality of Godhead Lord Caitanya saw there was no trace of anger on Sridhar's face and so He snatched away the articles.

Lord Gaurasundara was looking so beautiful that He could captivate even Cupid's mind. His fine forehead was decorated with radiant urdhvapundra tilaka marks. He wore the dhoti in a most attractive manner tucking it in three different places, His earrings were nicely designed and slightly slanting. The Lord's temperamental and eyes were both extremely agile and restless. The shining white brahmin thread goes elegantly around His shoulder; Lord Ananta Sesa has accepted this very thin form of a brahmin thread to decorate the Lord. He smiled at Sridhara with cherry lips reddened from chewing betel and again picked up the articles.

Sridhara said to the Lord, "Listen O Brahmana, please forgive me this time. I am just Your dog". The Lord replied, "I know you, you are very cunning. You have saved much money selling these banana spathes". Then Sridhara spoke, "Are there not any other shops besides mine, please purchase from there at a cheaper rate."

Lord Caitanya said, "I do not want to so easily abandon a steady supplier like you, give me these spathes and take the money for it." Sridhara was helpless against Visvambhara's charm and so he smiled at Him captivated by His extraordinary beauty, while Visvambhara continued His harangue being very pleased with His eternal associate and devotee Sridhara.

Lord Caitanya said, "Every day you buy offerings for Mother Ganga, then why can you not sell me your things at a discount? I am the father of Mother Ganga you worship daily, this truth I am revealing to you."

Sridhara shocked at hearing this covered his ears with his palms and repeated Lord, Visnu's name, and seeing that Visvambhara was in an insolent mood gave Him the banana spathes. In this way the Lord bargained and fought with Sridhara everyday; Sridhara thought of the boy as a very restless young brahmana boy.

Sridhara finally agreed, "I give in to you, I will give you something free of cost, but then please leave me alone. What will I lose if I give away a piece of banana spathe, a banana flower and a slice of banana root?"

Lord Caitanya replied, "Good, good that is enough, do not give anymore," the Lord daily ate dishes prepared with Sridhara's gifts. The Lord loves to receive gifts from His devotees. He would never ask for anything from a nondevotee.

The Lord desired to perform this pastime and so by His arrangement he had Sridhara sell 'khola' who can understand these transcendental exchanges between the Supreme Lord and His devotee. No one can perceive these super mundane activities without the blessings of the Lord, this fact is being reminded by the Lord.

The Lord Caitanya said, "O Sridhara, behold My beauty, today I will bestow you with eight mystic perfections".

The great devotee Sridhara lifted up his head and saw that Lord Visvambhara had changed His complexion and become as dark as the bark of the Tamal tree, He was holding a flute in His hands and on His right stood Lord Balarama and the entire scene was engulfed in a glowing radiance.

He saw Lord Brahma and Lord Siva approach their Lordships and offering lotus and betel they began reciting verses in praise of the Supreme Lord. Lord Ananta Sesha standing behind the Lord His hood above the Lord's head like an umbrella, and saintly personalities like Sameka, Narada and Sukla deva Gosvami offered prayers to the Lord. All around the beautiful heavenly damsels sang glorifying the Lord with folded hands.

Sridhara seeing this wonder of wonders was so astounded that in the next moment he slumped to the ground. The Lord called out Sridhara's name asking him to rise, Sridhara on hearing the Lord's command awoke from his swoon and stood up.

Lord Caitanya instructed Sridhara, "Sridhara, say something glorifying Me". Sridhara replied, "Dear Lord I am an illiterate and foolish, what intelligence do I possess to glorify Your Lordship". But the Lord said, "Anything you speak is always glorifying Me."

By the Lord's order Mother Saraswati the Goddess of learning, now presided over Sridghara's power of speech, and Sridhara began to glorify the Lord.

"All glory, all glory to Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu, all glory to Lord Visvambhara, the Lord of Navadvipa.

All glory to the Lord of the entire cosmic manifestation, all glory to the son of Mother Saci, Visvambhara.

All glory to Lord Caitanya whose incarnation and activities are a mystery even in the Vedas, he has appeared as the best of the brahmanas, He appears in every millennium to uphold religious principles taking different forms.

Secretly you went about the town managing and maintaining everything, Your real identity unknown to all, and it is impossible for anyone to know Your real self without Your mercy."

"O Lord You are the religious Principles, the prescribed duties, the devotional service, knowledge, scriptures, the Vedas and the object of all meditation.

You are the mystic perfections, the ever increasing opulence, the enjoying spirit, the path of mystic yoga. You are the faith in man, benevolence, illusion, and greed. You are Indra, the king of heaven, the moon, fire, water.

You are the sun, the air, wealth and strength, devotion, liberation; You are Lord Brahma and Lord Siva. O Lord, You are not in need of anything because everything belongs to You."

You had told me earlier that mother Ganga I worship has emanated from Your lotus feet and yet due to my sinful heart I would not recognize You, I had no realization of Your Supreme position. You are the same Supreme Personality who had preciously blessed Gokula with Your appearance and now have again incarnated as the sweet Lord of Navadvipa.

You are the embodiment of the highest esoteric process, that same devotional science You have propagated all over Navadvipa.

Bhisma defeated You (making You break Your promise) in battle because of his devotional service, and for the same reason Mother Yasoda bound You.

Satyabhama devi could once sell You her, husband Lord Krsna, because of her desire and love for You; captivated by the love of Your devotees You carried the young cowherd boys on Your shoulders.

The entire living creation carries and cherishes Your thoughts in their hearts, yet You carried Sridham on Your shoulders. It is a great secret and mystery how You are defeated by Your devotees.

Chapter 10

My dearest friend, Lord Gauranga, You are an ocean of transcendental qualities. All glory to You and all glory to Lord Nityananda Prabhu, the Supreme Personality without beginning or end.

After bestowing boons to Sridhara, Lord Caitanya began to gently sway His head, and repeated the name "Nada, Nada, Nada" and spoke to Advaita Acarya, "Acarya! ask what you need". The Acarya replied, "My prayers have already been answered my Lord". Lord Caitanya appreciated this answer with a thunderous roar that drowned all other sound.

While Lord Caitanya was still manifesting His "Mahaprakasha" lila in the mood of the Omnipotent, Supremely Opulent Lord, Gadadhara Pandita prepared betel and offered them to the Lord, and the Lord took it and ate it. Lord Nityananda, whose partial expansion Lord Ananta Sesa is the support of the Universe, now held the umbrella over Lord Caitanya. Advaita Acarya and other great personages stood before Him.

The Lord ordered Murari, "Look at Me", and Murari saw Lord Ramacandra in person. He saw that Visvambhara, Lord Caitanya was sitting on the kingly throne with the bow and His complexion was green like the fresh tended grass shoots. He saw Janaki devi or Sita devi and Laksmana on His left and all round the brave monkey leaders were offering prayers. Murari perceiving his identity as Hanuman and now seeing his beloved Lord Ramacandra fell down in an ecstatic swoon by Lord Caitanya's transcendental pastimes.

Lord Visvambhara called out aloud, "Hey, monkey, you seem to forget how the demon Ravana, who stole Sita devi, burnt your face. Enraged you set ablaze his capital, Sri Lanka and destroyed his entire race. I am that same Lord, Your worshipful Lord, now You are again in My presence. Rise, rise Murari, You are as dear to Me as My own life. I am that Lord Ramacandra, You are Hanuman."

See your Laksmana, Your beloved life and soul, You saved His life by bringing the Gandharvamadana mountain. Offer obeisances to the lotus feet of Janaki, Sitadevi, whose distress moved You to profuse tears."

Lord Caitanya's words brought back Murari's consciousness, and on awakening he saw that wonderful scene and began to cry in love of Godhead. Murari's ecstatic crying moved even the lifeless dry wood, what to speak about the assembled Vaisnavas.

Again Lord Caitanya began to speak to Murari, "You may ask Me for any boon."

Sri Murari replied, "My Lord, I do not want anything. Just grant me one wish, that I may sing only Your glories. I may put into any situation but birth after birth I simply want to remember You, and that I may serve You in the association of Your servitors.

O my Lord! please do not place me in a position where I may deviate from the Absolute Truth and forget You are the Supreme Lord and I Your eternal servant.

Wherever You descend accompanied by Your eternal associates I desire to be there as Your insignificant servitor."

The Lord replied, "So be it! so be it! I grant you this boon." Hearing this, a jubilant uproar from the devotees filled the air.

All the Vaisnava devotees were naturally affectionately disposed to Murari who was always compassionate to all living beings. Such was the purity of Murari's devotion that his mere presence transformed into a holy place of pilgrimage transcendental like Vaikuntha. It is impossible to describe the greatness of Murari for even the Supreme Lord advents for the pleasure of Murari.

Lord Caitanya then declared, "All of you listen carefully, if anybody criticizes Murari he cannot be saved even by a million dips in the Ganga, in fact his baths in the Ganga or even chanting of Lord Hari's name will certainly destroy such a sinful wretch. "Murari", the Supreme Lord is secretly (gupta) seated in Murari Gupta's heart, this is the spiritual import of Murari's name."

The Vaisnava devotees began to weep in ecstasy chanting Krsna's name seeing how Lord Caitanya showered His mercy upon Murari. Anyone who hears the pastimes of Lord Caitanya's extraordinary magnanimity will receive love of Godhead.

While Murari and Sridhara cry in love of Godhead being in front of the Lord, Lord Caitanya chews on the betel pan with cracking loudness.

Lord Caitanya then turned His benign glance on Haridasa and called out, "Look at Me Haridasa your body ad birth is superior to Mine and your class and caste is more elevated than Mine. Although that sinful Muslim tormentor has inflicted great pain on you yet I hesitate in My heart to punish him for it will disturb you, knowing your compassionate nature."

Listen Haridasa, when you were lashed with the whip in the different market places. I took up My Sudarsan disc and descended to the earth from Vaikuntha intending to sever the tormentor's heads.

When your tormentors were trying to beat you death all along you were thinking for their well being. You were unconcerned about your own pains, you had only compassion for them, and because of your merciful heart I could not use force, My Sudarsan disc weapon was rendered impotent.

I could not strike those men because you were determined to forgive them and so unable to see your misery I protected you from their lashes by placing My back on your back.

I accepted all those lashes meant for you on My back, see the marks on my back, I am not lying. Whatever other secondary reasons there were for My descent: unable to bear your sufferings I hastened My advent to this world. My beloved "nada", Advaita Acarya fully recognized who you are, I am totally bound by his loving devotion."

Our beloved Lord Caitanya is very proficient in expanding the glories of His devotees, He will say or do anything to glorify and protect His devotees, He will even swallow fire for his devotees and willingly become His devotees slave.

Lord Krsna recognizes only His devotees and knows nothing else, to Krsna there is no one equal in position to His pure devotees. All those mean offenders who are antagonistic towards such pure devotees of the Lord are devoid of all good fortune. You can see from these pastimes the highly elevated position of the devotees, and the things Lord Caitanya said to Haridasa Thakura.

When Haridasa heard about he Lord's magnanimous deed he fell swooning to the ground. He lost all external consciousness and was immersed in an ocean of ecstasy.

Lord Caitanya said, "Wake up, wake up! and see My opulent manifestation to your heart's content." Haridasa awoke becoming externally conscious, crying he looked about searching for the Lord's extraordinary manifestation. He rolled about all over the courtyard sometimes breathing heavily, other times swooning. All the ecstatic symptoms swept over Haridasa's body like a hurricane, and although the Lord tried to steady him Haridasa could not remain still.

Thakura Haridasa said, "O Lord Visvambhara! You are the Lord and Protector of the Universe, now the responsibility of delivering a lowly fallen wretch like me rests on You, My Lord. How can I describe Your transcendental glories as I do not possess any good qualifications, I am sinful, and I am not even within the Vedic society.

Just seeing me makes a person vulnerable to sin, and touching me makes one so contaminated that he must bath immediately; how can I say anything about Your divine pastimes?

There is one fact that You yourself have stated, anyone remembering your lotus feet, be he an insignificant and fallen as an insect, is never forsaken by You. Whereas even a mighty king falls from grace if he disregards Your lotus feet. I am incapable of remembering You although I know you shelter the most impoverished soul if he simply remembers You.

The evil Duryodhana and Suhsasana dragged the righteous Draupadi into the palace court wanting to disrobe her. Confronted with the danger of disgrace she remembered You, Krsna. And because of this You made her sari endlessly long by Your mystic potency. Yet the evil doers could not perceive Your hand in this.

Once the witches surrounded Parvati devi desirous of eating her, and when she remembered You, You immediately appeared and punished the witches and saved Your devotee.

I am so sinful that I cannot remember such a magnanimous Personality as You; O Lord! please therefore give me shelter at Your lotus feet.

The demon Hiranyakasipu inflicted all varieties of treachery and brutal methods trying to kill Prahlad like poisoning, hurling down from the mountain, throwing in boiling cauldron of oil etc. Yet throughout his tribulations Prahlad meditated upon Your lotus feet and was saved from each and every calamity. In this way You humbled many of his enemies and took away all their vitality and strength: finally You appeared in Person due to Prahlad's meditation.

Once the five Pandavas were in grave dilemma fearing the wrath of Durvasa Muni, but by remembering You, You appeared personally and saved them. You calmed Yudhisthira Maharaja with your assuring words, see I am already here, you just sit down and relax and I will take care of Durvasa Muni and his army of disciples."

Only the shred of vegetable left stuck to the side of the pot after the Pandavas had eaten was taken by; Lord Krsna relishing the thought of coming to His devotees aid. The sage with his disciples meanwhile bathing in the river suddenly felt full in the belly like having eaten a sumptuous meal" ashamed and tearful they fled.

The miraculous benefits of remembering Your lotus feet was amply demonstrated by the Pandavas in this incident. The path of true devotion for everyone is to remember You; You perform Your super excellent activities to rescue Your devotees.

The story of Ajamaila is wonderful of how from the most degraded state he remembered the Supreme Lord at the moment of death. He saw the Yama dutas (angels of death) coming to drag his soul away to the nether regions of hell and in fear looking for shelter he saw his son's innocent face and called out his name "Narayana", the holy name of the Supreme Lord, and this immediately reminded him of the Lord. As soon as his mind rested on the Lord all his danger and distress disappeared. Only the elevated devotees of the Lord have easy access to the greatest spiritual treasure, which is the constant remembrance of the Supreme Lord, this is not surprising.

"O Lord! I am such a destitute that I do not even possess the sweetness of Your memory and yet You have not forsaken me. Although I am unfit to see You, You are present before me in person. I am praying to You now for only one benediction."

Lord Caitanya replied, "Say all that you want to say, there is nothing that I do not want to give you."

Haridasa spoke to the Lord with folded hands, "O Lord, I have known only misfortune yet You give me so much hope. Just allow me to partake of the remnant of foodstuffs of Your devotees totally surrendered to Your lotus feet. Let this activity be my permanent and most prominent service life after life. My sinful birth and existence is miserable, without remembering You, but now please make my life successful by granting me the remnant of Your servitors.

I feel within my heart that I have committed a grave offense by asking of You to situate a elevated status of that of a Vaisnava, although I am grossly unfit. O Lord! my master, Protector and the maintainer of the entire creation, I am spiritually lifeless, therefore kindly forgive my ignorance. O Lord Visvambhara, the beautiful son of Mother Saci, You are my master, so be merciful to me and keep me as a dog in the house of a Vaisnava."

Haridasa Thakura was overwhelmed by feeling of ecstatic devotional emotions and he repeatedly petitioned the Lord, his desire for humility and devotional service unfulfilled.

Lord Caitanya replied, "Listen My dear Haridasa, you are a highly elevated Vaisnava, if anyone spends a day in your services and association or you kindly speak to someone for a short time, that person certainly achieves Me, there is no doubt about this. Whoever respects and serves you does so to Me also, for I perpetually reside within you.

As my servitor Your position is unique, you have therefore imprisoned Me within your heart eternally. I bless you that since you are crowned already with a faultless character that you will always continue to worship and serve Me and My devotees without a single deviation or offense."

A tumultuous sound of joy from the Vaisnavas greeted Lord Caitanya's boon to Haridasa Thakura. High birth, caste, fruitive activities or wealth are worthless commodities to achieve love of Godhead only the intense loving desire for Krsna can bring one to the lotus feet of Krsna.

A Vaisnava may take birth in any family, but he always is the most exalted Personality this is the spiritual verdict. The living proof is Haridasa Thakura who was born into a Muslim family, yet what he saw and spiritually perceived is rarely experienced by even eminent personalities like Lord Brahma etc.

Only the most wretched sinner will discriminate a Vaisnavas caste, race or nationality, and for doing so he suffers the pangs of repeated birth in the lower species of life.

One who hears this pastime of the Lord and Haridasa Thakura with proper faith will certainly enjoy the fruit of Lord Krsna prema. These words are not my concoction but the bold declarations of all scriptures. One is sure to experience the bliss of devotional service to Lord Krsna if one hears the transcendental activities of the pure devotees of the Supreme Lord. All glories to Haridasa Thakura, a giant amongst the Vaisnavas, remembering him one is freed from all sinful reactions.

Devotees started talking about Haridasa: someone said, "He is like Lord Brahma", another observed "Prahlaḍ has come again as Haridasa." Haridasa Thakura was in every respect a great and unalloyed devotee, he is an eternal associate of Lord Caitanya.

Lord Brahma, Lord Siva are always desiring in their hearts the transcendental company of Haridasa Thakura. All the demigods feel this same urge to associate with Haridasa, and Ganga devi wishes to bathe Haridasa in her waters.

Such is Haridasa Thakura's exalted position – that just seeing him relieves one from the bondage of material existence; what to speak of associating with him. Great stalwart devotees like Prahlaḍ who was the son of a demon, and Hanuman who was a monkey are considered exalted Vaisnavas, similarly Haridasa Thakura was born in a low caste non Hindu family but is counted amongst the foremost Vaisnava devotees.

Haridasa along with Murari and Sridhara began to weep joyful tears. While Lord Viṣvambhara smiled pleasantly on them chewing betel. Sitting on the throne the Lord was engulfed in dazzling effulgence and an equally brilliantly shining Lord Nityananda stood holding the umbrella over Lord Caitanya.

Lord Caitanya looked towards Advaita Acarya smiling and began to reveal his inner thoughts, "Listen Acarya, do you remember when I once fed you one night?

At the time I had not yet advanced and you were endeavoring excessively to bring Me down from My spiritual abode.

You would hold discourses on the Bhagavata Gita and explain everything in terms of devotional service, there was hardly a soul who could grasp these topics. And once when you did not find the meaning of a certain text pertaining to devotional service you did not look for discrepancies and faults in the text but gave up enjoyment for acquiring accurate esoteric knowledge. You were very depressed and lay back refusing to eat and I appeared before you.

When you fast, it is the same for me too, whatever you offer me I accept, I cannot stand to see your slightest pain, so I appeared in your dream that night and spoke to you.

"Awake, awake, Acarya and hear the real purport of the Gita text, this is truly its unequivocal meaning. Please get up and eat, give up your fast, for you I will reveal the esoteric meanings, eat to your satisfaction and everything will happen in a dream."

In this way the doubts that had arisen in Acarya's mind while discoursing on the Gita, the Lord reminded Acarya distinctly of the dreams in which He had appeared to him clearing his doubts. He reminded the Acarya distinctly of the dreams in which He had appeared to him clearing his doubts. He reminded the Acarya of the correct number and the precise dates of the dreams and the exact texts He had explained to clear his doubts. Truly Advaita Acarya's devotion is glorious, how can I describe his unlimited potency and his devotion?

Lord Caitanya replied, "I had explained to you all the texts that were difficult with the exception of one, and that I will explain to you now. The Gita text that reads "Sarvatah panipadauta" meaning The Supreme Beings hands and feet are everywhere is wrongly interpreted due to the rigidness of partisan thinking of certain schools philosophical thoughts. The real purport of this verse is read as "sarvatra panipadauta" meaning – the Supreme Being pervades everything with His Omnipotent presence.

The complete Gita text reads – "Sarvabah pani padamtat sarvata ksi-siro-mukham sarvatah srutimal loke sarvam avritya tisthati" (Everywhere are His hands and legs, His eyes and face, and He hears everything. In this way the Supersoul exists). I have just revealed to you the very confidential meaning of this text, who else is there other than you who can rightly comprehend this subject matter."

Advaita Acarya is a secret disciple of Lord Caitanya, and Lord Caitanya's explanations are His only shelter.

So when Advaita Acarya heard this explanation which was so dear to him he was overcome with happiness and he began to weep. He addressed the Lord saying, "I am unable to say anything, it is only my great fortune and glory that You are my Lord and master." Advaita Acarya was merged in ecstatic bliss seeing the wonderful potency of the Lord.

One who has no faith in these spiritual explanations and such spiritual exchanges are certainly doomed to perish. Only the rare souls, the pure devotees of the Lord can understand the spiritual dissertations of Advaita Acarya, who was personally taught by Lord Caitanya.

The instructions of the Vedas are invariably interpreted in various ways, so also Advaita Acarya's highly esoteric explanations often found different interpretations. Who can grasp the meaning of the Acarya's dissertations that deal with such subtle spiritual matters, undoubtedly His words are as good as the Supreme Lord's own.

The Acarya's words are like the autumn clouds, it rains in certain areas only leaving other places dry; His words are understood by a few fortunate ones, not everyone. Advaita Acarya cannot be blamed for this, for everything depends on the persons ability to understand His words due to his piety and good fortune.

Advaita Acarya's main devotional duty was to serve the lotus feet of Lord Caitanya, this can be testified by all the Vaisnavas. And those who disregard the instructions of other Vaisnava associates of Lord Caitanya with the excuse that they are followers of Advaita Acarya only cannot gain the Lord's favor. Those who accept Lord Caitanya as the Lord of all the Lords – the Supreme Lord are true followers of Acarya and the Acarya also recognizes their service.

Devotional service to the Acarya is imperishable, yet it is rendered impotent if one does not accept Lord Caitanya as the Lord and master of everyone – including Advaita Acarya.

Ravana was a great devotee of Lord Siva but he did not accept the Supremacy of Lord Ramacandra, who is the Lord of even Siva. Lord Siva was displeased with his devotee and did not receive his worship or service, so Ravana's worship was useless, hence he and his entire race was destroyed. Lord Siva does not convey to his devotees his personal feeling about their actions – whether good or bad; whoever is sufficiently intelligent with understanding the desire of Lord Siva in his heart.

In the same way the followers of Advaita Acarya not understanding the desire of their master claim to be His disciples and criticize Lord Caitanya. Advaita Acarya does not tell them anything due to His specific nature, so because of neglecting the advice of other Vaisnavas and the inner desire of Advaita Acarya, they perish. These condemned persons do not understand that Advaita Acarya's exalted position and His mystic perfection are all due to the mercy of Lord Caitanya. And if anyone volunteers to instruct them on these matters they become enraged and go to strike their well wisher. Little do they know that. Lord Caitanya's external potency Mayadevi is exceedingly powerful and She takes efficient care of such wayward and demoniac souls.

Those who do not understand that Lord Caitanya is the most beautiful Supreme Personally and Advaita Acarya is His servitor and is like the Lord's different jewelry and ornaments that decorate Him. Their positions have clearly defined in the previous verses and in spite of it if people fail to comprehend them they are doomed. A person's elevation and progress in devotional life depends on how much he is serving Lord Caitanya, there is nothing superior to the Lord's devotional service.

The devotees can advance in his devotional service in proportion to the mercy he receives from Lord Caitanya and Lord Nityananda by rendering devotional service. In this way devotional mellows constantly increase. Lord Nityananda inspires everyone to chant all the time. He says – "My dear brothers say – 'O my Lord Gauracandra'."

Advaita Acarya is totally engrossed in remembering Lord Caitanya and His pastimes often moved to tears by devotional emotions. After hearing these transcendental narrations if one is unable to develop devotional fervor and love for Lord Caitanya then contact with such a person should be avoided for it will wither away one's faith and piety.

One who understands that Advaita Acarya is a foremost Vaisnava devotee of Lord Caitanya and serves Him in that capacity is himself an exalted Vaisnava devotee and he is assured of the shelter of Lord Kṛṣṇa eternally. Such a Vaisnava is also very dear to Advaita Acarya; others who do not understand this relationship are despicable rejects of human society.

Advaita Acarya is always extremely pleased to hear about His Lord Caitanya Mahāprabhu glorified as the Supreme Lord of all. Advaita Acarya Himself glorifies Lord Caitanya in this manner, there should be no doubt about this. Lord Caitanya revealed the real purport of the Gita to the Acarya and then hid the portals of devotional life to the non-devotees.

Lord Caitanya suddenly spoke out lifting His arms, "Everyone look at Me, ask any boon you desire". All the assembled devotees bubbled over with happiness hearing the Lord's words and they each asked a boon from the Lord.

Advaita Acarya spoke first saying, "My Lord I only pray that You shower Your grace on this ignorant and fallen soul." Someone else said, "My father opposes my devotional involvement, so grant me this O Lord that his heart may be transformed and he becomes a devotee." In this way they asked for the good blessings of their dear ones, disciples, sons, wives, servants and so on. One of them prayed, "Lord please increase my faith in my guru."

Lord Visvambhara is the benefactor of all His devotees and fulfills all their wishes, smiling sweetly He granted everyone's boon.

Mukunda all this while was behind the curtains outside the room unable to muster sufficient courage to appear before the Lord. Mukunda is loved by all and he also knows everyone intimately. No one could understand why he was being ignored because when he sang the Lord seemed to hear all the time. The Lord did not call him inside, nor did he come; the devotees felt sad about Mukunda.

Srivasa Pandita said to the Lord, "O Lord what offense has Mukunda committed at Your lotus feet? Mukunda is favored by You, and he is dear to all of us, who can prevent his heart from melting hearing Mukunda's singing? He is devotionally inclined and always careful in all respects, yet without seeing any apparent fault in him You have insulted him my Lord. And if he has committed some mistake then punish him, but why do You disown him and push away Your own servant. O Lord let him see Your Lordship, but he will never come in unless You call him."

The Lord said, "Never speak like that to Me. Do not plead to Me on that wretched persons behalf. The descriptions you heard about pretenders who make a show of humility and next moment they are aggressive is in fact a correct assessment of Mukunda, none of you really know him in truth. Mukunda sometimes is a perfect figure of humility approaching Me holding straw in his teeth, but the next moment he comes to strike Me with an iron rod, I cannot bear to see that pretentious wretch."

Speaking eloquently in Mukunda's favor, Srinivasa said, "Who can understand the inconceivable workings of Your energies? We never noticed anything offensive in Mukunda's character, and the shelter of Your lotus feet is witness to his innocence."

Lord Caitanya commented, "That spineless wretch will vociferously agree to all philosophical views to suit the company he is in when he reads the "Yoga Vasishtha" with Advaita Acarya he favors the impersonal mayavadi philosophy; in the company of Vaisnavas he pretends to be a Vaisnava singing and dancing with perfect humility. Again when he goes and joins another sampradaya there he rejects devotional service and flays the process of `bhakti' with aggressive criticism."

One who claims that there is some process which is higher than devotional service factually strikes me with an iron rod. He commits a serious offense to the path of devotional service, and so I cannot see his face."

Mukunda heard everything standing outside and heard that he will not be allowed to see Lord Caitanya. Previously on his guru's request Mukunda did not accept the process of devotional service, and Lord Caitanya with His inconceivable mystic potency could know all this. So Mukunda a pure devotee of the Lord contemplated, "There is no reason to remain alive any longer, I shall finish off this sinful body of mine. I do not know for how long I can go on."

Mukunda spoke up aloud, "Please hear me Srivasa Thakura, tell me, will I ever see my Lord Caitanya again?" He broke down and wept bitterly; Mukunda's condition touched the compassionate hearts of the Vaisnavas.

The Lord replied, "Let him go through another ten million births and he then can certainly see Me."

When Mukunda heard this promise from the Lord's own mouth he was overtaken by tremendous joy and stood drenched in tears. Repeating, "I will get, I will get", Mukunda Lord Caitanya's servitor, danced like a mad man in ecstatic love of God. The Lord's assurance that he will see him made him dance in ecstasy.

When Lord Caitanya saw Mukunda dancing He laughed and ordered, "Bring him here immediately." The Vaisnava devotees eagerly informed Mukunda to come quickly to the Lord's presence, but Mukunda did not hear anything, he was completely submerged in ecstasy.

Lord Caitanya said, "O Mukunda, your offenses are condoned, come, see Me, and receive My blessings." The devotees went and quickly brought Mukunda in front of the Lord. Mukunda fell to the ground seeing the opulent appearance of the Lord.

The Lord spoke, "Get up, get up My dear Mukunda, all your offenses have been exonerated. You lost your wealth of devotion by wrong association, but now again by your loving devotion you have conquered and indebted Me. I said to you that after ten million births you will have your desire to see Me fulfilled, You immediately pushed away all previous doubts and offenses. You had full faith in the infallibility of My words, thus You have bound me eternally in your heart with the bonds of loving devotion."

You are My singer and you shall remain with Me, all this time I was cutting jokes with you because of our intimacy. And if perchance you really commit millions of offenses then I do not consider them to be offenses because you are eternally My dearly beloved associate. Your body is cent percent imbued with loving devotion to Me, I perpetually reside in your tongue as the holy trance."

Mukunda heard Lord Caitanya's reassuring words, they moved him to tears and he felt apathy towards himself, condemning himself he said, "I am so degraded. I know nothing about devotional service, how can a faithless fool like me experience the bliss of devotion just by seeing You?"

Duryodhana could see easily your Universal form, whereas scholars study through all the scriptures in order to just perceive that same form. Yet, Duryodhana and his entire family was stamped out, under going exterminating pains, because he lacked the slightest devotion. Therefore without possessing the proper devotional attitude now can I experience bliss even if I see You my Lord?

When You went to rescue Rukumini devi on her request, from the protection of many powerful kings who saw You approach mounted on Your bird carrier Garuda, they saw Your noble kingly bearing and an effulgent form. Your devotees like Lord Brahma desire in meditation to see this effulgent form as You appeared in the Vidarbha kingdom. As You were kidnaping Rukumini devi the kings saw You, put up a fight with You and were all slain, all because they had no devotion for You.

When you appeared from the waters of the casual ocean in the form of a bear and picked up the earth from the waters between Your tusks, the demon Hiranyaksa saw this extraordinary brilliant form. The Demigods are praying to You to see this wonderful form. But Hiranyaksa was killed by You because he was a demon and no love and devotion to You.

His brother saw Your terrible and mighty form of half man and half lion that is rarely seen by anyone, whose breast is the resting place of mother Laksmi, Your eternal consort. This wonderful form of Naransiuha unparalleled in the entire creation was seen by Hiranyakasipu, but his life was squashed with ease by You because he was a gross materialist, a non devotee.

O Lord I have no devotional feelings, yet strangely I am still alive, my head does not roll down due to grievous sins.

Kubja, the hunch back maid servant, of Mathura, wives of the sacrificial brahmin priests of Vrndavana. The noble ladies of the palace in Mathura, the garland maker Sudama, when did they see You before they saw You for the first time? Yet all of them were elevated to the blissful state of loving devotional service to You. And Kamsa the king of Mathura, at the same time saw You but was killed. I do not possess any devotion to You my Lord, but yet You keep me.

Lord Ananta Sesa, that extremely powerful personality holds this immense cosmic creation with great pleasure only because of his devotion to You. The Universe sits on just one of His many hundreds of hoods like an insignificant drop of water, while he is submerged in the ecstatic pastime of glorifying You. Although He Himself is without support or foundation He is the support and sustainer of everyone. He can perform such extraordinary feats simply due to the potency of devotional service to You. Yet I am so fallen and impious that I cannot appreciate even such wonderful devotional fervor, I am destined for eternal degradation.

Lord Siva, Sankara became the husband of Gauri, Durga (mahamaya) by dint of his devotional service, Narada Muni rose to the platform of an eternal associate of the Lord also through loving devotion. Vyasdeva compiled the entire Vedic literature yet he was feeling dissatisfied deep in his heart. You had revealed to him in precise form the essence of the highest spiritual knowledge which is the science of devotion but he was unable to grasp the full import slight impurities of the mind. Then You spoke to him again through Narada Muni the same science of devotional service and in this way he felt resuscitated, with happiness and went on to make perfect this human birth.

I am worse than an insect yet I am not moved by such devotion, O Lord, how can I ask to see You?" Mukunda began to weep raising his arms up in the air, his body trembled and he released heavy sighs in ecstatic devotional emotions. Mukunda is a pure devotee, with a simple and spontaneous love of the Lord, how can I describe sufficiently the extent of his glories. He is counted amongst the most intimate eternal associates of the Lord.

Lord Visvambhara was moved by His devotees suffering and feelings. He said, "Mukunda's devotional service is very dear to Me, wherever and whenever you sing I will be present there. And all you have said is absolutely true, one cannot perceive Me as I am even if one see Me, one can see My true self only through the eyes of loving devotion."

"Truly I say to you for you are very dear to Me that the instructions I have given in the Vedic literature about the different rites and duties of everyone and their concomitant results cannot be changed by anyone. I alone can do as I please and supersede these rites and results, because I have the full authority to do so.

I have made you speak the truth about devotional service, nothing is of any value if it is not My devotional service. It pains Me grievously if someone is against My devotional service, and due to My suffering such an atheist is deprived of all happiness even if he sees Me.

Demon King Kamsa's washer man also saw Me, I asked him for help but he refused, this was very unfortunate for him because he was deprived of the opportunity to render devotional service. He had no attraction for Me. He had performed very severe austerity and penances for many many life times just to see Me; this piety gave him the fortune to see Me. Yet he could not experience the exhilaration of seeing Me due to lack of devotion.

I do not show any mercy to non devotees and even if they see Me they are deprived of the transcendental result, eternal happiness. One's devotion is drained if one is offensive to the authorized process of devotional service. Due to the absence of devotion seeing Me is fruitless. Whatever you have said are actually just the things I wanted to say: in fact why should any other topic grace your mouth?

I shall propagate the process of devotional service everywhere this I have said to you; I will do this through your voice, through your songs. All the Vaisnavas' hearts will melt with ecstatic joy hearing your songs. Just as you are very dear to Me so will you also be amongst all My devotees, the Vaisnavas. And wherever I descend in any incarnation you will be also present as My singer."

As the Lord showered blessings and boons on Mukunda the Vaisnava assembly resounded with great jubilation. Devotees clasped their hands and sang out, "glory to Lord Jagannatha, glorify the Lord" and so on. Whoever hears these narrations about Mukunda receiving the Lord's special mercy is favored by the Lord to become an associate of Mukunda as a singer.

All the topics on the pastimes of Lord Caitanya are highly confidential subjects undisclosed in the Vedas, only the intelligent class of men can appreciate these topics and not the foolish. Those who relish these pastimes will certainly be able to see Lord Caitanya face to face.

So it continued, each Vaisnava as he desired had his wish fulfilled by the Lord. Srivasa Pandita is a very great and exalted personality and so all these pastimes took place in his own house.

The Lord appeared to each devotee individually as different incarnations according to the devotees attachment to a particular incarnation of the Lord. All these manifestations were extraordinary and super excellent, Lord Caitanya performed His pastimes in this manner. Everyday the Lord revealed His super mundane pastimes and all the assembled Vaisnavas along with their wives saw these extra ordinary happenings.

One who surrenders his body and mind and becomes the Lord's servitor can perceive these transcendental activities. In Navadvipa there is no dearth of men in the renounced order of sannyasa mental spectators, men who are either performing severe penances studying the scriptures or performing yogic practices. Most of them are studying the Gita and Bhagavata since long, and some of them are even giving lessons to others on these scriptures, yet not one of them are willing to give up their own ways and practices and religious views. Some undertake strict vows to remain celibate throughout life, never to accept service from others and in this way lead a life of extreme hardship.

The intelligence of this was covered over by false ego to such an extent that none of them could perceive the descent of Vaikuntha to Srivasa Pandita's residence and the spiritual bliss emanating from these. That which was seen and experienced by the servants and maid servants in Srivasa Pandita's house is unknown to even scholars well versed in all the scriptures. The wonderful boon Murari Gupta's servant received went unnoticed by those who shaved their heads to exhibit renunciation.

Lord Caitanya can be captivated by devotion alone, and not with wealth, high birth, erudition or any such mundane means. One may be crowned with wonderful accomplishments yet he is unable to attract mercy of Lord Caitanya, for the Lord submits to unalloyed devotion, as is clearly declared in the Vedas. So in Navadvipa, all the great scholars and pundits were unaware of these extraordinary happenings.

Those who are sinful are like a lake without water where beauty is absent, how can the living beings otherwise be deprived of the spiritual bliss of experiencing these pastimes? These supramundane pastimes of the Lord are continuously existing, never ever ending; the Vedas describe them as sometimes manifest and at other times unmanifest.

Lord Caitanya's pastimes are being performed even now. Whoever is blessed by the Lord to see can see, others cannot see.

The Lord appeared to His different devotees in the particular incarnation the devotees worshiped Him. He personally taught them about His Supreme Absolute position and that He is the source of everything and everyone. This knowledge was then later transmitted to posterity.

The Lord said, "In every birth you have received my association, your servants and disciples will thus also see My pastimes through you." The Lord then distributed the garlands that graced His breast, and all were blessed to receive the chewed remnant of the Lord's betel. The devotees were caught up in the wave of ecstatic joy as they munched on the radiant moon like Lord's remnant.

The remnant of the Lord's food went to the pious and fortunate Narayani. She gave this innocent little niece of Srivasa Pandita (his brother's daughter) His remnant. She ate the Lord's remnant with joy and relish and the Vaisnavas blessed her saying that she was most fortunate since she could serve the Supreme Lord Narayani directly at such a young age.

After Narayani had eaten, Lord Caitanya said, "Narayani, let Me hear you cry for Krsna in great ecstasy." Such is the influence of Lord Caitanya's words that she immediately called out "Krsna, Krsna" and began to weep. Thus the pastime came to be known to all the Vaisnavas for all times and she became famous as "Narayani, who ate Lord Caitanya's remnant."

As the devotees were beckoned by the Lord they hastened to His presence. All these pastimes of Lord Caitanya that are being narrated are transcendental if one does not have faith in them then his future is dark.

Lord Caitanya is very close and dear to Advaita Acarya this relationship makes Advaita Acarya glorious. And Lord Nityananda is very close and dear to Lord Caitanya, these glories of Lord Nityananda are sung in all the Vedic literatures.

If one does not recognize his identity as a devotee of Lord Caitanya, and he may be respected by the whole world, he is worth no more than a straw to the learned Vaisnava assembly.

Lord Nityananda introduce Himself saying, "I am Lord Caitanya's servant", He is always in this mood of a servitor. And only by His mercy one develops love for Lord Caitanya. All detriments in spiritual life are overcome by worshiping Lord Nityananda.

The greatest hope I always cherish in my heart is that Lord Caitanya is the Lord of my Lord. O Lord Caitanya kindly offer me the shelter of the lotus feet of Lord Nityananda, who as Lord Ananta Sesa is holding this universe. I am able to sing the glorious life and pastimes of Lord Caitanya out of my love and attachment for Lord Balarama. My Lord Balarama is always desiring the best for the world.

Lord Nityananda knows no other designation other than being Lord Caitanya's servant and only through serving Lord Nityananda is one eligible to become a devotee of Lord Caitanya. As by Lord Nityananda's grace I can know Lord Caitanya in truth, similarly to fully comprehend the truth about devotional service one must receive the blessing of Lord Nityananda.

Lord Nityananda is very dear to all the Vaisnava devotees, everyone can receive from Lord Nityananda entry into the path of devotional service. Somehow, if by chance someone disregards Lord Nityananda then Lord Caitanya Himself condemns him to eternal suffering. The full glory of Lord Nityananda is very rarely known, even the great yogi and exalted Vaisnava Lord Siva does not know His unlimited potencies.

One who is not offensive and critical of others, who chants Krsna's holy name always will soon be able to captivate with his love the uncontrollable and invisible Lord Caitanya. The scriptures instruct that spiritual goals are unattractive through criticism of others, the religion expounded by Bhagavat is to respect everyone.

These narrations of the Madhya Khanda are like nectar, but to an atheist they taste bitter. If one has a bitter taste eating sweets then his is truly unfortunate and sick and that does not really change the taste of sweets to one of bitterness. Similarly if one cannot relish the nectarine pastimes of Lord Caitanya then that is his great misfortune.

A person, even though in the renounced order of sannyasa, will enter into countless cycle of births of total ignorance if he is offensive to Lord Caitanya. Whereas a bird, if even without proper spiritual knowledge, sings the name of Lord Caitanya, will enter the Lord's eternal abode.

All glory to Lord Gauracandra, life of Lord Nityananda, kindly make Your beloved Lord Nityananda my life and soul. I offer my obeisances at the lotus feet of all Your associates with whom You performed so many pleasurable pastimes.

Lord Sri Krsna Caitanya and Lord Nityananda are my life and soul.

I, Vrndavana dasa, offer this song to their lotus feet.

Madhya Lila

Chapter 11

Dhru O Lord Gauranga, O most precious treasure, O unlimited ocean of love of Godhead, where do you come from? You are the Lord and maintainer of the helpless, the true friends of the down trodden.

All glory to You Lord Visvambhara, the most powerful and regal of the brahmanas, victory to all Your associates who are like honey bees attracted to the nectar of Your lotus feet. You are as dear to Paramananda Puri as his own life, and You are the greatest wealth Svarupa Damodara possesses. You are very dear to Srila Rupa Gosvami and Srila Sanatana Gosvami, and the heart of Jagadisha and Gopinath.

Lord Visvambhara continues performing His pastimes in Navadvipa, not visible to every eye. The blessed Srivasa Pandita sits in his house situated in the central island of Navadvipa and sees the endless and marvelous pastimes of the Lord. He serves the Lord with pure love and sees the Maha prakasa' lila pastime with the other Vaisnavas.

Lord Nityananda was residing in Srivasa Pandita's house and loved and respected him as His father. Lord Nityananda was always manifesting the mood of a little child who drank Malini's (Srivasa's wife) breast milk.

Malini's breast had long dried up but on Lord Nityananda's touch milk flowed again in her breast. She was amazed at such miraculous happenings. Caitanya Mahaprabhu ordered her not to reveal this to anyone, everyday she saw Lord Nityananda's child like behavior.

"Lord Visvambhara said to Lord Nityananda, "Listen Nityananda, so that You avoid arguments and fights with anyone, do not behave recklessly in Srivasa's house." Lord Nityananda objected saying, "Krsna! You can never see Me acting reckless. You cannot find another person as well behaved as I am." Lord Visvambhara replied, "I know You too well", Nityananda said, "Let Me hear You point out my mistakes and ill behavior."

Smiling, Lord Caitanya said, "You want to know Your mistakes? You throw showers of rice in every room. Lord Nityananda said, "but this is the work of a madman and such mischief must be stopped; You want to falsely blame Me and not give Me any food to eat. If You want to eat all by Yourself that is alright with Me, but why do you defame Me to everyone?"

Lord Caitanya replied, "I feel ashamed to rectify misconduct and so I am trying to rectify You". Lord Nityananda smiled and said, "That is very good! You must always teach Me whenever You see Me misbehaving. You are correct in assuming that I am the culprit". He then broke into peals of laughter.

Lord Nityananda became immersed in an ocean of happiness. His ambient receded to oblivion and taking His cloth He tied it around the head, standing naked before all. He pranced about in great leaps bubbling with laughter, staggering sometimes like a drunk man.

Gadadhara Pandita, Srivasa Pandita and Haridasa beheld this sight of the Lord's special mercy for it was meant to teach a lesson to the whole world.

Lord Visvambhara held Nityananda and said, "What are you doing? Such behavior is inappropriate in a householders house. You just told Me that You were not mad, and the next moment You contradict Your own words."

For One who is oblivious of the external world what reactions can words have on Him? Lord Nityananda was floating on the waves of ecstasy. Lord Visvambhara had to Himself dress Nityananda Prabhu. Such are His inconceivable activities.

Lord Caitanya's words fell on deaf ears for Lord Nityananda was totally unaware of everything like a mad lion.

He would not even eat with His own hands, Malini had to feed Him. Malini, the chaste and righteous wife of Srivasa Pandita could sense Lord Nityananda's inner feelings and so she served Him like a mother to a son.

One day a crow stole a small bell metal container and flew away out of sight, upsetting Malini devi. The crow suddenly returned again but without the container. Malini devi was well aware of her husband's reaction once he saw that the ghee vessel of Krsna's was missing, his temper was nothing more short than a thunderstorm, she felt helpless and began to weep.

Just then Lord Nityananda came there and saw tears streaking down Malini devi's eyes. Smiling he asked, "Why are you crying? Tell me the cause of your distress? I will take care of everything."

Malini devi tearfully replied, "O listen Gosain, a crow flew away with the ghee vessel, who knows where. He assured her, "Mother stop weeping and worrying I will get Your vessel back."

The Lord spoke to the crow smiling pleasantly, "O crow, go and bring back the vessel quickly." Lord Nityananda resides in everyone's heart. Who has the power to disobey His orders. The crow immediately flew off followed by the distraught eyes of Malini devi. The crow returned soon with the vessel in its beak and kept it near Malini devi. Malini devi could very well understand the extraordinary potency of Lord Nityananda from this incident.

Swooning with ecstasy she began offering prayers to the Lord, "For one who can bring to life the dead son of His guru from the custody of Yamaraja and for one who maintains this cosmic manifestation, what is so wonderful in bringing back a small vessel from a crow? On His head rests the unlimited creation and He does not even feel its weight while performing His pastimes; the endless ocean of resilience is destroyed just by chanting His name to influence a crow to bring back a small vessel it had stolen is not an extraordinary deed for Him.

In the past as Laksmana You were guarding Sita devi while living in the forest, yet you only looked at her feet and no other part of her body. Your powerful arrows had later defeated and exterminated the entire demon family of Ravana, and so winning back this small vessel is indeed an insignificant deed.

At whose lotus feet river Jamuna devi begged forgiveness and offered chosen prayers to glorification, who has the potency to maintain all the fourteen worlds, what marvel is it to Him to get back a small vessel from a crow? Yet none of Your activities can be diminished, since all of Your activities, however easy and small it may seem are transcendental and the Absolute Truth, such is the clear verdict of the Vedas."

Lord Nityananda smiled as He listened to her prayers and remarked in His child like manner, "I want to eat". Whenever Malini devi saw Lord Nityananda milk oozed out of her breasts out of spiritual parental love and Lord Nityananda in order to fulfill her spiritual desires sucked on her breast like a child. There are some of the inconceivable pastimes of Lord Nityananda, my capacity to describe all this limited, the pastimes of the Lord are already widely known all over the world.

His activities are extraordinary and difficult to understand, those who know Him in truth can easily believe in all His pastimes. Lord Nityananda is always totally engrossed in ecstasy and He moves about Nadia as does the brilliant sun across the azure vault.

A mystic yogi or a learned scholar or anybody may think and say anything about Lord Nityananda, people may comment that Lord Nityananda is not a close associate of Lord

Caitanya, I do not care to hear about any such remarks, I only pray that His lotus feet remain imprinted in the depths of my heart.

There are many atheists who criticize Lord Nityananda, in spite of hearing His glory, I kick them in the head hoping for the Lord's mercy on them. Lord Nityananda is so lost in His transcendental pastimes in Srivasa Pandita's house that Lord Gauranga has to look after Him.

One day Lord Caitanya was sitting in His house together with his wife Visnupriya devi, whose exquisite beauty matched only Laksmi devi's. She prepared betel pan for the Lord and He received them smiling with pleasure. This way He spent nights and days with her lost in the pleasure of each other's company. Mother Saci's heart exulted to heights of unknown joy as she saw the happy couple. Lord Caitanya knew the reason for His mother's exhilaration and so He spent much time with His wife.

Around this time Lord Nityananda, who was always immersed in bliss came to Lord Caitanya's house in a restless mood. He stood before everyone, naked like a innocent child, not feeling any shame.

Lord Caitanya enquired, "Nityananda why are You without clothes?" Nityananda replied with a smile, "It is so, it is so." Lord Caitanya said, "Nityananda wear your clothes." He replied, "Today I leave." Lord Caitanya insisted, "Why?" Nitai said, "I cannot eat anymore." Lord Caitanya said, "When I say something why do you answer with a completely different suspect?" Nitai replied, "I want all around attention."

Angrily Lord Caitanya said, "It is not my fault." Nitai replied, "My Lord Saci devi is not here." Lord Caitanya said, "be merciful and wear your clothes." Lord Nityananda said, "I will eat." Like this Lord Nityananda is always in the serving mood of Lord Caitanya; while one hears the other speaks, and Lord Nityananda wanders all over Nadia laughing joyfully.⁷⁵⁻⁷⁷ Lord Caitanya got up and personally dressed Nitai and Nitai continued chuckling. Sacidevi smiled seeing Nityananda's activities and felt a motherly affection towards him thinking of Visvambhara. His words strongly reminded her of her older son and sometimes he even looked like him. Unknown to anyone mother Saci felt equal love for both Lord Nityananda and Lord Visvambhara.

When Lord Nityananda came out of his trance he dressed himself up. Sacidevi gave him five milk cakes to eat. Nitai put one of the sweets in his mouth and threw the other four sweets far away. Saci devi raised an alarm saying, "Alas, alas, why are you throwing it away?" Lord Nityananda replied, "Why did you put all the sweets in one place?" Saci devi said, "I do not have anything more, what will you eat now?" Lord Nityananda answered, "ask for it and it will be certainly there."

Saci devi went inside the room only to be greeted by a wonderful surprise. She saw the four sweets thrown away by Nitai were there. She thought out aloud, "Where were the sweet cakes thrown and how could they be here now?" Saci devi was amazed and amused she removed the dust particles from the sweet cakes and came to Nityananda. She found him eating laddus, and enquired, "From where did you get those laddus?" Lord Nityananda replied, "I saw you were disappointed when I threw the sweet cakes away so I brought them back."

Seeing these miracles Sacidevi considered in her mind that who can know the extraordinary qualities of Nityananda Prabhu. To Nityananda Prabhu she said, "Nityananda why do you bewilder me in this manner? I know very well that You are the Supreme Lord, please therefore remove your illusory potency for me."

Lord Nityananda exhibiting the mood of a young boy went running after Sacidevi to touch her feet as she tried desperately to escape him. Such are the super excellent activities of Lord Nityananda. They bring pleasure to the pious devotees but to the envious it brings pain.

Those envious and sinful wretches who criticize Lord Nityananda become so contaminated that even Ganga devi who purifies everything runs away from him. Lord Nityananda is the Supreme Lord of the Vaisnavas, as Ananta Sesa, He holds the universe on his hood. Although I have no attachment for Lord Nityananda and Lord Caitanya I pray that the treasure of the lotus feet of Lord Nityananda be firmly situated in the inner recesses of my heart. This is my earnest desire for which I beg at the feet of all Vaisnavas, let Nityananda Prabhu, Lord Balarama be my supreme Lord and master.

Lord Sri Krsna Caitanya and Lord Nityananda are my life and soul.

I, Vrndavana Dasa, offer this song at their lotus feet.

Madhya Lila

Chapter 12

All glory to Lord Visvambhara the Lord and master of all the Vaisnavas, please give us devotional service to You and make us Your surrendered devotees.

Lord Nityananda performed many wonderful pastimes with Lord Caitanya in Navadvipa. Lord Nityananda did innumerable extraordinary deeds engrossed in the ecstasy of love of Krsna, like a little boy He went about His work with simple enthusiasm.

He spoke always very sweetly to all the devotees He met, and danced laughed and sang to Himself in bliss. Sometimes moved to outburst of ecstasy he roared loudly astonishing one and all.

He sometimes jumped and swam in the crocodile infested swelling hissing monsoon waters of the Ganga, fearless and carefree. Everyone grasped with consternation but Lord Nityananda swam about in the waters laughing and splashing. He swam about the mood of Lord Ananta Sesa feeling completely at home in the waters of the Ganga, while the spectator devotees held their breath in anxiety.

At times Lord Nityananda became so surcharged with ecstasy in love of Krsna that He went into unconscious trance lasting three to four days. These are some of the inconceivable pastimes of the Lord, they are endless and eternal and I am incapable of describing them all.

One day Lord Caitanya was sitting alone when Lord Nityananda came to Him completely naked chuckling like a child; His eyes and pure face were twinkling and tears of limitless joy cascaded down His cheeks. He went about repeating like loud peals of thunder this sentence, "My Lord and master is Nimai Pandita of Nadia."

Lord Caitanya smiled, amused at the sight of Lord Nityananda's large, brilliant, beautiful formed and completely bare frame. Hastily Lord Caitanya removed the cloth from His own head and wrapped it around but Nimai continued to chuckle as if nothing happened.

Lord Caitanya then smeared perfume on His body, decorating Him with a flower garland and began to glorify Lord Nityananda, "Your name is Nityananda and so is Your form and demeanor, always and eternally blissful. You are Nityananda now as You were Balarama before. No one can interrupt the ecstatic and unlimited joy, You experience as Your name suggests, in everything You do whether, walking, eating or otherwise. Ordinary men cannot appreciate Your transcendental potencies. You are always to be found where Lord Krsna is present, Krsna is eternal and is the Absolute Truth and so are You since You are His eternal associate.

Lord Nityananda is perpetually relishing the nectar of loving devotion to Lord Caitanya, all His words and deeds are fulfilling Lord Caitanya's inner most desire. Lord Caitanya said to Him, "Since long I have one unfulfilled desire, I would like to have Your karpin loin cloth dress". Saying this He went and brought His karpin, then tore it to many long strips.

The Lord then distributed one by one these strips to the assembled Vaisnavas, telling them, "Place it on your heads, these are most precious worshipable objects even to Lord Siva, the king of the Yogis; what to speak about others. One attains the exalted position of becoming a pure devotee of the Supreme Lord only by Nityananda's grace; all of you should know that He is the embodiment of Lord Krsna's full transcendental potencies.

Lord Nityananda is identical to and is the immediate expansion of Lord Krsna. He is an eternal associate, friend and brother to Krsna, He expands Himself as Krsna's bed. Ornaments and other such paraphernalia. His character and pastimes are a mystery even in the Vedic literatures although He is every ones maintainer, Protector and friend. All His activities are full of devotional nectar to Lord Krsna; it is easy to attain the highest perfection of love of Krsna by serving Him. So all of you place these strips from His karpina on Your heads and go home and worship it with care and regard."

The Vaisnavas wrapped the Karpina strips lovingly around their heads following Lord Caitanya's instruction. Again Lord Caitanya spoke, "listen, all you devotees! now drink the water that has washed the lotus feet of Lord Nityananda, this will immediately imbibe in your unfaltering faith in Lord Krsna's devotional service, of this there is no doubt."

Having received Lord Caitanya's instructions the devotees washed Lord Nityananda's lotus feet and drank the water, they drank as much as possible, five times, ten times and more, Lord Nityananda who was throughout the entire episode engrossed within Himself, remained smiling benignly.

Lord Caitanya sat down and began to distribute this water (padodaka) with utmost pleasure. The devotees drank and became intoxicated chanting, "Hari, Hari." The devotees each expressed their joy, someone said, "Today was the fulfillment of my life", another said, "All the bonds of my material entanglement were served today", another commented, "today I feel I have become a servant of Lord Krsna," still another voice said, "this water is so relishable, its sweet taste still lingers in my mouth".

This water was so unique that immediately upon drinking everyone became spiritually excited, some danced, some began to sing, others started rolling on the ground, and still others could not stop roaring out aloud in joy.

Just then a jubilant kirtana started up, some devotees sang Krsna songs and others began to dance. In a moment Lord Caitanya rose up and letting out a thunderous cry joined in the dance. Meanwhile, Nityananda Prabhu also stood up and started dancing, unable to contain their joy the devotees encircled both their Lordships and continued their ecstatic dancing and jostling.

They were intoxicated with joy falling on each other, played little games touching each others feet and smearing their heads with the dust; some hung on to the others neck sobbing happily. They all mingled happily forgetting the mood of reverence, the Lord and His servants all danced together. Lord Caitanya and Lord Nityananda embraced each other ever so often and danced with blissful gestures. Mother trembled under the rhythmic dancing of Lord Nityananda and the whole world resounded with, "Hari Hari".

Drowned in the nectarine ocean of love of Godhead Gaura and Nitai the Lords of Vaikuntha danced in ecstasy with their servitors. All these pastimes are endless they simply became manifest at a certain time and place and again became non manifest, this is clearly explained in the Vedas.

After dancing the whole day, Lord Caitanya finally sat down with all His devotees. He clapped thrice loudly and then spoke benignly, "Whoever worships Lord Nityananda in loving devotion loves Me also. His lotus feet are worshiped by Lord Siva and Lord Balarama hence always offer your love and devotion to Him.

If anyone is critical of Him or dislikes Him then even if anyone is a devotee he is rejected by Me. Whoever has even so much as received a slight touch of Lord Nityananda, Lord Krsna will never forsake him. Lord Caitanya's words brought resounding applause from all the devotees.

Whosoever hears these transcendental narrations with faith and devotion becomes protected and maintained by Lord Caitanya. Such activities of Lord Nityananda Prabhu are fully understood by only those who are His confidential associates and the eternal associates of Lord Caitanya.

Lord Sri Krsna Caitanya and Lord Nityananda Prabhu are my life and soul.

I, Vrndavana Dasa, offer this song at Their lotus feet.

Madhya Lila

Chapter 13

I offer my humble obeisances at the lotus feet of Lord Sri Caitanya and Lord Nityananda, whose elongated arms reach down to their knees; Their complexion is as brilliant as molten gold.

They imitated the congregational chanting of the holy names of Krsna; They have exquisite elongated lotus petal eyes, They are the maintainers of the entire Universe, the top most Brahmanas, Protectors of the religious principles of the age; the well wisher of every living entity and the embodiment of mercy and magnanimity.

All glories to Lord Gaurasundara, all glory to Lord Nityananda who is served by everyone.

Lord Caitanya is always performing His pastimes in Navadvipa but they are not visible to every eye. Ordinary people see him as before as Nimai Pandita, nothing more is perceivable to them about the Lord's activities or character.

The Lord reveals Himself to the fortunate devotees according to their realizations in devotional service. He hides Himself to the outside world of materialists.

One day the Lord suddenly expressed a certain feeling to Lord Nityananda and Haridasa Thakura, "Listen Nityananda and Haridasa, travel everywhere and tell people about My teachings. Go to every house and beg everyone of this, Chant Krsna's name, worship Him and cultivate the science of Krsna consciousness. Just repeat this only and make them chant only Krsna's name and at the end of the day come and give Me your reports. Those who do not comply to your requests I will come personally and cut them with My Sudarsan chakra."

The Vaisnavas were very amused to hear the Lord's orders and there was no question of anyone trying to change any of it. Considering that Lord Nityananda has accepted these orders with utmost respect, anyone who disregards them is demented. If someone is only serving Advaita Acarya but does not worship Lord Caitanya will be destroyed by Advaita Acarya Himself.

Lord Nityananda and Haridasa Thakura the two Lords were on their way in a blissful mood with Lord Caitanya's order as their prime inspiration. They visited every house, going all over Nadia and requested all, "chant the holy names of Krsna and worship Him, He is everyone's shelter, friend and most treasured wealth, practice Krsna consciousness with undivided intent."

Wearing robes of renunciates they approached the householders, many invited them for food but they only replied, "I only beg of you to chant Krsna, worship Him and cultivate devotional service."

This is all they repeated and went their way. The pious received their instructions well with faith being also impressed by their effulgent figures and replied happily to them expressing their pleasures. "I will do, I will do." Someone else said, "You two have mental aberrations due to wrong advice from others, You have become mad because of bad company, why have you come to infect us with your madness. Good and healthy persons have gone mad because of Nimai Pandita's bad influence."

Those who were disallowed entry into Srivasa Pandita's house during kirtana to see Lord Caitanya dance would react insolently to this saintly pair. They shouted, "beat them, beat them!" still others said, "Maybe these two are informers of dacoits, under the present pretext and garb they are collecting information. Why should saintly men act in this manner? If they come this way again I will hand them over to the law."

These comments only amused Lord Nityananda and Haridasa Thakura, they did not feel hurt or daunted they simply continued to preach everyday Lord Caitanya's message and on returning described everything to Lord Caitanya.

One day they came across two drunkards totally intoxicated, giant in size and looking like the worst kind of pirates. Their tales of wicked acts are unending and there is not a sin that they have not committed. Although born in a Brahmana family they consume liquor and beef, rob, steal and burn other houses. They disobey the court injunctions against them and always avoid appearing before the officers of law, all day engaged in their wicked activities.

The two drunks rolled on the public streets, and when one caught the other unawares he pounded him with his fists. People watched this fun always keeping a distance. Just then Nityananda and Haridasa arrived there.

The two drunks sometimes embraced each other affectionately and the next moment they would pull each other's hair. They used the most filthy and abusive language on each other. They ran the good name of the brahmana class in Navadvipa to the ground. Intoxication can ruin anyone's life and character.

Although they had committed every conceivable sin they were still free from the offenses against Vaisnavas. They were just always intoxicated and had no opportunity to criticize Vaisnavas.

Such company, where Vaisnavas are offended may consist of highly pious persons still all their mercy is depleted. If Vaisnavas are offended even by an assembly of renunciates, sannyasis, such an assembly is more irreligious than a group of drunkards. For the drunks there is still a chance for salvation but for those who are critical of Vaisnavas there is no hope for liberation.

In spite of studying the scriptures a person may not become purified, and if such a person criticizes Lord Nityananda then he is doomed.

The two drunks were still very much intoxicated as Nityananda and Haridasa see them from a distance. Nityananda turned to one of the crowd in the street and asked, "who are these two men, why do act like this?"

They replied, "Gosain, they are brahmanas, very good and noble parents, very good and aristocratic family, their family dates back many generations in Navadvipa, their family has a spotless reputation. These two are the black sheep of their family and from the beginning they are engaged in all sorts of sinful activities."

"Their family and society ostracized them seeing their character, and from that time they live independently as outcasts in the company of other drunkards. All the residents of Navadvipa are terrorized by them, they fear that anyone of them could be the next target of their arson and looting. Everyone knows that they are capable of anything and everything."

When Lord Nityananda heard these facts about the two scoundrels His heart melted. He immediately felt great compassion for them and began to consider how He could save them. He thought, "Lord Caitanya incarnated only to liberate and save the most fallen souls, who is more degraded than these two?"

The Lord has appeared hiding His real identity, the ordinary folks are unaware of this and they foolishly deride Him. If My Lord is merciful to these two and saves them then the entire world will acknowledge His Supreme potency. I Nityananda can prove to be a real servant of Lord Caitanya only when I persuade My Lord to awaken in these two their original Krsna consciousness."

They are so drunk now that they are oblivious of everything even themselves, if they could become similarly engrossed in chanting the names of Krsna, if they could cry My Lord's name, then My preaching and traveling is successful."

People now have to bathe in the Ganga with their clothes on for fear of somehow the shadow of these sinners as much as falls on them, but if I could reverse this present condition by being purified by Lord Caitanya when people saw them again they would feel clean as though they had taken a bath in the Ganga then only can I become worthy of My true name."

Lord Nityananda's glory and mercy is unfathomable, he has advented only to save the most fallen souls. After thinking to Himself He expressed to Haridasa Thakura, how rotten they are, although born in a brahmana family they are so debauched that there is no way they can escape the worst kind of hellish punishment.

The Muslim guards who had whipped You almost to death were forgiven by You, so now in the case of these two if You are compassionate to them then constantly they can be saved. The Lord will certainly you if you plead on their behalf to Him, the Lord Himself has said that He cannot refuse you Haridasa. Let the whole world see the magnanimity of our Lord, that He is the savior of even these two. Just as the Bhagavatam sings about the liberation of Ajauimba, let all the three worlds witness something as unique."

Haridasa Thakura is all too familiar with Nityananda's nature, so he considered that these two sinners are as good as saved. Haridasa said, "Listen My Lord. Your desire is certainly also the Lord's desire. You deceive me by saying I can speak to the Lord because I am an animal and I need to be deceived, You are doing this repeatedly only to teach me of my lowly position."

Smiling benignly Lord Nityananda embraced him and spoke softly to him, "let us repeat to these drunks the Lord's message for which purpose we are roaming the streets. The Lord has instructed everyone to chant Krsna's name and especially the most degraded persons. Our duty is to simply repeat the rest is depending on the Lord whether they follow or not."

Once decided they now walked alike to the two drunks. The pious and saintly persons alike tries to dissuade Nityananda and Haridasa, "do not venture near them, if they catch you then you might even lose your life. We live in fear of these two, how do you muster up the courage to go to them? You cannot expect them to understand the holy position of a sannyasi, these two, murder brahmanas and slaughter cows."

Yet undeterred and joyously both continued walking towards the sinners chanting Krsna's name. They came close enough for them to hear Lord Caitanya's message, they called out, "chant Krsna's name, worship Him, for the Lord is dear to you as mother and father,

He is the most wonderful treasure of the heart. He has appeared in His incarnation only for your sake, so give up all your sinful activities and surrender to such a merciful Lord."

Hearing voices the two drunks lifted their heads, their eyes blood shot with rage. Seeing that the voices belonged to sannyasis, they cried out in anger, "catch them, catch them" and prepared to grab them. Haridasa and Nityananda hastily retreated being chased by these two yelling drunks, their cries were nasty and the two sannyasis were afraid of them.

People started saying, "we had warned them from before, but they did not heed it and so now they are put into a fearful situation." The atheistic persons derived pleasure out of this inside themselves and maliciously thought, "These charlatans have been properly punished by Lord Narayana." The pious brahmana lot cried out, "O Lord Krsna save them, save them!" and they all fled the place in fear.

The two rogues were now chasing the two saints and although they cried out, "catch them, catch them," they were still not near them. Nityananda said, "My dear Vaisnava, Haridasa, we have got ourselves into a good mess, we can call ourselves lucky if we come out of this alive." Thakura Haridasa replied, "O Lord, what is the use of talking, acting on Your advice we now face unnatural or violent death. Because You have given instructions on the holy name of Krsna to these two faithless drunkards we are earning our due reaction and punishment, death."

Speaking in this manner Lord Nityananda continued to run laughing gleefully while the two rogues chased them hurling loud abuses. Their bodies were ugly and fat so movement was difficult yet they ran after the two.

"O brothers, where do you think you can go, how will you escape Jagai and Madhai today? You seem not to now that Jagai and Madhai move about in this area, so stay a while and get acquainted with this place nicely." These words further spurred them on and they kept chanting, "save us Krsna, save us Krsna. O Govinda."

Haridasa said to Nityananda, "Lord Krsna saved me sometime back from the cruel hands of my Muslim tormentors, but today due to my companions restless nature and lack of mature intelligence I am about to face my final end."

Lord Nityananda replied, "You are incorrect, this restlessness is not My real nature it is manifesting in this manner due to your master, Lord caitanya's spiritual ecstasies. Although He is a brahmana He is relaying orders like some king. And by His orders we go from door to door, although I never heard anyone else give such orders. In the process of executing His order our only remuneration is the harsh abusive words and false accusations by the people. If we do not carry out His orders then we are finished and if we do then this present dilemma is our answer. As for blaming someone for all this, you single Me out in fact your master has also a share in it."

The two carried on their verbal mock fight with each other with great pleasure still being chased by the two drunken rogues. Running they went in the direction of Srivasa Pandita's house and the two rogues were left behind to run around in circles confused by intoxication.

The two rogues were confounded looking in all direction. They had no idea where the two saints had gone, they just gave up the chase and went about shuffling.

Nityananda and Haridasa after a little rest turned back to check if the rogues were still chasing them, they got up embraced each other laughing and went to see Lord Caitanya.

They found Lord Caitanya sitting amidst all the Vaisnavas, His exquisite beauty flowed from every part of His transcendental form. His eyes were like two full bloomed lotuses, His beauty caused Madana, the God of love, to swoon.

They were discussing Krsna conscious topics in the assembly and sometimes the Lord would reveal the transcendental truth about Himself. It was as if the Lord of Vaikuntha, Narayana sat to discourse with Sanaka and other sages.

Nityananda and Haridasa narrated their days experience to the assembly, "A strange incident occurred, we came across two drunks totally intoxicated, we were told that they were from brahmana families. We thought of doing them a good turn and requested them to chant Krsna's holy name, but they reacted violently and chased us, we could barely escape with our lives."

Lord Caitanya said, "What persons are these, what are their names? Being brahmanas why do they act in this coarse manner?"

Srivasa and Gangadasa were sitting close to the Lord and they said, "My Lord, these two persons are Jagai and Madhai. Their father is a pious brahmana but bad company has spoiled these two, now they know only intoxication. Their names instill fear in the hearts of the people and they live by stealing, looting and violence. It is impossible to describe how fallen they are, but You see everything and know everything My Lord."

Lord Caitanya said, "I will show these two rogues, I will cut them to pieces if they come in front of Me."

Lord Nityananda said, "You may cut them to pieces but I will not move from there, and if they are not alive I will not be able to carry out Your mission. Why are You getting so angry with them, allow Me first to make them chant Lord Krsna's name. The pious will naturally chant Krsna's name but these two know only irreligious activities. If You deliver them and bring them into devotional service, then Your fame as 'Patita pavana' or 'deliverer of the fallen' will remain intact. Your fame as 'Patita pavana' had increased when You saved Me but that fame will reach unlimited bounds if You deliver these two."

Laughing Lord Visvambhara said, "They are already liberated, as soon as those two rogues saw you they were delivered. You are so concerned about their welfare, Krsna will very soon take full care of them."

The devotees broke out in jubilant shouts of "Hari, Hari" when they heard Lord Caitanya's words, they were convinced that the sinners were already saved.

Haridasa spoke to Advaita Acarya, "The Lord has sent me out with an extremely restless person, if I go in one direction He will find another. He will jump into the crocodile infested swelling monsoon waters of the Ganga and try to catch the crocodiles. I stand on the banks shouting for Him to return He ignores everything and floats downstream like a dead man. And if He sees a young boy on the banks He gets up and goes shouting angrily after the boy. Soon the boy's irate parents arrive with sticks who I have to plead and beg with before sending them away."

He steals butter and cream from the milkman and runs away and I get caught and they want to beat me up. He is always doing the sort of activities which are incorrigible and beyond all logic. If He comes across a young maiden He asks her to marry Him. He sits on a bull shouting "Mahesh" (Lord Siva) and if He sees a cow He milks her and drinks the milk."

When I try to advice Him on His activities He mocks you saying, "What can that Advaita of Yours do to Me? And that person who You call 'Caitanya' what can He do to Me?"

"I repeat nothing of all this to Lord Caitanya. Today I was saved only by the Lord's grace. These two drunks were lying in the street in a stupor and He goes to them and tries to preach to them about Krsna. They are enraged and charge at us, we were saved from death today only by Your mercy."

Very much amused Advaita said, "That is nothing special for Him. An intoxicated person should join other drunks. He is drunk with love of God so He should join the other two. And as a renunciate devotee you have no business in such company. I know Nityananda's character and ability He will make everyone intoxicated with divine love. Wait another few days, He will bring those two also into the Vaisnava fold.

Advaita Acarya was suddenly overcome with anger and He threw away His clothes from His body and started strongly chastising. He said, "I want to hear everything about Caitanya's devotion to Lord Krsna. How He sings and dances what is the extent of His potency. Just wait and see tomorrow Nimai and Nitai will bring those two drunks with them and dance with them here, and have them mingle with all the other Vaisnavas. Let us not run away from here and save our castes."

Haridasa laughed at Advaita Acarya's angry mood and was relieved and assured that the two drunks would be saved. Who is able to really fathom the inner meaning of Advaita's words only personalities like Haridasa Thakura can understand since he is of that spiritual caliber. Many who misunderstood the real position of Advaita in relation to the other associates of the Lord and the Lord Himself criticize Gadadhara Pandita for acting on the Lord's desire, they invite their own doom. Any person who sides with a Vaisnava against another Vaisnava and criticizes him is destined to be destroyed.

The two drunks were as usual going to different places of the town and by some divine arrangement came and set up their den ;on the banks of the Ganga, a bathing place frequented by Lord Caitanya and went about their business of terrorizing the people.

The entire neighborhood was in the grips of terror, rich, poor, miser. After dusk no one ventured to go to the Ganga for their evening ablution and if at all then only in large groups.

They spent their nights close to the Lord's house. Every night they heard the Lord's kirtana, staying up whole nights when they heard the sweet kirtana accompanied by mrdanga and cymbals. They danced a drunken jig to the sound of the kirtana, greatly amused at themselves. The kirtana and their dancing increased their appetite for more wine. At times listening to the kirtana at other times getting up to dance all this went on in a state of drunken stupor, they were totally drowned in intoxication oblivious of time and place.

When they accidentally met the Lord then they remarked to Him, "O Nimai Pandita, it is nice that you sing, I want to see how You sing the mangala Chandi (verses in glorification of Durgadevi) every night. I will bring all the paraphernalia for the chandi kirtana."

Lord Caitanya kept a distance from them seeing their drunken state, but others went a different way altogether to escape these rogues.

One day Lord Nityananda was returning to Lord Caitanya's house in the evening after moving about town the whole day. The two rogues went and halted Him. Jagai and Madhai shouted out, "who is it?" Nityananda replied, "I am going to Nimai Pandita's house." In a drunken state they commanded, "What is Your name?" Lord Nityananda replied, "My name is Avadhuta."

Lord Nityananda lost in the mood of a young boy began to converse with the two drunks performing His lila. He had already made up His mind that He will deliver them and so

He had purposely chosen this time to come this way. When Madhai heard the name 'Avadhuta' he picked up a piece of broken earthen wine pot and seething with rage he threw it at Nityananda. The stone struck Nityananda on the forehead and it started bleeding. Lord Nityananda quietly meditated on Govinda, Krsna.

Jagai was deeply shocked to see blood dripping from Lord Nityananda's forehead; when Madhai once again raised his arms to strike Nityananda Jagai caught his hands. He said, "Why did you do such a heartless brutish thing, what can you gain by striking this foreigner? This Avadhuta is innocent do not hit Him again, He is a renunciate hitting Him will not benefit you."

People went running to Lord Caitanya and informed Him of the incident. The Lord immediately collected a large army of His disciples and arrived at the spot. Lord Nityananda was still amidst the two, blood dripping all over His body, but He was smiling.

When Lord Caitanya saw blood on His beloved Nityananda, He went into a fit of wrath and cried out, "chakra, chakra!" calling for His most devastating weapon, the Sudarsan disc. The chakra immediately appeared looming ominously before the very eyes of Jagai and Madhai.

The devotees became very fearful and Nityananda quickly went to Lord Caitanya begging Him, "When Madhai was about to hit Me, Jagai tried to check him, but accidentally I was hit and although You see blood on Me I do not feel any pain. Please be calm My Lord I have no pain see, I beg of You to spare them and give them to Me."

When the words of Jagai being checked penetrated Lord Caitanya's hearing He became very pleased and He went up to Jagai and embraced him. He said to Jagai, "May Lord Krsna bless you, you have won Me over by protecting Nityananda. You can ask for anything you very much desire, I shall grant you the boon, and from today may you be firmly situated in a pure devotional life experiencing love of Godhead."

The Vaisnavas became joyous, appreciating Lord Caitanya's blessings on Jagai with loud cries. And when Jagai heard Lord Caitanya's blessing him into love of Godhead, he fell unconscious with ecstasy.

Lord Caitanya said, "Jagai, rise up and see, I have really blessed you with love of Godhead." Jagai then saw Lord Caitanya in His four handed manifestation, holding the conch, disc and lotus. Jagai placed His lotus feet on his chest. Jagai knew that the lotus feet on his chest sustained Laksmi devi's life and so he caught them tightly as his most treasured object and wept like a child purified of his sins. Lord Caitanya is always performing such wondrous pastimes.

The same soul resides in both Jagai and Madhai, one was purified of all his sins, and the other still a sinner. While Jagai was praying to Lord Caitanya Madhai was already being transformed within. Overlooking the presence of Lord Nityananda, Madhai quickly got up and threw himself like a stick before Lord Caitanya and catching hold of His lotus feet he prayed, "Both of us were sinners, sinning together, in the same place at the same time. Why was Your mercy shown to one and not the other My Lord? Be merciful to me, I shall chant Your holy name, for there is no one else who can deliver a wretch like me."

Lord Visvambhara replied, "I cannot deliver you, you were responsible for shedding Nityananda's blood." Madhai replied, "You cannot say this My Lord. How can You act against Your own religion? In Your previous incarnation, why did You give liberation to those demons who were piercing Your body with arrows?"

The Lord replied, "Your offense is far greater than those demons, because you have hurt Nityananda, My most beloved associate. I am revealing to you this truth that Nityananda's body is more dear to Me than My own is to Me."

Madhai said, "since You are already revealing the truth to me tell me how I can be saved? You are the Supreme healer of all diseases. I can be healed of my disease only by Your treatment. Please do not deceive me anymore, O Lord of the Universe, Your real identity is already known. Who can You hide it from?"

Lord Visvambhara said, "You have committed a grievous offense: go and fall at Nityananda's feet." Madhai threw himself at Nityananda's feet following Lord Caitanya's instructions. Lord Nityananda's lotus feet are eternal treasures and once anyone holds on to them they will never be forsaken: this fact is well understood by Revati devi.

Lord Visvambhara said, "Listen dear Nityananda, he is at Your feet. You must show him mercy. As because he was responsible for shedding Your blood so only You can forgive him."

Lord Nityananda said, "What can I say or do My lord? Everything is a transformation of Your mercy. If I have acquired any piety due to devotional service to You then let all My pious results be given to Madhai. And as for My offenses I do not mind them, but You Lord should leave aside Your deception and unconditionally shower Your mercy on Madhai."

Lord Visvambhara said, "Now that You have forgiven everything why not also give Madhai Your transcendental embrace." Receiving Lord Visvambhara's order Nityananda firmly embraced Madhai and Madhai was immediately relieved of all sinful reactions and his body became surcharged with Lord Nityananda's spiritual powers.

Both Jagai and Madhai were now completely purified of all sins and they began to glorify both their Lordships Gaura–Nitai.

Lord Caitanya said, "From now do not commit anymore sinful activities." Jagai and Madhai replied, "never again My Lord." Lord Caitanya said again, "both of you listen carefully, it is an absolute fact that I have delivered you of all your sinful reactions accumulated over many many births and if you do not engage further in any sinful activities I take full responsibility of your sinful lives. I will take your remnants and my energy will manifest within your bodies."

The Lord's promise to the two was like sweet nectar in their ears and they fell down in a state of blissful trance hearing His words. All misconceptions and nescience dissipated from their minds and Jagai and Madhai were exhilarating in these moments of spiritual happiness. The Lord perceived this mood and instructed His men accordingly.

"Take those two men to My house and I will perform kirtana with them. I will give them today what is rarely accessible to even Lord Brahma. I will convert these two men to top class devotees who will become famous all over the world.

Those who would cleanse themselves in the holy waters of the Ganga each time they contacted Jagai and Madhai previously I will change their opinions, from now they will consider that the association of Jagai and Madhai is as good as the association of Gangadevi herself, this was Nityananda's desire. Nityananda's promise can never go in vain."

All the Vaisnavas escorted Jagai and Madhai into the inner recess of Lord Caitanya's house. Allowing only the Vaisnavas inside the Lord closed the doors.

Lord Visvambhara sat down and Nityananda and Gadadhara sat on either side of Him. In front facing Him sat the exalted Advaita Acarya, and the rest of the devotees sat all around Him. They were, Pundarik, Vidyanidhi, Haridasa Thakura, Garuda, Ramai, Srinivasa, Gangadasa, Vakresvar Pandita, Candra Sekhara and many other associates of the Lord who know the real nature of the activities of the Lord, they all sat in that assembly with Jagai and Madhai.

Jagai and Madhai was so swayed by the spiritual ecstasy generated in that Vaisnava assembly and the kirtana that they began rolling on the ground manifesting the symptoms of ecstasy like horripilation, profuse of tears, shivering etc. Who is able to fathom the unlimited and nectarine pastimes of the Lord that He can convert two rogues into exalted devotees. They were previously atheists and sinners but now they are like two renounced spiritualists. Whosoever has faith in these activities of the Lord will attain the lotus feet of Krsna and the worst degradation is reserved for the non-believers.

Jagai and Madhai offered prayers of praise to the Lord as the Lord and the devotees heard them with happiness. By the will of the Lord, Sarasvati devi, the Goddess of learning appeared on their tongues. Jagai and Madhai saw both Lord Caitanya and Lord Nityananda sitting in one place and they perceived Their individual real identity. The prayers they offered were so potent that if one hears them one immediately develops loving attachment to Krsna.

They prayed, "All glory to Lord Visvambhara, the Lord of Lords. All glory to Lord Nityananda who is serving Lord Visvambhara in so many ways. All glory to Lord Caitanya who is the preceptor for congregational chanting of the name of Lord Krsna. All glory to Lord Nityananda who carries out all of Lord Caitanya's desires. All glory to the son of Jagannatha Misra, all glory to Lord Nityananda who has taken complete shelter of Lord Caitanya.

All glory to Saci devi's son who is an ocean of mercy and all glory to Lord Nityananda, the Lord's constant companion. All glory to You, Lord of my heart, who is born as the son of a king's scholar, and all glory to Lord Nityananda who is the embodiment of compassion. All glories to the activities of Lord Caitanya and all glory to Lord Nityananda the most exalted Vaisnava.

All glory to the Supreme Lord, Sri Caitanya who holds the conch, disc, mace, and lotus, all glory to Lord Nityananda who is non different from Lord Caitanya and is glorious as the 'Avadhuta'.

All glory to Lord Gauracandra the life and soul of Advaita Acarya; all glory to Lord Nityananda, who in His Ananta Sesa expansion is glorifying the Lord with thousands of mouths.

All glory to Lord Caitanya, Gadadhara Pandita's life force and the master of Murari, He is the source of all joy to Haridasa Thakura and Vasudeva.

O Lord! You have in all Your previous incarnations delivered innumerable sinful persons; these acts are Supremely wonderful, the whole world sings hymns praising these pastimes. In fact by delivering two sinful wretches like us the glories of Your previous activities are somewhat reduced, after all we are insignificant.

The story of Ajamila's deliverance was glorious, we seem puny and small next to that. This I say not in useless praise but with full conviction, Ajamila was the tight candidate for Your mercy. The Vedas declare that even a killer of millions of brahmanas can attain liberation immediately upon chanting Your holy name. It is not at all surprising that Ajamila attained liberation by chanting Your name because such is the transcendental potency of Your holy name.

You have incarnated specially to expound the highest truth of the Vedas; the authority of the Vedas would be undermined if sinners like us are not delivered. We were inimical towards You and even struck Your beloved Nityananda, yet You delivered us. One can easily judge the unimaginable difference between Your magnanimous act and our heinous low performance.

As soon as Ajamila uttered "Narayana" four messengers of the Lord appeared before him. As for us, when we saw You we immediately drew blood from Your forehead, for which we were able to see Your expansion, and expansion of expansions, Your weapon for this incarnation (the holy name) and Your eternal associates. You had all along kept these wonderful facts a secret, but now these unlimited excellencies have been exposed.

Now by Your grace the essence of the Vedas is more clear and so Ananta Sesa can freely sing this truth. Now the hidden store house of Your transcendental qualities has been opened and the best example of this is that You have saved us out of Your causeless mercy.

Demons like Kamsa although cruel to You, yet You gave them liberation after killing them. You have so many places which are most confidential and some of the kings and warriors could see a little of it unraveled when they fought with You at the Svayamvara. Although they could see You face to face they all met with doom.

Those devotees who would clean themselves in the holy waters of the Ganga if perchance they even stepped on our shadows, now they are touching and mingling with us. O Lord in every respect Your activities are Super mundane, and there is no way to deceive anyone anymore about Your transcendental nature, everyone is well aware of this.

When Rajendra the king of the elephants prayed to You, You appreciated his faith and surrender and so You relieved him from his distressful condition and gave liberation to him.

Similarly it was not by accident that You delivered Pubana the witch, and all the other demons like Aghasura, Bakasura etc. Upon leaving their bodies they were immediately transported to transcendence, who can understand these activities of Yours unless they approach this subject through the knowledge of the Vedas.

The way You have delivered these two most wretched, fallen souls was witnessed by the entire creation. All the wretched sinners You have delivered so far had some kind of qualifications but we have not a single qualification and yet You causelessly delivered us because of Your unlimited merciful nature.

Jagai and Madhai finished their prayers with tears of joy streaking down their glowing faces, such is the transcendental potency of the Lord. The assembled Vaisnavas were astounded having seen everything that had happened before their very presence, and they clasped their hands in great reverence before the Lord offering Him their prayers.

"The choicest words that were just spoken by these two drunks in praising You was possible only by Your causeless mercy. Who can understand the nature of Your inconceivable potencies, You give Your mercy by Your own sweet will."

The Lord replied, "These two are not to be considered as drunks or rogues any more, from now they are My servitors. All of you kindly pray for them that they may never leave My devotional service. Whatever offenses they may have committed against any of you, please forgive them and bless them."

Hearing Lord Caitanya's words Jagai and Madhai threw themselves down at the feet of all the Vaisnava devotees and catching their feet begged for mercy. The devotees were moved by their humility and blessed them, thus Jagai and Madhai became free from all desires to commit further sinful activities.

Lord Caitanya said, "Rise, rise O Jagai and Madhai, You have nothing to worry anymore now you are My servitors. Your prayers were all true and are well appreciated. Such mercy and miracles that you have now witnessed and experienced is impossible in your present bodies, but it is now made possible only by the mercy of Lord Nityananda, this is an absolute fact. All you Vaisnavas present here please witness that I am taking on Myself all the sinful actions of these two souls."

To make everyone understand that He was accepting the sinful actions of Jagai and Madhai, Lord Caitanya's body became blackish in complexion. The Lord inquired, "why do you all look at Me in that manner? How do I look?" Advaita Acarya replied, "You look like Lord Krsna."

Lord Caitanya began to laugh at Advaita Acarya's words and all the Vaisnavas became ecstatic and expressed their joy in jubilant sounds.

Lord Caitanya said, "Begin kirtana then this black shroud of sin will lift from My body and enter the bodies of those who criticize the devotees of the Lord." The devotees were happy to hear these words and they began a loud kirtana.

Lord Visvambhara and Lord Nityananda began to dance and the Vaisnavas circled around them in joyful abandonment, singing their praise. Advaita Acarya also began to dance, Lord Caitanya had advented on his request and the worlds was saved because of him alone.

Everyone joined in the ecstatic singing and dancing keeping time with the clapping of hands. They forgot their awe and reverence for the Lord in their joy and nobody knows the countless times they bumped into the Lord while dancing.

Mother Saci sat in the inner chambers with her daughter-in-law and saw everything feeling herself carried away in waves of ecstasy. Everyone was drowned in the flood of happiness of love of Godhead, Sri Krsna. Even Laksmi devi is very careful to touch the Lord's body but now even the two drunks were freely mingling and dancing and touching the Lord.

Lord Caitanya delivered these two, while He pushed the fault finders and offenders of the Vaisnavas down to the worst well. One never advances in spiritual life by finding faults in other Vaisnavas, in fact only sinful reactions are increased so give up all your fault findings.

After dancing the Lord sat down and all the Vaisnavas sat around Him. The Vaisnavas were covered in thick layers of dust, yet they were clean and glowing.

The Lord again looked like His original beautiful golden self and smiling He said, "Do not consider these two persons as being sinners any longer since I Myself have burnt up their sins. My energy has entered them and I make them act, speak, walk, eat and when I leave they will also leave their bodies behind. The conditioned living entities unable to bear much pain calls out for help with a little suffering, and even when the body is burnt the soul does not want to associate with his body.

The conditioned living entities under the influence of his false ego begins to accredit himself for all his activities and becomes proud, this is very dangerous. All the activities so far carried out by these two were under the spell of false ego but now I have stopped all that. From now they should be counted amongst you as Vaisnavas without discriminations.

All of you please listen attentively, anyone who gives these two brothers anything to eat with devotion and respect is in fact offering Lord Krsna the most relishable honey: even a leaf offered with love to them is nectar to Krsna.

If anyone ridicules these two in any ways will be destroyed because of their offensive attitude." The Vaisnavas were pleased to have Jagai and Madhai join their fold and offered them obeisances.

The Lord said, "Let us all go to the waters of Bhagirathi Ganga." As they came to the river they jumped inside. Constant chanting of God's holy name has made the devotees young in spirit and now they played in Jahnavi, ganga's waters like little children. Even the sober older devotees were acting like the restless youths, this is true because of the influence of devotional service to Lord Krsna.

Just before this was the festivity of kirtana, and now they were all submerged in the festivity of water sports with the Lord. All the barriers of awe and reverence were lowered between the Lord and His devotees and they played with each other as equals. The Lord splashed water on the devotees, but no one could counter the Lord's attacks. In all the water fights between the Lord and the devotees, the Lord was always the winner and the devotees flee His ferocious attacks after only a few minutes of feeble resistance.

At times Advaita Acarya, Lord Gauranga and Lord Nityananda were engaged in water sports together, another time Srivasa, Haridasa Thakura and Mukunda played together. In this way all the devotees including Sri Garbha, Sadasiva, Murari, Sriman, Purusottama, Mukunda, Sanjaya, Buddhimanta Khan, Vidyanidhi, Gangadasa, Jagadisa, Gopinatha, Garuda, Srirama, Govinda, Sridhara, Krsnananda, Kasisvara, Jagadananda, Govindananda, Sri Suklambara etc.. took part. It is impossible to write down all the names of the unlimited lists of Lord Caitanya's devotees, later Vedavyasa will compile all the names in the Puranas.

All the devotees were wholly engrossed in water sports experiencing the highest spiritual pleasures sometimes someone was victorious and at other times he lost. They all enjoyed playing together with Lord Caitanya, Gadadhara Nityananda and Advaita Acarya.

Once Lord Nityananda catching Advaita Acarya unawares splashed water into His eyes. For a while He could not open His eyes and so infuriated He started hurling abuses at Nityananda. He said, "Where did this drunkard come from, He has blinded me. Srivasa Pandita has brought this traveling mendicant from somewhere and He is now moving about as if He is one of us. And that Visvambhara is also associating with Him closely, doing so many things secretly with this traveling mendicant."

Lord Nityananda replied, "do you not feel any shame? What is the use of all this argument after all you have lost." Lord Caitanya intervened saying, "Once is not sufficient, I will accept a win or loss only if it is repeated three times."

So once again Advaita Acarya began to fight with Nityananda Prabhu. It was difficult to discern them, due to their physical similarities in water they seemed like one person in two different places. Both played vigorously sometimes someone won and again lost in the next fight. Like this they were both equally matched. But once Nityananda again caught Advaita off guard and He forcefully splashed water into His eyes. Advaita Acarya was hurt and startled and said, "You drunkard, You cannot become a sannyasi just by murdering a brahmana. You have spent most of Your time in the West eating in different people's houses while traveling and nobody knows anything about Your family, Your caste and other such background information. We know nothing about Your parentage, Your guru. You are simply here eating, sleeping and moving about and everyone just calls You `Avadhuta'."

Actually Advaita was eulogizing Lord Nityananda under the pretext of using abusive language; all of Nityananda's followers laughed at the words along with Nityananda knowing the real meaning of these words. But Advaita Acarya continued His acting and was livid with rage and He said, "I will destroy everyone, then do not blame Me."

The devotees laughed at the show of anger; He was revealing the truth under the guise of being angry, His words only sounded like abuses. If someone does not understand the esoteric meaning of such vociferous fights and takes sides glorifying one and condemning the other he will certainly be annihilated.

Only those fortunate souls who have received the mercy of Lord Nityananda and Lord Caitanya can understand the esoteric meanings of the words of Vaisnava devotees.

Then after a while the two stalwarts Nityananda and Advaita embraced each other. These two Lords are always drunk with the nectar of love of Godhead, Sri Caitanya Mahaprabhu.

In this way, every night after kirtana Lord Caitanya went with all His associates to perform water sports in the Ganga. Such pastimes cannot be seen by the ordinary people but the demigods take great pleasure in witnessing all these sports of the Lord remaining in their hiding places.

They got up from the waters and came to the land chanting Lord Hair's name. The Lord garlanded everyone with prasada flower garlands and applied sandal wood paste on them, bidding them farewell before they went for their meals. He then again offered Jagai and Madhai to all the Vaisnavas and gave them His personal garland. These pastimes of the Lord are eternal and continuous they only appear and disappear as described in the Veda.

The Lord returned home and after washing His feet He offered prayers to Tulasi devi. He sat down to eat and Mother Saci brought all the prasadam foodstuff to His presence. He prayed to all the previous Acaryas offering them prasadam and then the Lord of the entire cosmic manifestation ate His meal with relish. He cleansed His mouth and went and sat by the door. Mother Saci looked to the hearts content at the young couple at the young couple as they sat together, she felt a great ecstasy drowning her body and soul.

Who can fully gauge the extent of Mother sacidevi's good fortune? Only if Ananta Sesa can emulate with His thousand of hoods can one understand this. Even if one utters the name `ai' (short term of Sacidevi's name) in material consciousness that word will free him from all sufferings. Sacidevi even forgot herself as she gazed into her son's beautiful face.

At last Lord Visvambhara got up to go to bed then all the demigods who were secretly present there also left. Daily Brahma and Lord Siva and other demigods came to serve their Supreme Lord, Sri Caitanya. No one can see these personalities without the Lord's grace, and the Lord sometimes allows a few devotees to see and hear about their presence. Some days when Lord VIsvambhara would be sitting one of these unseen servants would approach Him. He said, "remain where you are" and all the rest of them would immediately again go back into hiding.

The number of such unseen visitors are so numerous that there is no need to write the exact figure. The Lord asked His devotees, "Can you not see these heavenly visitors?" The devotees replied with folded hands, "All the three worlds are serving You my Lord. What power do we possess to see all of them unless You empower us with the vision to see them."

These are the Super excellent pastimes of Lord Caitanya which are esoteric in nature and anyone who faithfully hears them attains the highest perfections, one should not doubt the veracity of this statement, the proof is that all the prominent demigods like Brahma and Siva were daily visitors to Lord Caitanya's house.

Thus Lord Caitanya delivered Jagai and Madhai very easily because He is the life and soul of the Universe, the most munificent of all incarnations and so He will deliver everyone with the exception of those who are critical of the Vaisnavas and who act against the teachings of the Vedas.

If a personality, even of the stature of Lord Siva, commits an offense against a devotee of the Lord then according to the Srimad Bhagavatam he soon meets his end.

"mahad-vimanat sva-krtad dhi madri nanksyaty adurad api sulapanih" (SB 5/10/25)

"Although I have committed an offense by insulting You, I know that there is no loss or gain for you due to My insult. You are fixed in your determination, but I have committed an offense. Because of this, even though I may be as strong as Lord Siva, I shall be vanquished without delay due to my offense at the lotus feet of a Vaisnava.

The scriptures are strong in condemning offenses against the Vaisnavas, even a erudite scholar is not saved by his spiritual readings or a person engaged in chanting Lord Krsna's holy name is also not spared punishment if he offends a Vaisnava. The instructions of the Padma Purana as cited here, when followed strictly will help one develop love of Godhead.

"Satain ninda namnah paramamaparadham vitanute yatah khyatim jatam kathamu sahate tadvigarham"

To criticize and find faults in pure devotees of the Lord is the most grievous offense against the holy name. O holy name! how can You bear the criticism against Your pure devotees through whom Your glories have been propagated (You can never tolerate criticism against those who have dedicated their lives in propagating the holy name of the Lord). Such offenders are annihilated.

Lord Gauracandra will certainly deliver anyone who hears with faith the deliverance of these two big sinners. All glory to Lord Gauracandra who is the deliverer of the most fallen and demoniac souls, He is the most magnanimous Lord, an ocean of mercy, He sees only one's devotional qualities and rejects his faults. If anyone can remain alive without rendering devotional service to His lotus feet is a great sinner, and only by one's previous pious activities somehow life is maintained but what good is such a life?

In spite of my discrepancies please be merciful to me so that I may be allowed to always chant Your glories. Lord Caitanya is my spiritual master and Lord's Lord and master and in every birth I pray that I may become their eternal servitor.

The pastimes of Lord Caitanya are without beginning and without end and I am compiling these pastimes to be able to glorify Him in any manner I can. I offer Him and His associates my respectful obeisances and I pray at their lotus feet that all my offenses may be excused.

Lord Sri Caitanya and Lord Nityananda Prabhu are my life and soul.

I, Vrndavana dasa, offer this song at their lotus feet.

Chapter 14

O Lord Gauranga, Your exquisite form is bubbling over with the nectar of love of Godhead as You dance within Yourself.

Lord Siva and Lord Brahma and the other demigods came regularly to serve Lord Caitanya but without the Lord's permission no one could see them.

Everyday they witnessed the different pastimes of the Lord and when the Lord went to sleep for the night they would also disappear only to return the next day ready to render any service to the Lord. They had witnessed how Jagai and Madhai were delivered and now they were returning in a jubilant mood.

They were discussing with each other, "The Lord has such unlimited compassion for the fallen souls that He liberated even those two most abominable characters. This has imbibed in me great hopes that one day I shall certainly cross over this ocean of nescience."

Yama raja, the God of death was also a daily visitor and he witnessed Lord Caitanya's pastimes. He inquired from his assistant Chitragupta, who tabulates and calculates virtuous and sinful activities of human beings. "What is the extent of sin that these two persons have committed, and what it means to exonerate them?" Chaitragupta replied, "O Yamaraja why pursue this matter, it is futile?"

If my assistant writers sit down to write down the sins of these two they will never finish even after a month and if you want to sit and hear their sins then even after hearing many millions of them it is your prerogative. All the messengers constantly describe their sins so much that the writers always feel harassed unable to cope up with the voluminous scores of sins."

The messenger said, "The amount of sins they commit forces me to the brink of complete exhaustion and break down from writing them. The bottomless pits where these records are kept will bear witness to my plight, these two have made us writers weep. But now most facilely Lord Caitanya has absorbed all their mountable pile of sins, now permit me that I can cast them into the ocean bed."

Yamaraja had never before witnessed such a display of compassionate nature of one for another. Yamaraja was an elevated Vaisnava, he was the embodiment of religious principles, well conversant with the injunctions of the Srimad Bhagavatam. When he heard Chitrugupta he went into a trance in love of Krsna. He fell down unconscious inside his chariot. Chitrugupta and his assistants became concerned and tried to pick him up unable to control the flow of tears.

The demigods who were returning were jubilantly performing kirtana. Yamajara's chariot had come to a halt and Yamaraja was lying unconscious inside. Lord Siva, Lord Brahma, Ananta Sesa, Narada Muni and the other demigods were experiencing a new type of happiness glorifying Lord Caitanya and how His boundless magnanimity could deliver these two who were considered the worst sinners.

When the others noticed that Yamaraja's chariot had halted they came to him and saw Yamaraja lying unconscious inside. They were astonished to see him in this condition not knowing the cause of his loss of consciousness. Chitrugupta explained to them the reason for his present condition and Lord Siva and Lord Brahma could immediately perceive the symptoms of ecstasy in love of Krsna in Yamaraja. They began loud kirtana, singing into his ears.

The kirtana revived Yamaraja's consciousness and when he found himself back he got up and began dancing like a madman. The kirtana revealed a crescendo and Yamaraja, son of the Sun God, matched it with his wild dancing. The demigods got infected with Yamaraja's dancing and they joined in with him. Lord Siva, Narada Muni and everyone else were drawn in by the mood of love of Godhead. These are very confidential matters and one day the Vedas will reveal these activities of the demigods.

Dharmaraja now freed from his feelings of shame and intoxicated by love of Krsna lost himself in the movements of dance. Bringing back to memory the pastimes of Lord Caitanya he cried out, "Hallowed be the Lord, the most munificent Lord, friend of the fallen souls."

The body movements were accompanied with ecstatic symptoms of uproarious calls, horripilation all over the body, a continuous flow of ecstatic emotions as he wept thinking of the Lord. His assistants and companions were over-flowing with joy seeing Dharmaraja. Chitrugupta was a devotee who was very attached to the lotus feet of Krsna, he joined in with unrestrained loud and charming appreciation and all were rolling on the ground.

Lord Siva was also dancing in intense rapture unaware that his clothes were strewn everywhere, naked he pranced about in love of Krsna, he a very exalted Vaisnava devotee was blessing the world chanting Lord Krsna's holy name. His matted locks had cascaded down and flared up with each upward movement of his body. Seeing their master in such raptures, Ganesh and Kartika also joined Lord Sankara as they were all remembering the unlimited mercy just exhibited by Lord Caitanya.

Four handed Lord Brahma, whose life and soul is in devotional service to the Supreme Lord, also began to dance in the company of his family members. Kasyapa Muni, Kardama Muni, Daksa Prajapati, Muniara Mana, Bhrigu Muni all joined in with Lord Brahma, for they were stalwarts in the realm of devotional service and were expert in relishing the spiritual mellows with Lord Krsna. They wept and dancing circled around Lord Brahma releasing sighs of devotional feelings.

Devarsi Narada was also dancing next to Lord Brahma, tears of love flowed down in streams. He forgot his vina as he was relishing the glories of the Lord and His holy name. Sukadeva Goswain was a beloved devotee of Lord Caitanya, one who knew perfectly the science of devotion, he also joined the dancing and repeating the names of Jagai and Madhai he rolled in the dust, offering his obeisances to the Lord.

Indra, the king of the demigods almost invincible due to his weapon, 'thunder' is feeling repentant. Tears flowed constantly from his thousand eyes like rivers. Now his thousand eyes, which he received due to Gautama Muni's curse were able to see for the first time the glorious pastimes of Lord Caitanya and he felt that the curse was a blessing in disguise. Indra was experiencing such great happiness that he was rolling on the ground, with no concern for his kingly position; his weapons felt impotent and his priceless and opulently studded kirti necklace lay limp and neglected. These are fully the symptoms indicating the influence of love of Krsna.

Candra, Surya, Kuvera, Varuna and all the demigods, servants of Lord Krsna were dancing intoxicated by the nectar of love of Krsna which they had just drunk with their eyes in the form of Lord Caitanya's pastimes. They were jostling freely with each other oblivious of high or low positions, they were drunk and happy.

Lord Ananta Sesa was dancing accompanied by Garuda. Lord Sesa is holding the entire creation on one of his hoods, but now he was fully absorbed in love of Krsna. Lord Siva, Lord Brahma and others surrounded Him as He danced and sang with His thousand hoods the unparalleled pastimes of Lord Gauracandra of how He delivered the worst kind of sinners.

They were all in the grips of spiritual ecstasy, some wept, others laughed and some lay unconscious on the floor. Someone said, "How wonderful to see Lord Caitanya's pastimes, O how blessed are Jagai and Madhai." The unlimited azure vault reverberated with their joyous pandemonium, purifying the entire cosmic creation with the eulogy of Krsna. They dispelled the gloom of inauspiciousness.

The all auspicious sound of Gaura lila Satyaloka, permeated the vast coverings of the material world down to the lowest material planet—`pabalaloka'. Everywhere they echoed Lord Gauranga's pastimes of delivering the two sinners, Jagai and Madhai. Having now once relished the nectar of Gauranga's pastimes, they continued to glorify Lord Caitanya as they went back to their abodes.

All glory to Lord Gauracandra who has appeared in this material world to benedict the conditioned souls for He is the Lord of all the living entities, the Lord of the Universe. Just as You have so munificently delivered these two most fallen sinners so kindly shower Your mercy on everyone one of us also. O Lord!, You are most gracious because You have come to save the fallen souls.

Lord Sri Krsna Caitanya and Lord Nityananda Prabhu are my life and soul.

I, Vrndavana Dasa, string a garland of songs in their praise and offer it at their lotus feet.

Chapter 15

All of you just behold the super excellent potency of Lord Gauracandra. He is so difficult to be attained in meditation even by exalted personalities like Lord Siva, Sukadeva Goswain. Devarsi Narada yet we see Him mingling freely with people who do not possess any devotional qualities.

Lord Visvambhara is always performing His Super mundane pastimes in Navadvipa out of His causeless mercy but no one can perceive them. Just as the inmates of the ocean, the fishes, can never perceive the moon, but only the reflections of its rays similarly although Lord Gauracandra manifest His pastimes openly the common people could not perceive the super excellent elements in them.

Jagai and Madhai were now completely transformed persons by Lord Caitanya's mercy; they were very devoted, examples of pillars of piety. Before sunrise they completed their bathing in the Ganga and sat down to chant two lakh times the name of Krsna daily.

They always condemned themselves for their lowly position out of humility and with tears in their eyes they incessantly chanted Krsna's holy name. Now that they have tasted the marvelous nectar of the holy name and of devotional service they can perceive this material existence and see that everything is inherently a part and parcel of Krsna.

When memories of their older sinful ways plagued them they fell almost unconscious to the ground, repentant and weeping. They cried out, "O most merciful Lord Caitanya, the Saviour of the fallen souls" and remembering the Lord's mercy again and again they shed tears of joy.

The happiness they experienced in Krsna's service made them forget even about eating and each time the two of them thought of the mercy shown to them by Lord Caitanya they wept uncontrollably. Lord Caitanya and the other devotees were always being very kind to them giving them inspiration and hope. The Lord came Himself to feed them but still they could not feel peace deep inside.

Madhai specially felt greatly afflicted each time he remembered how heinously he had struck Lord Nityananda. Although Lord Nityananda had forgiven him, Madhai was far from feeling exhilarated.

He said, "I have hurt Nityananda Prabhu drawing blood from Him, in His body resides Lord Caitanya and I am so sinful that I struck such a personality." Saying this Madhai punished himself.

Madhai was unable to contain his feelings at such memories and day and night he cried, nothing else came to his mind.

Lord Nityananda roamed about in Nadia always in the mood of a child, laughing and carefree. He was very easy to please and always happy and He was totally free from any sense of false prestige.

One day Madhai found Lord Nityananda was all alone, he threw himself down and embraced His lotus feet. Tears of love for the Lord washed His feet and with complete humility he prayed to Lord Nityananda.

"O Lord as Visnu You maintain this universe, and as Ananta Sesa You hold the cosmic manifestation on Your hood. You are the embodiment of devotional service, Lord Sankara and Parvati devi constantly meditate upon You. Devotional service to the Lord is exclusively Your property and it is Your prerogative to grant anyone the eligibility to be situated on the platform of devotional service. No one is more dear to Lord Caitanya as You are.

By Your grace the mighty Garuda participates in Lord Krsna's pastimes as the Lord's carrier. You are constantly chanting the glories of Krsna with Your unlimited mouths, propounding and explaining the process of devotional service as the highest human occupation.

Devarsi Narada experiences innumerable bliss chanting Your glories; Your only and most treasured possession is Lord Caitanya.

You are famous as the one who forced the Jamuna to change her course and flow according to Your desires; King Janaka received transcendental knowledge by serving You.

You embody the essence of all scriptures being the Original Person, and the primeval Supreme Personality as declared by the Vedas. You are the divine father of every living entity, the greatest Mystic; You are Laksmana the valorous prince.

You are the vanquisher of demoniac and atheistic forces, the Supreme enjoyer of all mellows, and the foremost spiritual guide: You are well conversant with all of Lord Caitanya's pastimes. Maha maya, Your external potency, has become worshipable by the entire universe just because she has served You, the whole cosmic manifestation seeks the shelter of the shade of Your lotus feet.

You are fully devoted to Lord Caitanya and so You are the most proficient propagator of the path of devotional service; You are the sum total of all the potencies of Lord Caitanya. You expand Yourself as Lord Caitanya's bed, throne, resting place, umbrella, You are His very life and soul.

As Balarama You are matchless in Your service to Krsna and as Nityananda You are foremost of Lord Caitanya's associates as well as the Origin of all incarnations of Lord Caitanya. You are always delivering the fallen and annihilating the atheists.

You are the protector of the Vaisnava devotees of the Lord and the propounder of the true religion, the process of pure devotional service to the Lord. By Your grace Lord Brahma creates this universe. You are always worshiped by Your energies, Revati devi and Baruni devi and Kanta devi.

The Rudra incarnation was produced out of Your anger, through him You bring about the annihilation of this cosmic creation.

Samkar sanatmakro rudro niskra myatti jagattrayam, "Rudra was born out of Lord Sankarasana's face and he dissolves the universe with the great fire called `kalanala'."

Although You seem to be doing everything yet You are not the doer, O Lord the whole cosmic manifestation is resting on Your bosom. Your body is very soft and gives Krsna great pleasure when You expand Yourself as His bed and He lies on You. But I am so monstrous and sinful that I hurt this same transcendental body of Yours, who is more wretched than I am?"

Your transcendental form is constantly worshiped by Lord Siva accompanied by his beautiful consort Paravati and other young maidens, simply by remembering Your form one is freed from all bondage and this same spiritual body was bleeding due to my misdeeds.

Chitraketi, the famous emperor was living happily by worshiping You and was counted amongst the foremost Vaisnava devotees; that same form that is worshiped by the entire universe was brutally hit by me, the lowest of sinners.

The sages of Naimisaranya forest headed by sage Sauraka became freed from all material entanglement by meditating upon Your form. In expansion as Laksmi You were wounded by Indrajit, son of Ravana, in battle and for this You slew him. Similarly the Gorilla demon Dvividha also met with a premature death at Your hands because he was harassing You.

The mighty Jarasandha was also vanquished by You for being inimical to You; I am so foolish that I did not understand what is beneficial to me and so I inflicted pain upon Your transcendental form. I did not know then the consequences of such an act for when Rukmi, Krsna's brother-in-law, insulted You, You took his life.

Romaharsava Suba was blessed with a long life by the sages of Naimisaranga, but when he failed to accord to You Your due respect, then You came and slew him with a blade of grass.

King Duryodhana and the entire dynasty was almost exterminated for disregarding Your words: they were spared by good luck because of the presence of elevated devotees like Kunti devi, Bhimsa, Yudhisthira, Vidiva, Arjuna who intervened supplicating You with appropriate words.

When one's very life is at stake just by a little disrespectful attitude towards You, then to what depths of depravity and hell must I enter for my heinous act?" Speaking like this Madhai started experiencing love of Godhead he fell to the ground clutching the Lord's lotus feet to his bosom.

Madhai continued to pray, "The shelter of Your lotus feet can save anyone from the endless cycle of rebirth. You have appeared simply to deliver the most fallen, so my dear Lord kindly protect this fallen soul surrendered to You, for You are my life soul and most treasured goal.

All glory to Lord Nityananda, the darling son of Padmavati devi. You are the most precious jewel of all the Vaisnava devotees. You are completely free from any rancor, always submerged in the highest state of blissfulness, You are always inclined to forgive those who are surrendered to You. I am the most atrocious beast and offender, so kindly forgive me Lord for all my offenses."

Lord Nityananda smiled hearing the loving supplications offered to Him and said, "get up, arise O Madhai, you are My servitor, I now reside within your body. Is the father disturbed if his little child hits him? I have accepted your beating in this parental mood. What is more important is that anyone who hears your wonderful and devotional prayers to Me will certainly develop loving attachment to My lotus feet."

You are the recipient of my Lord's mercy therefore you are free from all blame. Whoever worships My Lord Caitanya becomes most dear to Me and I offer him My protection eternally.

If anyone disregards Lord Caitanya but offers Me worship and sings My glories he suffers My pains birth after birth." He then embraced Madhai and took away all his misery.

Madhai again fell at Lord Nityananda's feet and said, " I have one other prayer my Lord, You are situated in everyone's heart and I have inflicted severe violence on many such living entities. I do not even know to whom and to how many souls I have inflicted pain, if I could recognize them then I would beg forgiveness for them. But in this situation I am deprived of their blessings and forgiveness. O Lord if You are pleased with me then advice me how I can get out of this dilemma."

Lord Nityananda replied, "Listen to My advise Madhai, construct a bathing place on the Ganga so the residents of Nadia can take a bath without difficulty and fondly think of You for this convenience. This is also a service to Ganga devi, who dissolves everyone's sins with her pure waters. What better blessings can you ask for? stand at the bathing place and beg for forgiveness from every bather praying to them for their blessings in this way you can exonerate yourself of all offenses."

Madhai took to heart Lord Nityananda's advise. After circumambulating Him several times with utmost love and respect he left. Chanting Krsna's holy name, while tears of love of God streamed down his face, he began to construct alone a proper bathing place on the bank of the Ganga. The people saw this sight with great wonder. Madhai offered prostrated obeisances to everyone who came to the site and begged them saying, "please forgive me for all the offenses I have committed knowingly or unknowingly against you and think of me graciously."

The people were happy beyond words and remembered Lord Govinda seeing Madhai's humility and his devotional mood; he shed tears of love for the Lord while he worked. The word went around, "Nimai Pandita has marvelously converted Jagai and Madhai into good and pious men."

The people greeted the news with sheer astonishment and commented, "Nimai Pandita is not an ordinary mortal, evil men ridiculed and criticized Nimai Pandita without knowing Him. Nimai Pandita was always actually engaged in performing kirtana, Nimai Pandita is truly a real devotee of Krsna. Whosoever ridiculed or denigrates Him will certainly meet his doom.

Anyone who could transform the character and mentality of these two is surely the Supreme Lord Himself or at least specially empowered by Him. Nimai Pandita is certainly an extraordinary Personality and now the extent of His power has become widely known." The people of Nadia discussed amongst themselves in this manner and they avoided the company of men who continued their criticism.

Madhai was leading a very austere life and became known as a "brahmacari" following strictly the vow of celibacy and restraint. He was always in sight of Ganga devi living on her bank and worked very hard with the spade constructing the bathing place.

This wonderful pastime of Jagai and Madhai's deliverance was monumentalized for posterity by this bathing place. These narrations of the Madhya Khanda becomes nectarine because it describes Lord Caitanya's munificence in delivering these two fallen wretches.

Whoever is envious of the fact that Lord Caitanya is the origin of everyone will be destroyed. The extraordinary activities of Lord Caitanya are the hidden treasures of the Vedas so hear these narrations attentively and with proper faith.

Lord Sri Krsna Caitanya and Lord Nityananda are my life and soul,

I, Vrndavana dasa, humbly offer this song at their lotus feet.

Madhya Lila

Chapter 16

All glory to Lord Gauracandra, the Supreme Lord of Lords, and all glory to the beloved devotees of Lord Visvambhara.

Lord Visvambhara is now in the midst of fully manifesting His Sankirtana movement with His associates in Navadvipa. Whole nights are passed in dancing and kirtana behind closed doors, for such pastimes are not meant for the common materialistic men.

One day the Lord was engrossed in dancing in Srivasa Pandita's house. Unknown to anyone Srivasa's mother-in-law had hidden herself behind baskets in a corner of the room. But what is the use of such hide and seek games, when there is a lack of devotional feeling inside them one is not fortunate enough to see the Lord's ecstatic dancing.

While dancing the Lord repeatedly pointed out, "Why do I not feel the usual exhilaration today?" The Lord is the Supersoul residing within everyone's heart. Yet knowing everything He did not reveal anything pretending ignorance.

He said in between His dancing, "I am not deriving any pleasure today. Is someone hiding inside this room somewhere?"

Srivasa Pandita went through the whole house looking for strangers but did not find anyone and informed the same to the Lord. The devotees continued the kirtana but the Lord felt the same as before. He again stopped and said, "I am still not feeling the usual ecstasy, maybe this is Krsna's wish."

The devotees were thrown into a whirlpool of mental agony, they said to each other, "There is no one other than ourselves here, so probably due to some offense on our part the Lord is not relishing His dancing today."

Srivasa Pandita went searching again and discovered his mother-in-law hiding behind the baskets. Srivasa Pandita is a sober person always submerged in loving devotion, he is never proud or cantankerous. But now he began to shake remembering Lord Visvambhara's displeasure, he ordered his mother-in-law to be taken away pulled by her hair. This was done without the knowledge of anyone. Lord Visvambhara almost immediately began to feel the usual ecstasy in dancing, He said, "Now I can feel the ecstasy," Srivasa Pandita was very happy to hear this and laughing he joined in the kirtana.

The kirtana picked up momentum indicating the devotee's jubilant response, everyone was laughing and dancing. Lord Caitanya danced in divine pleasure and Lord Nityananda danced around Him.

Lord Caitanya's pastimes are not visible to everyone – only to those fortunate souls who receive the Lord's special mercy.

On another occasion Lord Caitanya while dancing suddenly stopped and looked about Him discontented. He said, "I am not feeling any joy from dancing today. I do not know what offenses I have committed against a Vaisnava." Everyone stopped and wondered what had gone wrong.

This incidence is actually a sequel to something that happened earlier. Advaita Acarya is naturally a devotee of Lord Caitanya in the mood of servitorship. When Lord Caitanya sits on the throne of Lord Visnu he places the Lord's lotus feet on his head. And when the Lord begins exhibiting His power and grandeur Advaita Acarya is carried on the waves of bliss.

When the Lord says, "O Nada you are My servant" Advaita Acarya becomes submerged in oceanic bliss.

Lord Caitanya's nature and position is inconceivable and cannot be understood, one moment He is the Supreme Autocrat and in the next moment He reaches out to embrace the feet of the Vaisnavas. Crying out in great humility the Lord said, "O Krsna, My dearest Lord, You are My very life."

The Lord wept in such a pathetic manner that even the people with hearts of stone melted in pity; the Lord continuously manifested these devotional moods of servitorship. In front of everyone He discarded the Omnipotent demeanor of the Supreme Lord acting contrary to the nature of His omniscient self he enquired, "Have I done something due to lack of self restraint and restlessness of mind? If so then why was I not immediately put to death? Krsna is My life and soul, Krsna is My goal, and you are My brothers and friends birth after birth. Devotional service to Krsna is the ultimate destination, all of you kindly instill in Me this faith otherwise, I will become wayward."

All the devotees became perplexed with anxiety and no one could defy the Lord's words. At other times when the Lord Himself is in His omnipotent mood He Himself orders the devotees to touch His lotus feet. But now acting out the pastime of a devotee of Krsna the Lord, upon seeing the Vaisnavas takes the dust from their feet offering them respect. This hurt the devotees intensely within and so to mitigate their misery the Lord embraced them.

The Lord in such moods respected Advaita Acarya as a "guru" this caused pain to him. Advaita Acarya thought that it was so difficult for him to serve the Lord since the Lord would not allow it, and on top of all this the Lord considered him as a "guru" and was begging for dust of his feet. So Advaita Acarya was always contemplating how to serve the Lord and be specially blessed by having the dust from the Lord's lotus feet on his head. Since this was impossible to have while the Lord was aware and conscious he waited for the Lord to go into an ecstatic state of coma and then prostrating himself he smeared the dust from the Lord's lotus feet on his head. Embracing His lotus feet he wept bathing them with his tears of love. Sometimes he wiped and cleaned His lotus feet on his head, on other occasions he offered the Lord full worship. All this was possible for Advaita to do only by the Lord's grace.

So one must understand that Advaita Acarya is foremost amongst the Lord's associates for he has received the Lord's blessings. The envious and anguished cannot appreciate such wonderful qualities in Advaita Acarya.

So this day when Lord Visvambhara was dancing Advaita Acarya was happily dancing circumambulating Him. Suddenly Lord Caitanya fell down unconscious in the highest state of spiritual ecstasy. Advaita Acarya seeing this as an opportunity took the dust from the Lord's lotus feet and stealthily smeared it all over his body.

Lord Caitanya got up and again started dancing. But He did not feel the usual exultation. The Lord then said, "Why is My heart not revealing to Me the reason for My dissatisfaction? Whom have I offended that I must be without joy? Which thief has stolen from Me that due to this offense I cannot dance in carefree ecstasy? Has anyone taken the dust from My feet, kindly speak out the truth, do not worry, you have My assurance that nothing will happen."

When the devotees heard Lord Caitanya who was the Omniscient Supersoul within everyone's heart they remained silent in fear. On one side they were afraid of Advaita Acarya and on the other had if they did not speak the truth it was doomsday for them. Advaita Acarya understanding their dilemma, spoke up.

With folded hands Advaita Acarya said, ""My dear Lord Caitanya, if a thief cannot have the treasure he is looking for while the master is awake and unwilling then the thief must steal it while the master is unable to know or see. I have stolen the dust from Your lotus feet, kindly forgive me for this offense, I will not do this again if this dissatisfies You my Lord."

Lord Caitanya became infuriated by Advaita's words and under the pretext of angry words the Lord revealed the transcendental qualities of Advaita Acarya. He said, "Even after You have annihilated the entire cosmic You feel not a touch of retribution. After this total devastation only I remain and it seems that You will be propitiated only after You have devastated Me. You do not destroy the sages, hermits, Yogis and philosophers with Your trident? But those who come to You gracefully seeking Your grace You catch their feet and finish them off."

I am just a Vaisnava from Mathura, Vrndavana, (referring to Himself as Krsna) and I have come to pay My respects at Your lotus feet. Where as such a person should develop more attachment to Lord Visnu by seeing Your lotus feet, instead You devastate whatever devotion He possesses. You have reduced His devotional wealth by taking from Him the dust of His feet, You are really heartless when it comes to destroying someone's devotion."

Lord Krsna has gifted You with all the devotion available in this unlimited creation. Yet You steal from one with meager holding, You have no compassion, You are really heartless when it comes to destroying someone's devotion.

The Lord spoke real facts about Advaita Acarya's transcendental character under the pretext of being angry and all the devotees were enjoying the fun. The Lord continued, "You have been stealing and You think I am not able to do the same, just wait and see how to steal from a thief."

The Lord embraced Advaita Acarya and catching his feet he smeared the dust from his feet on His body, laughing as He did so. Advaita Acarya's strength was no match for the lion like Lord Gaurasundara as the Lord took his feet and rubbed them on His head. He then placed his feet on His chest and said, "Now see how I have bound the thief on My lap, You tried to steal from Me, many many times, a little at a time, but I have relieved you of everything in one time.

Advaita Acarya said, "Whatever You say My Lord is true. You are the real proprietor of everything and I am an ignorant person. Everything belongs to You, my life, intelligence, mind and body, who can protect me once You decide to destroy and punish me? You are the giver of happiness and You also mete out punishment. When Narada Muni travels to Draraka to pray at Your lotus feet, You in turn took the dust of His feet. When You want to finish off Your own devotees then what can the devotee do? You are supposed to allow the devotees to take the dust from Your lotus feet, but that never occurs, and who can defy Your instructions" And that You are acting in this way is not proving Your Omnipotence, You might desire pleasure out of this but this will surely destroy me.

Ultimately this body is Yours, You may do as You desire, You can keep it or destroy it."

Lord Visvambhara replied, "I serve Your feet because You are the keeper of the store house of devotional service. By smearing the dust of Your feet all over the body one attains love of Godhead only if You distribute it. Know for certain that I am Your property in every respect. To say the truth You can sell me anywhere."

The devotees marveled to see Lord Caitanya's extraordinary munificence towards Advaita Acarya. They were saying, "Truly the Lord has served him, he is a very exalted Personality. The mercy he received is far better than a million liberations. The mercy Advaita Acarya received from Lord Caitanya is scarcely attainable by even Lord Siva. We are also very fortunate to be able to associate with such an elevated devotee, let us smear the dust from his lotus feet all over our bodies."

Only those who are suffering the reactions of their most degraded sinful activities cannot appreciate Advaita Acarya's position. All the activities of such Personalities are absolute. The cynics and doubters fall away from the righteous path.

Lord Visvambhara stood up chanting "Haribol" and all the devotees gathered around Him and started singing. Advaita Acarya was overwhelmed with a surge of ecstasy and he began to dance, running his fingers through his flowing beard and raising his voice as loud as thunder and his eyebrows were drawn together in a frown.

The devotees sang happily, "Jaya Krsna, Gopala, Govinda, Banamali." Lord Nityananda and Lord Caitanya danced in a rapture, yet Lord Nityananda was always watchful of Lord Caitanya's movements. Anytime Lord Caitanya lost consciousness and started falling Lord Caitanya would stretch out His hands and prevent the Lord from falling.

Lord Caitanya's unlimited dancing is indescribable and when He sang both Saraswati devi and Lord Balarama unite and manifest in His melodies singing, thus fully satisfying Him. The different ecstatic symptoms manifested one after another in His body, shivering, weeping, laughing, long and heavy breathing, feelings of total humility, feeling of immense arrogance, loss of consciousness etc.

After awhile they sat upon the throne and laughed out aloud with a booming sound. The Lord showered His grace to the different devotees according to their degree of spiritual realization and thereby carrying them up in waves of great bliss.

Now hear how Lord Gauranga showed His special mercy upon Suklambara Brahmachari, a native of Navadvipa and who was then standing in front of the Lord. He was very righteous and peaceful, always performing his duties, no one knew what an exalted devotee he was. He went around the Navadvipa town with a cloth bag over his shoulder, begging from house to house. He was constantly chanting Krsna's name and tears streamed down his eyes at the recitation of the Lord's name.

People treated him with the usual disdain reserved for the beggars, but the brahmana begged from everyone, even from improvises dwellings. At the end of the day he collected everything and first offering it to Krsna he ate the remnant. He never experienced the sad chills of poverty by the grace of the holy name of Krsna, love of Krsna made him ever blissful as he went to each door and chanted Krsna. Who can recognize a devotee of Lord Caitanya other than a person who has received Lord Caitanya's mercy.

Suklambara, the poor and devoted brahmana was just like Sridama, Krsna's friend. He was always inside the house seeing Lord Caitanya dance, this was certainly the Lord's special mercy.

The Lord was seated on the throne in the mood of the Supreme Controller Godhead. He saw Suklambara Brahmachari join the dancing, a cloth bag was hanging down from his shoulder. He was dancing with carefree glee, the Lord and the devotees enjoyed the sight and laughed. The munificent Lord addressed Suklambara endearingly asking him to come nearer.

The Lord said, "Birth after birth you have been My impoverished devotee, offering Me everything and remaining a beggar yourself. I also desire for your offerings all the time, and if you do not give Me I must have it by force then. In Dvaraka I had snatched away the sack of chipped rice you kept concealed and when I started eating from it Rukmi devi had taken hold of My hand to stop Me."

The Lord then plunged His hand inside Suklambara's bag and picked up handfuls of husked rice putting it inside His mouth and began chewing it. Suklambara hastily said, "O Lord what have You done, this rice is full of broken rice chips." The Lord replied, "I eat with delight your chipped rice pieces, but I will never accept or ask for nectar from a non-devotee."

The Lord who is the life and soul of the devotees is fully independent and always submerged in the highest state of transcendental bliss, who could forbid Him from eating the chipped rice. The devotees marveled at the Lord's unlimited compassion, holding their heads in their hands, they wept profusely in joy rolling about oblivious of everything as they had never seen such kindness before.

The devotees started up a jubilant kirtana chanting Krsna's holy name, everyone old and young joined with tears in their eyes. The devotees wanted to express their humility and joy. Some offered obeisances to the Lord, others spoke saying, "O Lord kindly never leave me."

Suklambara was feeling the highest ecstasy seeing the Lord of Vaikuntha merrily chewing on his chipped rice.

The Lord said, "O Suklambara Brahmachari, I eternally reside in your heart. I eat when you are eating and when you go out begging it is like I am going out for a walk. I have descended to distribute love of Godhead and you are My eternal servitor birth after birth. I gift you now with loving devotional service, which is most dear to Me."

The Vaisnava assembly greeted these benedictory words with clamorous and joyous appreciation. Only the very righteous souls know the real essence of the begging activities of the Supreme Lord Narayana's servants. It is a real wonder that the Lord of the Goddess of fortune is snatching and eating the chipped rice that has been begged for from many different houses by a poor brahmana.

The Lord Himself has instructed in the Vedas how to offer Him offerings of food with different 'mudras' and 'mantras' without these the Lord refuses to accept anything. But the Lord Himself has transgressed these rules and regulations for the sake of His pure devotees. The living proof of this is the eating of Suklambara's chipped rice. Therefore the conclusion is that loving devotion is the foremost of all rules, regulations and rituals. Rules and speculations are meant to be subservient and secondary to devotional service; those who are dissatisfied with this arrangement fall down from the path of self realization.

Srila Vedavyasa formulated in the Vedic literatures that devotional service is the source and root of all rules and regulations, Lord Gauranga now has directly substantiated this. The brahmana Suklambara did not voluntarily offer the rice with he required regulations of 'mudras' yet the Lord ate it with painstaking care.

Those materialists who have been blinded by the glitter of gold, position and family cannot recognize a Vaisnava devotee. Lord Krsna never accepts the offerings of those who ridicule a Vaisnava seeing him only as a poor simpleton.

In the Srimad Bhagavatam it says, "na bhajah kumani sinam sa jyam harir adhanatma-dhana-priyo rasa-jnah sruta-dhana-kula-karmanam madairye vidadhati param akincanesu satsu" (SB 4.31.21)

"The Supreme Personality of Godhead became very dear to those devotees who have no material possessions but are fully happy in possessing the devotional service of the Lord. Indeed the Lord relishes the devotional activities of such devotees. Those who are puffed up with material education, wealth, aristocracy and furtive activity are very proud of possessing many material things and they often deride the devotees. Even if such people offer the Lord worship, the Lord never accepts it.

The Vedas glorify Krsna as being the life of the materially impoverished and surrendered souls, and Lord Gauranga is personally showing this by example. One who hears this narration of how Lord Caitanya ate Suklambara's rice will indeed attain loving devotion to Lord Caitanya's lotus feet.

Lord Sri Krsna Caitanya and Lord Nityananda Prabhu are my life and soul.

I, Vrndavana dasa, humbly offer this song at their lotus feet.

Madhya Lila

Chapter 17

All glory to Lord Gaurasundara the Supreme Personality of Godhead and all glory to Lord Nityananda the embodiment of the highest mood of devotional service. The narrations of pastimes in Madhya Khanda are a cascade of nectar that can wash away the contaminations of faithfulness within.

Lord Caitanya continued His non-stop kirtanas although His true identity remained undisclosed to common men. When He went about the town the people were stunned by His exquisite looks, they thought that He might be Cupid. People also thought that His demeanor was arrogant; the atheists and logicians felt He paid little attention and respect to the scholars holding titles, walking about in a carefree manner, when out He associated mostly with His devotees.

The atheist would say to Lord Caitanya, "O Nimai Pandita, as Your friends we advise You to be careful, because the king might summon You to his court any day now. The people do not see You but hear Your night long kirtanas and because of that their sleep is being disturbed and they curse You and send reports against You, naturally the king believes the people."

Lord Caitanya replied, "let it be so, let your words come true, it has been My wish to see the king. I have studied all the scriptures since childhood and no one inquires from Me on any subject considering Me to be too young and immature. I do not usually meet anyone who is wanting to meet Me, and so if someone is wanting to have audience with Me, I am indeed pleased."

The atheists sarcastically continued, "The king is a Muslim, he will not engage himself in a scriptural debate, he will want to just hear Your kirtana." The Lord just ignored them and went home.

The Lord said to His devotees, "Let us perform kirtana, I feel discontent because I have spoken to atheists today." The Lord of Vaikuntha, Nimai Pandita began to dance and all His associates danced around Him.

Suddenly stopping everything Lord Caitanya spoke hesitantly, "O My dear brothers, today everything I do lacks loving ecstasy; maybe it is due to My having spoken to atheists, or is it that I have offended You, in which case kindly forgive me and resuscitate My withering soul."

The greatly blessed Advaita Acarya who was dancing grimacing plainly said, "How will You feel ecstasy, Nada has drained it all out of You. Neither me nor Srivasa Pandita can get this love of Godhead, but low class millers and gardeners are relishing the exchange of love and devotion with You. Even 'Avadhuta' Nityananda is also a recipient of Your love but not me or Srivasa Pandita. We have been downgraded and made non eligible for Your love but this 'Avadhuta' came from nowhere and became the store in charge of the store house of love of Godhead. Listen to me, My Lord, if You do not give me this love of Godhead then I shall suck of You all the love and then I cannot be blamed for it."

Advaita Acarya is always intoxicated with love for Lord Caitanya, therefore he is unmindful of what he says or does. He is an expert in incarnating the fame and glory of Krsna's devotees, he is the property of the Vaisnavas. They can sell Him where they want; such is the degree of His surrender to the Vaisnava devotees. It is not surprising to hear Advaita's words to Lord Caitanya, for he is a devotee of such a stature that he can sell even Krsna with his loving devotion.

Lord Caitanya arranges in so many ways for His devotees to advance in spiritual life, who can understand His mercy and His ways of chastising. The Lord felt empty within, devoid of love of Godhead, and Advaita Acarya clapped his hands and danced.

Lord Visvambhara heard Advaita Acarya speak but did not reply. Right then He left the house closing the door behind Him. Lord Nityananda and Haridasa Thakura went hurrying after Him. The Lord was brooding over the fact that if He was devoid of Love of Godhead then what would be the use of maintaining His body. So He plunged into the waters of the Ganga, Lord Nityananda and Haridasa Thakura almost simultaneously jumped into the water. Swimming swiftly Nityananda caught the Lord by His hair and Haridasa firmly gripped His feet.

They brought Lord Visvambhara to the safety of the river banks. The Lord inquired of them, "Why did you capture Me, what is the necessity of prolonging this lifeless soul which had no love of Godhead, Krsna. You have committed a mistake." Both Nityananda and Haridasa were shaking with anticipation as to what occurred next. Lord Gauracandra looking at Nityananda said, "Why did You catch Me by My hair?" Nityananda replied, "Why were You trying to commit suicide?"

Lord Caitanya said, "I know You are always engrossed in love of Godhead." Lord Nityananda replied, "O Lord, please forgive everything. The person You could have easily perished is the person You are trying to give up Your life for. Your devotees have spoken to You harshly out of loving insolence, and for this reason must You go away from us, Your servitors, their most precious life?" Lord Nityananda, who is always relishing Lord Caitanya's love spoke this with a voice full of flattery and tears full in his eyes, Lord Caitanya means everything to Lord Nityananda.

The Lord said, "Listen carefully Nityananda and Haridasa. Do not disclose to anyone that you have seen Me, if anyone inquires then tell them You do not know anything about My whereabouts. I will remain here in hiding, if You do not follow what I say then I am not responsible for the consequences." The Lord then went to Nandana Acarya's house. The two of them did not reveal any of these facts to anyone being bound by the Lord's order.

The devotees were in a state of painful shock when they did not receive any news of the Lord, they took shelter of Lord Krsna. They were torn apart by separation from their Lord, which was burning up their minds and hearts.

The devotees felt as if thunderstruck, specially Advaita Acarya was ravaged by the tremendous sense of guilt. Feeling intense separation from the Lord, he went home and began to fast without hearing his name.

The other devotees also went back to their homes, their hours darkened by deep sorrow, but ensconced within their hearts was their precious treasure, the Lord's lotus feet.

The Lord entered Nandana Acarya's house and sat on the throne of Lord Visnu. Nandan Acarya felt that his house was now most blessed by the Lord's presence, he fell flat on the ground to offer obeisances to the Lord. He immediately brought fresh new clothes to the Lord and Lord Caitanya changed out of His wet clothes into the new ones.

Nandana Acarya then decorated the Lord with the deities flower garlands, sandalwood paste, scented oils and brought Him chewing betel leaf in camphor. The Lord enjoyed these offerings made by His pure devotee with loving surrender and forgot His aching heart.

The Lord said, "O Nandan Acarya, kindly hear Me, I want you to hide Me here." Nandana replied, "my dear Lord, that is almost an impossible task, where in this entire creation can You hide? You could not remain hiding within the hearts of living entities but was made to appear in Person by Your pure devotees. One who could not hide, lying in the middle of the vast milk ocean how can He hide in the middle of this congested human inhabitation?"

Lord Caitanya smiled appreciating Nandan Acarya's words, and passed the night in his house. Nandan was indeed very pious and fortunate, he conversed with the Lord the whole night long with the greatest of pleasure, divining topics of Lord Krsna and His pastimes. As if in a short moment the night was gone and as the Lord looked out He saw the first faint light peeping through.

At first the Lord was chastising Advaita Acarya in His mind but later He felt very compassionate towards him. Lord Caitanya instructed Nandana Acarya, "Bring Srivasa Pandita alone here." Nandana immediately for Srivasa Pandita's house and brought him back with him to the Lord's presence.

Srivasa Pandita broke down in tears of love as soon as he saw Lord Caitanya. The Lord spoke to him ever so kindly, "do not worry any more, now tell Me how is Advaita Acarya?" Srivasa Pandita after describing the critical conditions of the devotees said, "And here is more news, Advaita Acarya is on fast since yesterday and is somehow continuing to live as his body is still there. He is exceedingly afflicted, be merciful to him my Lord, and appear before him in person, if this concerned someone other than Advaita I would not feel responsible. But I know that you mean everything to him. Without You my Lord our lives are dark and gloomy, what is the reason we suffer such excruciating pain of separation. Your leaving us is more than an harsh chastisement so now kindly return and give us Your mercy."

Srivasa's words made Him feel supremely compassionate and He went to see Advaita. The Lord saw Advaita in a state of abysmal gloom and thinking of himself as the worst offender. He felt that He had become overtly proud from receiving the Lord's special grace and now by this punishment from Him he was shaking all over His body. This pitiable sight of Advaita's condition softened the Lord's heart and He spoke to him benignly, "O Advaita Acarya, get up and see I, Visvambhara has come to see You." Feeling ashamed Advaita remained silent and in intense love for the Lord he just meditated on His lotus feet.

Again Lord Caitanya addressed him, "Rise up Advaita, discard your mood of discontentment and go about doing Your normal routine."

Advaita Acarya replied, "O Lord now You have made me do something. All that You speak about me are superfluous praises, this turns my head and boosts up my pride leading me to the path of hell. You have allowed every other devotee to develop a healthy mood of servitorship to You, but to me You show Your reverence. You make me do things and ascribe my position and You also mete out chastisement accordingly. You say that I am Your servant in Your mind You harbor some other ideas. You are my life, treasure, body, mind, You are everything to me. Yet You cause me pain, of course that is the prerogative of Your Supreme Position. My dear Lord, I just pray to You for one thing, kindly allow me to serve You as Your eternal servant and give me shelter at Your lotus feet as You would to a maidservant's son."

Lord Gaurasundara then spoke to Advaita Acarya in front of the assemble of Vaisnavas, "Listen Advaita I will reveal to you the esoteric truths. Let Me cite you an example that will explain My point. When the highly placed and trusted officer of the king goes to see the king then all the guards and servants approach him with their problems to be placed before the king. This officers does so as well as collects their remunerations on their behalf and also disburses the money amongst them which sustains the many families of the guards and servants. And if such a trusted officer commits a grievous offense then the king's order for his death does not put the guards and servants into anxiety for sustenance. On one hand because of being loyal the officer was entrusted with an important position as a mark of appreciation, but the same person was executed for his offenses.

Similarly Lord Krsna is the emperor of all the kings and emperors, He is the master of both Brahma, the creator of the Universe and Lord Siva the annihilator of this creation. The Lord gave everyone their potency, whether to create or do anything. No one dare raise objection if the Lord wants to punish our individuals. Even Rama, Laksmi devi the Goddess of fortune who is the eternal consort of Lord Narayana is punished and even Lord Brahma and other demigods are not spared from His punishment. But the Lord is always prepared to forgive the offenses of His devotees. When Lord Krsna sees anyone committing any offense and actually punishes him then know for certain that that person will attain the position as His eternal servant. So get up and bathe and complete your daily worship, then eat and stop worrying."

Advaita Acarya became elated, the servant felt happy hearing about his punishment for his master. Advaita said, "now I can say You are my Lord and master," and he began to dance clapping his hands. He was overwhelmed with joy being assured of the Lord's shelter and he forgot his previous sorrows.

The devotees became very happy and Nityananda Prabhu and Haridasa Thakura began laughing. Those who are unfortunate are deprived of relishing this nectarine pastime of the Lord.

Advaita Acarya is Lord Caitanya's eternal servitor, if anyone considers Advaita's spiritual wealth and position as the Lord's servant, to be meager and low is in illusion. One should not diminish the significance and standing of a servant of the Supreme Lord because the Lord never elevates anyone to the position of His servitor until that person has sufficient spiritual realization to attain that transcendental platform. A person first attains liberation thus breaking the bonds of the materialistic concepts of life, only then does he become eligible to be a servitor of Lord Krsna. This has been delineated by the great Acaryas who have commented upon Srimad Bhagavatam and other Vedic works, they all described the transcendental pastimes of the Supreme Lord Krsna, and worshiped Him. The pure devotees of Krsna are all invested with His spiritual potency and if anyone commits any offenses Krsna mercifully punishes him to rectify him.

Those devotees who are narrow minded and bigoted start fighting over petty matters, this is a serious deviation from the path of spiritual realization and so a real knowledgeable devotee will refrain from taking sides in such disputes.

Pure devotion means someone who has no doubt that Lord Gauracandra is the Supreme Personality of Godhead, others who doubt are faithless, their devotion is impure that will lead them ultimately to degradation. Such faithless persons sometimes play the part of a `gura' collecting disciples having the intelligence of asses and foxes and instruct them to think that the guru is equal to the Supreme Lord Himself.

Those who possess the power to create, maintain and annihilate this material cosmos is certainly not greater than a pure devotee of Lord Caitanya. One of the best examples of such devotees is Lord Balarama, although He is the support of the entire cosmic creation He is still a perfect devotee of Lord Caitanya. All glory to Lord Nityananda, Haladhara, by whose mercy one is able to glorify Lord Caitanya. Only He can bless one to develop attachment for Lord Caitanya; all the pastimes I am narrating is possible due to His potency. One thought I always cherish in my mind is that my Lord and master Nityananda Prabhu is the servant of Lord Caitanya.

Lord Sri Krsna Caitanya and Lord Nityananda Prabhu are my life and soul.

I, Vrndavana dasa, humbly offer this song at their lotus feet.

Madhya Lila

Chapter 18

All glory to Lord Gauracandra, the benefactor of the world, kindly offer Your lotus feet to be cushioned deep within my heart. You are the life and soul of Lord Nityananda and Svarupa Damodara Goswain; You are the abode of all excellencies and the protector of Your devotees, all glory to You and Your devotees. One attains the highest perfection, love of Godhead by hearing the pastimes of Lord Caitanya as He gradually unfolded the transcendental mystery of the congregational chanting of Lord Krsna's holy name. Kindly hear those narrations of Madhya Khanda attentively as it reveals the pastime of Lord Visvambhara dancing dressed as Laksmi devi, Goddess of fortune and the eternal consort of Lord Narayana.

One day Lord Visvambhara told His devotees that He wanted a dance drama arranged. He called for Buddhimanta Khan and instructed him, "prepare a stage for a dance drama and get the costumes, conch shells, bangles, brassieres, silk sari, ornaments and other items for everyone. Gadadhara Pandita will the role of Rukmini devi and Brahmananda will her old lady companion Suprabhat. Nityananda will play My old grandmother, and Haridasa will play the guard responsible to wake everyone up. Srivasa will be Narada Muni. While Srirama will be the brahmana who is returning from his bath and Sriman insists on being the torch bearer, so Buddhimanta quickly go and arrange all, I want to dance."

Sadasiva Buddhimanta became very enlivened and happily went off to make the necessary arrangements. He pulled out the canopy made in Kathiar just for such occasions a built a nice enclosure and stage. He also brought the different costumes and placed them before the Lord. Lord Visvambhara was pleased with the costumes and He said, "Today I will dance as the potency and consort of the Supreme Lord, only those who are in control of their senses enter the house and see the performance others are not to enter." At first when they heard that Lord Visvambhara will dance as Laksmi devi they were excited and happy. Later when the Lord repeated the conditions He had set the Vaisnavas became depressed in spirit.

The first person to react was Advaita Acarya he drew a line on the floor and said, "I cannot see the dance today. I come under the category of persons with uncontrolled senses so I have no business seeing the dance." Srivasa Pandita joined in saying, "Yes, I feel the same way too." Lord Caitanya gave a short laugh and said, "If you do not come then for whom am I to dance?" Lord Caitanya, the Supremely scintillating actor reviewed His instructions and said, "All of you do not worry, today you will be like the most perfected and self controlled yogis. You will not be attacked by delusion seeing My dance."

Advaita Acarya and Srivasa Pandita became merry again with the other Vaisnavas and all followed the Lord to Candra Sekhara Acarya's house. Mother Saci devi accompanied Laksmipriya, the relatives of all the Vaisnavas also went to attend Lord Caitanya's dance performance, which they heard will be unique to see Lord Caitanya as Laksmi devi. Candra Sekhara Acarya was indeed a very fortunate soul to have Lord Caitanya reveal such an unprecedented pastime in his house.

Lord Caitanya sat down with all the devotees and allocated different roles to them. Advaita Acarya, with folded hands enquired repeatedly, "Which role do You want me to play?" The Lord replied, "All the roles are at your disposal, choose anyone you like." Advaita Acarya was at a loss as to which role to play, he made the usual grimaces and danced about, floating on clouds of ecstasy. The other Vaisnavas began a jubilant melodious Krsna kirtana lead by Mukunda who sang with a clear charming voice, "sing Rama, Krsna, Hari, Gopala Govinda."

First to enter the drama arena was Haridasa Thakura, dressed as a guard flourishing a full grown flowing mustache, a turban tied around his head and a piece of cloth tied tightly around his waist; with an ominous looking stick he warned everyone, "Hear now! hear now! My brothers look sharp and sit up, the Lord and soul of the universe, Sri Caitanya will now dance as Laksmi devi." He wriggled his stick and paced about his body horipilating into loving sentiments for Krsna and stirred in others the same spiritual emotions. With a loud and arrogant voice he declared, "Worship Lord Krsna, render service unto Him and chant His holy names."

The devotees broke out in peals of laughter seeing this new appearance of Haridasa and asked, "Who are You, What are You doing here?" Haridasa Thakura replied, "I am a guard in Vaikuntha, I travel everywhere continuously to awaken Krsna consciousness in everyone. The Supreme Lord has left His eternal abode Vaikuntha to come here and indiscriminately and profusely distribute love of Godhead. Today He will dance in the role of Laksmi devi so you should diligently collect greedily love of Godhead." Saying this he twirled his handle bar mustache and moved about the arena stomping and loudly exclaiming with his partner Murari Gupta. Both these devotees are pure loving servants of Krsna and indeed Lord Gauracandra is always residing within there.

Soon Srivasa Pandita entered the arena dressed as Narada Muni looking very joyful. He had a long white beard, his body was decorated with little dots of sandal wood paste, he was carrying the vina hung over his shoulders and holding kusa grass in his hands he looked about him standing in the middle of the arena. Ramai Pandita followed him in with a folded sitting mat under his arms holding a renunciate's water pot. Ramai spread the mat for Narada to sit; it was as if Narada had appeared in person.

The devotees were impressed with Narada's make up and laughed in appreciation, but Advaita spoke up in a loud grave voice, "who are you and what brings you here?" Srivasa replied, "listen carefully to my narration. Narada is my name, I am a singer, I sing about Krsna, and I travel the length and breadth of this unlimited cosmos. I went to Vaikuntha in search of Krsna and there I was informed that Krsna has come to Navadvipa. There I noticed that the houses were empty and practically no one was in sight. I could not remain in a deserted place even if that was Vaikuntha, so I remembered my Lord and came here. Today, my Lord is dancing here dressed as Laksmi devi, that is why you find me here." When Srivasa finished speaking the Vaisnavas had no doubt that in speech, looks, action and character Srivasa was the same person as Narada. The devotees greeted him with loud applause.

Mother Saci was sitting with the other pious and pure ladies, drinking into the nectar of Krsna consciousness that flowed freely in the play. She asked Malini devi, "Is that there the Pandita, Your good husband?" Malini replied, "indeed it is so." Saci devi is the mother of the universe, she marveled at Srivasa Pandita's present appearance and feeling uncontrollable joy she fell down unconscious: everyone was feeling amazed at this wonderful sight. The ladies around her chanted Krsna's name into her ears and slowly she regained consciousness. Then remembering Krsna, Govinda she became again spiritually restless making it difficult for the ladies to hold her still. Inside and outside the house people were moved by wonderful spiritual emotions and they wept oblivious of everything.

Inside the dressing room Lord Visvambhara had finished dressing and suddenly He was overcome and captured by the emotions and moods of Rukmini devi. The Lord forgot Himself, thinking and feeling like the princess of Vidarbha, Rukmini devi. He wanted to write a letter to Krsna for help, the tears that rolled down His cheek became His ink, Mother earth the paper and His finger the pen. He wrote down the seventh verse of Rukmini devi's letter to Krsna from the Srimad Bhagavatam. Those who were present there read the words with moistened eyes. So now hear the explanation of this verse by which the Supreme Lord becomes one's husband, the only beloved and protector.

They read: "Srutva gunan bhuvana—sundara srnvatamte nirvisya karnavivaraharato ngatapam rupam drsam drsilmatan akhilartha tabham tvayyaeyutavisati cittamapatrapam me." S.B. 10.52.37

Lord Caitanya started speaking with the emotion and mood of Rukmini devi. He said, "O My matchless beauty when I heard of Your qualities all the material miseries that set me on fire were extirpated. The sight of Your charming face is the rarest treasure in the world; only those who are given the eyes to see this wonderful sight by the Lord's mercy is able to see.

O Lion hearted Yadu king, Your fame has fanned my hearts desire to reach out to You. Which chaste maiden in this universe can resist the attraction of Your lotus feet if she once has the opportunity to worship You. In Your absence erudition, aristocracy, character, wealth, beauty, behavior and house all seem empty and futile.

O Supreme Lord forgive me for my shamelessness, but I cannot refrain my yearning heart from rushing out to meet You. Thus I have earned Your lotus feet, and I offer my mind, intelligence, my very life to You. Now kindly make me Your maid servant by accepting me as Your wife, let not my fate drive to be the object of Sisupala's pleasure.

O Lord let me become Your property so that what is meant for the lion may not be usurped by the jackal. If I have truly worshiped the Gods, performed austerely, honored the brahmanas and guru and served the lotus feet of Acyuta, Visnu, then let the Lord who holds the mace become my eternal master and that Sisupal be driven out of my life forever, this is the only favor I ask of You. Tomorrow I am supposed to wed this Sisupal so come immediately without delay. At first remain secretly near the palace in hiding then enter the palace assembly with your army. You must take me from the midst of such kings as Chedi, Salva, Jarasandha with valor and might.

This is the opportunity to show off Your ksatriyas pride and strength because Your wife, is not meant to be desecrated by Sisupal. You have to kidnap me from amongst my friends and relatives, so You must be careful not to harm them. I have a plan how this can be accomplished and I place it for Your approval at Your lotus feet. It is customary in our family that the bride to be visits the temple of Durga devi, on the day prior to her marriage. This is the best chance for You to kidnap me but without hurting my friends. Forgive me my Lord, if I sound offensive. The dust of Your lotus feet is covered by all the demigods and goddesses even Lord Siva desires to cover his body with this dust, and if You do not offer me the same as a token of Your mercy then I will surely take an oath to quit this body. O my lotus eyed Lord, please listen, I am willing to go through as many life times as required but I must receive the dust of Your lotus feet. You have heard carefully, O Brahmana? Now run swiftly to Krsna with this message and beg Him on my behalf."

Thus the Lord manifested Rukmini's mood and emotions making the devotees sometimes weep and at other times laugh, all this was happening under the influence of love of Godhead. Candara Sekhara's house reverberated with jubilant sounds of Lord Hari's name. Haridasa continued his duty as the guard to wake up everyone and Srivasa Pandita playing Narada Muni continued dancing.

The first scene ended on this merry note. The second scene commenced with Gadadhara Pandita entering the arena, with her old lady companion acted by Brahmananda.

Brahmananda's was so well costumed that he was unrecognizable in his role as the old lady with a stick in one hand and a basket clamped under the other arm, a net like cloth draping over the shoulders, Haridasa inquired, "Who are you?"

Brahmananda replied, "Mathura is our destination,"

Srivasa Pandita probed further, "Who are your husbands?"

Brahmananda rallied, "Why must you know that?"

Srivasa said, "Is it not proper to ask?"

Brahmananda simply said, "Yes, yes" and shook his head.

Gangadasa said, "Where will you stay today".

Brahmananda replied, "Why will you give us a place?"

Gangadasa said, "That is a big request, no need for further discussions. You should move out of here."

Advaita Acarya said, "what is the necessity for such interrogations? Other's wives are to be respected as the mother, so why then in this manner?" My Lord is extremely fond of singing and dancing, so dance here and you will receive handsome rewards."

Advaita Acarya's words were soothing to Gadadhara Pandita and being encouraged and pleased he began to dance. He was dressed as Rama, Laksmi devi and his dancing was enrapturing and the devotees sang appropriate songs in accompaniment. The devotees were unable to remain still, moved to tears by Gadadhara's ecstatic dancing. Gadadhara's tears of love of Godhead cascaded down to be received gratefully by the more than fortunate mother earth. It was as if Ganga devi in person had appeared, indeed she is the transcendental internal potency of Lord Krsna. Lord Caitanya so often said, "Gadadhara is My wife from Vaikuntha."

Those who were present in that assembly both the performing artists as well as the audience were enraptured in love of Godhead by the mercy of Lord Caitanya. Lord Hari's name was being chanted loudly all around accompanied by weeping in loving ecstasy. Gadadhara Pandita steeped in the mood of a Gopi danced and danced.

Just then Lord Visvambhara entered the arena dressed as the original pleasure potency of the Lord, Radharani, and in front Lord Nityananda as the old grandmother Purnamasi walked slightly bent, looking shrewdly about her, her whole demeanor exuded ecstatic love for Krsna. They were greeted from the Vaisnava assembly with loud jubilant applause.

It was impossible to recognize Lord Caitanya as He had dressed Himself very well and looking most charming. The viewers just two ladies the elderly lady played by Nityananda Prabhu and the young enchantress played by Lord Caitanya, nothing indicated their actual identities. The audience tried to guess that one of them must be Lord Caitanya but not exactly which one of the two.

They started wondering had he, Rama just now appeared out of the ocean, or was Sita devi, the consort of Lord Ramacandra? Maybe she was Maha Laksmi the eternal consort of Lord Narayana, or was she the life of Lord Siva, Parvati devi? Or is she the most precious gem of Vrndavana, Srimati Radharani; or Ganga devi or Compassion or Mahamaya.

So each one imagined according to their belief without recognizing the Lord: persons who have known the Lord since birth were also fully deceived. What to speak of other people being deceived, even Mother Sacidevi failed to recognize her own son; she said, "she must be Laksmi devi herself, come here to dance." The consort and pleasure potency of the Lord Srimati Radharani is inconceivable, Lord Hari the Supreme Lord Himself is now playing her part.

This bewitching form of the Lord's potency and consort had put Lord Siva and Parvati devi into this same delusion, yet presently the assembled Vaisnavas did not experience this same decision, because of the Lord's special grace upon them; He showed His unlimited compassion on the Vaisnavas like a mother tending Her young ones, all the devotees felt that she was their mother on a visit from the Spiritual realm. Their exultations were unreserved and made them forget themselves; Advaita and all the devotees were swept away on waves of spiritual bliss in love of Godhead seeing their beloved Lord dressed in the role of Laksmi devi.

Lord Visvambhara as Laksmi devi was the universal mother, and as she danced being overtaken by different emotions singers sang appropriate songs complimenting the Lord's moods. The devotees could never discern with certainty what and whose spiritual emotions were being manifest in the Lord's dancing. When the Lord suddenly asked, "O Brahmana, has Krsna arrived?" then they understood that the Lord is Rukmini devi, the princess of Vaikuntha. When cascading tears decorated the Lord's emotions then the Vaisnavas seemed to think that the Lord was Ganga devi in person. And when the Lord laughed with ear splitting peals they assumed that He was the ferocious form of Mahamaya, Durga devi.

At times when He danced swaying and spinning like a drunken lady they thought that He was Revati, wife of Lord Balarama. Another time when the Lord said, "O grandmother! come let us go to Vrndavana." The Vaisnavas guessed He was none other than a gopi from Vrndavana. When the Lord sat on the deities throne the Vaisnavas recognized Him as the powerful Goddess Controller of the material nature Durga devi. One by one the Lord played the roles of His different eternal potencies.

Beside's performing this transcendental pastime for everyone's pleasure the Lord simultaneously gave spiritual instructions through them. That no one should at any time criticize or diminish the position of His energies manifested on the many demigods and goddesses. By showing proper love and reverence to them one strengthens his devotion and love to Krsna. Lord Krsna is unhappy if His devotees the demigods and goddesses are offended; Krsna becomes very content if He is offered worship along with His energies and associates. These instructions of the Supreme Lord is the Absolute Truth only the impious are unable to receive and implement them.

The Lord's dancing completely captivated everyone's mind and heart. Whether someone was singing in accompaniment, or just listening and seeing His dancing they experienced sublime joy. Spontaneous tears of Godhead rained from the eyes of all the assembled Vaisnavas. The Lord saw with great pleasure His devotees, who are like the honey suckle bees attracted by nectar of His lotus feet, were always around Him and were happy. The Lord displayed all the ecstatic devotional symptoms like shivering, perspiring profusely, horripilating, weeping etc. Simultaneously as He danced holding Lord Nityananda's hand.

Sriman Pandita stood in front holding a lamp and Haridasa went around calling everyone's attention. Just then Lord Nityananda fell to the ground unconscious, unconcerned about His grandmother's costume and His roles as Purnamasi, He was overwhelmed by Krsna's love. The devotees looked on in amazement at this wonder and themselves became restless with ecstatic feelings, they began to weep feeling the overpowering influence of Krsna's love. All these were being done unseen by Lord Gauranga as some devotees rolled on the ground, others embraced each other and still others wept loudly in great joy.

Lord Caitanya at this juncture took hold of Gopinatha and sat down with him on Lord Visnu's throne manifesting once again the mood of Maha Laksmi. As the devotees stood around Him with folded hands He said, "Chant prayers to glorify Me." The devotees discerning the Lord's mood offered their eulogy: some recited prayers to Laksmi devi, others to Candi Durga each according to his realization.

"All glory to the Universal Mother, Mahamaya devi, kindly give the shelter of Your lotus feet to the miserable and suffering living entities. You are the controlling mistress of the entire material system and You appear in every millennium to uphold the principles of religion. Even Lord Brahma, the creator, Lord Visnu the maintainer, and Lord Siva the destroyer of this material cosmic structure are incompetent to fully describe Your unlimited potencies, what to consider about others.

You are the personification of this material nature and the possessor of all energies; You are faith, compassion, shame and the embodiment of pure devotion to Lord Visnu, Krsna so all branches of learning is Your multifarious manifestations.

The Vedas describe You as the Original energy. You appear to be within this material nature consisting of the three modes, because You are its cause, in fact You are always situated in a transcendental position, even Lord Brahma is unable to fathom You.

You are the eternal, never changing original supreme energy the shelter and resting place of all living beings, the universal mother who sustains everyone being matchless and unrivaled. You are the life sustaining water and one can sever the bonds of material existence by remembering You. You appear also as the blessed mother, Laksmi the eternal consort of Lord Narayana in the homes of the pious and righteous but to the sinful You manifest as the all devouring death.

You are the creator and maintainer of this gigantic cosmos and the living entities who ignore You, not offering You worship are punished by the three fold miseries. You inspire pure faith in the devotee, kindly shelter me in the shade of Your lotus feet. Your illusory potency has kept the entire creation in a trance, and if You do not protect me then who will? Your appearance in the material world is to deliver the living entities, kindly accept the suffering millions as Your eternal servants. You are the object of Lord Brahma's prayers, by remembering You one attains all perfection."

With these chosen phrases the Vaisnavas propitiated Lord Caitanya now in the guise of Maha Laksmi. Then prostrating themselves repeatedly before the Lord they again began to pray to Him, "O mother we are all surrendered to You, kindly look upon us graciously so that we may remain with fixed minds at Your lotus feet." A wave of joy swept over the devotees and they raised their arms and began to weep. The ladies were also caught up in this joyous wave and they joined in with tears of bliss drowning Candra Sekhara's house with unlimited happiness.

When everyone was thus engrossed in such spiritual merriment night crept in stealthily and left as well unnoticed by the Vaisnavas. Suddenly the brilliant sunrise greeted them; they realized that the night had passed in singing and dancing. But now the dancing had come to an abrupt stop, the devotees looked around perplexed and then began to bitterly regret the passing of the wonderful night. The grief laden eyes of the Vaisnavas that looked at the intruding morning sun would have turned it to ashes if not for the mercy of Lord Caitanya. The devotees and the ladies were weeping in great anguish and throwing themselves on the ground.

Vaisnava ladies are not to be considered in any way inferior but are in fact partial expansions of Narayana's potency. They not be consoled for the night that they had just passed in such sublime ecstasy was gone, they all fell at Sacidevi's feet. Pure devotees should be easily moved to tears because of their long association with pure devotional service.

The devotees lamented, "Oh, why did this night have to end? Why is Kṛṣṇa depriving us of this sublime nectar?" When Lord Caitanya saw that the Vaiṣṇavas were grief stricken He felt compassion for them. Just as a mother feels affection for her son, Lord Caitanya felt that same motherly affection for His devotees. The Lord called everyone one at a time, and as a mother breast feeds her infants, so He breast fed the devotees with milk by His mystic potency. The Supreme Personality of Godhead now accepted the role of His devoted energies, Lakṣmi devī, Pārvatī, Nārāyaṇī the universal mother. The Lord proved right His own words recorded in the Gīta "pita ahaṁ asya jagato mata dhātā pitamahā" [BG 9/17]

"I am the father of this universe, the mother, the support, and the grandsire.

These devotees who could happily suck this extraordinary milk from the Lord are eternally liberated souls, their good fortune is immeasurable. As they drank the milk their acute feeling of separation dissipated and once again they were intoxicated with sublime joy. The Lord's pastimes are eternal and are perpetually happening without interruption, they simply manifest at a certain time then disappear by the Lord's will just as it is explained in the Vedas.

The Supreme Lord of Lords, Viṣvambhara manifested such wonderful pastimes in Navadvīpa.

The most precious knowledge of the Vedas was exposed in Lord Caitanya's dancing as the Gopika of Vṛndāvana. And Lord Nityānanda accompanied the Lord as the elderly grandmother Pāurnamāsī. Sincerely hearing these narrations will result in immediate loving attachment for Lord Kṛṣṇa.

Lord Nityānanda supported in every respect the moods of Lord Caitanya as He danced as a Gopī. One who is devoid of devotional feelings will never relish such spiritual exchanges. One must be graced by Lord Kṛṣṇa only then can one comprehend the real absolute identity of Lord Nityānanda. One may consider Lord Nityānanda as a Yogi, experiencing philosopher, devotee or as one thinks according to his spiritual realization, and one may even doubt that Lord Nityānanda is dear most to Lord Caitanya, still I pray that the lotus feet on my Lord be ever situated on the throne of his heart.

But in spite of my Lord Nityānanda being so merciful if He is criticized then I kick that wretched sinner in the head.

These topics as narrated in the Mādhya Khanda were indeed streams of nectar for it describes the extraordinary pastimes of how the Supreme Lord Nārāyaṇa danced with the emotions and sentiments of His eternal consort Śrī Lakṣmi devī. Dressed as the Universal mother He taught the process of pure devotional service and satisfied everyone's desire by suckling them with breast milk.

The Lord remained for seven days in Candra Sekhara's house. The Lord was always enveloped in an extremely brilliant halo much more powerful than the combined energies of the sun, moon and lightning. The fortunate and righteous men, the pure devotees could behold the Lord and His marvelous opulence.

People who came to visit Candra Sekhara's house were blinded by this brilliant illumination and could not keep their eyes open. People started commenting, "What can be the cause that one cannot open his eyes in Candra Sekhara's house?" The Vaisnavas heard their comments and smiled inside not revealing anything.

Lord Caitanya's Supreme potency is such that no ordinary person can understand His transcendental activities with His devotees and associates.

Sri Krsna Caitanya and Nityananda Prabhu are my life and soul.

I, Vrndavana Dasa, humbly offer this song at Their lotus feet.

Madhya Lila

Chapter 19

All glories to Lord Visvamvara, the Lord of all the Vaisnava devotees. You bring the living entities back to your fold by giving them devotional service.

The Lord performed His supramundane pastimes in Navadvipa hidden from the vision of gross materialists. He went to different devotee's homes and engaged in pleasurable pastimes with Nityananda, Gadadhara and other associates.

The Lord is the source of all spiritual ecstasy for the devotees and in His association they see everything in relationship to Lord Krsna. They are completely oblivious of the phenomenal world because they are engrossed in relishing transcendental mellow of chanting the holy names of Krsna. They have no other business.

Foremost amongst these intimate associates of the Lord is Advaita Acarya. His character is unfathomable and only a few devotees know his transcendental position and how close he is to the Lord. Whenever Lord Caitanya came out of His ecstatic trances He would immediately render service to the assembled Vaisnavas, especially to Advaita Acarya. These dealings of the Lord were the cause of Advaita's constant discontent. His hurt feelings rumbled in his mind like an active volcano.

He thought, "He is constantly deceiving me like a thief. He gives up His position and tries to stealthily catch my feet. I cannot match His strength for He is supremely powerful, so He forcibly takes the dust from my feet. The only support to back on for me is the devotional service, because without spiritual realization one cannot recognize the Supreme Lord Visvamvara as He is. People call me "Advaita the Lion Hearted" and I become further deluded by this. Kindly destroy this delusion.

In your pastimes with Bhrigu you are more glorious than Bhrigu although some think otherwise and so I will gather about me hundreds of disciples like Bhrigu. This will enrage the Lord so much that He Himself will have to punish me. Lord Caitanya has appeared to explain the path of devotional service and I will firmly oppose His instructions. Naturally this outrage Him and He will have to punish me, catching me by the hair.

Preoccupied with these plans Advaita left Navadvipa accompanied by Haridasa Thakura. He came home and remembered all that he had planned and he became obsessed by that one goal. He began to read and explain a book called yogavasistha which subscribed to the impersonalistic thought and which was contradictory to the path of devotional service. He explained that according to Yogavasistha the path of deductive knowledge or empiric speculation was the essence of self-realization. Without understanding the deductive path of knowledge, the path of devotion becomes impotent. Thus empiric knowledge is the essence of everything. Many persons leave home to live in the forest not understanding that this wealth of knowledge is there in the deductive path.

The path of devotion to Lord Visnu is like a mirror and the path of deductive knowledge is compared to the eyes. What use does a blind man have for a mirror? I have thoroughly studied the different scriptures and I have readily arrived at the conclusion that empiric knowledge is the ultimate goal.

Haridasa Thakura is more than familiar with the ways and nature of Advaita Acarya and when he heard the Acarya's attempt to explain everything in light of empiric knowledge he merely laughed. Such is the transcendental characteristic of a pure devotee like Advaita Acarya. Those who are righteous can easily understand his position but the offensive lot are rejected.

Lord Visvamvara who is the most munificent Supreme Personality and who fulfill all desires perceived in his heart Advaita Acarya's desire. One day He was promenading the streets of Navadvipa with Nityananda Prabhu, observing His own creation. Lord Brahma the creator of this universe was watching all these activities of the Lord and feeling very fortunate and elated he thought to himself, " The Supreme Lord is appreciating my artistry in engineering this creation."

The two of them looked like two full moons sailing across the sky as they moved about with charming gracefulness. The residents of Navadvipa could see them each according to his own devotion.

The demigods were also surveying the movements of the two moonlike Lords but remained unseen to the human eyes, and they wondered in their minds. They thought they were seeing two moons and because of this they mistook their own heavenly abodes as the earth and the earth as the heavenly planet. They also erred that they were the earthly beings and the earthlings were the residents of heavenly planets. They began talking with each other about the mystery of the two moons.

Someone said, "Two moons together were never permitted entry in the heavenly planets." Someone else said, "Let me tell you that one of them is the original moon and the other is His reflection." Yet another said, "The son takes to the father in all respects, so one is the father moon and the other is his son. Mars?" It is not in the least bit surprising that the demigods are bewildered by the Lord's beauty for even the Vedas finds itself inadequate to fully describe the Supreme Lord's extraordinary charming looks.

So the two lords moved about in Navadvipa when Lord Visvamvara said to Lord Nityananda, "Let us go to Shantipur to Advaita Acarya's house." Both Lords were always ready engage in pleasurable pastimes so they immediately headed for Advaita Acarya's house.

Almost halfway to Shantipur They came across a village called Lalitpura situated on the banks of the Ganga. There in a hut by the river lived a householder sannyasi. Lord Visvamvara enquired from Nityananda Prabhu, "Please find out whose abode this is." Nityananda Prabhu replied, "Lord, this is a sannyasi's residence." Lord Visvamvara said, "If our fortune permits we might see him. Let us go." Happily they went in and offered obeisances to the sannyasi.

The sannyasi was taken in by Lord Visvamvara's charming appearance, perfectly shaped limbs and radiant smile; the sannyasi being extremely pleased and blessed Him saying, "May you be blessed with wealth, fame, learning and a beautiful wife." The Lord immediately replied, "Dear Sir, Gosvami, this is really not a blessing. Please tell me, 'May you receive Krsna's blessings.' Such a blessing brings one to the platform of devotional service to Lord Visnu and is eternal, inexhaustible and infallible. It is not becoming of your position to bless me with these other materialistic advantages."

With a false laugh, more out of displeasure than anything else, the sannyasi replied, "Now I have direct proof of the axiom I have so often heard before that if you try to do good to people they take it in a bad way. This is exactly the manner in which this young brahmin has reacted. I was very pleased and I wished Him all success but He turned my words around and even started blaming me."

The sannyasi enquired, "Tell me, O young brahmana, why do you fault my blessings? If a man is born into this world and has not enjoyed the company of an attractive woman, or has not collected sufficient wealth, then what is the use of his living? I was wishing you success in this kind of pleasurable life but you are ashamed and reluctant to receive it well. You may be a devotee of Lord Visnu but how will you maintain Yourself without earnings?"

The Lord simply smiled at his words and placed His hand on His forehead in a gesture of sheer fatigue at the sannyasi's gross foolishness.

The Lord utilized this situation to teach everyone that one should not ask for my blessings other than devotional service to the Supreme Lord. He said to the sannyasi, "Listen, O Gosvami, whatever food we eat comes automatically due to our karma or as a result of our previous activities—whatever is destined for us.

If people take birth for the sole purpose of family life with wife, children and earnings, then why is he forced to leave everything at death? No one desires to be sick and ailing, so why do various diseases attack us and make us suffer? The reason for all this is karma; everything is a result of our previous activities, only the elevated and knowledgeable person have full understanding about these facts.

Some persons point out that the Vedas say that the final goal of human life is to be elevated to the heavenly planets; the real understanding of this Vedic injunction is that the Vedas have so enunciated out of extreme leniency towards the ignorant people. Materialistic and ignorant people are naturally inclined to a life of luxury and physical pleasures, so knowing this well, the Vedas have recommended accordingly – the Vedas are not to be blamed for this.

The general mass of people think that by chanting God's name and taking ablutions in the Ganga one acquires wealth and success in family life, and so they respect and take shelter of the Vedic injunctions; but the real result of such performance is that one quickly develops devotion to the Supreme Lord. And so the ignorant people who do not understand the purport of the Vedic injunctions reject the fruit that leads to devotional service to Kṛṣṇa and endeavor after materialistic pleasures.

Please consider well all these points O Gosvami, because there is no goal or activity superior to devotional service to Lord Kṛṣṇa." Thus the Supreme Lord, the Supreme instructor (aiming these instructions toward the whole world), spoke to the sannyasi and pointed out that devotional service to Lord Kṛṣṇa is the ultimate purpose of the Vedas. All these instructions of Lord Viṣṇu are indeed the absolute truth, and those whose hearts are contaminated due to sinful activities cannot receive them to heart.

The householder sannyasi smiled and thought to himself, "This young brahmana must have become a lunatic due to the effect of some mantra; it may also be that the person dressed as a sannyasi who is accompanying him has somehow mesmerized him." The sannyasi spoke out loud, "Finally it has happened. In front of a mere child, I suddenly know nothing. I have traveled around the world – Ayodhya, Mathura, Badrik asrama, Gujarat, Kasi, Vijayanagar, Ceylon, and to many other cities – and now I am not supposed to know any longer what is good and bad. I have to learn all this from a suckling baby."

Still smiling Lord Nityananda replied, "Listen Gosai, You don't have to unnecessarily agree with a mere child. I am well aware of your position and fame; please just consider my proposal as I am older and forgive us for whatever has happened." Hearing his own praises being sung, he became once again amiable and requested his guests to take food. Lord Nityananda said, "We must leave right away since more urgent business must be attended to, but you can pack some eatables for us which we can eat after our bath on the way. The sannyasi insisted, "Take your bath here, take your meal and after a cooling rest you can be on your way again." The two Supreme Personalities have descended to this mortal world for the sole purpose of delivering the most fallen souls, and so they spent some time with the householder sannyasi.

They washed away their weariness in the cooling waters of the Ganga and then returned to the Sannyasi's dwelling. They offered some ripe mangoes, jackfruit and milk to Lord Krsna and then relished this Krsna prasadam in the presence of their pleased host.

The sannyasi was following the lefthanded school of sakti worship and they are used to consuming liquor. The sannyasi indirectly made this known to Lord Nityananda. He said, "Listen Sripad, shall I bring us some `happiness'? How often will I get guests like You?" Lord Nityananda who has Himself traveled widely and has seen much, understood that this sannyasi was addicted to alcohol. The sannyasi repeated several times whether she should bring happiness or not and Nityananda replied each time, "We must leave right now."

The sannyasi's wife was sitting inside looking at the two Lords, who she saw were more charming than Cupid. She stared at them as if in meditation. She corrected her husband saying, "Why do you disturb them during eating?"

Lord Visvamvara enquired aside, "Of what happiness is he speaking?"
Lord Nityananda replied, "I think he means liquor."

Lord Caitanya immediately remembered Lord Visnu and called out His name. Quickly rinsing His mouth and hands, they left the house. They walked to the riverside and jumped into the water of the Ganga and swam all the way to Santipur to Advaita Acarya's house.

The Lord shows His mercy to a licentious drunkard but annihilates Vedantists if they are offensive to the devotees of the Lord and the Lord Himself. Although this so-called sannyasi was a drunkard and intimately associated with women, still the Lord visited his dwelling. He conversed with the sannyasi and gave him instructions, rested and ate in his house. This sannyasi may not become fully purified in this life but has to wait for another birth; the agnostics who criticize the Lord and His devotees will never become eligible to receive the Lord's mercy. Even if one is a sannyasi still that does not make him eligible to see or meet the Supreme Lord. This is evident from the incident which occurred in Varanasi with the sannyasis there.

In the last section of this book it narrates that when Lord Caitanya went to Kasi many residents and some sannyasis heard the news of His arrival. The sannyasis were joyful to receive the news and were eager to meet Him since they had heard much about His exceptional characteristics. These sannyasis were all Vedantists impersonalists, and were well versed in intellectual matters and in performing various austerities. As life long residents of Kasi they were well respected. All their impressive qualifications were undermined by a single fault – they taught and explained the Vedanta devoid of the science of devotion to Lord Visnu. Lord Caitanya is the supersoul within each individual's heart. He was aware of this and although He visited Kasi He did not give these sannyasis the opportunity to meet Him.

In Varnasi He stayed in Ramachandra Puri's math for two months without revealing His whereabouts, but spent most of His time in Chandrasekhar's house. He left Varanasi two days before the Visvarup Ksanra, the special shaving ceremony on the full moon day during Chaturmasya followed by Mayavadi sannyasis. He left without public knowledge and only later the sannyasis came to know that they had missed seeing him.

The offense of criticizing the Lord or His devotee even once steals a man's proper intelligence. The sannyasis did not feel any remorse at not meeting the Lord. Further to it they said, "We are all sannyasis. Why did He leave without first speaking to us? What was the reason He could not wait two days and perform the special shaving ceremony Visvaroop Ksanra? By doing this He has neglected the duties of His order."

The intelligence of non-devotional people are spoilt in this manner and Lord Siva never accepts worship from such offenders. In fact, Lord Siva, the Lord of Kasi, metes out punishment to such offenders of the Vaisnavas and takes away whatever little devotion they may have.

Lord Gaurasundara has advented specifically to deliver all the fallen souls with the exception of those who find fault in Vaisnava devotees of the Lord. Thus Lord Caitanya ate and rested in a drunkard's home and avoided the company of the so-called learned Vedic sannyasis just to prove this point. One must be always careful to avoid the Lord's wrath, but those who flout the Lord will suffer eternal punishment in the hands of Yamaraja, the God of death.

Lord Brahma, Lord Siva, Ananta Sesa, Kamala the universal mother, are constantly engaged in glorifying the Supreme Lord Gaurasundara. Thus if anyone is so unfortunate as not to be attracted by the sweet nectarean pastimes and qualities of Lord Caitanya, then all his Vedic learning and austerities as a sannyasi are rendered useless.

Happily Lord Caitanya and Lord Nityananda proceeded towards Santipur along the bank of the Ganga. As they walked Lord Caitanya loudly and repeatedly roared, "I am that; I am that person. Nada has awakened Me from sleep and brought Me here. He is, I believe, holding dissertations that camouflage the process of devotional service behind a facade of flowery words that present the speculative path of knowledge. Today I will punish him for this. Let the whole world see. I want everyone to see how he defends his bastion of speculative knowledge." While the Lord thunderously rumbled on in this manner, Lord Nityananda kept His silence, smiling in His mind. As Lord Caitanya and Nityananda Prabhus swam in the waves of the Ganga, the author recalls to memory Lord Mukunda, Narayana, supine on Ananta Sesa lying on the milk ocean.

Advaita Acarya, a stalwart amongst the followers of Lord Caitanya could understand from before, due to his high devotional merits, that the Lord would react angrily to his presenting the theory of speculative philosophy. So when he realized that Caitanya and Nityananda had come to Shantipur he began to speak more vociferously on impersonalistic knowledge. How can one really fathom the devotional mood and activities of the pure devotees of the Lord.

Lord Nityananda accompanied the irate Lord Caitanya into Advaita's house. Advaita swayed in divine pleasure playing out his part perfectly as an impersonalist. Haridas Thakura offered obeisances to the Lord, falling on the ground like a rod; Acyuta, Advaita's son, also offered his respectful obeisances. Advaita's wife, Sitadevi, offered obeisances to the Lord in her mind and felt very upset seeing the Lord's countenance. The Lord's face and expression aroused fear in everyone's heart.

Rumbling with anger, the Lord said, "Hey, You Nada! Tell Me which is superior – speculative knowledge or devotional service?"

Advaita replied, "Speculative knowledge is always superior, for what is the use of devotional service if a person is devoid of impersonal knowledge?"

As soon as these words entered His ears, Lord Caitanya became inflamed and forgot His surroundings. He pulled Advaita out of his seat and dragged him out to the patio. There he threw him on the ground and struck him again and again.

Advaita's wife, Sitadevi, is the universal mother who knows all these confidential topics, yet she could not restrain herself from trying to stop the Lord. "Stop! Stop!" she cried out. "He is just an old brahmana. For whose benefit do You chastise him so heavily? He is so old that he may not survive your harsh behavior and You will find it difficult to avoid the consequences of your actions." Lord Nityananda smiled at her words and Haridasa Thakura repeated Krsna's name in great fear.

Lord Caitanya was so angry that He did not even hear Sitadevi's words. Roaring like angry thunder He spoke to Advaita, "I was gently relaxing on the milk ocean and you interrupted My sleep, calling Me to attend to your work. You engineered the propagation of devotional service yet now you audaciously obscure the devotional process with your circumvent explanation of impersonalism. If you had already made up your mind to surreptitiously broadcast your speculative theories, then why did you take the trouble of revealing Me to the world? I did not disregard your desire and wishes, but you have deceived Me in all respects."

At long last, Caitanya stopped chastising Advaita and went to sit next to the doorway. He spoke loudly, revealing His real identity to all. He said, "O Nada, you know everything. Behold, I am the one who slew Kamsa. Siva, Brahma, Ananta Sesa, Laksmidevi are all constantly engaged in serving Me. That impostor Vasudeva met his end, vanquished by me disc weapon Sudarsan. That same disc reduced the entire city of Varanasi to ashes. My arrow found its mark and killed the great demon king Ravana. My invincible Sudarsana severed the arms of Bana and destroyed the powerful demon Naraka. I had lifted the Govardhana mountain with my left hand and it is I who brought the heavenly parijata flower to earth. I tricked King Bali out of all his possessions and then benedicted him for his mood of surrender, and I also vanquished the terrible demon king Hiranyakasipu to favor my devotee Prabhlad." As the Lord revealed His various pastimes Advaita felt gradually submerged in an ocean of ecstatic bliss.

Advaita was more than happy to receive his due punishment in this manner and he clapped his hands and pranced in joy feeling peace and humility within. He said, "My Lord, You have rightfully remonstrated me, and I am lucky to get away with so little. Now I am clear about Your divine authority and I am feeling the renewed strength in my relationship with you as Your servant."

Advaita danced around in ecstasy and then creasing his eyebrows together he prayed to the Lord, "Now where are Your flattering words about me? What has happened to all that deceit? I am not Durvasa Muni that you can insult me, Whose remnants of rice You had smeared on Your body. Nor am I Bhrigu Muni whose foot impression decorated Your breast and is known as the famous Srivatsa. My name is simply Advaita, Your eternal and humble servant purely and I am always hankering birth after birth to receive Your remnants. And by the effect of Your remnants or mercy I am unscathed by the ravages of Your illusory potency. The punishment is now over, so please give me the shelter of Your lotus feet." Saying this, Advaita, the master of Santipur, fell to the ground and placed his head on the Lord's lotus feet.

Hastily and with due respect, Lord Visvamvara picked up Advaita on His lap as tears flooded the Lord's eyes, cascading down unrestrained. Lord Nityananda, Haridasa Thakura were unable to contain their ecstatic emotions at the sight of such a display of divine devotional fervor and tears flowed from their eyes in rivers. Sitadevi, Acyutananda and the servants of the house were crying in intense joy. Advaita's whole house became immersed in love of Godhead.

Lord Visvamvara now felt ashamed after having chastised Advaita so severely and so He wanted to compensate by offering him a boon. He said, "If anyone so much as takes a little shelter at your feet, be he an insect, worm, animal or bird, and even if he commits a million offenses against Me, I will still grant him my benediction."

When Advaita heard this book he fell at the Lord's feet and crying like a meek child he said, "Whatever You have said My Lord is certainly true. Now please hear and grant me one favor. If anyone tries to follow and worship me but does not serve Your lotus feet, then let that so-called devotion to me vanquish him. I cannot accept anyone who does not serve You. He may be my son or servant but I shall consider him a great offender and shall never see his face. Because I cannot bear to see anyone neglect Your lotus feet. Those who worship you automatically become my dearest friend. Sometimes one may supersede Your worship and approach up to a million demigods, but those demigods will never entertain him. Instead they will surely squash him by some deception. All that I have said are not my own concoction but are the verdict of the scriptures. The story of Sudaksina's death from the Puranas is the proof.

Sudakshina was the son of the king of Kasi. A great devotee of Lord Siva, he was always immersed in meditation on his Lord. Being satisfied with his worship Lord Siva appeared to him and said, "Ask for a boon and I shall fulfill your heart's desire. Also, perform the special yajna of Abhicharyajna in order to master extraordinary powers, but be very cautious that you do not belittle or offend any VAisnava devotee of the Lord. If you do you will be immolated."

Sudaksina had no way of detecting the intention behind Lord Siva's words so he duly performed the Abhichara sacrifice according to his Lord's instructions. Out of the sacrificial fire appeared a terrifying form. Possessing three hands and legs and three heads and stood towering over him. It said, "Ask for your boon." The prince replied, "Go and burn down the city of Dvaraka." The giant creature became visibly sad and understood that the prince's desire could never be fulfilled. He nevertheless went to Dvaraka on his request and upon his arrival he was immediately attacked by the omnipresent and every watchful guard of Dvaraka, the Sudarsan disk.

No one can escape the wrath of Sudarsan and so the giant submitted himself at the lotus feet of Sudarsan and said, "The powerful sage Durvasa could not escape from You and neither could You be contained by such great personalities as Lord Brahma and Lord Siva; what can and insignificant person as myself do against such an exalted Vaisnava as You. Lord, I have no avenues of escape now, and You are free to do anything with me you like. All glories to You, my Lord who is famous as Sudarsana You are as powerful as my own Lord Sankara and the abode of Krsna. All glory to You who posses the form of a disc and is the best amongst the Vaisnava devotees. You instill fear in the hearts of the miscreants and protect the pious."

Sudarsan was appeased by the giant's prayers and he told him to return to the prince who had sent him and destroy him by fire. The terrifying giant returned to the prince of Kasi and destroyed him.

Sudaksina tried to override You, My Lord, and tried to worship Lord Siva with the yajna, but the result was that he met his death by this same sacrifice. Similarly, I say that those who approach me dismissing Your lotus feet, I destroy them. You are everything to me; You are the Lord of my life, my most precious treasure, my father and my mother, my dearest friend. I cannot tolerate such offense at Your lotus feet.

There are many examples of this point in the scriptures. King Satrajit once met the Sungod and becoming attracted by his brilliance and personality began worshiping him. But then once he disobeyed Your orders and due to this offense he and his brother were killed and the sungod saw all this with satisfaction since he had been very upset that Satrajit had disobeyed Your instructions. Duryodhana was a disciple of Lord Balaram but because he disregarded You he and his entire race was eliminated.

Hiranyakasipu became practically invincible by the boon of Lord Brahma and this made him insolent and inimical towards You so he also died along with his race of demons.

The ten-headed Ravana was the most powerful king of his time having received a boon from Lord Siva. He was offensive to You and challenged You so he and his entire family was vanquished.

O Lord, You are the root cause and the Supreme Lord of all the demigods. Everything and everyone seen and unseen to human vision is Your servant. One who tries to worship the servant but disregards the Lord and Master Himself, then the servant cannot tolerate this offense so he makes a show of accepting the worshipers' worship but finally he personally destroys him. Worshiping demigods like Siva directly without worshiping You is like watering the branches instead of the root of the tree. You are the original cause of the Vedas, the brahmanas, sacrifices, and religious practices; I despise that person who disregards Your lotus feet.

Lord Caitanya greatly appreciated Advaita's highly confidential and esoteric prayers and he spoke out in a voice that resembled a thunderclap. "Now listen to Me attentively, I say truly those who worship me directly but neglect my servants and devotees are most despicable wretches who by doing so cut my body into pieces. Their worship is like burning cinders on my body. He who criticizes and offends my devotee, My name which fulfills all desires will vanquish him. In this way I show my compassion for him. Every living entity is My servant and so I cannot tolerate any violence to them. I destroy anyone who tries to hurt My servants. What to speak of you Advaita. You are more dear to Me than My own body and any disrespect shown to you is dealt by Me with severity. Even if a sannyasi offends a pure devotee he falls down from his vow and deviates from his religious practices."

Raising both His arms Lord Gauracandra declared to the world, "Give up the offensive attitude of criticizing Vaisnavas and chant Lord Krsna's holy name. Anyone who practices this will surely be delivered by Me."

Lord Caitanya's words gripped the devotees in a wave of unrestrained joy and they broke out in chanting the Lord's name loudly. Advaita Acarya wept in ecstasy catching the Lord's lotus feet and the Lord held Advaita in His endearing embrace and wept.

Advaita's loving devotion flooded the entire universe. Such is the wonderful character and activity of Advaita Acarya. Advaita Acarya is non-different from the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Who, then, can really understand his words. The seemingly abusive exchange between Advaita and Lord Nityananda can be perceived only by those elevated souls who have reached that state of bliss beyond material influences. The words and activities of the Supreme Lord and His pure devotees, the Vaisnavas, can be understood and appreciated only by their mercy alone.

Discussions of such spiritual nature between Advaita, Nityananda and other devotees can be realized by Lord Ananta alone, who then sings these with his innumerable mouths.

Lord Visvamvara glanced at Advaita coming out of his ecstatic engrossment and spoke with a smile, "I have chastised you in a moment of childish frivolity." Advaita replied, "All such pastimes are not factual, but performed to delude us." The Lord said, "Listen Nityananda, You must kindly forgive Me for my reckless act of immaturity."

Nityananda, Haridasa Thakura and Advaita Acarya exchanged glances amongst each other and then burst out in uncontrolled laughter.

Lord Visvamvara always addressed Sitadevi, Advaita's wife as mother; she was a symbol of chastity, always serving husband to his full satisfaction. Now Lord Visvamvara went to her saying, "Go quickly and prepare a sumptuous feast for Lord Krsna and after offering it to Him, we shall partake of His remnants." The Lord then left to take his bath in Ganga along with Advaita, Haridas, Nityananda and others. Everyone was in a gay mood. Such unbounded joy and spiritual bliss seen in the Lord's nature is described in detail in the Vedas.

On returning to the house from His bath, He washed His feet and prostrated Himself before Lord Krsna. Seeing the Lord in a prostrated position Advaita fell at the Lord's lotus feet and haridas also in the ecstasy of devotee association fell at the feet of Advaita. Lord Nityananda witnessed this wonderful scene with feelings of spiritual bliss surging within Him. Here then was the transcendental bridge of the three expansions of Godhead linked directly to the highest spiritual abode.

Rising from offering obeisances to Lord Krsna, Lord Visvamvara noticed that Advaita Acarya was at His feet and He became very embarrassed. He chanted, "Visnu, Visnu," in humility.

The Lord then took Advaita's hand and entered the eating room with Nityananda in His familiar charming way. The three Supreme Personalities sat down to eat. Each one of them was always animated with spiritual ecstasy and Lord Nityananda acted as was His nature, as a highly restless young boy. Sitting away from them by the door was Haridas Thakura who was spiritually elevated enough to see these different transcendental pastimes. Sita Thakurani, Advaita's wife, a most spiritually exalted and versatile lady was serving Them and remembering Lord hari all the time. She served them delicacies like flavored rice, ghee, milk, sweet rice and They ate with pleasure and vivacity.

Advaita Acarya began to laugh at Nityananda. They are in fact both the same Supreme Personality, but have become two absolute entities to participate and assist in Lord Krsna's pastimes. Just towards the end of Their meal Lord Nityananda became overly restless like a child. He picked up the rice from His plate and threw it all around and then laughed out in childish glee. Lord Visvamvara cried out in great concern. While Haridas Thakura could not check his laughter.

Advaita pretended to be inflamed into rage and revealed the truths about the absolute nature of Nityananda. He angrily said, "This Nityananda is a drunkard and His company has corrupted my caste. He cannot say who His guru is, nor the place of His birth. He simply introduces Himself as a sannyasi. No one knows Him or His caste and family; He always walks around swaying like a drunken mad elephant. Previously He was eating in the houses of aliens and now He has come here, trying to mix with the brhamanas.

I say thrice truly to you Haridasa that this drunkard will destroy everything." Working himself into a fit of fake rage, Advaita threw off his clothes and clapping his hands, he pranced about in unrestrained glee.

Lord Visvamvara started laughing at Advaita. Such was his nature that both old and young equally find his character stimulating. Nityananda also shook with laughter pointing His fingers at Advaita who was exhibiting such amusing postures in his pretended rage.

After a while when They were again well composed they rinsed their mouths and hands and then they embraced each other experiencing ecstatic bliss. Both Advaita and Nityananda are like the two hands of Lord Caitanya. There is no enmity but everlasting annuity between them. Their quarrels are simulated and meant to support Krsna's pastimes; such are the childlike mannerisms of the Supreme Lord and His pure devotees.

Lord Caitanya passed His time in this manner in Advaita's house, engrossed in ecstatic bliss. He performed sankirtana. These supramundane activities can be understood by Lord Balarama alone, others cannot fathom the absolute excellences in the Supreme Lord's nature. By the blessings of Lord Balarama one is able to repeat these pastimes of Lord Caitanya because Sarasvati devi, the goddess of learning, seems to dance on His tongue.

All these pastimes I have compiled having no idea of the chronological sequence; I have simply presented them as they appear to me and it was possible merely by the mercy of Lord Krsna.

I therefore offer obeisances at the feet of all the beloved devotees of Lord Caitanya and beg their forgiveness of the offenses I might have committed in this endeavor.

After a few days of sojourn in Advaita's house Lord Caitanya returned to Navadvipa and His home accompanied by Lord Nityananda, Advaita and haridasa. When the news of the Lord's return to Navadvipa spread around all the Vaisnavas hurriedly flocked to meet the Lord, bubbling delight was written on everyone's face.

The sight of Lord Caitanya's moonlike face immediately dissipated their distress and they fell at His feet weeping. The Lord was their most precious soul; He lovingly embraced everyone who had come to meet Him. All His devotees were like His own expansions – compassionate and exalted Vaisnavas.

All the devotees then offered obeisances to Advaita who was the cause for Lord Caitanya's advent. Jubilantly they met each other and began to playfully and loudly talk about Krsna's pastime with the Lord.

Mother Saci was extremely happy to see her son again and together with Visnupriyadevi offered grateful thanks to their deity. All these can fully be described by Lord Ananta alone; He is my life and soul. There is no difference between Lord Balarama and Lord Nityananda except Their names, just as the three different words dvija, vipra and brahmana mean one and the same thing. One who hears with devotion these pastimes of the Lord in Advaita's house, attains the highest bliss.

Lord Krsna Caitanya and Lord Nityananda are my life and soul.

I, Vrndavana dasa, humbly offer this song at Their lotus feet.

Madhya Lila

Chapter 20

All glories to Gaurasimha, the son of Mother Saci. The shade of Your lotus feet drives away all distresses. You are the life and soul of Gadadhara Pandita, be merciful to me so that my mind may remain fixed at Your lotus feet.

Lord Caitanya was now fully engaged in performing his wonderful pastimes with all His associates; sometimes dancing, sometimes singing, yet again crying or laughing, but all these were symptoms of ecstatic love of Godhead. One day Lord Caitanya was visiting Srinivas Pandita's house with Lord Nityananda. As they were sitting Murari Gupta came and prostrated himself at the lotus feet of Lord Caitanya. Then getting up looking effulgent he again prostrated himself before Lord Nityananda.

Lord Caitanya was always pleased with Murari Gupta, so now he spoke frankly to Murari saying, "What you just now did by first offering obeisances to Me and then to Nityananda was a violation of Vaisnava etiquette. Why did you of all persons do this? You are supposed to teach others who are ignorant about these esoteric rules."

Murari replied, "How can I know about this my Lord? You are in full control of my heart. I have acted according to your desire."

The Lord then said, "alright Murari, go home now, tonight you will come to know everything and tomorrow we shall meet again."

Murari became grave, and smiling hesitantly he left for his home. That night, in a dream he saw Lord Nityananda dressed like a kingly wrestler walking ahead; great hoods of snakes were above His head and in His hands He held the pestle and plough. Lord Nityananda looked exactly like Lord Balaram. Behind Him walked Visvambhar smiled and spoke in his dream, "Now do you understand Murari, I am junior, consider this properly in your mind." Now both the Supreme brothers smiled at Murari and thus instructing him They disappeared.

Murari woke up immediately and began to shed tears; breathing heavily he kept repeating Lord Nityananda's name. His chaste wife became worried and prayed to Lord Krishna chanting His name loudly. Murari was now convinced that Lord Nityananda was the elder brother and with this thought he happily hurried to meet the Lord. He saw the lotus eyed Lord Visvambhar sitting with Lord Nityananda sitting on His right, a benign smile adoring His lips. Murari went first to Lord Nityananda and offered obeisances at His lotus feet and then fell at Lord Visvambhar's lotus feet.

The Lord smiled and enquired, "Murari, why did you act in this manner?" Murari replied, "My Lord I acted according to Your sweet will; like a dry blade of grass is blown in the breeze all living beings perform by Your irresistible power." Again the Lord said, "Murari, you are very dear to Me, hence I have disclosed the confidential truth about Myself to you." Gadadhara, the Lord's beloved associate was seated on His left, he prepared Tambula, pan for the Lord and gave it to Him. The Lord said, "Murari, you are a stalwart amongst my devotees," saying this He gave him some of the chewed pan from His lotus mouth. Murari received this on the open palms of his hands with eager respect and eating it he felt great ecstasy racing through his body and soul.

Lord Visvambhar addressed Murari, "Murari, go wash your hands now," but Murari wiped his palms on his head. The Lord exclaimed, "Now you have lost your caste, you foolish fellow, you have become contaminated by wiping your hands on your head that have taken My chewed remnants.

Suddenly the Lord's mood changed. He became angry, grinding His teeth loudly He began to manifest His true supreme identity. He said, "a sannyasi named Prakasananda, living in Benares has the audacity to try and inflict pain upon My person. He is a teacher of Vedanta philosophy but does not accept the existence of God, My, supreme form. I have punished him by making him contract leprosy, and yet he fails to understand. The entire unlimited creation is a manifestation of My energy still he impudently maintains that all this is false.

Murari, you are my trusted servitor so I am telling you the truth that those who do not respect My form, My personality they inevitably perish. Lord Brahma, Lord Siva, Lord Ananta and all the demigods serve the lotus feet of the Supreme Lord as their very dearest object, and by the mere touch of the Lord's body one can be cleansed of all contamination, such a Lord's form is denied by these shameless rascals. Truly, I declare to you that I, the Supreme Lord, My dear servitors and their servants are all manifestations of the Absolute Truth. My transcendental abode and activities are the absolute reality, anyone denying Their existence and veracity verily inflicts countless wounds upon My body.

Just by hearing the glories of the Supreme Lord all nescience is nullified yet that sinful Vedanta teacher says they are unreal. Lord Siva drinks the nectar of the glories of the Lord with his ears and becomes so intoxicated. That he is unaware of the loss of his clothing. That great Personality Lord Ananta Sesa himself is forever engaged in singing the glories of the Lord. Sukadeva Goswami, Narada and other exalted personalities become maddened by the sweetness of the Lord's glories. The four Vedas are simply explaining the esoteric nature of the Lord's transcendental glories. And so Murari, anyone who disregards such super excellent activities and glories of the Lord can never appreciate the real purpose behind my advent."

Thus addressing Murari Gupta in this manner the Lord taught the entire world the cardinal truths about His Absolute nature; the Lord's form, devotees, pastimes and abode are all the absolute reality; the unfortunate nonbelievers will be annihilated.

After a while Lord Visvambhar came out of His trance and became His usual humble self. He lovingly embraced Murari calling him brother and spoke sweetly to him, "Murari, indeed you are My pure devotee and thus you have come to perceive the transcendental nature and position of Lord Nityananda. A person may claim to be My devotee but if he holds the slightest grudge against Lord Nityananda then I do not favor him. Now go home Murari, you have outright purchased Me." Hanuman was the only other devotee of the Lord who had received such causeless mercy as Murari. Murari Gupta, now fully immersed in an ocean of bliss, went home treasuring Lord Nityananda and Lord Visvambhar in the inner recesses of his heart. Murari was drinking the nectar from within and his behavior was inconsistent. He would say one thing but do quite something else, loudly chuckling to himself. Exuberantly he called out to his chaste wife to bring his food and she hurriedly brought his plate.

Murari Gupta, fully intoxicated with love of God mixed the rice with the ghee and calling out, "Krishna, come eat, eat" took the mixed rice in his hand brought it up as if to give to someone and began to strew the rice all over the floor. His chaste wife stood there watching and laughed and kept supplying fresh rice to her husband. She knew well that her husband was a very exalted devotee of the Lord; she called out Krishna's name reminding him to be careful.

Lord Caitanya, always attentive to His devotees wishes, accepted all the food offered to Him by Murari, keeping His word to Murari. The Lord then personally came to Murari's house early next morning. Murari was then constantly chanting Krishna's holy name and as soon as the Lord came he paid his obeisances and offered the Lord a seat with great love.

After the Lord had seated Himself comfortably Murari inquired, "What brings the Lord here?" Lord Caitanya replied, "I have come to be treated for indigestion." Murari asked, "What has caused this indigestion? what have You eaten yesterday?" The Lord said, "My dear fellow! how will you know? I have taken all that you offered me saying, "eat, eat" and threw the food on the ground. You have forgotten but your wife knows everything.

Since you offered it to Me how could I refuse. Now you can treat Me for eating your rice or My inability to digest it, but the fact is that I am suffering from indigestion because of eating your rice. I know that drinking sufficient water is a very good remedy so since I have eaten your rice and become sick, your water is my medicine, I am going to drink your water."

Saying this the Lord picked up Murari's glass and drank the water from it. The Lord expressed full satisfaction drinking as if the nectar of His devotees pure devotion. When Murari saw the Lord's infinite mercy he was so overwhelmed that he fell down unconscious. All of Murari's servants and relatives began to weep in divine exhilaration. Everything was so wonderful the Lord, the ecstatic devotional feelings, and the pure devotees of the Lord; all such devotional mellows could be manifest by Lord Caitanya's causeless mercy alone.

The mercy and blessings that Murari Gupta's servants received from the Lord was never seen or awarded to any of the so called Brahman scholars in Nadia. Material knowledge, wealth and distinction are futile, but by becoming a servant of the servant of the Lord one is rewarded with the greatest boon, loving devotion to the Lord. The servants of the Vaisnava devotees are not just anybody. The Vedic scriptures describe them as, "the most elevated souls" such were the extra-ordinary activities of Murari Gupta. The Lord showered His blessings on Murari constantly. Whosoever hears these transcendental activities of the pure devotee Murari will indeed experience divine love.

On another occasion Lord Caitanya was in Srivas Pandita's house. Suddenly the Lord manifest His real form as the Supreme Godhead with four arms holding the conchshell, disc, mace and lotus; He began to loudly call out, "Garuda, Garuda!" Just then Murari Gupta roaring loudly came running to Srivas' house in a devotional trance. His person became surcharged with the mood of Garuda and he said, "I am Garuda, that great devotee. "As the Lord called for Garuda again Murari Gupta replied, "I am here my Lord, your servant." The Lord said, "yes, you are my carrier" and Murari said, "yes, yes my Lord."

Murari Gupta continued, "Have you forgotten my Lord, I carried You to the heavenly abodes and brought down the Parijata tree. Another time I carried You to Vanapura where I tore to pieces Skandha's peacock. Here again are my shoulders I am at Your service kindly climb on and order me, which planet shall I go to?"

The Lord climbed onto Murari's back and everyone cried out in joy at Srivas' house resounded with the glorifications of the Lord and His devotees. As the Lord of the Goddess of Fortune sat astride Murari's shoulders. A blissful Murari went around Srivas' compound with great speed. The ladies made auspicious sounds by moving their tongues and all the devotees were lifted on waves of ecstatic joy. They chanted the names of God, and some remarked, "I pray that I may never forget this scene." Some of them clapped their hands and thighs and others laughed heartily saying, "What a wonderful Supreme Lord we have." They all glorified the Lord saying, "All glory to Lord Visvambhar and His carrier Murari."

So many of these extraordinary pastimes were being exhibited in Navadvipa but persons too attached to sinful activities could not see these pastimes of Lord Caitanya. The Supreme Lord is out of reach for those intoxicated with wealth, luxury, power and position; Lord Caitanya becomes purchased only by unalloyed devotional service. Those fortunate and pious souls who have been worshiping the Lord for many births now watch all these transcendental activities as His associates and servitors. And those who saw these pastimes, being compassionate, then narrated to others, but the agnostics and sinful persons could not believe in these transcendental activities. In the Madhyakhanda of this book we find the narration of the Supreme Lord Visvambhar alighting on Murari Gupta's shoulders but Murari is an eternal servitor of the Lord and he is present as the Lord's servitor in every incarnation of the Lord. These pastimes have no beginning or end, according to the Vedas they are manifest and again they disappear.

Lord Gaurasundar came out of His trance and climbed down from Murari's shoulders; Murari also withdrew within himself Garuda's mood. These confidential pastimes are too esoteric to be comprehended by all. The Vaisnavas who were present and saw the causeless mercy received by Murari Gupta began to praise him. Blessed truly is Murari to be able to participate in the Lord's supramundane activities as His carrier, his devotion to the Supreme Lord has thus been crowned with success. These narrations on Murari's activities are fully spiritual and endless.

One day Murari Gupta was considering in his pure heart the activities of the different incarnations of the Supreme Lord. He thought, "I cannot understand the activities of the Lord, why He does certain things; sometimes He is protecting and at the same time He is annihilating. So now as long as the Lord is present with His associates and servitors I better think of a way for my own redress, for example the Lord destroyed Ravana and his entire dynasty and brought back His wife Sitadevi, and then again He rejected her; what logic can rule such an action? Then in another incarnation He saw the Yadu dynasty, who were His very dear relatives and friends, being destroyed, He saw and just let it happen. Therefore now, as the Lord is still present, I must make preparations to leave my body, the time is ripe; the Lord is still here."

Thus influenced by such whimsical thoughts Murari brought a very sharp shell-cutters saw and hid it in his house, telling himself, "Tonight I will get rid of this body with pleasure." In the meanwhile, Lord Visvambhar, who is the supersoul residing in everyone's heart, came to know about Murari Gupta's desire. He came immediately to Murari's house. Murari welcomed the Lord with great reverence, praying at His lotus feet, and offered Him a seat. The Lord sat and spoke at length about the transcendental activities of Lord Krishna. Murari gupta was pleased beyond words.

The Lord said, "Murari, will you keep a request of Mine." Gupta replied, "Lord, this body and soul belongs to you." The Lord asked, "Is this really true?" Murari replied, "indeed my Lord." The Lord then whispered into his ears, "give Me that saw; you brought it to end your life with it and kept hidden inside the house, bring it to me." Murari interjected in sheer dejection, "alas, alas! Who could have told you such a lie?" The Lord said, "Murari, I see that you are very naive, you are saying that someone else has informed Me about this. I know everything: I know who has made this saw and where it is hidden now."

Nothing is unknown to the omniscient Supreme Lord, He went inside the house and brought out the saw. The Lord said, "Murari, just note how you are behaving with Me! What is my fault that you want to leave Me and go away? If you should go then who will be a partner in my pastimes? Where did you pick up these ideas that you have now? I, therefore beg of you this, you must promise never to pursue such whims and ideas."

Lord Caitanya embraced Murari and taking his hand placed it on His head, and said, "it is better that you eat My head, finish My head, if again you desire to leave your body." Hastily Murari threw himself to the ground and with tears of love he washed the Lord's lotus feet. Murari held on tightly the Lord's feet but the Lord picked him up and taking him in His embrace He wept in love for His pure devotee.

It is impossible to calculate the extent of mercy that Murari received from the Lord, even Lakshmi-devi, Lord Brahma, Lord Ananta, Lord Siva and others are craving for it. These demigods are non-different from the Supreme Lord Caitanya; the Vedas are clear about this absolute oneness. Indeed Lord Caitanya expands Himself and becomes Lord Ananta Sesha to support this entire material nature. He again expands Himself as Lord Brahma to create this universe.

The work of annihilating this cosmic manifestation is done by another of His expansions, Lord Siva. As Lord Sesha, He glorifies His own unlimited pastimes. All these demigods are the manifestations of the Lord's potency hence are non-different from Him. They are all serving Lord Caitanya's lotus feet. Such is the potency of Lord Caitanya's name that even if a bird chants His holy name then he goes directly to the highest spiritual abode of Lord Caitanya. Whereas if a sannyasi, though having taken a vow of celibacy and renunciation does not accept Lord Caitanya then he will be born in total ignorance birth after birth. Such a sannyasi is factually a dacoit in a renunciate's garb, for his activities are of a degraded nature. The Vedas define him as "malicious."

For the scriptures condemn such a malicious mentality. In the Padma Purana it is said, "An easily identifiable and shameless sinner is in many respects better, because only he alone slides down to depths of depravity; whereas a sinful man posing to be a saint is worse because he drags himself as well as all his followers down to the darkest hell."

Again, "Dacoits capture their victims in lonely spots and loot them by threatening them with weapons and other forms of trickery, but the hypocrite holyman uses sweet words plucking at the sentiments of people and then confuses them, and gradually they usurp them of their wealth."

In the Srimad Bhagavatam it is stated, (SB 12:3:38), "(in kaliyuga) the sudras will make a living by putting on the renunciates clothes and thus receive charity. Those who are ill versed in the scriptures and spiritual knowledge will sit on the Vyasaasana and give instructions to people."

The people eagerly hear spiritual instructions from a man judging him by his appearance merely, but instead unknowingly they hear from the impostor offensive words directed against a real saintly person and due to this offense they plunge into hell.

The Vedas clearly describe that if one hears criticism of a Vaisnava devotee of the Lord then he loses all his accumulated piety and is cast into abominable conditions of life, birth after birth. The dacoit suffers but a lifetime of hell whereas the Vaisnava—offender goes through endless miseries, thus the dacoit is far better than one who is offensive to a Vaisnava hence to Lord Visnu Himself.

Everything, from the highest to the lowest living entities, is a manifestation of Lord Krishna's energy, hence Krishna cannot tolerate violence or offenses perpetrated against anyone. And if anyone offenselessly chants Krishna's name then Krishna will certainly very soon liberate him from material bondage.

A person may be well versed in all the four Vedas but still maintains an offensive attitude towards the Vaisnavas then he is eternally doomed to the worst kind of hell.

A person may study the Srimad Bhagavatam because of sense gratification, in this way becoming misguided he commits offenses at the holy feet of Lord Nityananda thus bringing about a great disaster for himself. Lord Caitanya mercifully revealed His transcendental pastimes in Navadvipa yet the offenders are not sufficiently fortunate to believe in them or understand them. As for those who are attracted to the lotus feet of Lord Caitanya, Their association is intensely desirable. And equally undesirable is the company of those yogis, master of all the eight mystic perfections, if they are averse to surrender to Lord Caitanya's lotus feet.

Lord Caitanya finally pacified and satisfied Murari Gupta and being thus pleased went home. In this way Murari Gupta was relishing the Lord's association and pastimes. So wonderful was Murari Gupta's experiences and fortune that I am unable to fully describe. It is by Lord Nityananda's mercy alone that I have heard and realized a little about the glories of a Vaisnava.

May Lord Nityananda be my eternal master, and it is by His grace that I am able to develop attachment for Lord Caitanya.

All glory to Lord Caitanya, the son of Jagannatha Misra; may your beloved Nityananda be enthroned as the crest jewel of my heart. My greatest hope is that Lord Visvambhar is most precious to my beloved Nityananda Prabhu.

Lord Sri Krishna Caitanya and Nityananda prabhu are my life and soul.

I, Vrndavana das, humbly offer this song at Their lotus feet.

Chapter 21

All glory to Lord Visvambhar, the life of Nityananda, the master of Gadadhara Pandita and the Lord of Advaita Acarya. He is the most endearing object of Srinivas and Haridas Thakura's love. The revered lord of Gangadas Pandit and Vasudeva.

May the Lord be glorified along with all His eternal servitors and associates.

One can easily attain pure devotion by properly hearing the wonderful pastimes of Lord Caitanya.

Navadvipa saw their Lord Visvambhar performing His endless pastimes with Gadadhara Pandita, Nityananda Prabhu and others.

One day the Lord was out walking with His associates. He decided to visit Maheswara Visharad who lived near the dam on the Ganga. Right next to this place was the residence of Devananda Pandit, an equipoised brahman scholar, who was aspiring after liberation. He was learned, renounced and from his birth unattached to material life. He was also a teacher of Srimad Bhagavatam but unfortunately devoid of any devotional fervor.

People praised him as a being well versed in the Srimad Bhagavatam, but factually he was acquainted with the real essence of the Bhagavatam due to the fact that the latent devotional feelings for the Lord had not stirred within his heart. He still had the eligibility to perceive the transcendental truth in the Bhagavatam. In spite of him reading the Bhagavatam he was not situated in devotional service; only Krishna knows what offenses caused such a mishap.

By some unknown coincidence the Lord with His associates were passing by Devananda's house while he was lecturing on the Srimad Bhagavatam. Lord Visvambhar, the supersoul in everyone's heart and the Absolute omniscient Supreme Lord, overheard his explanations which were devoid of references to the process of devotional service.

Enraged by this the Lord said, "What does this foolish man say? he is completely ignorant about the essential teachings of Srimad Bhagavatam. What right does he have to speak on the Bhagavatam.

Srimad Bhagavatam is the book incarnation of Lord Krishna. The ultimate goal of Srimad Bhagavatam is devotional service to the Supreme Lord; the Vedic scriptures have declared that the Bhagavatam unequivocally establishes the imperativeness of a loving relationship with the Supreme. The four Vedas are likened to the pot of yogurt, when churned it is converted to butter cream, which is the Srimad Bhagavatam. This yogurt was churned and served by Srila Sukadeva Goswami and was relished by Pariksit Maharaj.

Sukadeva Goswami is very dear to Me and he is fully conversant with the esoteric truths revealed in it, which is complete with descriptions about My absolute position and nature as the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Whosoever makes any differences between Me, My pure devotees, and the Srimad Bhagavatam are forever lost."

Although the Lord spoke these words angrily but the assembled Vaisnava devotees were greatly pleased to hear them. The Lord continued speaking, "This fool does not know anything about the Bhagavatam. He tirelessly toils explaining the Bhagavatam without mentioning devotional service. Today I will tear to shreds his book." An irate Lord Visvambhar is seen rushing off to carry out His resolve and the Vaisnavas collect around Him to dissuade Him.

The entire range of Vedic scriptures eulogize Srimad Bhagavatam as the most elevated theosophical literature: the esoteric truths contained in this great literature is unfathomable by mundane scholars and materialistic men. One who claims to "fully understand" the Srimad Bhagavatam completely misses the truth this book is expounding. But one who understands that the Srimad Bhagavatam speaks of the inconceivable Supreme truth automatically perceives its essence of devotional service to the Supreme Lord.

Devananda Pandita was a learned scholar to be equaled in erudition by only a handful. So all those who acknowledge such mundane scholars with no understanding of the Srimad Bhagavatam will also be punished by the God of death, Yamaraja. Even if one is a professor of the Srimad Bhagavatam teaching others he will become misled in spiritual understanding if he disrespects Lord Nityananda who is the ultimate shelter for the entire creation.

The Lord was fond of going about in Navadvipa accompanied by His associates. One day He came to the outer precincts of the town and happened to pass by a drinking place. As he smelled the alcohol He was reminded of Barum, a similar intoxicating drink made from honey that is such a favorite of Lord Balaram. the Lord immediately was overcome with the emotions of Lord Balaram. In a trance He loudly boomed to Srivas Pandita, "go inside". When the Lord insisted Srivas fell to His feet and begged Him not to go inside.

The Lord said, "do I also have to be restricted by rules and regulations?" But Srivas Pandit continued to dissuade the Lord from His decision. Srivas Pandit explained, "You are the universal father and the perfect example, if you transgress the social laws then who is left to uphold them? And those who out of ignorance will criticize you will certainly have to suffer lifetimes of misery. You are the emblem of eternal religious principles, who will be able to reason out the pastimes such as You were about to display. And even after this if You insist on going to the drinking house then I shall drown myself in the Ganga."

The Lord never minimizes the promise of His devotees; now He benignly smiled hearing Srivas' words. The Lord said, "I do not want to act against your wish, I will not go inside." The Lord gradually withdrew within Himself the mood of Lord Balaram and continued on His way.

When the drunkards from inside the drinking house saw Nimai they became excited and called out loudly at Him, "Hari! Hari! One of them said, "Yes Nimai Pandit is a good and honorable person, I like His behavior and especially the way He sings and dances." A few of them stood up swaying, and clapping their hands started to hop around making an attempt to dance; they tried to go out and meet Nimai in the street. The drunks were now well worked up and they sang "Haribol, Haribol, Jai Narayana" and danced about in great joy.

The drinking place was the scene of loud joyous chanting of God's name, such reactions are understandable when anyone sees the Supreme Lord Visnu and His pure devotees the Vaisnavas. The Lord was pleased by the drunken efforts of the drunkards chanting the holy name and Srivas Pandit's heart melted in tears of happiness, seeing such transcendental display of the Lord's potency. The drunkards were very happy to see Lord Caitanya, but the envious people were finding faults and criticizing the Lord.

Those who become displeased when they hear the glories of the Supreme Lord will never know any joy in any birth. Therefore, I offer my obeisances to the one who beholds the Supreme Lord with faith, be he a drunkard. The Lord blessed the drunks with His glance and went away.

After walking some distance the Lord saw Devananda Pandita coming from the opposite direction. Upon seeing him the Lord felt rage rising within Him. It came back to Lord Gauracandra's memory that sometime ago Devananda Pandita had committed a grievous offense against Srivas Pandit. (At the time when this incident had taken place Lord Visvambhar had not yet revealed His sankirtan pastimes. The world was then too engrossed in materialistic pursuits to cultivate the eternal loving relationship with the Supreme Lord; all the devotees of the Lord felt despondent because of it.

Although some scholars were lecturing on the Srimad Bhagavatam and Bhagavad Gita but neither the lecturers nor the audience accepted or appreciated the devotional essence of these texts. Devananda Pandita was also lecturing on the Bhagavatam in those days. He was very erudite and gentle, people respected him. He lectured continuously on the Bhagavatam and maintained strict celibacy vows like a sannyasa.

One day while he was lecturing on the Bhagavatam to a group of students, Srivas pandita thirsting to hear the transcendental sound of the Bhagavatam came and sat in the audience. Every syllable of the Bhagavatam is steeped in the nectar of love of God; when they entered Srivas Pandit's ears his heart melted in loving ecstasy. He began to cry and sigh deeply the students around him were mundane, agnostic logicians who felt disturbed by Srivas Pandit, and they said, "this man is creating nuisance, we cannot study in this atmosphere, it is a waste of time for us." Srivas Pandit is very dear to Lord Gauracandra and a highly elevated Vaisnava who can deliver the entire world, he was unaware of others comments, and unchecked tears streamed out in ecstatic love.

The students then plotted amongst themselves and dragged Srivas Pandit out of the house. Devananda Pandita did not utter a word in protest; when the teacher is bereft of devotional understanding his students are also expected to be the same. When Srivas Pandit came out of his ecstatic trance he returned home, his feelings were hurt. The Supersoul, Lord Visvambhar in everyone's heart took note of every thought and deed of everyone.

Now as Lord Visvambhar saw Devananda Pandita approaching the entire episode raced through His mind. The Lord accosted him with angry words, "You there Devananda! I hear you give discourses to many on the Srimad Bhagavatam. One devotee by the name of Srivas Pandit went to listen one day to your lecture but was dragged outside the premises by your students. While he was engrossed in the pastimes of Krishna. What was his offense?

One who is moved by spiritual emotions to cry listening to the Bhagavatam appreciating the mellows of loving relationship with Krishna, should he be treated with such contempt and be dragged out? This same devotee who is so eagerly sought after by Gangadevi herself was maltreated in such an offensive manner by you and your agnostic students.

You may be a teacher of the Bhagavatam but you do not possess even an iota of piety required to understand the real purport of the Srimad Bhagavatam. When a person has eaten to his full satisfaction only then does he feel amicably disposed to the world around him. As for you, although you teach others about the Bhagavatam you yourself cannot relish it's divine nectar that can give one unlimited pleasure."

Devananda Pandita, who was indeed a learned brahman, heard every word feeling very ashamed but did not speak. Lord Visvambhar finished His chastisement and left, Devananda Pandita also left for his home feeling broken and dejected. Although the Lord chastised Devananda he is still a very fortunate soul, because to be chastised by Lord Caitanya is a rare blessing. Even those demons who are killed by the Lord attain the spiritual world. One who faithfully and sincerely accepts the Lord's chastisement is soon blessed with pure devotional service unto Him, while others who do not care for the Lord's wrath will perish to eternal damnation.

Lord Krishna manifests Himself in four special forms such as the Srimad Bhagavatam, Tulasi, Ganga, and the pure Bhagavata devotee; Krishna is directly perceived in them in their original form. Whereas the deity form of the Lord has first to be installed with mantras whereby requesting the Lord to accept that deity form, only then do the deities become worshipable in the temple with the recommended rituals. The Vedas are clear on this point.

The pastimes of Lord Caitanya are causeless, without beginning or end; somehow I am trying to put them in some orderly sequence. I offer my obeisances to the feet of all the devotees of Lord Caitanya so that my offenses may be forgiven.

All these pastimes of the Lord as they manifest in the pages of the Madhya Khanda are showers of nectar that can sweeten the bitterness of agnosticism within the heart. May Lord Nityananda who is so dear to Lord Caitanya never take away the shelter of His lotus feet.

Lord Sri Krishna Caitanya and Lord Nityananda are my life and soul.

I, Vrndavan das, humbly offer this song at Their lotus feet.

Madhya Lila

Chapter 22

All glory to Lord Gauracandra who is an ocean of mercy, He is the beautiful son of Mother Saci and Sri Jagannatha Misra. He is known as Sri Krishna Caitanya, He has rained down showers of benediction upon the living entities by distributing the holy name of "Krishna".

Navadvipa saw the endless transcendental pastimes of the Lord as He manifested Them with His associates like Nityananda Prabhu, Gadadhara Pandit and others. Now the Lord returned home after chastising Devananda Pandita. Devananda also returned home in a state of acute mental agony; the cause of all his suffering was that he was associating too closely with the mundane students and scholars. Although the others considered Devananda to be saintly he had to flee from Lord Caitanya's presence, he was not pure enough to remain in the Lord's presence.

The Supreme Lord Visvambhar is attained only through the grace of saintly Vaisnavas. One may chant the Lord's name and perform austerities but if such activities lack devotion then they are useless. A person may seem to be attracting the Lord's mercy in the eyes of the public by performing some devotional activities, but factually he is deprived from any spiritual ecstasy. These are not my words, I simply repeat what the Vedas declare, and Lord Caitanya Himself has given this verdict.

Mother Saci, in whose womb the Supreme Lord Gauracandra appeared, was guilty of some previous offenses committed against a saintly Vaisnava. The Lord personally exonerated His mother from this offense and instructed her in the science of loving devotional service to the Lord. Dear readers listen attentively to this wonderful narration and this will alleviate you from the sin of Vaisnava—aparadha.

One day Lord Caitanya sat on the throne of the deities. He picked up the Shaligram sila forms of the Lord upon His lap and manifested His Supreme absolute form. He said, "I am the Supreme Lord Narayana Krishna, who in Kaliyuga appears in the form of the holy name; I bridged the ocean in My incarnation as Lord Ramachandra. I was resting on the milk ocean on My bed of Ananta Sesa when the roaring sounds of Advaita Acarya or Nada's calling Me down to earth awakened Me. The reason for My advent in this incarnation is to freely distribute love of Godhead. O Nada, and Srivas ask all you can I am here to give."

When Lord Nityananda saw this manifestation of the Lord He immediately held the opened umbrella above Lord Caitanya's head. Gadadhara Pandit was busy preparing betel for the Lord and the others began to whisk the yak-tails or camaras around the Lord

The Lord dispensed His causeless mercy to everyone and the devotees received it, each according to his hearts desire. Each devotee had a different reason for begging favor from the Lord. Someone said, "my father is mischievous if he can be rectified it will be a great relief to me." Some wanted blessings for his guru, or disciples or son or wife. Lord Visvambhar, who never disregards the sincere prayers of His devotees, fulfilled each of their desires with love of Godhead, smiling benignly upon them.

Srivas Pandit, that exalted personality then said, "my Lord, we greatly desire that you bless Saci Ma with love of Godhead." The Lord replied, "please do not make such a request, I cannot comply with it. She has committed an offense against a Vaisnava devotee therefore she is deprived of love of Godhead." Again Srivas Pandit said, "such words steal away our very life air, my Lord. She has borne You in her womb. You who are the Supreme Lord. I cannot fathom why she is refused Your favor. She is our very life and soul, the Universal mother. O Lord please discard Your deceiving and be merciful to her. You, my Lord, are her son and she is the mother of the entire existence, so how can a son consider the mother's action as offensive. And if she committed a mistake against a Vaisnava then absolve it and favor her."

The Lord replied, "I can instruct her properly, but I am unable to pardon her from Vaisnava-aparadha. She has to be forgiven by that person alone to whom she was offensive, no one else can do that. You know well how Durvasa Muni was forgiven for his offenses to King Ambarisa. She has committed an offense against Nada, Advaita; he can forgive her if he wants and make her the recipient of the Lord's sweet mercy. I can assure you that she will receive love of Godhead the very moment she takes the dust from Advaita Acarya's lotus feet and smears it on her head."

Immediately the devotees accompanied Mother Saci to meet Advaita Acarya, and explained everything to Him. When Advaita Acarya heard them he remembered Lord Visnu to avoid disaster and retorted to them, "you want to smash my head open, she is the mother of my Lord and master, she is my mother as well. It is her feet dust which must decorate my head; she is not an ordinary person that I can even fathom her position. She is the embodiment of devotional service, the Universal mother, how could you bring yourselves to say these words! If anyone takes her name even for some material reasons then he is relieved of all suffering, Mother Saci or Ai is non-different from Gangadevi, she is the same personality as Mother Yasoda and Mother Devaki."

As Advaita was delineating the truth about Mother Saci he fell unconscious to the ground in spiritual ecstasy. Realizing that the opportune moment had arrived Mother Saci quickly came from the inner quarters and taking the dust from Advaita Acarya's feet she placed it on her head.

Mother Saci, a very exalted Vaisnava devotee endowed with perfect devotion, also fell down unconscious feeling divine bliss as she placed Advaita's feet dust on her head. All the devotees exclaimed joyously at being able to see such sublime spiritual reciprocations amongst exalted personalities.

The Lord watched the entire happening from His throne and was satisfied with His mother. He said, "Now that you are rid of your offenses to Advaita Acarya you are blessed with love of Godhead." The devotees responded jubilantly to the Lord's words.

The Supreme Lord acting as the instructing spiritual master warned everyone to avoid Vaisnava aparadha; He used His own mother as a vehicle to teach others. According to the Scriptures even the most powerful person is destroyed by Vaisnava aparadha. If one disregards the instructions of the scriptures and commits Vaisnava aparadha, he has to suffer hellish life of a sinner life after life. What to speak of others even the most powerful Lord Caitanya's own mother was taken to task for committing Vaisnava aparadha.

If one really analyses what was Sacidevi's Vaisnava aparadha then she will be found innocent, yet the Lord found her guilty. Why do people call Him "Advaita" which means non-dual; what prompted Mother Saci to call Him "Dvaita" or dual. This entire episode, which includes Visvarupa's transcendental pastimes.

Visvarupa was a very elevated personality, He was the Lord's elder brother. He possessed unsurpassing handsome looks, was radiant and powerful. Well versed in all branches of philosophy and scriptures, He was gentle and composed. He is non-different from Lord Nityananda. No one could fathom His analysis and explanations of the scriptures, and yet He was playing the role of a child with other children.

One day Sri Jagannatha Misra was invited to an assembly of brahman pandits. He took his son Visvarupa with him. All those attending were gray with erudition and tricky logic. They were stunned to see this young but beautiful and attractive child. His effulgent personality seemed to have stolen their gravity and cynicism. One of the panditas approached Him asking, "How far have you studied young lad?" Visvarupa replied, "A little of everything." The others did not mind his slightly insolent reply, but His father was embarrassed by it.

As they were returning home from the assembly Sri Jagannatha Misra slapped his son. Reprimanding Him he said, "Why did you not say clearly the names of the books you are studying, instead of talking in circles. You certainly made a fool of yourself in that learned assembly and also spoilt my reputation." They returned home but Jagannatha Misra was still in a fit of rage.

Visvarupa decided to go back to that assembly. He went alone, and said to the Brahmans, "None of you asked Me any questions when I replied to your question; My father was very angry with My reply and your silence. So now please ask Me any question so that I may back up My answer to your enquiry. The scholars laughed condescendingly at what they considered to be mere preciousness. One of them said, "Okay young lad! What did you study today?" Visvarupa explained to them a few aphorisms from logic and they appreciated and understood His presentation. They said, "You have explained the aphorisms well." Visvarupa replied, "It is a bluff. You have not understood anything."

All the logical conclusions He had established were again refuted by Him to the utter amazement of the scholars. He did this twice, each time presenting a new conclusion and then refuting them again. In a dazed state they acquiesced, "Yes You are most intelligent, but they were unable to know the truth about Him and His words by the influence of the Lord's illusory potency. Although Visvarupa was moving about in their midst they were ignorant about Him. The entire society is so drunk with material activities that they are incapable of glorifying and appreciating a Vaisnava's transcendental status. They are ready to spend handsomely for the mundane functions like their son's birthday or marriage but no one raises a finger to worship Krishna or follow a Krishna centered life. All the scholars and teachers prided themselves in their ability to argue based on logic and sophistry but not one of them endeavored to cultivate Krishna consciousness or devotion to God. And if a few amongst them taught the Bhagavad-Gita then instead of explaining its true essence, devotion to God, they spent time in dry speculations.

Visvarupa went from one assembly to another, one school to another but everywhere the subject of devotion to God was never discussed, throwing Him into depths of despondency.

Advaita Acarya was then lecturing on the book "Yoga Vasistha"; though the book presents the impersonal philosophy Advaita Acarya explained everything in the light of devotional service to Krishna. Who could comprehend Advaita's dissertation, hence he was accepted as the foremost amongst the Vaisnavas. For Visvarupa, Advaita Acarya's association was the only one that gave Him sublime satisfaction.

Visvarupa spent as much time as He could with Advaita, and Advaita enjoyed Visvarupa's company exchanging devotional mellows with Him.

Visvambhar was then a beautiful young boy, sprightly and radiant. One day Mother Saci sent Him to call Visvarupa, saying, "go run and call Your brother to come immediately." Visvambhar ran swiftly to Advaita Acarya's house. He found many exalted devotees, including Srivas Pandit, sitting around Advaita Acarya. Smiling sweetly Visvambhar said, "O brother, please come quickly and take Your lunch." The little boy Visvambhar was so attractive that everyone was bewitched by His extraordinary good looks, they forgot everything and drank into His beauty with their eyes. Everyday the little Visvambhar would come on the pretext of calling His elder brother.

Advaita Acarya seeing the boy began to consider in his heart, "This beautiful lad steals my heart away. This must be the Lord of my heart who bewilders my mind with His exquisite beauty, no one else can do this to me." Lord Visvambhar is the Supersoul within everyone's heart, so having understood Advaita's mind He quickly left.

Visvarupa began to spend more and more time in Advaita Acaryas company, relishing the transcendental moments with him free from all material encumbrances. Detailed narrations of Visvarupa's unlimited pastimes are mentioned earlier in the first volume. By the will of providence Visvarupa left home and took up the sannyasa order of a mendicant. His name now became Sankararanya. Visvarupa embracing the renounced order left an indelible mark of acute separation in Saci devi's tender and vulnerable heart.

When the throbbing pain of the first days of Visvarupa's departure had waned to a dull despondent ache, Mother Saci calmly considered the following thoughts, "Advaita, due to my son's close association with him, must have influenced Visvarupa to take up the renounced order." Mother Saci never spoke these thoughts aloud, careful not to commit Vaisnava aparadha, she silently suffered her fate. Then gradually she started finding solace in little Visvambhar, and He seeming to understand His mother's grief did much to give her joy, slowly filling up the emptiness Visvarupa left behind.

Then after sometime had passed and Visvambhar had grown up to a young man. He also started to spend more time in Advaita Acarya's company. He stayed little time at home with His young and patient Lakshmipriya but was for long hours in Advaita's house. The sad realizations dawned on Mother Saci that her son was hardly in the house and often to be seen in Advaita's house. She thought, "Advaita Acarya will also take this son away from me."

So out of desperation and anguish Mother Saci burst out saying, "to the world he may be known as "Advaita" or non-dual, but to me he is "Dvaita" or full of duplicity. He already drove out my moonlike effulgent son and now he does not have this young one in peace. I am a destitute mother, yet no one has any pity for me. This Advaita has deceived me." This was all that Mother Saci had said that is supposed to be so offensive that the Lord deemed her unfit to render devotional service to the Supreme Lord.

Some persons make the grave blunder for which they will soon have to suffer, trying to compare Vaisnavas, calling one a bigger Vaisnava than the other. Lord Caitanya made His own mother instrumental in teaching the whole world how to avoid and become free from Vaisnava–aparadha. And if someone does not pay heed to Lord Caitanya's warning and teachings on Vaisnava–aparadha then he will remain completely ignorant about the offenses and thus suffer the terrible consequences. In this context a few words can be said why Lord Caitanya revealed this pastime.

Lord Caitanya the Supreme Lord is the knower of past, present and future. He knew that in future some evil minded persons will try to exploit this situation to their own selfish advantage. They will wrongly proclaim Advaita Acarya to be the Supreme Lord Krishna thus violating the instructions of the pure Vaisnavas and committing a grievous offense. These miscreants will try to protect against those who rightly will declare that Advaita is a "pure Vaisnava devotee." Although they may claim to be the followers of Advaita Acarya still no one will rescue them from the jaws of imminent destruction, not even Advaita Acarya himself.

Lord Caitanya knew that this will happen soon in the future so He punished His own mother in the presence of exalted Vaisnavas like Advaita Acarya. The spiritual master even cannot protect his own disciples against the wrath of the Lord if his disciple commits Vaisnava–aparadha. In fact the Guru himself of such a disciple is hard pressed to protect himself from the reactions of Vaisnava–aparadha. And if the Guru is in a very elevated stage of devotion then he can protect himself alone, but if he is not so elevated then he along with the disciples sinks down into hell.

So, those who try to glorify Advaita Acarya as the Supreme Lord instead of respecting him as an exalted Vaisnava in fact ends up criticizing him and dishonoring him. What greater glorification embellishes one than to be known as the associate of the Supreme Lord Caitanya. Lord Caitanya has of course declared in no uncertain terms about Lord Nityananda that He is the Supreme Lord Himself. And one can know the Supreme Absolute position of Lord Caitanya only by Lord Nityananda's mercy.

And only by Lord Nityananda's mercy can one recognize a true Vaisnava and understand his transcendental position. Without Lord Nityananda's sweet grace there's no way to deliver one from the punishment of Vaisnava–aparadha, and it is by His mercy alone that one develops the mood of loving devotion to the Supreme Lord.

The true followers of Lord Nityananda are free from fault–finding, they engage their full time blissfully in glorifying Lord Caitanya. They are always careful to avoid all the pitfalls in devotional life. They have made Lord Caitanya their very life and soul.

No ordinary person with little piety can become a devotee of Lord Nityananda, because to them is revealed the supra–mundane activities of Lord Caitanya. One who reads or hears this transcendental narration about Visvarupa becomes the servant of Lord Ananta and also very dear to Lord Nityananda.

Lord Nityananda and Visvarupa are one and the same personality. Mother Saci is well aware of this esoteric truth. This truth is also known to others who are fixed in mature Krishna consciousness.

All glory to Lord Nityananda who is always taking shelter of Lord Gauracandra.

You are the stalwart preacher of congregational chanting from Bengal. Who can take shelter of Lord Caitanya without first receiving Your grace?

If anyone falls from the favor and association of Lord Nityananda then he can never ever experience actual bliss. Will that day ever be mine when I shall see Lord Nityananda and Lord Caitanya together with all Their associates?

My greatest source of strength and security is that Lord Caitanya is the Lord of my dear Lord Nityananda. I also pray at the lotus feet of Advaita Acarya prabhu that may my natural attraction flow spontaneously to His lotus feet and to the feet of all His servitors.

Lord Sri Krishna Caitanya and Lord Nityananda are my life and soul.

I, Vrndavan das, offer this humble song at Their lotus feet.

Madhya Lila

Chapter 23

All glory to Lord Caitanya who is an ocean of all transcendental excellences. All glory to Him who is also known as Visvambhar, who is the law giver of the entire material creation.

You are very dear to Lord Nityananda and the crest jewel of the brahminical race. All glory to Your dearmost devotees.

Lord Visvambhar continued His transcendental activities in Navadvipa but not all could see them. As Lord Visvambhar the Supreme hero descended from Vaikuntha, went about revealing His pastimes, the sublime joy of the devotees also increased. His dearmost associate and brother Lord Nityananda accompanied Him everywhere and relished the transcendental mellows with Him and His devotees.

The Lord was always intoxicated drinking the nectar of His own transcendental name. Every night He was submerged in the congregational chanting of the Lord's name with only His devotees; the non-devotees were disallowed in these kirtans. No one could fathom the Lord's potencies or activities. The envious persons, not being allowed to these kirtans, went around spreading bad rumors.

Someone said, "Who can be a real Vaisnava in Kali yuga? All those people are doing this simply for their food." Someone else said, "If we could tie their hands and feet and throw them into the pond then we might enjoy quiet and peace." Yet another said, "Know one thing for certain, friends: this Nimai Pandit will ruin this village."

These miscreants tried various means to enter the kirtan hall while the kirtan was in progress. They even reverted to threatening the devotees, but because their hearts were dried up of any piety they could not influence the devotees and so could not participate in the kirtans. Lord Caitanya performed these nocturnal kirtans, and purified the entire material existence. Many towns folk desired very much to see these kirtans but lamented bitterly: ascribing the reason for not being able to see the kirtans to their great misfortune. Some of them would approach one of the devotees and pray to them to first deliver them from their sins and then secretly smuggle them inside the kirtan hall. But the devotees know that the Lord is the Omniscient Supersoul, He would immediately detect an unauthorized person's presence, so out of fear of inviting the Lord's wrath, the devotees refused to take anyone inside.

Once a brahmacari, a celibate student who was very peaceful, honest and faultless, practicing penances and living only on milk and fruits, not eating anything else, wanted to see the kirtans of the Lord. But the Lord personally shut the doors so that non-devotees may not enter. So this brahmacari would visit Srivas Pandit everyday and repeatedly request him to allow him inside the kirtan. He would say, "If you kindly take me inside your house during the kirtan then I can feast my eyes on the Pandits chanting and dancing, I will be ever grateful to you for this."

Finally one day Srivas Pandit replied, "I know you to be a good person, who spent a sinless life eating only fruits and milk, maintaining strict celibacy; I think you are eligible to see the Lord's kirtan and dancing. But you have to remain hidden inside the house since the Lord's orders are that no one is allowed inside. "He brought the brahmacari inside, who then carefully concealed himself.

The kirtan started and the Lord of the fourteen worlds, Visvambhar began to dance. Lord Nityananda and Gadadhara Pandit danced around the Lord. While Advaita went dancing hither and thither floating on waves of joy. Everyone was drowned in an ocean of ecstasy becoming oblivious of the external world as the Lord of Vaikuntha was lost in Himself, dancing to His devotees singing. The only sound that was heard were the Lord's names. And the Lord exhibited all the ecstatic symptoms in unlimited waves.

The omniscient Supreme Lord Visvambhar was fully aware of the brahmacari's presence. Though he was in concealment. After a short while the Lord commented, "Today I do not feel the usual ecstasy while dancing can any of you explain this; maybe someone is hiding inside the house, please tell me the truth." Srivas Pandit became very afraid, he said, "My Lord, I assure you there is no atheists or nonbeliever in this house, only a brahmacari, a fully qualified brahman who is sinless and drinks only milk and eats only fruits. He had a strong desire to see You dancing. You were very right my Lord, he is here now in hiding?"

This information enraged the Lord, and said, "Right now, this very moment take him out of this house. What spiritual sadhana does he possess to enable him to see My dancing. How can he develop devotion to Me by drinking milk." The Lord dramatically raised His arms and pointing His finger to make a point, He continued, "Just by drinking milk no one can attain Me. Even a low caste dog-eater can claim Me if he takes full shelter of Me, then I also accept him.

A person maybe a renunciate, a sannyasi without worldly attachments, but if he does not surrender to Me then I do not favor him. Tell me, how did Gajendra the elephant, or Hanuman the monkey, or the gopis, the simple milkmaids of Vraja attain Me? What great austerities did they perform. Even the demons perform severe penances and austerities, but they are slain because they do not surrender to Me. I will not have any milk drinker here polluting everything, I will destroy everything."

The brahmacari was by now trembling with fear. He came out of his concealment thinking, "It has been my great fortune to be able to see what I have seen, and I have also received the commensurate punishment for my misdeed. But what a wonderful dancing and singing I saw!" A devotee thinks and feels this way, he being the Lord's servitor is always willing to accept all chastisement from the Lord. The brahmacari started to walk out of the house with these thoughts in his mind, which of course were already known to the Lord.

The most merciful Lord then had the brahmacari brought back to the house. He placed His lotus feet on his head and blessed him, the blessed Lord said, "Do not try to gain strength by performing austerities and penances. Render loving devotional service to the Supreme Lord Visnu, Krishna for it is the highest of all other activities."

The brahmacari began to weep in joy thinking constantly about the Lord's causeless mercy upon him. The devotees became jubilant and offered their obeisances to the Lord. The Lord then continued to dance ecstatically. One who hears this wonderful narration will certainly unite with Lord Caitanya in devotional service. I offer my prostrated obeisances at the feet of the brahmacari who displayed such wonderful devotional understanding in accepting the Lord's chastisement.

Time passed and the Lord continued His nocturnal kirtan sessions with His intimate devotees, barring everyone else to enter the premises. The pious population of Navadvipa felt pained at being disallowed during these kirtan pastimes of the Lord and they blamed the atheists and miscreants for this. They complained, "We cannot see this wonderful kirtan which is like a grand celebration each evening because of these fault finding non-devotees.

They only know one activity and that is to criticize others and so they are being deprived of seeing such an extraordinary kirtan pastime of the Lord. And Nimai Pandit has thus shut the doors to keep out these mischief mongers but unfortunately even the good people are kept from coming.

Everyone knows that Nimai Pandit is a very exalted devotee of Krishna, His heart is pure and faultless. And if we have full faith and devotion in Him then we will indeed see His kirtan and dancing. One of the pious souls commented, "let us just go sit there and then we can feast our eyes with Nimai's dancing. Nimai Pandit has appeared in Navadvipa to deliver the entire universe. I tell you that He will propagate the congregational chanting of the Holy Name of God in every house and in every town. In this way all the pious folks increased their good fortune and the impious ones multiplied their sufferings by criticizing the Lord.

With the approach of dawn all these devotees went to meet Nimai Pandit. Everyone brought some gifts for the Lord like, new articles, bananas, fruits, yogurt, clarified butter, flower garlands etc. As soon as they saw the Lord they fell to the ground and prostrated obeisances. The Lord blessed them saying, "May you be blessed by developing love for Krishna, do not waste time with gossip just chant Krishna's Holy Name."

The Lord then instructed them on the Holy Name, "Now listen from Me the Maha Mantra, 'Hare Krishna, Hare Krishna, Krishna Krishna, Hare Hare, Hare Rama, Hare Rama, Rama Rama, Hare Hare.' Go and repeatedly chant this mantra a prescribed number of times. One can achieve all perfections from this chanting so go on repeating these names, for this chanting is not restricted by any rules. You can sit around together five or ten of You in your house and chant or sing this mantra accompanied by the clapping of hands or cymbals. When you are singing together then sing this, "Haraye namah Krishna Yadavaya namah Gopal Govinda Ram Sri Madhusudana. This congregational chanting should be joined by one and all, father, brother, wife, son all together.

Now that the devotees had directly received the mantra and the instructions to chant from the Lord they went back to their homes happily after offering their obeisances to the Lord. They followed strictly the Lord's instructions and all the time chanted Krishna's name, meditating on the Lord's lotus feet. And at the end of the day they assembled in their houses and loudly sang the holy names, gaily clapping their hands and cymbals in rhythm.

In this manner Lord Caitanya began inspiring everyone to take up the congregational chanting of the Holy Name; He went about embracing the devotees encouraging their devotional zeal, placing His own garlands around them. In a most humble manner He went about requesting all, "My dear brothers please serve Krishna."

Seeing the Lord in this mood, and emblem of humility the devotees become surcharged with spiritual sentiments and they began to weep and intensify their chanting. The whole town now became involved in congregational chanting. The devotees brought out their drums, conchshells and cymbals that they generally used to celebrate the worship of goddess Durga during a big festival, and began to play accompanying the kirtan with joyous sounds. The whole town was enveloped by the transcendental sound of the Lord's name. Sridhar, the leaf-plate seller, happened to be walking down that way loudly singing Krishna's name.

When he heard that loud kirtan he began to dance in ecstasy. When the other devotees saw this dear devotee of Lord Caitanya dancing they came and surrounded him and began to sing. Sridhara was overwhelmed with spiritual emotions and he fell to the ground rolling on the floor and kept chanting Krishna's Name. When the nondevotees saw this they started ridiculing him and laughing at him. They said, "Just see him! that fellow also has become a Vaisnava. He can't afford clothes nor does he have money to eat suddenly he is exhibiting all these ecstatic symptoms, this is all for show. They all live by begging but now they have started an untimely festival. The atheists continued to hurl such insulting remarks at the devotees but the pious devotees went on chanting Krishna's name undeterred.

One day the Muslim magistrate, the Kazi was passing that way. He heard the tumult of singing, of the Lord's name accompanied by drums, cymbals and conchshell. He tried to remember the instruction in his own scripture about practice of other religions. The Kazi cried out, "Catch all of them, let us see what your teacher Nimai Pandit does to stop me." All the devotees fled in fear of Muslim fanatics. The Kazi's men went about breaking the drums and beating up the devotees, spreading terror. He said, "It seems that there is sudden out burst of Hindu religious activities nowadays in Nadia, I will punish the culprits severely.

Since it is already late and getting dark I am letting you off but if I see this again I will convert all of you to Islam." The evil Kazi would send his men everyday patrolling the town looking for any kirtan. The devotees became despondent and they went into hiding fearing violent retaliation from the Kazi and his men.

The envious atheists were siding with the Kazi. They commented, "God's name should be chanted in the mind. Which scripture enjoins one to make a hue and cry in chanting God's name. This is a correct punishment they have received for transgressing the Vedic injunctions. They have no fear of flouting the social norms. That NImai Pandit who acts so proud will now be cowered by the Kazi. And that Nityananda who roams about everywhere will soon see the end of all the fun. They call us atheists for speaking out the truth, at long last Nadia will be rid of these charlatans."

The devotees did not protest against the Kazi ban out of fear. They went to the Lord and reported to Him, "We have stopped our kirtan out of fear for the Kazi, whose men in hundreds search the streets and houses. We will have to leave Navadvipa and settle elsewhere, we have come to tell You this." When Lord Caitanya heard that someone was trying to stop the sankirtan movement He became infuriated, He looked awesome, almost like Lord Siva at the time of the cosmic annihilation.

He roared loudly like the rumbling of thunder and the devotees afraid of this sudden change in the Lord held their ears as if begging forgiveness from the Lord for a mistake they had not committed. The Lord said, "Nityananda, be prepared, go immediately to all the Vaisnavas, and assemble then on the streets. I shall bring out a kirtan party and take it all over Navadvipa. I will see what anyone can do to Me. You will see how I burn the Kazi's house down. Today I shall shower incessant rains of love of Godhead on everyone. Today the atheist's will face the final hour. So do not waste a moment My brothers go and deliver this message to everyone.

Tell them that if they are desirous of seeing Krishna's mystic potency in action then let them bring a flaming torch with them. I will smash the Kazi's palace and I will do kirtan all along. The entire creation is full of My devotees and when I am present there then what is there to fear! Go and put a stop to your anguish come and assemble in the afternoon after lunch."

The devotees dispersed right away, each going his way in great anticipation not caring about eating or anything. Excited talks filled every home that, "Nimai Pandit will take out a sankirtan and dance in the streets of Navadvipa." For the many thousands who were lamenting for so long that they could not see Nimai Pandit's dancing this news was cause of great rejoicing. So everyone prepared their own torch. Even if the father had made a torch the son made his own.

They competed with each other to make the biggest torch. Huge barrels of oil were kept in readiness. Navadvipa in those days was very thickly populated. The constant flow of people with torches poured out of the houses onto the streets. Who could count the millions of torches. The women, children, and old men were excited with great anticipation. Slowly the clusters of devotees moved towards Nimai Pandit's house.

When Lord Caitanya heard that all the Vaisnavas had assembled at His behest and were at His door steps. He went to meet them and began to organize them in groups. Advaita Acarya was to head up a group and was the chief dancer and he would be supported by a kirtan group. In another group Haridas was the dancer and he also was backed by a kirtan group. Yet another group was to be led by the main dancer Srivas Pandit. The Lord's eyes fell on Nityananda and immediately He said, "I will not leave Your side My Lord. My only duty is to always be near You. I can never leave Your lotus feet embedded in My heart. What power do I possess to dance independently away from You. My devotional service to You is that I am always with You." When Lord Caitanya saw the streams of ecstasy flowing from Nityananda's eyes He embraced Him and kept Him near Him. In this each had his desire fulfilled. Some went off with his group. Others stayed close to the Lord, dancing and singing.

Now please listen attentively to the description of this "nagar-kirtan" for this will cut asunder the bonds of karmic reactions. Here is the list of some of the main devotees who came:

Gadadhara Pandit, Vakresvara, Murari, Srivas Pandit, Gopinath, Jagadisa, Vipra Gangadas, Ramai, Govindanandana, Chandrasekhara, Vasudeva, Srigarbha, Mukunda, Sridhara, Govinda, Jagadananda, Nandan Acarya, Suklambara.

The devotees of Lord Caitanya are innumerable and I do not know all their names; Vedavyas will reveal all their names in the future in the Puranas. It is not humanly possible to describe how the Lord danced along with all His associates of different categories.

The sankirtan pastimes of the Lord is unique, never was such pastimes ever revealed before in any other incarnation. As the kirtan picked up gusto the Lord's joy also increased. The devotees were carried in waves of sublime joy. The Lord and husband of the goddess of fortune was dancing on Navadvipa streets and anyone who saw Him became free from all sorrows. Soon it was dusk but the devotees were totally engrossed in the kirtan oblivious of the material realm.

Millions of men, women, and children lined the streets standing in doorways seeing the moving mass of men and their tumultuous singing of the Lord's holy name echoed and filled the cosmos. And above this tumult rang out loud and clear the Lord's own thunderous voice. The devotees replied with equal gusto chanting Lord Hari's name. Then as if by previous arrangement all the torches were lit at the same time like magic.

Millions of flaming torches lit up the darkened sky matched by the millions of hearts kindled by the magic of sublime bliss. Words fail to describe the marvelous sight. One could be easily confused whether it was a full moon night or broad daylight or had Krishna Himself descended in the form of His Brahmajyoti.

The Lord again called out loud the name of Lord Hari and the devotees became attentive. They surrounded the Lord with the kirtan. All the devotees were decorated with flower garlands around their neck and their bodies were smeared with sandalwood paste and scented vermilion powder. Each one had some musical instrument or the other in their hands, looking more powerful than thousands of lions. The Lord looked around Him to see His devoted, servitors eagerly waiting to render Him any service. He began to dance lifting the devotees in soaring heights of ecstasy. Everyone began chanting loudly and whoever saw the Lord's moonlike beautiful face were released from searing pain of material existence.

The Lord's charming looks overshadowed the attractiveness of millions of cupids put together. I am at a loss to find the appropriate similes to describe the Lord's beauty yet I venture to do so only by His mercy alone otherwise who can dare to attempt such an impossible task. He glowed like a mountain of gold, His body being smeared with sandal paste sometimes looked like the rising full moon. His curly dark tresses were decorated with the fragrant Malati garlands; a sweet smile clung intimately to His lips that can win the hearts of all the muses. The clear markings of sandalwood tilak with a red dot of Vermillion adorned His beautiful broad forehead.

He raised His arms up in the sky chanting the name of Hari and danced. The knee long flower garland around His neck swayed with each movement. His upraised arms glistened like fine tapering pillars of gold, His body became drenched with the incessant flow of ecstatic tears from His lotus petal eyes. As the ecstatic feelings increased the hairs of His body stood on end like the ever fresh Kadamba flower.

The moist reddish lips so exquisite and when parted revealed a symmetrical set of pearl like white teeth. The long arched eyebrows languished almost all the way up to the beginning of His ears. His strong shoulders shamed the king of elephants and His chest was broad and full. The brahman thread hung loosely across His chest. Laksmi devi and Tulasi devi are constantly praying for the shelter of His lotus feet.

That Supreme Lord wears His fine and clean clothes very artistically. The uptilted nose is aristocratic and the sinewy tendons of His neck gives the impression of being the neck of the king of the forest, strong and powerful, He towers over the others, His long body well formed and proportionate whining like a mountain of Mother gold. Everyone looking at Him commented on His divine and beautiful presence.

The millions who milled around for this momentous occasion were very fortunate in spite of their large number they all received the Lord's benedictions by being able to see the Lord's exquisite transcendental face. They simply stared at Him irresistibly drawn to His beauty and exclaimed out loud the Lord's name each time uncontrollable emotions welled within their hearts.

The citizens had nicely decorated their doorways with banana trees, water pots, mango leaves, and green coconuts. The ghee lamp flickered in every house and an offering plate sat on the altars with yogurt, grains, and Dhruva grass.

All this happened as if at the command of some unseen voice. Out on the street men, women children joined the congregation all intoxicated with sublime joy: oblivious to every other care. Seeing the carefree citizens leaving their house unguarded a thief thought to himself, "This is good opportunity for me to clean out the people's belongings."

But as time passed and the chanting entering his ears took affect, the thief got rid of his stealing tendencies and also joined in with the others joyously chanting Lord Hari's sweet transcendental name.

The streets were strewn with puffed rice and coins thrown by the citizens as they watched the chanting procession passing by and then later they themselves joined up with the procession and so the marchers swelled in numbers. One should not consider these descriptions as exaggerations. Such happenings are common place when the Supreme Lord is present. When Lord Krishna was in Dvaraka, it is described in the Srimad Bhagavatam, that He made appear in a twinkling of an eye nine hundred thousand palaces all bedecked with jewels and marble.

Again in the Harivamsa it is described that when Lord Krishna was having water sports with the Yadus in the salt water ocean that surrounds Dvaraka the entire ocean in a moment turned nectarean sweet. And now that very same Supreme Lord is almost unconscious with sublime bliss dancing and chanting so naturally all auspicious happenings are occurring.

The ocean of people now surged forward in slow fluid motion like the Ganga's current that flowed besides them. They all danced and chanted surrounding the dancing golden form of the Lord. Advaita Acarya, Haridas Thakura, Srivas Pandita and other senior associates of the Lord led huge groups of dancing and chanting devotees, everyone exulting in the bliss of the Lord's presence. Those who could not sing were now singing with sweet melodious voices.

The Lord was surrounded by the best singers like Murari, Mukanda Datta, Ramai, Govinda, Vakreswar, Vasudeva and others. Lord Nityananda and Gadadhara Pandit danced on either side to the Lord submerged in divine bliss. And always the dancing and prancing form of the Lord brought wonderment and exhilaration in the hearts of all those who beheld His golden form.

This was a magnificent sight; the dancers moved forward in rhythmic motions and the millions of burning torches were also in motion, their licking flames animated in a passionate dance. It was night, but the dancing figure of the Lord was clearly visible as if bathed in autumn full moonlight. Sometimes His body was covered with shining dust particles and at other times He bathed His transcendental form in the cascading tears of ecstasy.

The different ecstatic symptoms appeared in His body, sometimes shivering, sometimes profuse perspiration, again at times horripilation, changing like the seasons. The sound of the Lord's name reverberated throughout the universe, "Hari Haraya nama Krishna Yadavaya namah, Gopal Govinda Ram Sri Madhusudana," "Hari Rama, Rama Hari." Some devotees danced on their own but there were many large groups of devotees dancing together keeping time with clapping hands. Another wonderful sight was that those devotees carrying torches and oil containers together.

Navadvipa was ringing with sounds of sublime jubilation, as if the Lord's spiritual abode Vaikuntha, had descended, and residents of Navadvipa acquired the same characteristics as the residents of Vaikuntha. They All manifested four-arms but because they were so engrossed in the ecstasy of chanting and dancing that they did not even notice this divine transformation on their person, the ever increasing bliss of Vaikuntha was now here.

As they passed by the bank of The Ganga, Lord Caitanya dancing in the midst looked like Krishna, the son of Nanda Maharaj; a flute in His hand and the garland of wild flowers around His neck swayed.

The devotees had never experienced the ecstasy of such a massive congregational chanting. They forgot their bodily identity, their tribulation; they sang and danced and rolled on the ground. Many persons became emboldened and made their views heard to the public. One said, "Where did the rascal Kazi go? Now, if I just find him I will sever his head."

Others shouted out aloud the names of certain atheistic persons and beat the ground, as if sealing their fate with a stroke, some of them even ran helter skelter trying to locate them. There was no accounting the number of people singing, or how many were playing on the Mrdanga drums. Navadvipa was flooded with the nectarean showers of love of Godhead, so much so that even the eternal residents of Vaikuntha were hankering for this bliss. Even Lord Ananta, Lord Siva and Lord Brahma experience this kind of joy.

Sublime bliss had descended over the entire planet as the Lord danced with His associates and devotees, and there was no place for anything inauspicious or impure. This was the Lord's first major nagar sankirtan.

The procession moved on but no one knew where they were going. There was just one resounding thunder of the Lord's name piercing the coverings of the material world that was all pervading. The demigods accompanied by their associates came to see the Lord. When they saw Him they alike the humans also became overwhelmed with transcendental joy. They mingled in with the crowd dressed as humans to avoid detection and joined in with gusto singing and dancing.

All the demigods were present, Brahma, Siva, Varuna, Kuvera, Indra, Yamaraj, Soma the moon god, etc. They became aware that everyone present there was experiencing transcendental ecstasy so they went along with the devotees wanting more of the Lord's association. Thus the humans and the demigods were chanting the Lord's Holy Name together.

As the procession passed the uncountable houses all nicely decorated, the market places, the large squares one could understand that Navadvipa was a very well populated and an opulent town. It was impossible to count the people that lived there. It seemed that because the Supreme Lord was to advent here that He had arranged for many people to live here and participate in His sankirtan movement. Just the number of ladies who were chanting were so numerous that counting them would be futile.

Everyone who saw the Lord dancing and chanting like a golden flash could not contain their hearts and emotions. Even those with hearts of stone were moved to tears falling to the ground seeing how the Lord showered His causeless mercy and hearing the sighs and sobs of sublime ecstasy of the devotees. As the Lord danced repeating over and over again Lord Hari's name the garland of flowers swayed wildly.

His beauty was breath taking, the way the brahman thread hung carelessly over His shoulders, the dhoti nicely pleated and tucked in place neatly, His golden frame covered with fine glimmering dust. Tears flowed unrestrained from His lotus eyes like the languid flow of the Mandakini Ganga of his heavenly planets. Who would have liked to see the moon after having seen the blooming lotus face of the Lord. As some of the tear drops clung to the cleft of His fine nose they shone like a string of white pearls. His glossy black locks entwined with the garlands around His head made a fine sight.

The devotees prayed, "O Lord please grant us this one desire that we may hold within our hearts this pastime birth after birth." The devotees were asking in this manner for benedictions from the Lord as the Lord continued His extraordinary dancing pastime, surrounded by His intimate associates. The Lord knew how to inspire devotees to come and join and He danced always reciprocating the mood and movement of the devotees. the Lord of Vaikuntha danced as the devotees sang, "come and sing 'Hari, Hari' all of you, fear not for the Holy name even though not chanted purely will deliver you from death."

The author humbly describes in poetry the description of Lord Caitanya as He danced. Lord Visvambhar the Lord of the Universe danced along the bank of the Ganga. The devotees eagerly covered themselves with the earth having the impressions of His lotus feet. Wonderful ecstatic symptoms manifested on His person and tears like nectar cascaded from His eyes; with a voice like the rumble of thunder He chanted Lord Hari's name. Smiling sweetly He raised His arms and sang.

His golden form was much more enchanting than Cupid. Charmingly dressed His black curly hair was decorated with fresh and fragrant flower garlands; such beauty sent the mind reeling as if when a person is afflicted by the five amorous arrows of Cupid. In complete bliss Visvambhar moved about in a restless dance, He was intoxicated with the Holy Name. His body and limbs were perfectly shaped and beautiful being nicely smeared with sandal paste.

The garland around His neck matched His love agitated movements. The arch of His eyebrows were like Cupid's bow shooting arrows of enchantment. His teeth were white and glistening like pearls, His benign face was an ocean of mercy. How can I describe the many hundreds of ecstatic emotions that manifested in Him, sometimes tears, or shivering, or perspiration etc. At times He bent His body in three places just like Krishna and played flute on His finger.

He moved about like a maddened elephant, He was the cynosure of every eye. His brahman thread decorated His broad chest as if Ananta Sesa had taken that thin form to serve His Lord. Lord Nityananda and Gadadhara and all the other intimate devotees danced by His side and each time they looked at the Lord they saw the Lord smiling back at them.

Lord Siva by chanting the name of this Lord becomes mad and goes about naked, that same Lord is now going on the streets of Navadvipa performing congregational chanting, Laksmidevi, the goddess of fortune, is hankering always to touch and dress this Supreme Lord's black curly locks and is so attracted by His dress, that self same Supreme Lord is so engrossed in singing and dancing that He rolls in the dust in ecstasy. Following Him are His devotees carrying millions of flaming torches lighting up the world like the full moon and not a soul could refrain from chanting the Lord's Holy Name. This was such a marvel that Navadvipa had never witnessed, the residents looked at each other and chanted "Hari, Hari".

Lord Nityananda was always by the Lord's side knowing Visvambhar's every mood, so whenever the Lord swooned in ecstasy He held out His hands to hold Him. As He held Him this time visvambhar slowly sat down in a meditative pose and clapping His hand gleefully began to loudly chant "hari, Hari". Then He began to speak with childlike innocence, "I am the Supreme Lord Narayana, I killed that demon Kamsa and I deceived Bali Maharaj.

I constructed that bridge over the ocean to Sri Lanka and killed the demon Ravana, I am Lord Ramachandra." In this manner He revealed His real Supreme identity. Not everyone could understand this esoteric truth for it is inconceivable by human mind. And in the next moment to increase their confusion the Lord changed His mood completely and said with utmost humility and meekness, "O Lord please grant Me devotion at Your lotus feet."

Whichever way the Lord acted were all so mind robbing, even when He put His toe to His mouth. The Lord of Vaikuntha, Lord Visvambhar was dancing all over the Navadvipa town. This town is actually the Svetadvipa of the spiritual world which will be later explained in the Vedas. Amidst the mrdanga drum, conchshell, cymbals whose number is countless and the chanting of the Holy Name danced the Lord like the crest jewel in the crown.

All glory to the congregational chanting. All glory to Lord Visvambhar.
All glory to the devotees of the Lord. Whichever way I look I see Lord Visvambhar drowning everyone in the nectar ocean of love of Godhead.

The procession sometimes moved fast sometimes much slower depending on how long the Lord danced in one place. The chanting was jubilant and echoed in the spiritual abode of Vaikuntha. The Lord, the cynosure of everyone, moved about like a mad lion intoxicated with the Holy Name. The procession passed many bathing places and proceeded towards Simulia. No one was tired, millions were singing and dancing and a million flaming torches made it difficult discern whether it was midday or night.

The people welcomed the procession with flowers and doorway decorations. As they passed each house; the demigods rained a confetti of fragrant flowers.

MOther Earth was thrilled with ecstasy as the LOrd walked and danced. She wanted the Lord to walk on a soft surface so she had as if collected the strewn flowers and the pathway looked like her delicate tongue.

Srivas, Advaita, Haridas were dancing in groups of their own going ahead of Lord Visvambhar. As in groups of their own going ahead of Lord Visvambhar. As the procession entered each new locality people left their homes and ran to see the Lord. They forgot all other duties and relatives they were all eager to see that beatific moonlike face of the Supreme soul of the entire creation. Without consciously realizing they were all being drawn into this congregational chanting.

Without being aware they were all becoming intoxicated with Holy Name of Krishna. They began manifesting symptoms of supramundane joy. Some rolled on the ground, some made sounds with their mouth as if playing a musical instrument. Others were embracing anyone they met. They had become so inebriated by the chanting and dancing that many were seen just offering prostrated obeisances falling to the ground like a rod, and there were others who were catching the devotees feet and simply crying in ecstasy.

One could hear many comments from different people. Someone said, "I am this NImai Pandit. I have been assigned to deliver the world." Another commented, "I am a Vaisnava from Svetadvipa." Yet another remarked, "I am an eternal resident of Vaikuntha." Again someone said, "Where is that rascal Kazi. I will crush his head if I could lay my hands on him."

Incited by such comments some ran to try to capture an atheist and climbed up a tree and then jumped down angrily shouting, "I am death to twelve atheists."

Another said, "Can you hear me O God of Death! Tell me where is your son, the Sun god?" The Lord of Vaikuntha appearing as Saci's son was now and here chanting and dancing. The floodgates of the Holy Name were flung open by Him.

The Holy Names which gave the God of Death Yamaraj the name Dharmaraj or the upholder of religious principles, and the Holy Name that saved the worst of sinners Ajamila from the jaws of doom, was now being freely distributed by the Lord Himself, and those who could not chant the name could at least hear it chanted and reap the transcendental benefits.

Chitrugupta, the compiler of man's good and evil deeds in life has to be immediately informed that his records of evil deeds have to be thrown away. I cannot be blamed if I take stern action against him if he disobeys since now every living entity is delivered.

That Holy Name has converted Varanasi into one of the most important places of pilgrimage because Lord Siva is constantly chanting that Holy Name of Krishna.

This Holy Name is always chanted by the purest of devotees who are the eternal residents of the spiritual abode. Lord Siva has become worshipable by all the demigods and humans because he is relishing every moment the sweet nectar of the Holy Name.

This very name is now being heard by every living entity. So the devotees warned all the atheists that if they do not discard their evil ways and take up the chanting of the Holy Name and the worship of Lord Visvambhar than they will destroy them, the devotees loudly challenged the atheists to now come forward and desist their chanting of Krishna's name. They fisted the earth with great force as if beating to pulp a recalcitrant atheist. The effects of chanting the Holy Name had so divinely enmaddened them that they were not aware of what they did or said.

When the atheist saw that citizens of navadvipa had all become mad with ecstasy they were bathing inside with hate and envy. They got together and began conspiring. They said, "if the Kazi was to come right now then I would like to see where that NImai Pandit will run to. What will happen to all their fanfare dancing and singing. Where will they hide their banana trees, mango leaves and rest of the decorations. As soon as Kazi hears their great commotion and sees their lit torches he will immediately come and they will have to jump into the Ganges to escape his wrath."

One of them said, "Then I will place myself near to a group and in the stampede I will tie their necks together." Another said, "Then let us go and inform the Kazi." Someone objected to this saying, "I see no logic in doing that." Another made his point strongly, "I can see only one logical thing to do, that is let us go all together to those sentimentalists and loudly shout that "The Kazi and his men are here", then they will quickly disperse." This way the atheists were eating their jealous heart out while the devotees floated on clouds of ecstatic chanting and dancing.

The devotees were looking so effulgent. They were decorated with sandalwood paste and flower garlands. They were so fully engrossed in the Holy Name that they became oblivious to everything. The sankirtan proceeded towards Srimulia.

As the devotees chanted and danced the Lord also chanted and danced right in their midst. The activities of devotees increased the Lord's ecstasy. No one could imagine how much water was contained in the Lord's lotus eyes.

Incessant tears cascaded in rivulets of pure nectarean water. Sometimes shivering overcame Him that He lay on the ground. Even Nityananda Prabhu was lamenting because He could not hold Him still. And when at the pinnacle of ecstasy He fell unconscious then no force of life was found in Him for a long time. This was the wonder of wonders.

Excited talks went around amongst the citizens. They said, "This person must be the Supreme Lord Narayan Himself." Another said, "He is so much like Narada or Prahlad or even Sukadeva Goswami." "Whoever He may be, He is certainly not an ordinary human being." The more critical and calculating ones said, "He is indeed a great devotee." Each one commented according to the level of one's understanding.

Lord Nimai was oblivious of anything. He was engrossed in the ecstasy of the Holy Name, and as He lifted His arms chanting "Hari, Hari!" everyone around, by hearing the Lord, felt irresistibly drawn to Him and they all echoed loudly after Him the Lord's name. Whichever direction the Lord chose the entire congregation moved that way. The Lord was now heading towards the Kazi's house. The sound of chanting and revelry became clearly audible to the inmates of Kazi's palace.

When Kazi heard the loud clamor of chanting he enquired, "Can you hear that sound of music and singing? is that a marriage party or is it some weird incarnations of strange beings. Have they disobeyed my orders and again started their Hindu practices out in the streets? Go quickly and find out all the details, after you return with information I shall personally go." Kazi's spy left immediately and arrived at the scene of the massive congregational kirtan. They were overawed at the sight of the huge mass of people shouting, "Kill the Kazi" and murmuring verses from the Koran for protection they fled in terror.

They came running to the Kazi and spoke rapidly in gulps, "What are we doing here, let us quickly escape. That Nimai Acarya is coming with thousands and thousands of men. They are carrying thousands and thousands of flaming torches all singing their Hindu God's name. The citizens have decorated their houses and doorways welcoming this immense and incredible procession. The roads are covered with flower petals and puffed rice. The sound of their singing is so loud that I felt that my eardrums will burst.

I have never seen such a sight. Even the coming of our royal monarch never draws such incredulous crowds. Nimai is their leader dancing in the middle and everyone is simply following Him. The singers we had attacked the other day are also there. They are all shouting, "Kill the Kazi." And Nimai is the gang leader who is stirring them up. I wonder why this brahmana fellow nImai weeps so much. The tears spout out like two rivers." The other spy replied, "I think He may have some relative somewhere. So He is crying because He is missing him." The other replied, "I am afraid to even look at Him, He looks like He is coming to gobble you up." Kazi said, "Is that really NImai Pandit maybe He is going to get married. I cannot imagine that anyone will try to disregard my orders. If they do, then I will convert them to Muslim." As they were discussing, the sound of the kirtan came closer and closer.

The huge mass of congregation arrived in the locality of Kazi's palace. The crest jewel amongst them all, Lord Visvambhar led them up dancing. The sound of their chanting boomed through out the entire universe echoing in the vaults of heaven, earth and hell. The chanting became unbearably loud for the Kazi and his men, and they made haste to escape fearing the worst for them. Like a mouse running for his life from the snake's mouth. But in the commotion and bustle they were confused, and lost the way.

So many of the Kazi's men spread open their rolled up head cloth and hung it over their heads, so as not to be recognized, and joined in with the dancing, but with a thumping heart. The bearded compatriots of Kazi hung their heads down so that their give away beard remained unexposed. There were so many people that it would be impossible for one to know everyone by face and besides the people were so excited that they were not aware of even their own persons. Everyone was lost in dancing and singing.

Lord Visvambhar stood before Kazi's palace doors, His rising anger visible, with a voice like thunder He said, "Where is that mischief monger, Kazi, bring him right this minute to Me and cut his head off. I will obliterate the entire yavana race from the face of this earth, like I have previously done. Break open and smash everything. Break it! Break it!" These were the orders of the Supreme Lord. Who could disobey? The congregation was already exuberant and inebriated with the association of Lord Caitanya and the Holy Name, so such a command from the Lord was immediately put into action with great enthusiasm.

They ransacked the entire property. They went through the house and indiscriminantly broke anything that came their way. The garden lay limp and ravaged as if after a hurricane. Banana trees lay uprooted; broken branches hung from mango trees; the flower garden was stamped to the ground. Lakhs and lakhs of people overran the palace rooms and the grounds. Through out the entire operation the congregation was chanting, "Hari! Hari!" The Holy Name was their constant companion. They punctuated every move with Lord Hari's name.

Lord Visvambhar then said, "Now burn down everything. Put fire in the house, let the Kazi and all his men burn to death. I want to see what his king will do to Me. I also want to see who has the audacity to check Me. The God of death, time and death all are servants of my devoted servitors. They are created by my glance over material nature. I have advented mainly to propagate the congregational chanting of the Holy Name. If any one so much as tries to cause obstruction then I will annihilate him.

And even if the most lowly sinner participates in the chanting of the Lord's name then he shall be remembered by Me and saved. On the other hand even if, persons are performing austerity, renunciation, Vedic studies, yoga yet do not join the sankirtan movement they will certainly perish. So now do not fear, put fire to the house, I will bring about the total devastation of the entire race of Yavanas."

When they saw the Lord's wrath the devotees fell on their knees and raising their arms prayed to Him, "one of Your principle expansions is Lord Sankarsan, He never manifests His anger untimely; when the time is ready for the destruction of the material world then Rudra appears as Lord Sankarsana's incarnation and expansion. And after Rudra completes the work of annihilation or "pralaya" he again returns into Your transcendental body.

The work of annihilation is carried out by the expansion of Your expansion, so if you are angry then who can check Your wrath. The Vedas glorify You as "angerless and eternally blissful," our hearts cannot see You as minimize the Vedic injunction. Even Lord Brahma never attracts Your ire; creation, maintenance and annihilation of the material world are simply Your transcendental pastimes. Today You have sufficiently chastised that Kazi and if the next time he does anything again then You can destroy him. All glory to Lord Visvambhar, the Supreme Lord of all lords; all glory to Lord Gaurasundar the Lord of the Universe, the Lord of Lakshmidēvi, who rests on Lord Ananta Sesa.

Lord Caitanya smiled after listening to their choice prayers and then began to dance and chant with everyone. The Kazi was justly dealt with; the Lord was pacified that congregational chanting in public will continue. He now led the procession back towards the town. Chanting and dancing began again with previous jubilation and exuberance. Joy once more filled the atmosphere. The devotees were now free from any fear or inhibition. They could chant their beloved Lord Krishna's name anytime.

The atheists were subdued, their spirit broken and the devotees were victorious and jubilant. They again became submerged in the ecstasy of chanting and dancing. Now all the devotees went ahead dancing and chanting and the Lord came up from behind. Lord Brahma, Lord Siva, Lord Ananta and all the other demigods enjoyed themselves participating in the congregational chanting.

The procession entered the locality of traders who deal with conchshells and other connected items. All the residents came out in the best and welcomed the congregation with the necessary Vedic rituals known as "purnakumbha". The roads were strewn with flowers and lamps were lit up in the house. Then they went through the weaver's locality. A great sound of jubilation and chanting of the Lord's name greeted the approaching congregation. Everywhere they went people were mad with joy. They were relishing their well-earned victory over despotism. Lord Caitanya was very happy to see that all were chanting the Lord's Holy Name.

Lord Caitanya dancing in mad ecstasy went to Sridhara's house. Sridhara lived in a small broken hut. He had practically no possessions. A metal pot stood outside his door. The pot was dented and old. It was repaired so many times that even a thief would not think of stealing it. The Lord was dancing in front of Sridhara's house when He saw that the only visible metal pot was filled with water. The Supreme Lord Visvambhar, wanting to teach the human society how much He loved and cared for His devotees, picked up Sridhara's worn out water pot and proceeded to drink water from it with great pleasure, even if someone wanted to stop Him, who could do that. When Sridhara saw what Visvambhar was doing he came running, shouting, "O death, I am finished! I know You have come to my house to destroy me!"

So saying, Sridhara the most saintly personality, fainted on the ground out of great spiritual perturbation.

Lord Visvambhar with utmost satisfaction said, "My whole being has now become purified. Today, finally I have attained devotion to the lotus feet of Lord Krishna simply by drinking water from Sridhara's pot." Saying this the Lord shed tears of divine ecstasy.

The lesson the Lord taught everyone through this pastime is that by drinking water from a pure devotee's water pot one immediately develops attachment to the lotus feet of Lord Krishna.

In the Padma Purana Adikhanda 31/112 it is stated, "The wise devotee who is desirous of purifying himself completely of all sinful reactions should specifically approach a pure Vaisnava and beg from him his food remnants. If all this is not available then at least he should beg some of his water remnants, or drink the water that has washed his feet."

The devotees began to cry in great joy to see the Supreme Lord manifest such mercy and special affection towards His devotee. Nityananda, Gadadhara, Advaita, Srivas fell down to the ground and began to roll and cry. Haridas, Vakreswar, Chandrasekhara, Jagadananda and the numerous other close associates of the Lord, were unable to contain their spiritual emotions. They burst into tears of exultation. They cried out Krishna's sweet name. Sridhara's house became the blessed exhibition site for the highest form of spiritual ecstasy in love of Godhead. The whole universe exulted with the chanting of Krishna's Holy Name; Lord Gauracandra smiled benignly – His mission was accomplished.

Just behold the glory of this devotee's devotion, the Supreme Lord reciprocated his devotion with His full mercy. The Lord drank water with infinite pleasure from Sridhar's water pot made of a base metal. The pot was full of repairs and dents, a pot that was used for many purposes.

The Lord enjoyed drinking from this pot because He was drinking Sridhar's transcendental devotion to Him and so the common liquid water was immediately transformed into divine ambrosia. Thus the Lord taught that everything in relation to a pure devotee is transcendental.

The Supreme Lord, on the other hand, ignores the valuable gem–studded water pot of insolent materialists. He accepts any offering from His surrendered devotees, irrespective of any rules and regulations for offering. If His devotee has little and ordinary food then He forcibly takes it from him, as He has displayed this quality in Dvaraka with Sudam Vipra. It has been seen that the Lord sells Himself to His devotees.

When the Pandavas were banished to the forest, Lord Krishna relished a simple offering of leafy vegetables from Yudhisthira Maharaj. The pure devotees are Krishna's father, mother, wife, brother; Lord Krishna sees His surrendered devotees as His own kith and kin, but not otherwise. Lord Krishna manifests Himself to His devotees according to the desire and mellow of the devotees; Lord Krishna allows Himself to be sold or purchased by His unalloyed devotees.

All the scriptures have described this wonderful quality of Lord Krishna that He specially favors His pure devotees and is always protecting them personally from all calamities.

One should see the magnanimous position of a pure devotee and thus be inspired to develop spiritual attachment for Krishna. The position of Lord Krishna's servant is never to be viewed deprecatingly; Lord Krishna, the Supreme Godhead never accepts as His servant a person of little spiritual caliber.

After having performed his prescribed duties for many millions of lifetimes, leading a pious life of non–violence and humility, and praying constantly and sincerely to the Supreme Lord, a person is awarded the opportunity at his time of death. Ganga water to him and the chanting of Lord Narayana's Holy Name.

This will certainly afford him liberation from all material bondage, only then can he be blessed to become a servant of Lord Krishna. All the commentators of the Bhagavatam have clearly indicated that the liberated souls can render full devotional service to the Supreme Lord, the performer of transcendental pastimes. Therefore the devotee's position is almost equal to the Lord Himself, and the Lord always sees His devotees in a more exalted position than Himself even.

The innumerable eulogies that have been compiled since time immemorial about the divine excellences of a pure devotee are inadequate to describe him perfectly. Lord Siva, and Lord Brahma are very happy to be called Lord Krishna's servants, and Ananta Sesa is always hankering to serve Him. Although the pure devotees are almost equal to the Lord Himself, they are constantly wanting to serve Him in loving attachment.

Advaita Acarya is such an elevated devotee, many persons do not know his real mood and position and so they are discounted, when Advaita Acarya is glorified as a devotee of Lord Caitanya. Lord Krishna is greatly pleased when anyone calls Him a 'devotee' because who besides Lord Krishna knows perfectly well who is a pure devotee. The most abominable sinners proclaim themselves as 'God' only to ensure a full belly regularly.

Gathering around him a crowd of asinine disciples the impostor poses himself as the Lord of the Universe. Although the body of such a cheater, is only fit for the dogs' meals, he still becomes deluded by the external energy of Lord Visnu to think that he is the Supreme Controller. And now just behold the opulence of the Lord of all lords. Lord Gauracandra, simply by His desire, millions of people converged with millions of burning torches to begin an historic march against oppression; all the way they were greeted with decorated doorways and showers of floral confetti from the heavenly denizens.

It was difficult to understand the transformation that took place in the Lord after He drank water from Sridhar's water pot. All the devotees began to shed tears of joy seeing the special mercy that the Supreme Lord showered upon His pure devotee. Sridhar was thunderstruck and with tears brimming over in his eyes holding straw in the teeth in utter humility he knelt before the Lord chanting His Holy Name and said, "What have you done my Lord, what water have You drunk?" But Lord Visvambhar's bliss was uncheckable after having drunk water from His devotee's water vessel, He danced in ecstasy surrounded by all His associates who sang and danced along with Him. Nityananda Prabhu and Gadadhara Pandit were always like two jewels decorating the Lord's either side.

Kholareca Sridhar's fortune is indeed so great that even Lord Siva and Lord Brahma are moved to tears of joy and appreciation. The Supreme Lord Caitanya is unattainable by wealth, fame or erudition, but is captivated by unalloyed devotion. After the water drinking incident the Lord moved on from Sridhar's place towards the town. Navadvipa became the most hallowed place in the entire creation as Lord Caitanya and His associates danced and sang in ecstasy the Lord's Holy Name. Only the sound of the Lord's name echoed in the concave extremities of the universe.

The divine exultation that is experienced by Sukadeva Goswami, Narada Muni, Lord Siva, and others on hearing the Holy Name was now being experienced by the residents of Navadvipa as they passed through the different localities in Navadvipa. Although the kirtan was going on for a whole night one should not think that this was just one night – rather several yugas passed in that time unknown to anyone. Nothing is impossible for Lord Caitanya, the Supreme Lord to accomplish, a mere raising of His eyebrow annihilates the entire universe. Only the most fortunate and pious souls can comprehend such esoteric truths about the Absolute. A dry mental speculator is not eligible for such revelations.

The townspeople were enraptured beyond comprehension by Lord Caitanya's beautiful dancing, loud thunderous shouts of joy and the profuse flowing of divine nectar in the form of the chanting of the Holy Name. People thanked Mother Saci for carrying in her womb such a child as Lord Visvambhar. They blessed Jagannatha Misra for being a good father to the Lord. They were grateful for the good fortune that descended upon the residents of Navadvipa. They all wished that this night never ends as the Lord performed His pastimes for many yugas. These pastimes of the Lord have no beginning nor end. They appear and then after a certain time they disappear. The Lord manifests Himself to the devotee according to the desire and mood of the devotee.

In the Srimad Bhagavatam 3:9:11 it says, "O Supreme Lord who is glorified in choice verses! Out of compassion and love for Your dear devotees in whatever forms they meditate upon You in their spiritual bodies."

Lord Caitanya is even to this day performing His eternal pastimes, those who are pure in heart can see them. The Lord descends only to please His devotees. One may perform austerities and sacrifices for millions of lifetimes but without devotional service all his performances will be futile. And devotional service means to serve the pure devotee of the Lord, this is the verdict of all the scriptures.

I offer my obeisances to Lord Nityananda. All glory to Him, for only with His mercy can one glorify Lord Caitanya. Many persons see Lord Nityananda differently. Some say He is Balaram, or He is very dear to Lord Caitanya, or He is the expansion of the omnipotent Lord. Many say they do not know who He really is. Each one see Him according to his realization. Whoever He maybe, He is very special to Lord Caitanya and may His lotus feet be the only treasure of my heart. Let all the atheists who criticize Lord Nityananda be very careful lest they be kicked in the head. I offer my obeisances at the feet of this dearmost devotee of Lord Caitanya; may He be my Lord and master.

I can know Lord Nityananda only by Lord Caitanya's mercy and I can know Lord Caitanya only if Lord Nityananda shows me.

Lord Caitanya is Lord Rama and Nityananda is Laksmana, Lord Caitanya is Krishna and Nityananda is Sankarsana.

Lord Nityananda possesses the power to fully satisfy Lord Caitanya with His transcendental service. The intimate associates of Lord Caitanya are in full knowledge of Lord Nityananda's extraordinary position. But at times one may see a certain elevated devotee quarreling with other devotees. This is all transcendental and is happening by the desire of Lord Krishna.

No one should side with any party, because they are all most elevated Vaisnavas and in doing so one will certainly make offenses against the Vaisnava. One can become a true Vaisnava by serving Lord Krishna and by not finding faults in others.

Now I offer my obeisances at the lotus feet of Advaita Acarya, may I remain attached to his dear servitors. All glory to Lord Caitanya along with all His associates. These narrations about His pastimes reward one with the highest devotional mood. If one sides with Advaita against Gadadhara Pandita then due to this imbecile act that person is never allowed shelter by Advaita Acarya as his devotee.

The transcendental pastimes of Lord Caitanya are the purest form of divine ambrosia, I pray that these unlimited pastimes increasingly appear in the minds of all living beings. One who desires joy from hearing these narrations will surely see the beautiful face of Lord Caitanya directly.

Lord Sri Krishna Caitanya and Lord Nityananda are my life and soul.

I, Vrndavan Das, offer this song at Their lotus feet.

Antya Lila

Chapter 1

I worship the two brothers Lord Caitanya and Lord Nityananda. They are the most magnanimous Supreme Lords, transcendently situated and embodying inconceivable spiritual potency. These two Supreme controllers have now appeared on this earth in Their eternal forms.

O Lord, I offer my repeated obeisances at Your lotus feet. You are the Supreme Absolute Truth, omniscient of the past, present and future. You have now appeared as the son of Sri Jagannatha Misra.

I also offer my fallen obeisances at the feet of all Your devotee servitors, who are Your sons (goswamis in the renounced order of life or the congregational chanting of the holy name which You fathered and propagate), Your consorts (according to apparent analysis, Visnupriya, who is the Bhudevi potency, Laksmipriya who is the Sridevi potency and Navadvipa dhama, which is lila or nila or durga potency – according to the consideration of mellow – these spiritual potencies are represented by Gadadhara, Narahari, Ramananda, Jagadananda and so on.

All glories to Sri Krsna Caitanya, the beloved Lord of Laksmidevi, the goddess of fortune. Lord Nityananda is very dear to Him. All glory to the Lord of Vaikuntha and the best amongst all the sannyasis. All glory to His illustrious devotees. Lord Gauracandra is the friend of the fallen souls. Please place Your lotus feet on the throne of my heart.

Please hear attentively the topics described in the Antya-lila dealing with the Lord's activities after taking sannyasa and His traveling to Jagannatha Puri.

The night of His sannyasa initiation, Lord Caitanya remained in Katwa. Immediately after the completion of the sannyasa ceremonies, the Lord instructed Mukunda to sing. He stood up and began to dance vigorously. The devotees encircled Him and joined in the chorus. The Lord was immediately overcome with ecstasy. As He danced the Lord experienced heavy breathing, laughter, perspiration, shivering, horripilation and roaring. Then with a voice like thunder or the roaring of a thousand lions He crashed to the ground. The impact of His fall sent shock waves amongst the spectators. The kamandalu flew out of His hand to one side and the sannyasa staff went in another direction. The Lord became enraptured and maddened with love for Himself. Dancing and swirling, He went to His guru and embraced Him with glowing pleasure.

In the Lord's merciful embrace Kesava Bharati was enlightened with love of God. He began to dance singing and pirouetting ecstatically. His kamandalu and danda flew from his grip. He became oblivious to the external world and intoxicated with divine love he rolled on the ground, unaware that his clothes no longer covered his body. The Lord was pleased to see Kesava Bharati in such ecstasy. They danced together, putting the devotees into fits of ecstasy. The devotees appreciated this rare sight with vociferous chanting of the holy name.

I offer my obeisances at the feet of Kesava Bharati, the most stalwart sannyasi, for he danced with the Supreme Lord who is difficult to meet even for the personified Vedas. He is the guru of the Lord of the entire endless creation. The night flitted by as the guru and his disciple danced together. At dawn the Lord begged leave of His guru saying "I will enter the forest, and there I will find the Lord of My heart Krsna candra.

His guru replied, "I will accompany You and relish with You the ecstasy of sankirtan."

The Lord benedicted His guru and allowed him to come with Him, requesting him to walk in front while He followed behind.

As the Lord was preparing to leave, He embraced Candrasekhara Acarya and began to cry loudly. Lord Caitanya said, "Please return home to all the Vaisnavas and tell them that I have left for the forest. Please go back without the slightest remorse, I am always imprisoned in your heart. You are My father and I your son. You are My eternal associate." The Lord then left. Candrasekhara Acarya was overpowered by strong emotions and fell unconscious. No one can understand the Lord's inconceivable potency, and therefore even the unbearable pain of separation can keep a person alive.

After some time when he regained consciousness, Candrasekhara Acarya left for Navadvipa. He informed everyone in Navadvipa that the Lord had entered the forest wearing His sannyasa robe. This news deeply pained all the devotees and they cried out in the excruciation of separation. The devastating effect of the news was widespread and intense. Advaita Acarya, numbed with grief cried, "I cannot live" and fell unconscious. The heart-rending cries of the devotees could have melted the most cruel heart. Sacidevi stood motionless like a wooden doll in stony silence, shocked by the news. The other ladies fell to the ground wailing piteously. Advaita Acarya, regaining consciousness exclaimed, "What further use do I have for this life now that my Lord has gone away. I will throw myself into the Ganga, and if you restrain me I shall do it in the darkness of night." The throbbing pain of separation rendered everyone restless and gloomy. They felt sick, uneasy and ready to finish their lives. Although most of them were grave and learned persons, now they were anxious, their minds in turmoil.

As the devotees were preparing to end their lives and their unbearable misery, suddenly a heavenly voice caught their attention – "O Advaita Acarya and all devotees, do not be sad, go worship Krsna happily. Your Lord and master will return in a few days and be amongst you again. Give up your resolve to take your own lives, because you can be with the Lord just as before." Hearing this heavenly message, the devotees forgot about giving up their lives and sat around Sacidevi singing the Lord's glories.

Lord Gauracandra, the best of sannyasis, now traveled with Nityananda, Gadadhara and Mukunda in a westerly direction, all the time chanting the holy name. In front of the Lord went Kesava Bharati and behind Him was Govinda. Walking like the king of the forest, the Lord was followed by thousands of wailing people. They were all around stamping the forest, but still they followed undeterred. Filled with compassion, the Lord turned to them and said, "All of you go home and chant Krsna's holy name. May you soon be blessed to have Krsna as your life's priceless gift.

May that devotional mellow which is desired by Siva, Brahma, Sukadeva Gosvami and others appear in your hearts." The devotees loudly voiced their appreciation and joy and returned home as if in trance.

The Lord walked into the district of Radha and blessed the entire tract of land. This district is pleasant, with asvathama trees everywhere. Cows were grazing peacefully in the beautiful natural setting, and the Lord upon seeing this scene began to dance blissfully. Devotees quickly gathered around Him singing and clapping. The Lord chanted "Hari, Hari" in a roaring voice that boomed across the universe, and whoever heard Him was purified of his material contamination. In this way He graced the residents of the Radha district dancing all the way.

The Lord said, "I want to stay in the forest where the Vakresvara Deity is.

It is quiet and lonely there." The Lord then continued on His way accompanied by His followers, dancing and singing ecstatically. The local residents ran out to see the Lord and His wonderful dancing. Although sankirtana had never been performed in that area before, and no one had even seen the effects of Krsna prema manifest in a devotee, now they were offering obeisances to the Lord as He danced and wept in ecstasy. This was a rare experience for them. Amongst them were a few fallen sinners who asked, "Why is He crying so much?" But even those fallen souls were affected by the scene, and by the Lord's mercy they began to roll on the ground crying. The entire universe was now echoing the Lord's name. Yet there remained a few who refused to chant. Anyone who is against the chanting of the Lord's name is indeed the worst kind of sinner. Finally at the day's end the Lord with all His followers came to a village and spent the night in a pious brahmana's house.

The Lord took His meal and went to sleep. The devotees slept all around the Lord. Just a few hours before dawn, Lord Caitanya stole away quietly from the rest of the devotees and left for an unknown destination. When the devotees awoke early next morning, they found the Lord missing. Again they were swept with waves of despair and melancholia and began to weep bitterly. They searched for Him everywhere inquiring from everyone in the village, but to no avail. They left the roads and paths and went into the fields.

The Lord was absorbed in the transcendental ecstasy of love of Godhead. He walked in the middle of the expansive meadows and wept and wailed loudly. He loudly called out, "O Krsna! My Lord! My father!" The Lord of Vaikuntha, the Supreme Lord of all living entities and the best of the sannyasis wept openly. He cried so loudly that He could be heard several miles away. The devotees searching for the Lord quite a distance from where He was heard this strange crying. They began to follow the sound and soon saw the Lord crying loudly. Seeing their beloved Lord weeping, the devotees also began to cry. Finally Mukunda started to sing. When the Lord heard kirtan He began to dance, and all the devotees surrounded their Lord and happily joined the kirtan. The Lord then continued His journey westward, dancing on the way, with the devotees following singing kirtan.

When they were only eight miles from Vakreswara, the Lord decided to change direction. He turned around and went east, still absorbed in the ecstasy of dancing. He was blissful and laughing to Himself. Finally He revealed the mystery behind His laughter and change of direction.

He said, "I am going to Nilacala, Puri, because Lord Jagannatha has instructed Me, 'You should come to Puri immediately.'" The devotees were relieved to learn of the Lord's plan. No one can know the workings of the Lord's mind save His intimate devotees, and then only by His mercy can they know His inner desires. Who can fathom why the Lord was first going to Vakresvara and then why finally He did not go? It seems that the Lord in a deceptive way was purifying the residents of the district of Radha by His presence. There was no other reason for Him going to Radha.

The Lord now journeyed towards the Ganga which lay at a distance. He was always engrossed in the ecstasy of love of Godhead, yet He saw that the residents of the tract of land through which He was passing were disinterested in devotional life. No one chanted Krsna's name; Krsna kirtana was alien to them. Pained, the Lord said, "Why did I come to such a country where they never chant Krsna's holy name? It was a grievous mistake for which I must relinquish my life."

Just then a group of little cowherd lads who were grazing their cows passed by. One of them was a very pious boy, and he suddenly began chanting Krsna's name. The Lord was extremely happy to hear the holy name from the mouth of this little boy. Joyfully He relished the moment and said, "The last few days I passed through many villages and nowhere was Kṛṣṇa's name being chanted. Suddenly now out of the blue a young lad is chanting the holy name. Tell me what could be the reason?"

The Lord spoke again, "How far is the Ganga from here?" The devotees replied, "About an hour's walk." The Lord continued, "This is the greatness of Mother Ganga. Due to her influence one hears the chanting of Kṛṣṇa's name here. The breezes from the Ganga have purified this place." Glorifying Gangadevi in this manner, the Lord increased everyone's reverence towards her.

The Lord spoke again, "I will cleanse Myself completely in the Ganga today." and again He started on His journey.

The Lord walked with the pace and grace of a maddened lion. The devotees ran to catch up with Him. The Lord's eagerness to see Gangadevi quickened His steps and the devotees found it impossible to keep up with Him. Only Lord Nityananda, also walking like a lion, accompanied Him. They reached the banks of Gangadevi early in the evening. Lord Caitanya and Lord Nityananda entered her waters with relish and thoroughly washed Themselves, profusely praising the Ganga with selected verses. They drank her cooling waters and offered obeisances to her.

The Lord prayed, "O Gangadevi, your waters are the ambrosia of love of Godhead. Lord Siva is conversant with the truth about you. Such is your potency that the mere utterance of your name invokes devotional service to the Supreme Lord, and the result of drinking your water is miraculous. By your mercy the living entities acquire a taste for chanting Kṛṣṇa's holy name. Because of your influence, even the wild beasts and birds that live close to your waters become more fortunate than wealthy men who live far away from you.

No one is more potent than yourself in purifying sins. In fact, you have descended to this material plane only to alleviate the sins of the living entities."

As the Lord glorified Gangadevi in this manner, she became bashful. That Supreme Lord whose feet are the source of Gangadevi was now eulogizing her – how wonderful was the incarnation of the Supreme Godhead in the form of Lord Caitanya. One who hears these verses in praise of Gangadevi with faith will certainly develop attachment for Lord Caitanya.

That night, the Lord and Nityananda Prabhu stayed in a righteous brahmana's house. The next day, the rest of the devotees arrived and found Lord Caitanya. Together they again proceeded towards Nilacala, Puri. Lord Caitanya said to Nityananda Prabhu, "My dear magnanimous Prabhu Nityananda, You must immediately leave for Navadvipa. Srivasa Pandita and the other devotees are grievously afflicted due to My departure. You must alleviate their pain. Take this message from Me to them that on My way to Nilacala I will be waiting for them in Santipura in the house of Advaita Acarya. You bring them there right away. I am going to Phulia to see Haridasa." Sending off Nityananda, Lord Caitanya headed for the village of Phulia.

Having received His orders from Lord Caitanya, Nityananda Prabhu journeyed toward Phulia in exultation. Lord Nityananda is always absorbed in the bliss of love of Godhead, His voice booming like thunder in ecstasy. Now He traveled almost like a maddened elephant, oblivious of everything around Him, no rules or taboos restricting His actions.

He stopped under a kadamba tree for a while standing like Krsna. His body bending in three places, He began to play the flute rapturously. When He saw cows grazing, He rolled on the earth, and moving like a calf, He sucked milk from cows. He would break out into a dance while walking, unaware of His surroundings, always submerged in bliss. At other times, He just sat down on the road and wept so bitterly that it would pain one to see Him in that condition. Sometimes He would suddenly stop and start shaking with peals of laughter.

Then again He would take the clothing covering His body and wrap it around His head leaving Him naked. At times He would feel in the mood of Ananta Sesa. Making serpent-like movements He would enter the waters of the Ganga and float and swim gracefully in the currents. Lord Nityananda's potencies are inconceivable, transcendental and mysterious. His limitless compassion is unmatched in all the three worlds.

Lord Nityananda swam in the Ganga all the way to Navadvipa. He got out onto the banks, withdrawing within Himself His inner mood, and went straight to the Lord's house. What He saw pained Him greatly. Sacidevi had been totally fasting for twelve days. Life remained in her only on the strength of her devotional service. But she was completely imbued with Mother Yasoda's mood of pining for her son, and tears rained down from her eyes. Whoever she met she would eagerly ask, "Are you from Mathura? What is the news of Krsna and Balarama?", and swoon in ecstatic spiritual bliss. Then gradually she would again start speaking, "There! I can hear Their flutes and horns. Is Akrura coming to get Them?" Submerged in this manner in the mood of intense separation, she forgot her physical cares.

Lord Nityananda fell at Sacidevi's feet, offering His obeisances. The devotees greeted Him enthusiastically, but His presence merely intensified their pining, and they began to weep. Mother Saci cried out, "My son! My darling boy!," and swooned. The devotees felt a surge of new emotions ripping through their hearts. They embraced Nityananda, and were bathed with His tears of ecstasy. He calmed them down and told them the good news. He said, "You must come immediately, the Lord is awaiting us in Advaita Acarya's house in Santipura. I have come here to take you there." The devotees, who had become lean and weak due to intensely missing their Lord, now received new life. They were jubilant and loudly chanted Krsna's name.

Sacidevi had not touched food or water from the day Nimai left her house to take sannyasa twelve days earlier. Only thoughts of Nimai could sustain her life. For Nityananda her condition was unbearable. He spoke soft reassuring words to her, "Nothing is unknown to you about the mysterious activities of Krsna. What knowledge can I give you about Krsna? Do not burden your heart with despair. Even the Vedas personified cannot receive the grace and good fortune already in your possession. that supreme object sought by the Vedas is your son.

He is the life and soul of every living entity. That same Supreme Personality has accepted all spiritual and material responsibilities concerning you. He made this promise with His hand on His chest. The Lord always knows what is best for everyone. You should simply surrender everything at His feet and live happily and peacefully. Now, mother, please go and cook for the satisfaction of all the devotees. This is devotional service to Krsna. Everyone is eager to taste your cooking. If you remain fasting then Krsna has to fast also. I am extremely desirous of relishing the offerings prepared for Krsna by you.

Nityananda's sweet words were like soothing balm to her afflicted heart. She got up and went to make necessary arrangements for the cooking. First she fed Nityananda Prabhu and then she fed all the Vaisnavas. She saw to it that everyone was fully satisfied and then she sat down to eat herself. The devotees were pleased that Sacidevi had broken her twelve day fast. Enlivened by the prasada, the Vaisnavas prepared to go to meet their beloved Lord with Nityananda Prabhu. The residents of Navadvipa were by now familiar with the details of Nimai's sannyasa ceremony. The Lord's wonderful sannyasa name, Krsna Caitanya, had a miraculous effect on them. They chanted out loud the Lord's name, and glorified Him.

When the people of Navadvipa came to know that the Lord was presently in Phulia village, they became elated and decided to go and see Him there. Old, young, men, women and children all hastened to Phulia chanting jubilantly, "Hari! Hari!" Those atheists and faultfinders who had previously been vituperative against the Lord were now eager to reach Phulia with their friends. They said, "He was born in Navadvipa, but His real identity remained a secret. Out of ignorance we maligned His work and spiritual mission. Now we must fall at His feet and beg forgiveness. Only then will all our offenses be exonerated."

Thousands of people flocked to the pier. The boatmen were in a dilemma. Everyone wanted to be the first and they could not risk crossing the river overloaded with people. Many found their own means to cross the river.

Some went in small dinghies, others tied themselves to upturned earthen water vessels which made them float easily. Someone used a raft made out of banana tree trunks which was also very handy. Even pregnant women dared the crowd and jostling. Breathing heavily from exertion, they simply chanted Lord Caitanya's name and made the journey.

For the blind ones and lame ones the way became suddenly broad and facile just by remembering Caitanya's name. A boat carrying hundreds found it impossible to make the other bank and capsized in midstream. This of course did not deter the people. They jubilantly chanted the Lord's name and floated upstream. The people's hearts were so infected with joy that it seemed they actually floated in an ocean of divine mirth.

Those who did not know how to swim seemed to have miraculously become buoyant. By the grace of the Lord, they also were able to cross the river without difficulty. The sky reverberated with ecstatic sounds of the holy name. The people had only one thought in their minds – to reach Phulia. Disregarding all comfort and bodily needs, they joined the mass chanting with careless happy abandon. Their loud cries of "Hari!" echoed in the vaults of the cosmic creation as they reached Phulia.

This wonderful sound of many people chanting reached the Lord. He came out to greet them. The people saw Him and held their breath. His exquisite appearance as a sannyasi and His extraordinarily beautiful face which eclipsed the beauty of millions of moons were a memorable vision for all. The Lord was continuously chanting the holy name as tears of ecstasy cascaded down His cheeks. Everyone was now falling to the ground to offer their obeisances. People fell on top of each other in their fervor to show respect to their Lord. They did not care if there were thorns on the ground. They were all boundlessly happy. They lifted their hands and prayed to the Lord for His protection and shelter, crying out, "Save us! Save us!" The village of Phulia was now teeming with millions of people who were captivated by the infinitely charming face of the Lord. The fields and roads were overflowing with people who had no intention of returning to their houses, for they had even for a moment beheld the lustrous benign face of the Lord.

The Lord blessed them all with His merciful glance and proceeded towards Santipura. When He arrived in Advaita Acarya's house, Advaita Prabhu fell at His beloved Lord's lotus feet. He began to weep, relieved of the miserable pain of separation. He remained supine, His arms curled around the Lord's lotus feet. He bathed them with His tears of love. At last Lord Caitanya bent down and lifted Advaita Acarya into His warm embrace. Advaita, now soaked by the ecstatic tears of the Lord, again fell to His lotus feet in spiritual perturbation. Calming Himself and Advaita, the Lord sat down. Advaita's house was vibrating with loud exultation.

Acyutananda was Advaita's son. He was a charming and effulgent little child endowed with extraordinary intelligence and supreme influence. Naked as usual for that age and covered in dust, Acyutananda came running to greet the Lord. His great fortune was that he was Advaita's son. He was blissful and smiling for he knew the identity of Lord Caitanya. He fell at the Lord's feet full of respect. The Lord lovingly took him into His arms in spite of the dust smeared on his small frame. The Lord said, "Acyuta, you know that Advaita Acarya is also my father, hence this makes us brothers. Little Acyuta replied, "You are the well-wishing friend of all living entities. The Vedas describe that You are the original father of everyone."

This greatly pleased and amused the Lord, and He smiled knowingly. The Vaisnavas were amazed at his words. They said, "These words are not the babblings of a mere child, but actually carry deep import. Acyuta must be a great personality."

At this moment, Nityananda Prabhu arrived with all the devotees and intimate servitors of the Lord from Navadvipa. When the devotees saw their dear Lord, Srivasa Pandita and the others began loudly chanting and fell flat on the ground offering prayers and tears at the Lord's lotus feet. These devotees were as precious to the Lord as His very life. He lovingly embraced each one of them. The devotees cried out in the pain of ecstasy and separation. Their cries purified the entire earth. To hear pure devotees weeping in love of Godhead can cut asunder the bondage of birth and death of all living entities.

This wonderful opportunity was now made available to everyone by the mercy of Lord Caitanya. Even Lord Brahma rarely receives such favors.

Seeing His beloved associates from Navadvipa again after an absence, He began to dance rapturously saturated in ecstatic love of Himself, for He is the Supreme Lord. The devotees began to sing and the Lord encouraged them with loud exclamations of "Sing! Sing!" The Lord caught Nityananda Prabhu by the hand and spun around in ecstatic joy. Stealthily, Advaita Acarya came up from behind and touched the Lord's feet placing the dust on His head. The Lord's dancing postures were enchanting. Simultaneously He manifested the different symptoms of devotional perturbations of weeping, shivering, horripilation, mirth and so on. The movements and nuances of the limbs and different parts of His transcendental body were an expressive composition of some divine love poetry. His arms raised in exultation, and chanting "Hari! Hari!" He enchanted the devotees and submerged them in an ocean of ineffable bliss.

The devotees were just recently deprived of their Lord's presence and now to be again in His company by His mercy was certainly cause for extreme exhilaration and celebration. They surrounded their Lord and danced and pranced oblivious of everything else. They fell on each other, bumped against each other, and rolled on the ground smearing their bodies with the dust of everyone's feet. Someone pressed another devotee's feet against his chest and remained saturated in bliss, tears of joy flowing unrestrained from his eyes. The devotees could not contain their happiness having regained their beloved Lord and master. The Lord of Vaikuntha dancing free from all care with His associates is indeed an extraordinary sight.

Above the sounds of dancing, the singing of the Lord's name rang out loud and clear. Advaita Acarya's house resounded with sounds of mirth, of which only Nityananda Prabhu was fully aware. Lord Caitanya went around embracing His loving associates and infusing them with love of Godhead. Receiving the Lord's divine touch, the devotees became mad with joy. In a loud voice that resembled the rumbling of thunder they expressed their boundless bliss. This further increased the pleasure of others. As the Lord danced with His associates, Mother Earth seemed to sway and tilt. Nityananda, Advaita and the others all were caught in a maelstrom of infinite ecstasy, and they freely allowed their limbs and body to express their ceaseless happiness. After awhile the Lord stopped dancing and entering a mood of divine Lordship He sat down upon the throne of Lord Visnu.

The devotees stood around Him in great awe and reverence with folded palms as the Lord began to reveal His real identity as the Supreme Lord. He said, "I am Kṛṣṇa, Rama, Narayana, and Matsya. I have assumed these incarnations and more. I am Kurma, Varaha, Vamana, Buddha, and will be Kalki. I am Prsnigarbha, Hayagriva, the Supreme Lord of lords. I am the moon of Nilacala, Lord Jagannatha. I am Kapila and Nṛsima. All living entities visible and invisible are My servitors.

The Vedas sing of My supramundane excellences, and I am served by the endless planetary systems. I am time, the destroyer of everything except My devotees. All dangers are easily eradicated simply by remembering Me. I rescued Draupadi from great public shame and insult. I also saved the Pandavas from the fire trap in the house of lac. I protected Siva by slaying the terrible demon Vṛkāsura. I liberated My servant, Gajendra the elephant, from excruciating death pains. I stood by Prahlaḍa in all his tortures. I protected the cowherd boys from all kinds of harm and attacks.

I churned the milk ocean to extract the nectar of immortality. I deprived the demons of that nectar and gave it to the demigods, thus aiding them to victory. I slew the obnoxious demon Kamsa, who was threatening My devotees. I finished the demon King Ravana, destroying his entire race. I lifted Govardhana Hill with My left hand, and I tamed the vicious snake–demon, Kaliya. I appeared in Satya–yuga to propagate the practice of austerity and meditation, and in Tretā–yuga to introduce the performance of sacrifices.

In Dvāpara yuga My purpose was to establish proper procedures of temple worship. Presently in Kali–yuga I have come to promulgate the congregational chanting of the holy names of God. Even the Vedas fail to enumerate all My incarnations. In Kali–yuga by participating in this sankīrtana movement every sincere soul will taste the nectar of love of Godhead. This is the reason for My appearance in this yuga. The entire Vedic literature instructs the searching soul to seek My shelter, but I am always to be found in the company of My surrendered devotees. They are everything to Me – father, mother, friend, son, brother.

Although I am absolutely independent, My nature is to be captivated by My devotees' pure love for Me. All of you are My eternal associates. All My incarnations are only for your pleasure and protection. Know for certain that I cannot remain even for a moment bereft of your association."

Out of His causeless mercy for His devotees and all the living entities, the Lord revealed the confidential knowledge of Himself. The devotees were jubilant. They fell flat on the ground offering obeisances. They were so devotionally perturbed that they were unable to do anything. They prayed and rolled on the ground, relishing the highest ambrosia of love of Godhead. The Lord's associates were now saturated, their previous heartaches due to separation from the Lord were now cured. The compassionate Lord is expert in alleviating everyone's grief, so why should suffering humanity not take shelter of the Lord. Lord Gauracandra is an ocean of mercy. He always discounts the wayward soul's faults and sees his goodness.

Thereafter, withdrawing His mood of supreme opulence and absolute autocracy, the Lord was back to His normal self, calm and composed. He led everyone down to the Ganga to bathe. He played and frolicked in the waters with the devotees. On returning, He watered the tulasi plant, indicating the others should follow, and circumambulated her. Then they all went to the temple room, offered obeisances to Lord Visnu, and circumambulated the Lord. Lord Gaurahari called everyone, and they sat down together to eat. The Lord sat down beside Lord Nityananda amidst happy and cheerful devotees.

The Lord was the cynosure of everyone, with His smiling face and golden body covered with sandalwood paste. The scene of the devotees sitting around the Lord with Nityananda Prabhu sitting beside Him was an exact replica of Krsna and Balarama sitting in the forest of Vrndavana surrounded by Their cowherd boyfriends having a picnic with Their packed lunches. Who can fully describe this wonderful happening?

As soon as the Lord had finished and left, the devotees jumped up and grabbed His remnants from His plate. Even the old men acted like little boys; such is the transformation that takes place due to contact with the Lord's divine potency. One who hears these pastimes of the Lord and His associates, of their reunions, sankirtana and eating together, will certainly attain Lord Caitanya's mercy and relish love of Godhead.

Sri Krsna Caitanya and Nityananda Prabhu are my life and soul.

I, Vrndavana dasa, humbly offer this song at Their lotus feet.

Antya Lila

Chapter 2

All glories to Lord Gauracandra, the life and soul of every living being. He is terror personified for the miscreants and the protector of the devotees.

He is the Lord and master of Ananta Sesa, Laksmidevi, Brahma and Siva, and the friend of the poor. He is an ocean of benevolence and the best of all sannyasis.

All glory to the Lord and all His associates. May He shower benedictions upon me so my mind may remain in eternal meditation on His lotus feet.

The Lord passed that night in Advaita's house relishing unlimited spiritual bliss. He and His loving associates relished confidential talks about His transcendental activities. In the morning, after completing His daily morning duties, the Lord sat down with all the Vaisnavas. He said, "I am going to Nilacala, but you should not become despondent because of this.

After offering My obeisances to Lord Jagannatha, I will return to be amongst you again. Return to your houses and blissfully engage in performing kirtana, for you are My eternal associates and are more dear to Me than My own life."

The devotees replied, "As You wish, O Lord. No one can divert You from Your decision. Yet it must be mentioned that at the present time it is unsafe for travel to Orrisa. The kingdoms of Bengal and Orrisa are on the verge of war. The way is infested with dacoits. Please consider waiting until the situation improves." The Lord said, "Obstacles may be there, but I must go."

Advaita Acarya could understand the Lord's heart, He was bent on going to Nilacala. Advaita approached the Lord with folded hands and said truthfully to Him, "Who can obstruct Your path? All hindrances are Your slaves, so who has the power to stop You? Once You have made up Your mind to go to Nilacala then You can leave at Your own sweet will." The Lord was pleased to hear the truth spoken so plainly from Advaita, and He acknowledged it by loudly chanting "Hari! Hari!"

The Lord set out towards Nilacala. His gait was that of a stalking maddened lion. The devotees ran after Him unable to control their emotions and tears. After a distance, the Lord turned to them and spoke sweet loving words, "Please do not be sad, I will never leave you. Go home now and take shelter of the holy name and I will return in a few days." He embraced everyone one by one and soaked them with His tears of love. It was a moving scene as the Lord and the devotees cried in each others' arms. Finally pacifying and reassuring everyone, the Lord traveled south. But the devotees were not to be consoled so easily. As the Lord disappeared from their sight they fell to the ground crying piteously.

Just as the gopis of Vrndavana had wept bitterly as if thrown into an ocean of endless woe when Krsna was journeying to Mathura leaving Vrndavana. The same mood of separation was now being experienced by the devotees of Lord Caitanya. The situation and mood then in Krsna's pastime is the same now in Lord Caitanya's pastime. Life and death are entirely controlled by Krsna. It is of no consequence if one consumes poison or the elixir of immortality, only what Krsna wants will happen. If He wants someone will die, if He wants someone will go on living.

The Lord was journeying happily towards Nilacala with Nityananda, Gadadhara, Mukunda, Govinda, Jagadananda, and Brahmananda. The Lord wanted to test His devotees. He inquired, "Please tell He frankly if anyone of you have brought any necessary things for the journey." They replied, "No one has the power to act independently, my Lord. Without Your permission we did not bring anything." The Lord was greatly pleased at their reply. The Lord now spoke, delineating the import of this seemingly simple question.

He said, "You have made He very happy by not bringing anything with you. Everyone is liable to enjoy only what is destined to him. Even if he is in the forest, that which is due to him through destiny will find him. If Providence wills that someone goes without food, then even if he is a prince he will have to fast. The prince's larder may be filled with food, but if the Lord so wills it, he cannot eat. He might suddenly get into a quarrel with someone and out of anger refuse to eat and remain sulking. He may also, without warning, be attacked by high fever, in which case there is no question of eating anything.

This is all happening in truth by the Lord's sweet will. The entire universe is Lord Krsna's storehouse filled with grains and foodstuff. If the Lord desires, we can get food anywhere and everywhere." The Lord was teaching everyone the proper attitude towards God. One who accepts to heart these instructions becomes perfectly happy in life. One may try very carefully to do something, but the result of that endeavor depends entirely on the Lord's will. Discussing in this manner, they arrived at the village of Atisara.

A very saintly personality named Ananta Pandita was living in Atisara. The Lord decided to sojourn to his residence. This shows how fortunate Ananta Pandita was. Ananta Pandita was overwhelmed with divine bliss to have the Lord of Vaikuntha personally come to his house as his guest. He joyfully busied himself to feed the Lord and all the devotees. The Lord sat down together with all the devotees and relished and honored prasada. He was instructing everyone how to lead the ideal mendicant life of a sannyasi by begging everything. That whole night He spent in discussing topics of Krsna's pastimes.

Next morning after blessing Ananta Pandita with His merciful glance, the Lord proceeded in His journey, Krsna's name constantly vibrating on His lips. When the villagers saw the Lord's compassionate moonlike face, which was a soothing balm to all tribulations, they spontaneously began to repeat the Lord's holy name. Yogis steeped in meditation find it practically impossible to attain His lotus feet in their hearts, yet now even ordinary persons could see Him as He went on His journey.

The Lord traveled along the banks of the Ganga and arrived at a place known as Catrabhoga. Here the Ganga was flowing in one hundred separate streams for the benediction and joy of the people. Also situated here is a bathing place known as Ambulinga-ghat. Lord Siva is present here in his linga form known as Ambulinga in water. I shall now relate the history behind this form of Lord Siva. In the long past, Bhagirath had worshiped Gangadevi praying to her to descend to the earth. The waters of Ganga were the only means to bring back to life his ancestors. When Gangadevi complied and started flowing on the earth, Lord Siva was pining for her association. Finally Lord Siva came to earth. Seeing her flow in Catrabhoga, he became overwhelmed with emotion and entered her waters, himself taking the form of water.

Gangadevi on seeing Lord Siva began to worship him with great devotion. Lord Siva knows the depth of Gangadevi's devotion and attachment for the Lord, and Gangadevi is also aware of Lord Siva's highly elevated position. By the touch of Ganga water Lord Siva became water, and Gangadevi offered him prayers with deep reverence.

From that time, the place became famous as Ambulinga ghat. Catrabhoga also became an important place of pilgrimage with both Gangadevi and Lord Siva present there. And now the transcendental significance of this pilgrimage site was further enhanced by the foot marks of Lord Caitanya. The Lord approached the pilgrimage spot with increasing ecstasy. He roared loudly the holy names and fell swooning only to be caught timely into Nityananda Prabhu's safe embrace. The devotees responded loudly taking the Lord's name. The Lord took everyone into the waters of the Ganga at the Ambulinga ghat and bathed. The Lord and the devotees enjoyed an exhilarating bath. All these descriptions will be compiled later in detail by Vedavyasa.

The Lord came out of the water feeling uncontrollable spiritual emotions storming in His heart. As He changed into fresh dry clothes, His clothes became soaked with tears of ecstasy. On the land Ganga was flowing in one hundred streams and the tears from the Lord's eyes also cascaded down in a hundred streams. The devotees were so amazed that they could only laugh at this extraordinary phenomenon.

The landlord of the village was Ramacandra Khan. Although he was a materialist, he was also a pious man. Otherwise how could he meet Lord Caitanya. The Lord by some divine arrangement came to his house. As soon as he saw the powerful and effulgent appearance of the Lord, Ramacandra Khan hurriedly got down from his swing in great awe. He prostrated himself before the Lord. The Lord was still absorbed in love of God, and oblivious to everything around Him. He was crying profusely and heaving deep sighs and falling to the ground. He kept chanting "O Jagannatha! O Jagannatha!"

Ramacandra Khan was extremely moved to see such an intense devotional mood. He thought, "There is no way to stop this piteous crying." And himself broke out in tears. Who in the three worlds could remain impassive to see these tearful entreaties? Even a stone-hearted person would melt. The Lord calmed Himself and inquired from Ramacandra, "Who are you?" Offering prostrated obeisances at the Lord's feet, he spoke with folded hands, "O Lord, I am the servant of Your servant." Then the local people spoke up, informing the Lord, "He is the landlord of this entire southern part of the state."

The Lord said, "It is nice that you are the chieftain here. Please tell Me how I can proceed to Nialcala tomorrow." As the Lord was speaking about Nilacala, He was once again overcome by divine ecstasy. Crying out Lord Jagannatha's name, He began to weep profusely and fell to the ground swooning. Ramacandra spoke in a concerned voice, "O Lord, whatever You order I consider my prime duty to fulfill. The roads are very dangerous. Traveling between the two countries has become practically impossible. The inimical kings have placed camouflaged spears along the border. And if the soldiers find even an innocent traveler, they capture him and torture him thinking him an enemy spy. The only way I can arrange is to send you in secret.

I place myself in great danger, but I do not care for this danger, I will certainly carry out your bidding. And my Lord if You kindly accept me as Your servitor then I pray that You and Your associates take food in my house. I will use everything I possess – money, influence, men – to bring You across the border tonight." The Lord was pleased with Ramacandra and blessed him with His merciful glance.

By that one glance, Ramacandra was purified of all material attachments. The Lord went to his residence. Ramacandra's house became sanctified and everyone in the house exulted, practically experiencing the results of their previous piety. The brahmana Ramacandra himself prepared the food with devotion and deference. The Lord nowadays ate very frugally. He had no spare moments away from His deep absorption within Himself. He sat down to eat only for the satisfaction of His devotees. His real food is always the spiritual mellows. His eating habits had changed ever since He embarked on this journey to Jagannatha Puri.

All the way here the Lord had exhibited the mood of separation, imploring Lord Jagannatha. Day or night, land or water were just fading images of no consequence to Him. He was steeped in meditation within Himself tasting the bliss of love of God. The devotees were always by His side keeping watch over Him, and protecting Him from any external harm. The different ecstatic moods exhibited by the Lord are impossible for an ordinary mortal to describe. This is possible by Vedavyasa only.

Who can understand the character of the Supreme Lord? Who can predict how Kṛṣṇa will act next? Lord Nityananda knows fully well the object of Lord Caitanya's love, for whom He pines so imploringly. The Lord of Vaikuntha, Sri Kṛṣṇa Caitanya, is always engrossed in transcendental exchange of mellows where He Himself is the object of love. Yet He forgets Himself as the main actor of these pastimes. On one hand He thinks of Himself as Lord Jagannatha, and on the other He yearns for union with Lord Jagannatha, in this way bringing the devotees to His side with concern for Him. How can the living entities realize the Supreme if He Himself does not shower them with His causeless mercy?

The Lord sat with Nityananda Prabhu and the other devotees who were so dear to Him. He barely took a morsel of food and got up with a thunderous roar. With the after-lunch ablutions done with, He kept on asking, "How far is Jagannatha Puri? How far is Jagannatha Swami?" Mukunda quickly started to sing. The Lord began to dance. The residents of Catrabhoga being pious had a rare treat. They saw the Supreme Lord, the hero of Vaikuntha, dance before their very eyes. As He danced, one after another of the ecstatic symptoms began manifesting on His person. Crying, shivering, roaring, horripilation, perspiring profusely, becoming statue-like and so on. Who knows the many subtle spiritual transformations that reflected on Him as He spun round and round. Tears gushed out of His eyes like the rushing currents of the Ganga in a monsoon state drenching everyone. The incarnation of love of Godhead in the form of Lord Caitanya had descended, for who else but Lord Caitanya has the potency to exhibit such pastimes?

Time passed; the night was almost ending. The Lord calmed Himself and sat down. Although it was late night, the long hours seemed to have swiftly gone by like a few moments only. Everyone was delivered by the Lord's causeless mercy. Ramacandra Khan, waiting for this opportune moment, said, "My Lord, the boats are ready waiting for You." The Lord immediately got up and went to the river bank. He alighted the boat and cast His benedicting glance on everyone. The boat headed toward Jagannatha Puri, His own abode.

The Lord asked Mukunda to sing. He began to sing while the boat moved silently in the still night. The boatman was a simple and illiterate person. He said, "This singing is very fearful. I will surely lose my life tonight. On land the tigers will maul us, and the water is infested with crocodiles. This part of the river is terrorized by bands of dacoits who if they catch us will forcibly take both our wealth and our lives. So please remain quiet until we reach Orissa."

The devotees were put into consternation, but the Lord's absorption in spiritual mellows continued uninterrupted. In a short while, the Lord sounded like thunder and said, "What do you fear? Who are you afraid of? The sudarsana cakra, the lethal spinning disk of the Supreme Lord that protects the Vaisnavas at all times from every danger is here. Just look around you. Assail your trepidations and continue the Krsna kirtana. The reassuring words from the Lord had a miraculous effect on the devotees and they began to sing with renewed gusto.

Utilizing this exigent situation the Lord gave instructions to the devotees, "The sudarsana cakra is always present to protect the devotees of the Lord. The sudarsana destroys any inimical and atheistic forces who try to harass the devotees. The devotees are having such an invincible protector as Lord Visnu's own weapon, so who can possibly harm the Vaisnavas?" Only those who have received the Lord's mercy can fathom the meaning of these confidential instructions. Soon the boat reached Orissa. The devotees had performed kirtan the entire way. The boat stopped at the river port called Prayaga ghat and Lord Caitanya got off the boat. The hearing of this narration of the Lord entering Orissa accelerates the process of reaching spiritual perfection. The Lord was extremely joyful having set His lotus feet on the soil of Orissa. He offered obeisances, and the devotees did the same.

In that area is a well known bathing place called Ganga ghat. The Lord took His bath there. He then went to offer obeisances to a Siva linga deity known as Mahesa. This deity was established right next to the bathing place by King Yudhistira of the Pandavas. The Lord brought the devotees to a temple and requesting them to wait there He went away to beg alms. The Lord went door to door with His cloth spread out to receive alms. As He stood before each house, the people were captivated by His magnanimous appearance and immediately offered Him something. Whatever was available in the household they gave it with great pleasure. Laksmidevi, the goddess of fortune, and the giver of all foodstuff and opulence is always praying to receive shelter at the Lord's lotus feet. That same Supreme Personality is now knocking on every door in the guise of a sannyasi begging alms only to benedict the conditioned souls.

The Lord returned to the devotees after collecting alms feeling content. The devotees began to laugh seeing what the Lord had begged and said, "The Lord can certainly maintain us." Jagadananda Pandita eagerly prepared the food. The Lord sat down with all the devotees and ate. They passed the night in that village performing Krsna kirtana. At dawn they were again on the road walking towards Puri.

After a few miles they were suddenly stopped by persons demanding tax, refusing right of way to the devotees unless they paid. But when the tax collectors saw the grave and imposing figure of the Lord, they were impressed. They inquired, "How many men are with You?" The Lord replied, "I do not have anyone in this world, and I do not belong to anyone. I am all alone. The entire world is mine." Saying this, the Lord began shedding incessant tears flowing out in streams. The tax man said, "O master, You may kindly leave, but I will not release the others until I have received full payment." The Lord left the group of devotees remembering Lord Kṛṣṇa and chanting His names. The devotees were plunged into an abyss of despondency, thinking the Lord had left them.

The devotees, after some consideration, began to laugh at how the Lord had displayed wonderful impartiality, but in the next moment they were again despairing worried that the Lord would leave them altogether. Nityananda Prabhu pacified them saying, "Do not worry. The Lord will not leave us behind." The tax man said, "you are not accompanying that sannyasi, so you must pay the proper charges." The Lord had gone just a short distance and sat down with His head hanging down, tears welling out of His eyes. Even a heart of stone would melt seeing the Lord weeping in such an entreating way. The tax man was filled with wonderment. He said, "He is certainly not an ordinary soul.

It is impossible for a human being to shed such an excessive amount of tears." Looking again carefully at everyone, he enquired from several devotees, "Tell me clearly who you are. Whose associates are you?" They replied, "That sannyasi is our master. You must have heard of Him. His name is Sri Kṛṣṇa Caitanya. We are His servitors." Saying this, the devotees broke down in tears of divine love for their Lord. The tax man was now dumbfounded. Being infused by their mood and purified by their association, he also began to cry, tears coursing down his cheeks.

The tax man now hastened toward the sitting figure of the Lord and threw himself down on the ground like a rod before the Lord's lotus feet. Very humbly he said, "The great fortune of seeing You has actually resulted from pious activities of many millions of lifetimes. Kindly forgive me for my offenses at Your feet, and I pray that You may arrive safely in Nilacala." Lord Caitanya blessed the tax man and continued His journey. The Supreme Lord has advented as Lord Caitanya to deliver all living entities. Only the atheistic sinners who are inimical towards the Vaisnavas and addicted to performing the most abominable activities will be deprived of the Lord's mercy. Lord Caitanya's name is so potent that even the demons have a change of heart by chanting His name and glories. Yet the devilish reprobates do not accept this mercy nor have faith in its powers.

The Lord of Vaikuntha showered His merciful glance on everyone as He went on His way to Nilacala. He was always absorbed in drinking deep into the endless nectarean ocean of loving mellows of Lord Kṛṣṇa.

One day He arrived on the banks of the river Subarnarekha. The Lord and the devotees found the water crystal clear and so took their baths in the river thus sanctifying it. Then they continued on towards their destination.

Somehow, Nityananda Prabhu and Jagadananda Pandita had fallen back a distance from the rest of the group. Lord Caitanya decided to sit down and wait for the two to catch up with them. Nityananda Prabhu was always engrossed in deep meditation on Lord Caitanya. This loving mellow made Him act intoxicated and mad. Sometimes He cried loudly almost wailing, then suddenly began roaring loudly in an earsplitting voice, then again abruptly starting to laugh. When He saw a river or stream He plunged into the water and swam for a long time. At times He covered His body with dust. He would sometimes fall swooning in ecstasy to the ground so hard that people were made to believe that all His bones were shattered. When He started dancing just on His own, it was difficult, or so it seemed, to keep the earth steady from tilting off balance. This sort of behavior and power are not unnatural for Lord Nityananda. Lord Ananta Sesa is His partial expansion and Lord Caitanya resides eternally in His heart.

Jagadananda Pandita wanted to go and beg food from the village, so he wanted to leave the Lord's danda behind. He was assigned by the Lord to carry His sannyasa danda, or staff, on the journey. He left Nityananda Saying, "Here, look after the Lord's danda very carefully while I am gone." and gave Him the danda. Nityananda Prabhu, who was always meditating on Lord Caitanya, took the danda and sat down. He started laughing, holding the danda in one hand and began to speak to the danda. He said, "O danda, where is the logic that you should be carried by that personality who I bear in my heart." Nityananda Prabhu, who is Lord Balarama, got up, and then smashed the danda to the ground with immense force breaking it in three places.

The Supreme Lord alone knows His own desires. How can I Know why Nityananda Balarama broke the danda? Nityananda Prabhu knows intimately Lord Caitanya's mind. Lord Caitanya also fully understand Lord Nityananda's mind. They are brothers eternally, and They appear together in every millennium. Rama and Laksmana knew each other's hearts deeply. They are the one and same Supreme Lord. They have separated only to teach and enhance the loving mellows of devotional service. I am able to know Lord Caitanya and His pastimes only by the mercy of Nityananda Prabhu. Who other than Lord Balarama Himself would have the power to smash the Lord's danda? Actually it is Lord Caitanya, the supreme teacher, who teaches through many subtle ways. One who understands this essential truth enjoys blissful devotional life.

When Jagadananda Pandita returned, he found Nityananda sitting with the three broken pieces of the danda lying next to Him. He was startled at first, but soon he began to worry. He inquired from Nityananda, "Who broke the danda?" Nityananda replied, "The one who took the danda in the first place. The Lord Himself has broken His own danda. Who else could do such a thing?" Jagadananda picked up the broken pieces of the danda an without replying silently walked away.

Jagadananda went directly to where Lord Caitanya was seated. He threw the broken pieces of the danda in front of the Lord. The Lord looked up and asked, "How was the danda smashed like this? Did you get in a fight? Tell Me what happened." Jagadananda narrated everything as he had seen it. He said, "Nityananda, who is always rapt in meditation, has done this." Lord Caitanya turned to Nityananda and inquired, "What was Your reason for smashing My danda?" Nityananda Prabhu retorted, "They were just some bamboo sticks that I broke, and if You cannot forgive Me for this, then punish Me as You wish." The Lord replied, "A danda is the residence of all the demigods and You reduce its importance to some bamboo poles!"

Who can comprehend the esoteric pastimes of Lord Caitanya? What He considers in His mind He never speaks, but says something quite different. So if anyone falsely claims to know the Lord's mind, he is certainly ignorant and a cheat. If the Lord decides to destroy someone, on meeting him the Lord treats him affably. And to devotees who are as dear to Him as His very soul He shows Himself to be unbiasedly disposed. These are the various moods and pastimes the Lord reveals. They are inconceivable, hence only those who are graced by the Lord's mercy can perceive their true nature.

The danda was broken by the Lord's own desire, yet now He was showing His anger. The Lord said, "I had only My danda as a companion, but that also was broken by Kṛṣṇa's will. Now I am alone, so all of you go ahead and I will follow behind." No one dared to refute Lord Caitanya's decision. The devotees became concerned over this matter. Mukunda intervened and said, "You go ahead of us my Lord, for we must stay back for some work." With polite agreement the Lord left, walking away like a lithe, mad lion with a supple gait that is hard to describe.

The Lord soon arrived in Jalesvara village. He went directly to the temple of Lord Siva, the main deity in that village. The Siva linga deity was well looked after by the local brahmana priest. The floral decorations in the temple and on the deity were attractive, and the smell of incense permeated the air giving the place an exhilarating devotional mood. Devotees in the temple were singing, playing musical instruments and dancing. The Lord's anger subsided in that joyful atmosphere. He let the loving devotional feelings in His heart gradually flow and merge in with the music. Enlivened by His dear devotee's (Lord Siva's) opulence and influence in the temple, Lord Caitanya began to dance happily. Lord Caitanya knows Lord Siva's glorious character, for he is favorite amongst His devotees. If anyone disrespects Lord Siva, not following the example of Lord Caitanya, then he cannot be considered a Vaisnava, and all his spiritual advancement is annulled.

As the Lord danced, He made joyful sounds so loud that the very mountains seemed to tremble. Lord Siva's devotees were struck with amazement, and thought that Lord Siva must have appeared in person. The musicians and singers again reached a crescendo, and the Lord became fully absorbed in dancing, losing all contact with the outside world. Meanwhile, His devotees arrived. Mukunda began to sing, joined by others. Seeing His beloved associates, the Lord experienced great joy, and danced more vigorously while the devotees danced circling Him. The whole scene was dynamically transformed.

Tears flowed out effusively in a hundred streams from the Lord's eyes. Who can describe all the happenings properly? This temple of Lord Siva was now sanctified by the Lord's presence and dancing. The real purpose for which the temple was built was now fulfilled.

After awhile the Lord became peaceful and embraced all His devotees with great love, giving them divine pleasure. Upon seeing Nityananda Prabhu, the Lord rushed to embrace Him. Holding Him firmly He said, "Your real business is to calm Me down and restrain Me and help Me maintain My sannyasa vows, but instead You are increasing My madness. If You continue in this way, soon You can have My head too. I am openly declaring that whatever You want of Me I will always do accordingly. This is the real truth." The Lord thus instructed everyone, "Always take great care about Nityananda Prabhu. His position is much more elevated than Mine. This is not spoken in an exaggerated manner, it is the simple truth. If anyone commits an offense at His lotus feet, but has not offended Me directly, still he is refused entry into the more confidential devotional service of the Lord. An offender against Nityananda may be situated in devotional service, hence is considered by some as a devotee, but I reject him." When Nityananda Prabhu heard His own praise, He bashfully hung His head.

All of the Lord's pastimes are so wonderful, and they bring much pleasure to the devotees.

Passing that night in Jalesvara the Lord started on His journey again at early dawn accompanied by all the devotees. He went towards Bansdaha, and on the way was stopped by a sakta sannyasi (one who worships the energy of the Lord in the position of the Lord Himself). The Lord knew that the stranger was a sakta, but spoke to him with sweet words. The Lord said, "Please tell Me My friend where you have been for so long that I am meeting you only now. Where are your other friends?" The sakta became captivated by the Lord and slowly he began revealing all information about himself and all the other saktas. Lord Caitanya smiled as He listened to him. The sakta invited the Lord to his so-called monastery, saying, "Please come now to my matha and we can all enjoy the bliss drink together," The sakta was referring to an alcoholic drink as "bliss" and this amused Lord Caitanya and Nityananda Prabhu. The Lord replied, "I will definitely come to enjoy your bliss drink. You should go ahead first to be sure everything is prepared for when we come." The sakta was very pleased to hear that his invitation was accepted and he left quickly, feeling elated. How fathomless is the Lord's character.

The Vedas declare that Lord Kṛṣṇa is the friend and deliverer of the poor and wretched. Hence the Lord spoke so amiably to the śakṭa sannyasi. People began to say, "This śakṭa has now been delivered, and by his contact other śakṭas will also become purified just like him." The Lord uses various means to liberate the conditioned souls.

The Lord arrived at Remuṇa village. In Remuṇa is the Deity of Lord Gopinātha.

Upon seeing Himself in the Deity form, the Lord began to dance ecstatically with all His devotees. Lost in love of Himself, He became oblivious to everything. He wept piteously in loving separation. Even the cruelest hearts melted hearing Him cry. After a few days, Lord Gaurasundara came to Jaipura village and stayed in a locality called Brahmanagara. There He visited the temple of Lord Aḍi Varaha. This Deity is unique and was self-manifested. By seeing this Deity, all material entanglements are severed. The temple was situated on the bank of the river Vaitarini. Just by seeing this river one is cleansed of all sins. This entire area is a very holy pilgrimage site.

Even if an animal crosses the river at this spot, the demigods have the vision to see him take a four-handed Vaikuntha form. Nilacala Puri is exactly eighty miles away from this spot known as Nabhiḡaya or Virajakṣetra. This entire area is dotted with many temples. It is impossible to tabulate all of them with details.

At first the Lord went with the devotees to take bath in the river by the bathing place named Dasasvamedha ghat. Then they went to offer worship to Lord Varaha. The Lord danced ecstatically in front of Aḍi Varaha deva, and the devotees sang, creating a wonderful devotionally saturated atmosphere.

The Lord was very happy to be in Jaipura. His happiness increased with time, and He danced more vigorously. Suddenly, without warning, Lord Caitanya left the devotees and disappeared. It is difficult to know the Lord's desire and the reason for His actions. When the devotees found Lord Caitanya missing from their company, they began to look around in the temple in desperation. Their search proved futile. They became very worried. Nityananda Prabhu, realizing the plight of the devotees, said, "Please calm yourselves. I am certain I know where the Lord has gone. He wants to visit all the temples and holy places in Jaipura alone. So we should also go out begging and return to this same spot. We will spend the night here, for the Lord is sure to return here tomorrow morning."

The devotees went out and collected food and returned. They cooked the food received as alms and ate together. Lord Caitanya in the meantime had visited the different temples and returned to the devotees. The devotees were jubilant, and greeted Him with loud chanting of "Hari! Hari!" In this way the Lord with His associates blessed Jaipura with His presence and then continued on the journey.

After a few days, the Lord arrived in Kataka city. From there He went to take a dip in the river Mahanadi. He then went to the temple of Saksi Gopala to offer worship. The charming, unsurpassable beauty of the Deity of Saksi Gopala greatly impressed Lord Caitanya, and feeling surging ecstasy, He began to roar with a thunderous voice. He offered many prayers, and exhibited wonderful devotional symptoms crying in ecstasy for the Lord. The authorized and recommended procedure to invoke life into the Deity is by chanting the maha mantra. This maha mantra was propagated by Lord Caitanya. And although He is the incarnation of the Supreme Personality of Godhead, yet He is always exhibiting the mood of servitorship to the Supreme Lord.

Lord Caitanya then came to Bhuvanesvara. This city is actually the hidden Kasi, the residence of Lord Siva. Lord Siva had collected waters from all the different holy places and brought them to Bhuvanesvara and formed the lake known as Bindusarovara. Lord Caitanya knew the significance of the lake and that it was Lord Siva's favorite. He took His bath in the lake and further increased its auspiciousness.

The linga form of Lord Siva that was being worshiped there was self manifest. He went to see the linga and mingled with the crowd of Siva devotees who were chanting loud praises of Lord Siva. The linga was surrounded by small lit ghee lamps set in rows offered by the visiting devotees. Lord Caitanya was pleased to see the opulence of His beloved devotee Lord Siva. The Lord's associates were also very happy in that devotional atmosphere. Lord Siva is always immersed in the meditation of the Supreme Lord, which makes him relish the nectar of devotion and cannot keep from dancing. That same Supreme Lord Gauracandra, his master, was dancing ecstatically in front of him. The Lord and His devotees spent the night there.

I will now describe from the Skanda Purana how Lord Siva found this place. Lord Siva and his consort, Parvatidevi, were living contentedly in Kasi for a very long time. Then they went to Kailasa and left Kasi to be ruled by kings. Soon a king named Kasiraja ascended the throne. He was an ardent worshiper of Lord Siva. Suddenly by the will of destiny he lost everything in a war. He was determined to destroy his victor in battle, Sri Krsna. With vengeance in his heart he sat down to perform the most terrible of austerities, meditating on Lord Siva.

Lord Siva, attracted to appear before him by the potency of his austerity, offered him to choose any boon. Kasiraja eagerly asked, "I pray only for this boon from you, my lord, that I may avenge my defeat and destroy Krsna in battle." Lord Siva is a magnanimous personality. No one can say how he will grace someone with his favor. He said to Kasiraja, "O King prepare for battle. My army of followers will be right behind you in the field. Let me see who is strong enough to defeat you as long as I am behind you with my weapon Pasupati."

Reassured by Siva's words, the foolish King Kasiraja went to battle against Krsna, smiling confidently. Lord Siva, accompanied by his associates and followers, followed the army of Kasiraja. His intention was to fight for the king. Krsna, the Supersoul situated within everyone's heart, could know immediately what was happening. He swiftly sent His disc weapon, Sudarsana, to destroy the enemy. The Lord's Sudarsana disc is invincible, so unchallenged it went straight to Kasiraja and severed his head from his body. Then Sudarsana started destroying the city of Varanasi, the capitol of Kasiraja. This enraged Lord Siva. Seeing that his abode was being plundered, he released his terrible Pasupati weapon. What can any other weapon, however powerful, do against Sudarsana? The Pasupati weapon quickly retreated in fear.

Sudarsana then went after Lord Siva himself. Lord Siva fled from the awesome weapon. The power and heat from the Sudarsana covered the whole world, and Siva had no place to hide. Lord Siva found himself in the same predicament as the sage Durvasa when he was being chased by the fearsome weapon.

Lord Siva finally understood that he was being preyed upon by the Sudarsana disc, and that only Lord Krsna could help him out of his dilemma. Then, making his decision, he remembered Lord Krsna, taking shelter at His lotus feet. He began to offer prayers to the Lord, "All glory to the Supreme Godhead, Krsna, the son of Mother Devaki. You are omnipresent and the shelter of all living entities. You give men both good intelligence and ill motivations. You are the creator, maintainer and protector. You never see the faults of others and You are an ocean of compassion. You are the only well-wishing friend of all those who are suffering. You are the forgiver of all offenses, so kindly forgive my offenses since I have taken shelter of You."

Lord Krsna, being appeased by Lord Siva's prayers, recalled His Sudarsana and appeared before him. Lord Siva saw Him faintly smiling, although His eyes were still stern. He was surrounded by His cowherd boyfriends and Vrndavana damsels. Krsna said, "O Siva, you are well-aware of My position and power, so what suddenly prompted you to act in this fashion? That degraded king, Kasiraja, is no better than a little insect, and siding with him you are fighting with Me.

Now you have seen the fearsome might of My Sudarsana disc which not even you could counter. All the most powerful weapons like Brahma astra and Pasupati astra put together are no match for Sudarsana. The unique feature of the Sudarsana disc is to prey after the one who sends counter weapons. Now I am feeling that there is no one in the entire creation who dislikes Me more than you." Hearing these somewhat angry words of chastisement, Lord Siva felt trepidation within.

Lord Siva threw himself down to the ground and caught hold of Lord Krsna's lotus feet. Surrendering himself to the Lord, Siva said, "O Lord, the entire creation is subservient to Your will. Who can claim to act independently? Just as dry straws are strewn by the wind, so does the entire material nature bend to Your commands. Everyone executes Your wishes. There is no one who can disobey Your biddings. Somehow You have given this feeling of false pride, and blinded by this I was unable to see anything else but myself as big and powerful.

I am helpless, my Lord, since it is You only who made me think in this manner.

Your lotus feet were always my life and soul, and I stayed in the forest and meditated solely on Your lotus feet. Yet You churned this mood of arrogance within me. What can I do? I acted as You desired. In spite of everything, I have committed serious offenses at Your feet, so now kindly forgive me and bless me with Your mercy. And I pray for this boon that I may never again develop such evil intelligence. I have been rightly punished for my arrogance. Now kindly tell me where I can stay, for who else but You can I turn to with such problems."

Lord Kṛṣṇa smiled slightly and spoke kindly, "Listen, My dear Siva, I am giving you a very beautiful place. Live here with all your associates and followers. This place is known as Ekamraka-vana. In this idyllic surrounding you will appear and be worshiped as Kotitigesvara. This place is in every way as captivating as Varanasi. Besides, this place is also spiritually extremely elevated, but is not known to all. Today I will reveal to you the esoteric significance of this place which is so dear to Me.

On the shores of the ocean, covering a very large area is the place known as Nilacala. This is also known as Purusottama ksetra or the abode of the Supreme Person. It has a most pleasing and peaceful atmosphere. Even at the time of the cosmic annihilation, this place remains intact, unscathed. I reside eternally here, and daily receive opulent offerings of foodstuffs. Its area is spread over eighty square miles. All living entities living within this area are, by the influence of this place, possessing four handed forms, though visible only to the demigods and their equals. The demigods glorify this place as the most auspicious of all places of pilgrimage. The act of sleeping here is equivalent to deep meditation or samadhi.

Similarly, lying postures accrue the pious result of offering obeisances to the Deity. Simply walking around here is the same as circumambulation, pradikṣina, and all speeches are glorification. These are all enumerated in the Vedas. Such is the potency of this ksetra that even if one eats fish here it is the same as eating sacred vegetarian food or haviṣya. This place is very dear to Me, hence it is known by My name. All the residents here are My equals. It is outside the jurisdiction of Yamaraja, the guardian of death. I am the judge here who decides on the evil and pious deeds and their results.

The place I have designated as your residence lies north of My abode, Puri. Your place is, as I have described before, very beautiful and charming. Here one can very easily attain liberation and bliss. This place will be famous as Bhuvaneshvara.

The glories of Jagannatha Puri greatly impressed Lord Siva. He again embraced the Lord's lotus feet and began to speak, "O Lord of my life, I have one prayer. I am always so falsely proud, therefore if I remain far away from Your association, it is most detrimental for me. I am yearning in my heart to stay close to You, because I can never benefit from bad association. If You consider me Your servant, then kindly allow me a place in Your own abode. After hearing the wonderful glories of Your dham from Your lotus lips, I am feeling an uncontrollable urge to simply live there. Living very humbly, I want to render menial service to You. All I pray for is just a little space in Your dhama. His voice choked with emotion, and tears coursed down his cheeks.

The Lord was very pleased with Siva's words and He embraced him firmly saying, "Hear Me, O Siva. You are as precious to Me as My own body. One who is dear to you is even more dear to Me. I reside always within you, there is no doubt about this. I allow you to stay in all My abodes. In fact, you are the protector and maintainer of all the dhamas. And this place known as ekamra vana I am giving to you. Stay here and make it your home. This place is also My favorite. I will be pleased if you stay here always. One who claims to be My devotee but disregards you is only trying to pretend devotion to Me." This is how Lord Siva came to reside in this famous place, Bhuvanesavra. It is still existing.

In order to teach everyone that Lord Siva is very dear to Lord Krsna, Lord Caitanya danced in front of Lord Siva. He was now practically demonstrating all the instructions of Lord Krsna as they are found in the Puranas and other Vedic scriptures. Clapping His hands, Lord Caitanya danced and sang "Siva Rama Govinda." The Lord then offered worship to Lord Siva with all His devotees. The Supreme Lord is the supreme instructing spiritual master. One who does not follow His instructions suffers due to this grievous mistake.

The Lord took His disciples and went around Bhuvanesvara visiting different temples of Lord Siva. The Lord was particularly happy to see one Siva linga that was off the beaten track. When He left Bhuvanesvara, He was feeling very elated all the way to Kamalapura village. From Kamalapura the Lord looked in the direction of Puri and saw the fluttering flags in the distance atop the Jagannatha temple. His heart flooded with spiritual emotions, drowning Him in an ocean of ecstatic bliss. The Lord began to cry out rumbling like thunder. The transformation in mood was amazing. He began to shiver and went sluggish, unable to move. His eyes were fixed on the temple spires, and He stumbled on, reciting Sanskrit verses.

Take careful note of the verse – "Just see, the cowherd boy, Krsna, is shyly smiling from the top of the temple seeing Me, thus increasing the extraordinary beauty of His face." Such is the transcendental nature of the Supreme Lord's pastime that He kept repeating this verse, and at the same time stumbled and fell swooning with each step. And such was the force of His fall simultaneously exhibiting intense separation that even the expressive inner voice felt inadequate to describe everything.

The Lord moved forward offering full obeisances on the ground. Thus instead of walking He fell like a stick to the ground, and stood up each time at distances measuring the length of His body. He stood up, looked up at the temple spires, chanted the verse, and fell crashing to the ground. People all around stared agape in complete awe and amazement. No one else could have done this. It was possible for the Lord because He was the divine incarnation of supreme spiritual love. The whole way, He exhibited the apex of divine love for the Supreme Godhead. How fortunate were the souls that lined up the roads to see the Supreme Lord lost in ecstasy. They said about the Lord, "He certainly is the Supreme Lord, Narayana, Himself."

The devotees moved along with their Lord surrounding Him on all sides, their freely flowing tears of ecstasy soaking the earth. The distance from Kamalapura to Athara-nalla is a good hour and a half's walk. The Lord required six times more that time. When He came to Arthara-nalla He withdrew within Himself all the ecstatic moods and feelings. He equipoised Himself and sat down with all the devotees. He spoke entreatingly to the devotees saying, " You have been real well-wishing friends to Me, having brought Me to Lord Jagannatha. Now kindly tell Me whether I go after you, or I am allowed to go ahead of you alone." Mukunda replied, "You go ahead of us."

The Lord left their company and walked towards the temple of Lord Jagannatha. His gate was regal like the maddened king of the forest. With quickening steps He entered Jagannatha Puri temple. Whoever hears this narration of the Lord entering Nilacala Puri will be carried on waves of ecstatic bliss. By the will of the Supreme Lord, Sarvabhauma Bhattacharya also came at the same time to see and worship Lord Jagannatha in the temple.

As Lord Caitanya stood in front of the Deities Of Lord Jagannatha, Subhadra, and Sankarsana, Balarama, He began to roar loudly like the booming of the ocean waves. He was yearning to hold Lord Jagannatha in His embrace. He jumped and pranced as His spiritual emotions became ebullient His spouting tears being sprinkled all around. Suddenly He fell crashing to the ground swooning with uncontrollable bliss. How can one fathom such moods of the Supreme Lord.

The ignorant and foolish interior guards of the temple thinking the Lord was misbehaving immediately prepared to punish Him and beat Him. Just then, Sarvabhauma Bhattacharya rushed to the supine form of the Lord and stopped the guards from striking Him. He saw the unconscious body and thought to himself, "Studying all the symptoms, I think this person is not a human being. It is impossible for anyone to call out so loud, shedding such incessant tears. This is all very extraordinary. Maybe He is Krsna Caitanya." Such were the thoughts which flitted through the mind of the blessed Saravbhauma.

The temple guards were warded off by Sarvabhauma, and they stood now at a distance watching on with fear and reverence. Lord Caitanya still lay almost unconscious being moved to such a state of ecstasy upon seeing His very own self on the altar. The Vedas are inadequate to describe such esoteric transformations of the Supreme Lord. Lord Gaurasundara, the Supreme Lord, is sitting on the altar in His caturvyuha expansions feeling content.

The selfsame Lord has now become the devotee rendering service to Himself. The Lord knows these transcendental mysteries about Himself. This is delineated in the Vedas and Bhagavat. The Vedas always describe the Lord's pastimes only with the good intentions of delivering the conditioned souls.

Sarvabhauma remained patiently waiting, protecting the Lord from any harm.

The Lord still remained deeply immersed in love of Godhead in the mood of a devotee, oblivious of the external world. Finally Sarvabhauma decided to take the Lord to his own house. He spoke to the sentries, "Please carry this jewel amongst saints and follow me." The sentries lifted the still unconscious form of the Lord on their shoulders and carried Him out. Sarvabhauma's arrival in the temple at the same time as the Lord's transcendental ecstasy was not a mere coincidence. The Lord's character is incomprehensible to humans. They don't know how events take place.

Once outside the temple, they carried the Lord amidst thunderous chanting.

The large crowd which had gathered was very jubilant. Just then, the rest of the devotees from the Lord's party arrived..., and met their Lord being carried out in front of the simhadvara. They became very joyful seeing their beloved Lord. Everyone in the crowd wanted a chance to carry the Lord, so the Lord was passed down from hand to hand like being transported by a swarm of ants, as the ants pass foodstuff down a long line. The devotees paid their obeisances to the Lord, and joined the flowing mass of jubilant people. So many people had come carrying the Lord that when they arrived at Sarvabhauma's house the doors had to be closed keeping the huge crowd outside.

Sarvabhauma was extremely pleased to see the associates of the Lord. He received them with proper respect and etiquette, seating them comfortably. By now his doubts about the Lord's identity were calmed. Sarvabhauma was feeling elated beyond words. How very fortunate he was. That Personality whom the Vedic literature so eloquently and repeatedly glorifies, in fact there are entire volumes fully devoted to glorifying Him, was now here in his house in person.

When he saw Nityananda, a radiant Personality, he fell to the ground, smearing his head with the dust from His lotus feet. Then he gathered some of his men and asked them to accompany the Lord's associates to the temple of Lord Jagannatha.

Their guides were at first hesitant, then thinking frankness a better proposition, began to earnestly request the devotees in the following manner. With folded hands they said, "Please be calm and composed when in front of the Deities of Lord Jagannatha. Do not act like your guru did some time ago. We do not know who you are, but only if you give your word to remain equipoised in the temple are we willing to accompany you. The way your guru acted, we are sure that it was only by God's will that Lord Jagannatha remained on His altar.

I think there is no need to elaborate further on the subject, because all of you saw how your guru crashed to the ground. If it were anyone else, he would have died on the spot. This is all very inconceivable to us. Therefore we request you to please remain composed. The devotees began to laugh, but they assured their guides that they had nothing to worry about due to them, that they would behave normally.

The devotees went inside the temple and beheld Lord Jagannatha, who is the source of the quadruple expansions of caturvyuha. He was the Lord of the universe, and He manifested Himself as the source of all bliss and is always with His devotees. The devotees exulted in His presence, shed tears of ecstasy, and circumambulated the Lord, all the time glorifying Him with Vedic prayers. The priests brought them the Lord's flower garlands, prasadamala, and placed them around their necks. The devotees were very happy, and begging permission from the priests to leave, they returned to Sarvabhauma's house.

Lord Caitanya was still in the same condition, deeply absorbed within Himself in the ecstasy of love of Godhead. Sarvabhauma sat at His feet, and the rest of the people were loudly chanting "Rama, Krsna." The Lord's activities are all inconceivable. He was in a state of unconsciousness for more than nine hours continuously. Then gradually the Lord began to stir. He was awake again, and the devotees greeted Him jubilantly chanting the Lord's name. Collecting Himself, the Lord inquired, "Please describe to Me exactly what transpired." The devotees were quiet.

Lord Nityananda at last spoke, "You had gone to see Lord Jagannatha in the temple, and as soon as You saw the Deity, You fell swooning in ecstasy. By the will of Providence, Sarvabhauma was there at that moment and he took care of You and brought You to his house. You have been totally absorbed in ecstasy for the past nine hours. Here is Sarvabhauma offering obeisances to You. "Lord Caitanya quickly got up and embraced Sarvabhauma.

The Lord spoke to Sarvabhauma, "Lord Jagannatha is very merciful; He has brought Me to Sarvabhauma's house. I was wondering how to contact you and have your association. Lord Krsna has easily fulfilled My desire." The Lord looked benignly at Sarvabhauma and smiled. The Lord continued to speak, "Kindly hear Me. I came to the temple and saw Lord Jagannatha. Upon seeing Him I felt the immense urge in My heart to go and embrace Him and hold Him to My chest. Luckily, Sarvabhauma was about, and I was saved from a serious danger. Therefore, I firmly declare that from today I will see Lord Jagannatha from a distance, not entering into the inner sanctum. I will stand next to the pillar of Garuda and see the Lord. I am fortunate today that I did not embrace the Lord, thus avoiding a dangerous situation."

Nityananda Prabhu said, "You certainly averted a possible mishap. It is late. You should quickly bathe." Lord Caitanya replied, "Nityananda, You should always correct Me and steady Me. I have given this body of Mine in Your total care." After completing His bath and other rituals, and feeling refreshed, the Lord came and sat with the devotees, a sweet smile faintly playing on His lips. Sarvabhauma had arranged for a lot of mahaprasada, so he had it brought in and placed it before the Lord. The Lord offered His prayer of thanks to the Lord for the opulent mahaprasada, and sat down to partake of it with all the devotees.

The Lord said, "Give Me as much as you can of the latra preparation, and you can take all the pitha, cheese dumplings and other sweets. The Lord was very much relishing the transcendental taste of mahaprasada. He ate His latra with the greatest relish, and the devotees this simple, spiritually saturated pastime. They laughed with boyish joy. Sarvabhauma, who had arranged this feast, was certainly an eternal associate of the Lord, otherwise, no person could have this sort of rare gift and fortune. He brought rice for the Lord on a golden plate and gave it to him. The Lord immediately began eating it. The scene was so transcendently exhilarating that the details fail me and are therefore reserved to be later delineated by Vedavyasa.

After the meal, the devotees sat around their Lord. The meal was a treat for all in every respect. Anyone who hears these transcendental pastimes with devotion will indeed be blessed with Lord Caitanya's direct association. And anyone who hears the narration in Antya-lila of how Lord Caitanya came to Nialcala will swim in an ocean of devotional love.

Lord Sri Krsna Caitanya and Nityananda Prabhu are my life and soul.

I, Vrndavana dasa, humbly offer this song at Their lotus feet.

Antya Lila

Chapter 3

All glory to Sri Krsna Caitanya, the repository of all transcendental qualities. He is the life and soul of Nityananda Prabhu and Swarupa Damodara Prabhu. He is the supreme actor of Vaikuntha and an ocean of compassion. He is the crest jewel of all the sannyasis and the true friend of the destitutes.

Please hear attentively these narrations of Lord Caitanya's pastimes as recorded in the Antya-lila or final part. His pastimes are concentrated nectar derived from nectar, and Lord Siva and Lord Brahma are always hankering to relish it. Therefore these pastimes when heard with proper faith become the source of great spiritual pleasure for everyone except the sinful miscreants. Hearing these esoteric subjects will certainly bestow on one the lotus feet of Lord Krsna.

In this chapter, we find the Lord wishing to remain incognito, not revealing His real identity. And once the Supreme Lord decides not to assert Himself or to be recognized, then who can know Him?

One day the Lord sat with Sarvabhauma in a secluded place. The Lord said, "O respected sir, I want to open My heart to you. Although I have come to Puri to see Lord Jagannatha, My main concern was to meet you. Lord Jagannatha is not going to speak with Me, but you can sever the bonds of My material attachments. Lord Krsna has fully empowered you to distribute love of Godhead.
